CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Mr. and Mrs. Yousuf Karsh

Jane Morgan

January 9, 1959 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight for the first time we'll be paying a visit outside the borders of the United States when we call on photographer Yousuf Karsh and his wife in Ottawa, Canada. We'll also be visiting with Jane Morgan here in New York.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Mr. and Mrs. Yousuf Karsh

Jane Morgan

January 9, 1959 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight for the first time we'll be paying a visit outside the borders of the United States when we call on photographer Yousuf Karsh and his wife in Ottawa, Canada. We'll also be visiting with Jane Morgan here in New York.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Yousuf Karsh is known as a great photographer of great men and women. His pictures have appeared in just about every kind of printed matter outside of comic books and mail order catalogs, even on postage stamps and paper money. Mr. Karsh has also written a couple of books. His new one, "Portraits of Greatness", comes out this year.

Yousuf Karsh is an Armenian who went to Canada as a boy of 16; took his apprenticeship in photography in Boston, and opened his own studio in Ottawa, Ontario 26 years ago. There he met and married Solon Guttier, who had come to Canada from France.

Almost hidden in nearly three feet of snow is the home of Yousuf and Madam Karsh about eight miles from the center of Ottawa.

MR. KARSH: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Good evening.

MR. KARSH: I have been standing waiting for you by the bird feeder. You are late. The birds have all gone to bed.

MURROW: I'm sorry.

MR. KARSH: We wanted to give you a warm welcome. And here, of course, we also have a Christmas tree for the

(Commercial)

MURROW: Yousuf Karsh is known as a great photographer of great men and women. His pictures have appeared in just about every kind of printed matter outside of comic books and mail order catalogs, even on postage stamps and paper money. Mr. Karsh has also written a couple of books. His new one, "Portraits of Greatness", comes out this year.

Yousuf Karsh is an Armenian who went to Canada as a boy of 16; took his apprenticeship in photography in Boston, and opened his own studio in Ottawa, Ontario 26 years ago. There he met and married Solon Cuttler, who had come to Canada from France.

Almost hidden in nearly three feet of snow is the home of Yousuf and Madam Karsh about eight miles from the center of Ottawa.

MR. KARSH: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Good evening.

MR. KARSH: I have been standing waiting for you by the bird feeder. You are late. The birds have all gone to bed.

MURROW: I'm sorry.

MR. KARSH: We wanted to give you a warm welcome. And here, of course, we also have a Christmas tree for the birds full of all kinds of sweet things that they love and enjoy.

MURROW: Well, I'm sorry we couldn't come up earlier, but even though it is a bit on the cold side, it's a very beautiful setting.

MR. KARSH: Thank you. We enjoy it very much. Some of these trees, Ed, you would be interested to know, are not named by their botanical name, but we often refer to them by our friends, the donors. One would be a Brockington, the other a Chalmer, a Davis and a Pedwin.

MURROW: I didn't know that you had such an interest in bird life, Yousuf.

MR. KARSH: I am a lover of birds, but only by adoption. Shall we go in and meet the expert? Solon is the ornithologist.

MURROW: Good. What's the temperature up there tonight?

MR. KARSH: Let us have some light. Ed, here is the expert, Solon.

MURROW: Good evening, Madam Karsh.

MRS. KARSH: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: I would suppose that by now you've grown accustomed to these cold winters and take them pretty much in birds full of all kinds of sweet things that they love and enjoy.

MURROW: Well, I'm sorry we couldn't come up earlier, but even though it is a bit on the cold side, it's a very beautiful setting.

MR. KARSH: Thank you. We enjoy it very much. Some of these trees, Ed, you would be interested to know, are not named by their botanical name, but we often refer to them by our friends, the donors. One would be a Brocklington, the other a Chalmer, a Davis and a Pedwin.

MURROW: I didn't know that you had such an interest in bird life, Yousuf.

MR. KARSH: I am a lover of birds, but only by adoption. Shall we go in and meet the expert? Solon is the ornithologist.

MURROW: Good. What's the temperature up there tonight?

MR. KARSH: Let us have some light. Ed, here is the expert, Solon.

MURROW: Good evening, Madam Karsh.

MRS. KARSH: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: I would suppose that by now you've grown accustomed to these cold winters and take them pretty much in stride. Right?

MRS. KARSH: I'm afraid not at all. They're getting harder on me every time.

MURROW: Well, something up there must be worth suffering for. What is it?

MRS. KARSH: Oh, the people are wonderful here. So is the country, and, of course, there are the birds.

MURROW: Ah, yes. Yousuf, your work takes you nearly all over the world. Why are you so attached to Canada?

MR. KARSH: Well, Ed, I was born in Armenia. I'm now a proud Canadian citizen. In my youth I was subjected to tyranny and oppression. In Canada I found the sunshine of freedom. As a boy I was brought up by -- to a kindly home, my Uncle Nettash. I went to school and on the first day of school I saw a group of my fellow pupils playing marbles. I had none. They gave me a generous handful to keep. They were determined from the very first day I should not feel half as strange as I felt myself. That fixed the pattern of my loyalty to and my love for Canada.

MURROW: I'm sure it did. Madam Karsh, what's your husband's attitude toward posing?

MRS. KARSH: Posing?

MURROW: Do you have any pictures of him?

stride. Right?

MRS. KARSH: I'm afraid not at all. They're getting harder on me every time.

MURROW: Well, something up there must be worth suffering for. What is it?

MRS. KARSH: Oh, the people are wonderful here. So is the country, and, of course, there are the birds.

MURROW: Ah, yes. Yousuf, your work takes you nearly all over the world. Why are you so attached to Canada?

MR. KARSH: Well, Ed, I was born in Armenia. I'm now a proud Canadian citizen. In my youth I was subjected to tyranny and oppression. In Canada I found the sunshine of freedom. As a boy I was brought up by --, to a kindly home, my Uncle Nettash. I went to school and on the first day of school I saw a group of my fellow pupils playing marbles. I had none. They gave me a generous handful to keep. They were determined from the very first day I should not feel half as strange as I felt myself. That fixed the pattern of my loyalty to and my love for Canada.

MURROW: I'm sure it did. Madam Karsh, what's your husband's attitude toward posing?

MRS. KARSH: Posing?

MURROW: Do you have any pictures of him?

MRS. KARSH: Oh, the best photographs of Karsh are by Karsh himself, but I would love to show you a portrait that was made by a young Canadian artist, Phillip Arzese. It's extempera on gess, or gesso, depending on how you pronounce it.

MURROW: Yes?

MRS. KARSH: And I'll give you the best criticism of it. It's by Yousuf's five-year-old nephew, who went to his mother and said, "Mama, is that when Uncle Yousuf went to Heaven?" I must say it looks a little saintly.

MURROW: It does at that, doesn't it?

MRS. KARSH: Hm, hm.

MURROW: As I've heard it described, Yousuf paints his pictures with lights and lens.

MRS. KARSH: That he does, but the unfortunate thing is that people always ask him, "How does it out? What did he do?" And he never knows because it's so intricate that he's quite forgotten that he has moved a light here and a camera there.

MURROW: Yousuf, you have an opportunity to spend a lot of time alone with many of the world's most prominent people. Who, among them, have particularly impressed you?

MR. KARSH: Well, Ed, I have brought a few examples from the studio. Shall we go into the living room---

MRS. KARSH: Oh, the best photographs of Karsh are by Karsh himself, but I would love to show you a portrait that was made by a young Canadian artist, Philip Arrese. It's ex-tempore on gesso, or gesso, depending on how you pronounce it.

MURROW: Yes?

MRS. KARSH: And I'll give you the best criticism of it. It's by Yousuf's five-year-old nephew, who went to his mother and said, "Mama, is that when Uncle Yousuf went to Heaven?" I must say it looks a little saintly.

MURROW: It does at that, doesn't it?

MRS. KARSH: Hm, hm.

MURROW: As I've heard it described, Yousuf paints his pictures with lights and lens.

MRS. KARSH: That he does, but the unfortunate thing is that people always ask him, "How does it out? What did he do?" And he never knows because it's so intricate that he's quite forgotten that he has moved a light here and a camera there.

MURROW: Yousuf, you have an opportunity to spend a lot of time alone with many of the world's most prominent people. Who, among them, have particularly impressed you?

MR. KARSH: Well, Ed, I have brought a few examples from the studio. Shall we go into the living room---

MURROW: Good!

MR. KARSH: ---and see some of them?

MURROW: Fine. Thank you.

MR. KARSH: Come on, dear. By the way, Ed, I think you might be interested in this wood carving.

MURROW: Yes. What is it?

MR. KARSH: It is a wood carving made by a young Czech artist, Jan Sotts, who had come originally on behalf of his government to the World's Fair in New York. He loved the freedom of North America and decided to take refuge, and now he's in Victoria, B.C.

MURROW: Ah, yes. Now could we see some of your portraits, Yousuf?

MR. KARSH: Yes, with pleasure. Helen Keller and companion, Polly Thompson.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

MR. KARSH: Upon meeting Helen Keller, I reminded her that this is not the first time I had the pleasure of meeting her for I knew her through her writing. One of the first articles I had read in the English language was an article by Helen Keller, "How to Appreciate The Beauty of Sunset." I reminded her now, having met her, I no longer think of her in terms of sunset, but rather sunrise. Helen Keller's life,

MURROW: Good!

MR. KARSH: ---and see some of them?

MURROW: Fine. Thank you.

MR. KARSH: Come on, dear. By the way, Ed, I think you might be interested in this wood carving.

MURROW: Yes. What is it?

MR. KARSH: It is a wood carving made by a young Czech artist, Jan Sotts, who had come originally on behalf of his government to the World's Fair in New York. He loved the freedom of North America and decided to take refuge, and now he's in Victoria, B.C.

MURROW: Ah, yes. Now could we see some of your portraits, Yousuf?

MR. KARSH: Yes, with pleasure. Helen Keller and companion, Polly Thompson.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

MR. KARSH: Upon meeting Helen Keller, I reminded her that this is not the first time I had the pleasure of meeting her for I knew her through her writing. One of the first articles I had read in the English language was an article by Helen Keller, "How to Appreciate The Beauty of Sunset." I remindded her now, having met her, I no longer think of her in terms of sunset, but rather sunrise. Helen Keller's life, how I wish the United Nations organization take that as their slogan, "Sunrise", and forget the shadows of sunset behind them.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. KARSH: Juan Sebalius. I spent a good deal of time with Sebalius, but this is the result of a story -- his expression -- the result of a story I told him. During the Russo-Finnish war, the news came to the many Finnish people who were in Canada Northland cutting timber. The production of the wood diminished greatly, as they brought it over, the bad news.

MURROW: Yes?

MR. KARSH: Suddenly, the foreman had an idea. "Let us put Finlandia" on the public speaking system. Suddenly the production increased immeasurably. This is the granite-like expression that awed me.

This---

MURROW: Yes.

MR. KARSH: I would like to think of these kindly and compassionate eyes closely related to the story that is told about him in his replying to the over-zealous pressmen when they approached Professor Einstein saying, "Now we have the hydrogen bomb. Supposing we decided to use it upon each other. What then?" He replied with the innocence of a child how I wish the United Nations organization take that as their slogan, "Sunrise", and forget the shadows of sunset behind them.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. KARSH: Juan Sebelius. I spent a good deal of time with Sebelius, but this is the result of a story -- his expression -- the result of a story I told him. During the Russo-Finnish war, the news came to the many Finnish people who were in Canada Northland cutting timber. The production of the wood diminished greatly, as they brought it over, the bad news.

MURROW: Yes?

MR. KARSH: Suddenly, the foreman had an idea. "Let us put Finlandia" on the public speaking system. Suddenly the production increased immeasurably. This is the granite-like expression that awed me.

This---

MURROW: Yes.

MR. KARSH: I would like to think of these kindly and compassionate eyes closely related to the story that is told about him in his replying to the over-zealous pressmen when they approached Professor Einstein saying, "Now we have the hydrogen bomb. Supposing we decided to use it upon each other. What then?" He replied with the innocence of a child like -- he said, "Alas, we would no longer be able to listen to the music of Mozart."

MURROW: There he is.

MR. KARSH: Ernest Hemingway, the shiest man I have ever photographed. The gentleness of his voice, of himself, belies the intellectual and physical massiveness of the man.

MURROW: Yousuf, I've noticed you pay a lot of attention to hands in your portraits.

MR. KARSH: Well, Ed, I have sometimes been criticized for over-emphasizing hands. Here is a picture of a man whose hands you cannot see, but the magic of those hands you are conscious of. The musician's musician, ~~Otto Kaser~~ Pablo Casals.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. KARSH: George Bernard Shaw. He made many restrictions that I should only use a little camera and not too much light. Finally, I said, "Mr. Shaw, if the world should ask you to give them your best play, and they sealed your lips and tied your hands behind your back, what kind of a play would you give them?" He said, "May I ask what nationality you are?" I said, "Armenian." And with that kindly laugh of his, he said, "Ah, I have many friends among the Armenians, but, you know, the only way to keep them healthy and strong is to have like -- he said, "Alas, we would no longer be able to listen to the music of Mozart."

MURROW: There he is.

MR. KARSH: Ernest Hemingway, the shiest man I have ever photographed. The gentleness of his voice, of himself, belies the intellectual and physical massiveness of the man.

MURROW: Yousuf, I've noticed you pay a lot of attention to hands in your portraits.

MR. KARSH: Well, Ed, I have sometimes been criticized for over-emphasizing hands. Here is a picture of a man whose hands you cannot see, but the magic of those hands you are conscious of. The musician's musician, ~~Otto Klemperer~~ Pablo Casals.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. KARSH: George Bernard Shaw. He made many restrictions that I should only use a little camera and not too much light. Finally, I said, "Mr. Shaw, if the world should ask you to give them your best play, and they sealed your lips and tied your hands behind your back, what kind of a play would you give them?" He said, "May I ask what nationality you are?" I said, "Armenian." And with that kindly laugh of his, he said, "Ah, I have many friends among the Armenians, but, you know, the only way to keep them healthy and strong is to have them exterminated once in a while."

This, Ed, is a picture of an old Indian 88 years of age.

MURROW: Wonderful face!

MR. KARSH: It is strong. He was flown on a plane from to Canada to come to a hospital in Edminton for an operation on both his eyes for cataracts. Although he was old, ill and poor, he was very cheerful and with high hope for the day when he could see the world again, his children, his grandchildren, and his great-grandchildren. As you know, Ed, my chief joy is to photograph the great in heart, in mind and in spirit, be they famous or unknown.

MURROW: I remember the Karsh portraits of Sir Winston Churchill. How many did you make of him?

MR. KARSH: I have had the pleasure of photographing Winston Churchill twice. This in 1941 when he's facing the grimest with great courage -- the grimest of tasks -- and 14 years after is this picture where his face is lined with wisdom, knowledge, but no compromise and no illusion -- the incomparable Churchill.

MURROW: You took -- who have been some of your more recent subjects?

MR. KARSH: I went to London, England to photo-

them exterminated once in a while."

This, Ed, is a picture of an old Indian 88 years of age.

MURROW: Wonderful face!

MR. KARSH: It is strong. He was flown on a plane from Canada to come to a hospital in Edmonton for an operation on both his eyes for cataracts. Although he was old, ill and poor, he was very cheerful and with high hope for the day when he could see the world again, his children, his grandchildren, and his great-grandchildren. As you know, Ed, my chief joy is to photograph the great in heart, in mind and in spirit, be they famous or unknown.

MURROW: I remember the Karsh portraits of Sir Winston Churchill. How many did you make of him?

MR. KARSH: I have had the pleasure of photographing Winston Churchill twice. This in 1941 when he's facing the grimest with great courage -- the grimest of tasks -- and 14 years after is this picture where his face is lined with wisdom, knowledge, but no compromise and no illusion -- the incomparable Churchill.

MURROW: You took -- who have been some of your more recent subjects?

MR. KARSH: I went to London, England to photograph Prime Minister Macmillan three weeks ago, but exactly a week ago, Ed, I had the honor of photographing Pope John XXIII, and what an exuberant man he is! He is, in essence, El Papa, The Father.

MURROW: Yes. Yousuf, what characteristics have you found your more distinguished subjects to have most in common?

MR. KARSH: Well, I have discovered they have implicit faith in themselves and their life's mission, be it for good or bad, and in all cases, an infinite capacity for hard work.

MURROW: Which have you found to have the most vanity, men or women?

MR. KARSH: Unquestionably I would say men.

MURROW: Madam Karsh, do you agree with that?

MRS. KARSH: Oh, definitely.

MURROW: Yousuf, what's the best advice you can give amateur photographers who have neither your experience or elaborate equipment?

MR. KARSH: Well, there is no special rule, but I would say take a camera and keep on taking pictures. Reflect a bit, and if the bug catches you, you become, and you find you have become a dedicated photographer, then you remain in it.

graph Prime Minister Macmillan three weeks ago, but exactly a week ago, Ed, I had the honor of photographing Pope John XXIII, and what an exuberant man he is! He is, in essence, Mr. Pope, The Father.

MURROW: Yes. Yousuf, what characteristics have you found your more distinguished subjects to have most in common?

MR. KARSH: Well, I have discovered they have implicit faith in themselves and their life's mission, be it for good or bad, and in all cases, an infinite capacity for hard work.

MURROW: Which have you found to have the most vanity, men or women?

MR. KARSH: Unquestionably I would say men.

MURROW: Madam Karsh, do you agree with that?

MRS. KARSH: Oh, definitely.

MURROW: Yousuf, what's the best advice you can give amateur photographers who have neither your experience or elaborate equipment?

MR. KARSH: Well, there is no special rule, but I would say take a camera and keep on taking pictures. Reflect a bit, and if the bug catches you, you become, and you find you have become a dedicated photographer, then you remain in it.

Otherwise, do not enslave yourself to it; enjoy it. Many fine photographs have been made by uninitiated and inexperienced. We have some remarkable pictures taken as a fine record of our time.

MURROW: Madam Karsh, you said earlier that you don't help Yousuf take his pictures. Do you take any part in the business at all?

MRS. KARSH: Business is right. I've married an artist who has no idea and doesn't want to have any, about either banks or income taxes, so I'm the one who attends to it.

MURROW: Well, before we are forced to say goodbye, I'd like to ask you this, Yousuf. Who are some of the personalities of history you would have liked to have photographed had you had the chance?

MR. KARSH: Leaving out The Saviour, and the founders of great villages, Ed, the people I would have liked to photograph would have Leonardo da Vinci, Shakespeare, Moses, Joan of Arc, St. Francis Xavier. I am sure he would have approved the way we treat our friends.

MURROW: I am sure he would, too.

MR. KARSH: And Socrates.

MURROW: I'm sure he would. Thank you very much, otherwise, do not enslave yourself to it; enjoy it. Many fine photographs have been made by uninitiated and inexperienced. We have some remarkable pictures taken as a fine record of our time.

MURROW: Madam Karsh, you said earlier that you don't help Yousuf take his pictures. Do you take any part in the business at all?

MRS. KARSH: Business is right. I've married an artist who has no idea and doesn't want to have any, about either banks or income taxes, so I'm the one who attends to it.

MURROW: Well, before we are forced to say good-bye, I'd like to ask you this, Yousuf. Who are some of the personalities of history you would have liked to have photographed had you had the chance?

MR. KARSH: Leaving out The Saviour, and the founders of great villages, Ed, the people I would have liked to photograph would have Leonardo da Vinci, Shakespeare, Moses, Joan of Arc, St. Francis Xavier. I am sure he would have approved the way we treat our friends.

MURROW: I am sure he would, too.

MR. KARSH: And Socrates.

MURROW: I'm sure he would. Thank you very much.

indeed, for letting us come. Good night.

MRS. KARSH: Good night.

MR. KARSH: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: And will you say our thanks to the Canadian Broadcasting Company for their help as well. Thank you very much.

MRS. KARSH: They've all been wonderful.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Jane Morgan. And now here again, speaking for Kent, is Bob Wright.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Frenchmen regard Jane Morgan as a Parisian singer from America. Americans frequently refer to her as the American from Paris, and Boston-born Jane Morgan, who insists she's as American as baked beans, is known throughout much of the world as a French singer. That's because Jane got her first big break in Paris.

Miss Morgan comes from a musical family. Her father was a cellist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Her mother studied opera in Europe, and Jane came to New York to study opera for a time at the Julliard School of Music. Then she switched to popular music, sang with a dance band, and found her first fame in five years of performing in Europe.

indeed, for letting us come. Good night.

MRS. KARSH: Good night.

MR. KARSH: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: And will you say our thanks to the Canadian Broadcasting Company for their help as well. Thank you very much.

MRS. KARSH: They've all been wonderful.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Jane Morgan. And now here again, speaking for Kent, is Bob Wright.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Frenchmen regard Jane Morgan as a Parisian singer from America. Americans frequently refer to her as the American from Paris, and Boston-born Jane Morgan, who insists she's as American as baked beans, is known throughout much of the world as a French singer. That's because Jane got her first big break in Paris.

Miss Morgan comes from a musical family. Her father was a cellist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Her mother studied opera in Europe, and Jane came to New York to study opera for a time at the Juilliard School of Music. Then she switched to popular music, sang with a dance band, and found her first fame in five years of performing in Europe.

On these shores Jane Morgan lives in a three-room apartment in that building in Midtown Manhattan about half-a-block away from Fifth Avenue. It overlooks the Museum of Modern Art.

Good evening, Jane.

MISS MORGAN: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

MISS MORGAN: Very well, thank you.

MURROW: Tell me, are you coming or going -- packing or unpacking?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I just returned from a trip to St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands. It was wonderful and it was so warm there.

MURROW: Well, were you working a night club down there, or were you just taking it easy before your next job?

MISS MORGAN: No, I was working in Las Vegas at the Riviera Hotel, and I went to St. Thomas for three wonderful days of swimming and snorkling. Oh, I loved it!

MURROW: Did you have any time for shopping down there?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I always find time to do a little shopping for my favorite collector's items, a hat. This is my St. Thomas hat. Do you like it?

MURROW: Very nice, indeed. Tell me, do you buy

On these shores Jane Morgan lives in a three-room apartment in that building in Midtown Manhattan about half-a-block away from Fifth Avenue. It overlooks the Museum of Modern Art.

Good evening, Jane.

MISS MORGAN: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

MISS MORGAN: Very well, thank you.

MURROW: Tell me, are you coming or going -- packing or unpacking?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I just returned from a trip to St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands. It was wonderful and it was so warm there.

MURROW: Well, were you working a night club down there, or were you just taking it easy before your next job?

MISS MORGAN: No, I was working in Las Vegas at the Riviera Hotel, and I went to St. Thomas for three wonderful days of swimming and snorkling. Oh, I loved it!

MURROW: Did you have any time for shopping down there?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I always find time to do a little shopping for my favorite collector's items, a hat. This is my St. Thomas hat. Do you like it?

MURROW: Very nice, indeed. Tell me, do you buy hats for your Jane Morgan collection or for your costumes?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I buy hats for practically any purpose, Ed. I have about a hundred gowns and 300 hats that we keep here in my apartment. These are some of the things that I just unpacked. I have some of my Easter hats ready, and quite a few of the hats in my collection.

MURROW: I would guess that many of your clothes were acquired during your years in Paris. Right?

MISS MORGAN: Oh, yes, Ed. I became very interested in fashion when I was over there. All of the French couturiers made me beautiful dresses and I started collecting hats with interesting stories to them. Perhaps you'd like to see a couple of them.

MURROW: Yes.

MISS MORGAN: This is a Russian Cossack hat that was given to me by a Russian Cossack. I think it's quite stunning.

MURROW: Very nice.

MISS MORGAN: Do you like it?

MURROW: We have the weather for it right now, don't we?

MISS MORGAN: Yes, we do. I have another hat for the weather, too. This is a Royal Canadian Mounted Policeman's hats for your Jane Morgan collection or for your costumes?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I buy hats for practically any purpose, Ed. I have about a hundred gowns and 300 hats that we keep here in my apartment. These are some of the things that I just unpacked. I have some of my Easter hats ready, and quite a few of the hats in my collection.

MURROW: I would guess that many of your clothes were acquired during your years in Paris. Right?

MISS MORGAN: Oh, yes, Ed. I became very interested in fashion when I was over there. All of the French couturiers made me beautiful dresses and I started collecting hats with interesting stories to them. Perhaps you'd like to see a couple of them.

MURROW: Yes.

MISS MORGAN: This is a Russian Cossack hat that was given to me by a Russian Cossack. I think it's quite stunning.

MURROW: Very nice.

MISS MORGAN: Do you like it?

MURROW: We have the weather for it right now, don't we?

MISS MORGAN: Yes, we do. I have another hat for the weather, too. This is a Royal Canadian Mounted Policeman's hat that's made of bear skin.

MURROW: Bear skin, yes.

MISS MORGAN: You could borrow that if you get too cold in New York.

MURROW: I will do that.

MISS MORGAN: And I have a hat that was given to me by a fireman in Bradford, England. So you see. And, of course, the most important hat is one that every woman needs to have. This is the typical -- what I call the typical -- Parisian hat that no girl should be in Paris without.

MURROW: Oh, yes, I think every woman should have a hat like that.

MISS MORGAN: Don't you think so, too?

MURROW: Well, I gather you still regard Paris as your fashion capitol. Right?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I think that in France women have a great deal more time to spend on fashion. Here in America we're very busy working and taking care of lots of children and doing housework, and we don't really have as much leisure to concentrate on fashions as the French women do.

MURROW: Is your apartment overcrowded with hats and working clothes?

MISS MORGAN: Yes, I'm afraid it is, Ed. I have hat that's made of bear skin.

MURROW: Bear skin, yes.

MISS MORGAN: You could borrow that if you get too cold in New York.

MURROW: I will do that.

MISS MORGAN: And I have a hat that was given to me by a fireman in Bradford, England. So you see. And, of course, the most important hat is one that every woman needs to have. This is the typical -- what I call the typical -- Parisian hat that no girl should be in Paris without.

MURROW: Oh, yes, I think every woman should have a hat like that.

MISS MORGAN: Don't you think so, too?

MURROW: Well, I gather you still regard Paris as your fashion capital. Right?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I think that in France women have a great deal more time to spend on fashion. Here in America we're very busy working and taking care of lots of children and doing housework, and we don't really have as much leisure to concentrate on fashions as the French women do.

MURROW: Is your apartment overcrowded with hats and working clothes?

MISS MORGAN: Yes, I'm afraid it is, Ed. I have much too many hats and dresses here, but there is one that I would like to show you that I wouldn't give up for the world because I really shouldn't have it at all. It's strictly illegal. This is a London policeman's hat, and as you probably know, it isn't quite "cricket", as they say, for anyone except a London policeman to have a hat like this.

MURROW: I know.

MISS MORGAN: They have numbers. They are all licensed and the gentleman who acquired this hat for me is no longer with Scotland Yard, but now I have the hat.

MURROW: Very becoming.

MISS MORGAN: Thank you.

MURROW: Do you know, it must be rather simple for you when you're traveling. All you have to do is shop at hat stores and dress shops. Right?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I have another love in my life and I like very much to collect paintings, Ed. I have one here that is kind of interesting because I got it in New York, but this was the back of a canvas.

MURROW: The back?

MISS MORGAN: And this was the painting that was originally being sold, and I saw this painting which is on the back and loved it very, very much. So I think this was the much too many hats and dresses here, but there is one that I would like to show you that I wouldn't give up for the world because I really shouldn't have it at all. It's strictly illegal. This is a London policeman's hat, and as you probably know, it isn't quite "cricket", as they say, for anyone except a London policeman to have a hat like this.

MURROW: I know.

MISS MORGAN: They have numbers. They are all licensed and the gentleman who acquired this hat for me is no longer with Scotland Yard, but now I have the hat.

MURROW: Very becoming.

MISS MORGAN: Thank you.

MURROW: Do you know, it must be rather simple for you when you're traveling. All you have to do is shop at hat stores and dress shops. Right?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I have another love in my life and I like very much to collect paintings. Ed. I have one here that is kind of interesting because I got it in New York, but this was the back of a canvas.

MURROW: The back?

MISS MORGAN: And this was the painting that was originally being sold, and I saw this painting which is on the back and loved it very, very much. So I think this was the first painting that I was able to collect for my apartment.

MURROW: Well, I prefer the back to the front, too.

MISS MORGAN: I do, too. Something about that bowler hat.

MURROW: Hm, hm.

MISS MORGAN: You know, I think my interest in paintings was stimulated by the fact that my grandfather, who appears here in a self-portrait, was a very well known American painter. His name was J. Frank Currier. Over here is one of his canvases, and in my family we have, oh, several hundred of his canvases that he painted in Europe during his lifetime.

MURROW: Was your grandfather the Currier of Currier and Ives?

MISS MORGAN: Well, actually, his father, my great grandfather, was a cousin of Nathaniel Currier.

MURROW: Jane, did you have training in art as well as music?

MISS MORGAN: Well, Ed, when I was a child I didn't have too much time for art because I was surrounded by music. Everyone in my family played an instrument. My mother gave me voice lessons. My brother gave me acting lessons. My father gave me piano lessons, and I was so busy listening to string quartets and learning how to do a tortueux se that I didn't first painting that I was able to collect for my apartment.

MURROW: Well, I prefer the back to the front, too.

MISS MORGAN: I do, too. Something about that bowler hat.

MURROW: Hm, hm.

MISS MORGAN: You know, I think my interest in paintings was stimulated by the fact that my grandfather, who appears here in a self-portrait, was a very well known American painter. His name was J. Frank Currier. Over here is one of his canvases, and in my family we have, oh, several hundred of his canvases that he painted in Europe during his lifetime.

MURROW: Was your grandfather the Currier of Currier and Ives?

MISS MORGAN: Well, actually, his father, my great grandfather, was a cousin of Nathaniel Currier.

MURROW: Jane, did you have training in art as well as music?

MISS MORGAN: Well, Ed, when I was a child I didn't have too much time for art because I was surrounded by music. Everyone in my family played an instrument. My mother gave me voice lessons. My brother gave me acting lessons. My father gave me piano lessons, and I was so busy listening to string quartets and learning how to do a tortuous so that I didn't have time to learn drawing, and every night when I would go to sleep, I would hear my mother and father and their friends in the living room playing string quartets.

MURROW: Well, with that background in classical music, how did you happen to switch to popular music?

MISS MORGAN: Well, Ed, I studied opera, but I decided I wasn't really suited for opera. I didn't care for it that much, and I felt that the discipline of an operatic life was not something that appealed to me, and besides, that I couldn't stand the sound of my own voice when I sang up high, so I gradually got lower and lower and lower.

MURROW: Well, Jane, then did you decide to find work in Europe?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I didn't really make a decision about it. I was offered a job which I badly needed and one of the clauses in the contract was that I was to be provided with three square meals a day because my mother was afraid that I might starve over there, but the French lawyers who made the contract for me were very perplexed about this expression, three square meals. They didn't understand so they finally decided that three square meals meant the meals that an American traveling salesman would eat if he was traveling around the United States. So that's what I got, and I think I gained at have time to learn drawing, and every night when I would go to sleep, I would hear my mother and father and their friends in the living room playing string quartets.

MURROW: Well, with that background in classical music, how did you happen to switch to popular music?

MISS MORGAN: Well, Ed, I studied opera, but I decided I wasn't really suited for opera. I didn't care for it that much, and I felt that the discipline of an operatic life was not something that appealed to me, and besides, that I couldn't stand the sound of my own voice when I sang up high, so I gradually got lower and lower and lower.

MURROW: Well, Jane, then did you decide to find work in Europe?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I didn't really make a decision about it. I was offered a job which I badly needed and one of the clauses in the contract was that I was to be provided with three square meals a day because my mother was afraid that I might starve over there, but the French lawyers who made the contract for me were very perplexed about this expression, three square meals. They didn't understand so they finally decided that three square meals meant the meals that an American travelling salesman would eat if he was travelling around the United States. So that's what I got, and I think I gained at least 14 pounds the first month I was in Paris.

MURROW: Well, by now I am certain that you have no regrets at having avoided an operatic career. Right?

MISS MORGAN: Well, when I was very small, my mother tried to have me learn classical music, and I used to do this all day long. Do you want to listen?

MURROW: Yes, I'm listening.

(Miss Morgan plays piano.)

MISS MORGAN: She tried very hard to make me learn to play the piano, but I am afraid I wasn't very good, and afterwards, many years later when I started to sing popular songs, I did something like this. (Sings and plays piano.) That's the kind of thing that I do now-a-days.

MURROW: Very nice, too. Is that a number from your night club act?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I do it in my act, but it is one of the recordings that I have made recently for Cap. Records.

MURROW: Tell me, what is your next big step, Jane. More records, another road trip, Europe again?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I want to travel. I love traveling, and I want to make some more recordings, but one of the things I especially would like to do is to go up to spend least 14 pounds the first month I was in Paris.

MURROW: Well, by now I am certain that you have no regrets at having avoided an operatic career. Right?

MISS MORGAN: Well, when I was very small, my mother tried to have me learn classical music, and I used to do this all day long. Do you want to listen?

MURROW: Yes, I'm listening.

(Miss Morgan plays piano.)

MISS MORGAN: She tried very hard to make me learn to play the piano, but I am afraid I wasn't very good, and afterwards, many years later when I started to sing popular songs, I did something like this. (Sings and plays piano.) That's the kind of thing that I do now-a-days.

MURROW: Very nice, too. Is that a number from your night club act?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I do it in my act, but it is one of the recordings that I have made recently for Cap. Records.

MURROW: Tell me, what is your next big step, Jane. More records, another road trip, Europe again?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I want to travel. I love travelling, and I want to make some more recordings, but one of the things I especially would like to do is to go up to spend some time at my farm in Maine. I just acquired a beautiful old farm, 40 acres, and maybe you'd like to see a photograph of it.

MURROW: That looks like an estate, not a farm.

MISS MORGAN: Well, I'm very proud of it. It's a lovely old, old Maine farmhouse, and my brother, who runs the theater in Kennebunkport where Blueberry Hill is located, has helped me fix it up, and I think I'm going to enjoy spending some time there. After Monday night when I'm on the Firestone Hour, I am going to spend a couple of weeks getting my new night club act ready for the Plaza where I'll be opening on the 27th of April, and after that I want very much to go back to Europe for a trip to London and Paris.

MURROW: Well now, Jane, aside from changing languages, do you have any other major problems when you perform in Europe?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I think that one of the problems is a difference in the attitude about performing. I found working in Europe that the people there were not as interested in the vocal side of a performance as they were in the visual side, and more than anything I want to be a good performer.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Jane, and much luck

some time at my farm in Maine. I just acquired a beautiful old farm, 40 acres, and maybe you'd like to see a photograph of it.

MURROW: That looks like an estate, not a farm.

MISS MORGAN: Well, I'm very proud of it. It's a lovely old, old Maine farmhouse, and my brother, who runs the theater in Kennebunkport where Blueberry Hill is located, has helped me fix it up, and I think I'm going to enjoy spending some time there. After Monday night when I'm on the Firestone Hour, I am going to spend a couple of weeks getting my new night club set ready for the place where I'll be opening on the 27th of April, and after that I want very much to go back to Europe for a trip to London and Paris.

MURROW: Well now, Jane, aside from changing languages, do you have any other major problems when you perform in Europe?

MISS MORGAN: Well, I think that one of the problems is a difference in the attitude about performing. I found working in Europe that the people there were not as interested in the vocal side of a performance as they were in the visual side, and more than anything I want to be a good performer.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Jane, and much luck

to you on your next trip to Europe and on your various performances here. It was very pleasant to have visited with you.

MISS MORGAN: Thank you very much, Ed.

MURROW: Good night, Jane Morgan.

MISS MORGAN: Good night.

MURROW: Good night. I will be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be calling on one of America's best known orchestra leaders, Meyer Davis and his wife in their New York apartment. Mr. Davis, who has played at many White House functions through the years, is credited with having been the originator of the so-called "Society Band."

Next week we'll also be visiting with the Huntington Hartfords. He is heir to the A&P chain, and a prominent patron of the arts. Mrs. Hartford, an artist in her own right, is actoress Margorie Steel.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron and Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

to you on your next trip to Europe and on your various performances here. It was very pleasant to have visited with you.

MISS MORGAN: Thank you very much, Ed.

MURROW: Good night, Jane Morgan.

MISS MORGAN: Good night.

MURROW: Good night. I will be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be calling on one of America's best known orchestra leaders, Meyer Davis and his wife in their New York apartment. Mr. Davis, who has played at many White House functions through the years, is credited with having been the originator of the so-called "Society Band." Next week we'll also be visiting with the Huntington Hartfords. He is heir to the A&P chain, and a prominent patron of the arts. Mrs. Hartford, an artist in her own right, is actoress Margorie Steel.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron and Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

MISS MORGAN: Thank you very much, Ed.

MURROW: Good night, Jane Morgan.

MISS MORGAN: Good night.

MURROW: Good night. I will be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be calling on one of America's best known orchestra leaders, Meyer Davis and his wife in their New York apartment. Mr. Davis, who has played at many White House functions through the years, is credited with having been the originator of the so-called "people's band" in the 20's. Next week we'll also be visiting with the Huntington Hartfords. He is heir to the A&P chain, and a former member of the arts. Mrs. Hartford, an artist in her own right, is actress Margaret Sheil.

There are some of the people who make tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by Joe Aaron and Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Mr. and Mrs. Huntington Hartford

Mr. and Mrs. Meyer Davis

January 16, 1958 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting first with the Huntington Hartfords in their New York apartment. Then we'll be calling on orchestra leader Meyer Davis and his family.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Barbara Britton speaking for Revlon.

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Mr. and Mrs. Huntington Hartford

Mr. and Mrs. Meyer Davis

January 16, 1958 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting first with the Huntington Hartfords in their New York apartment. Then we'll be calling on orchestra leader Meyer Davis and his family.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Barbara Britton speaking for Revlon.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545
LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

(Commercial)

MURROW: Huntington Hartford, at the age of 47, has tried his hand at a number of tasks: theatrical producer, author, businessman, philanthropist, and art papering. He has been able to do much of this because he possesses a sizeable fortune, derived to a great extent from his family's holdings in The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company, the A & P.

Huntington Hartford was born here in New York, attended St. Paul's Preparatory School, and graduated from Harvard, where he majored in English literature and played a very good game of tennis.

During World War II he served in the Coast Guard. Ten years ago Huntington Hartford married actress Marjorie Steele. Currently they divide their time among several places: Florida, Europe, California, New Jersey, and their home here in New York. When they're in the city, Mr. and Mrs. Huntington Hartford live in a duplex apartment in that building on the right, overlooking the East River, one street away from the United Nations Building.

Evening, Hunt.

MR. HARTFORD: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: I know you're just back from Palm Beach. What brings you to New York this time, business or pleasure?

(Commercial)

MURROW: Huntington Hartford, at the age of 47, has tried his hand at a number of tasks: theatrical producer, author, businessman, philanthropist, and art papering. He has been able to do much of this because he possesses a sizeable fortune, derived to a great extent from his family's holdings in The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company, the A & P.

Huntington Hartford was born here in New York, attended St. Paul's Preparatory School, and graduated from Harvard, where he majored in English literature and played a very good game of tennis.

During World War II he served in the Coast Guard. Ten years ago Huntington Hartford married actress Marjorie Steele. Currently they divide their time among several places: Florida, Europe, California, New Jersey, and their home here in New York. When they're in the city, Mr. and Mrs. Huntington Hartford live in a duplex apartment in that building on the right, overlooking the East River, one street away from the United Nations Building.

Evening, Hunt.

MR. HARTFORD: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: I know you're just back from Palm Beach. What brings you to New York this time, business or pleasure?

MR. HARTFORD: Well, a little of both, Ed. Actually, I'm very busy these days. I have a lot of meetings in New York. I have a meeting of the Oil and Shale Corporation, and the Handwriting Institute, and Ed Stone has been waiting for me to get together with him on the new museum up here.

MURROW: Well, Hunt, are these active or casual interests? How do you find the time for all your projects?

MR. HARTFORD: Well, Ed, I don't know. Frankly, I kind of believe -- agree with Somerset Maugham that I -- but -- gee---

MURROW: That you have to do two things each day that you don't want to do. Go to bed and get up. Is that right?

MR. HARTFORD: That's right.

MURROW: Hunt, I know you never had to get up early only because you needed a job to pay your grocery bills. Have you ever had a low-level position?

MR. HARTFORD: Ed, I had two low-level positions, as you might call them, earlier in my life. I worked on a newspaper called PM where I worked as a cub reporter---

MURROW: Yes.

MR. HARTFORD: ---and then a little later just be-

MR. HARTFORD: Well, a little of both, Ed. Actually, I'm very busy these days. I have a lot of meetings in New York. I have a meeting of the Oil and Shale Corporation, and the Handwriting Institute, and Ed Stone has been waiting for me to get together with him on the new museum up here.

MURROW: Well, Hunt, are these active or casual interests? How do you find the time for all your projects?

MR. HARTFORD: Well, Ed, I don't know. Frankly, I kind of believe -- agree with Somerset Maugham that I -- but -- gee---

MURROW: That you have to do two things each day that you don't want to do. Go to bed and get up. Is that right?

MR. HARTFORD: That's right.

MURROW: Hunt, I know you never had to get up early only because you needed a job to pay your grocery bills. Have you ever had a low-level position?

MR. HARTFORD: Ed, I had two low-level positions, as you might call them, earlier in my life. I worked on a newspaper called PM where I worked as a cub reporter---

MURROW: Yes.

MR. HARTFORD: ---and then a little later just before the war, I had a job at the Harvell Die Casting Company out in California, and it was pretty tough work, actually.

MURROW: Tell me, Hunt, do you enjoy all of your present projects, or do you get what you would say a particular satisfaction from some of them?

MR. HARTFORD: Well, Ed, there's one in particular -- I enjoy all of them, of course, but I enjoy one in particular that I enjoy probably more than the others, and that's the study of handwriting and graphology. It's probably my oldest interest.

MURROW: I don't know anything about that. I know what it means, but I've had no experience with it.

MR. HARTFORD: I'd like to tell you a little about it, Ed.

MURROW: Good.

MR. HARTFORD: As a matter of fact, there's an instrument here in the other room, in the library, that I'd like to show you. This interest of handwriting of mine has been an interest for a great number of years, and we have a Handwriting Institute over at 48th Street. This instrument is called a graphodyne. It has something called a strain gauge in it, and this is an electric pencil that you write with---

MURROW: Yes?

fore the war, I had a job at the Harvell Die Casting Company out in California, and it was pretty tough work, actually.

MURROW: Tell me, Hunt, do you enjoy all of your present projects, or do you get what you would say a particular satisfaction from some of them?

MR. HARTFORD: Well, Ed, there's one in particular -- I enjoy all of them, of course, but I enjoy one in particular that I enjoy probably more than the others, and that's the study of handwriting and graphology. It's probably my oldest interest.

MURROW: I don't know anything about that. I know what it means, but I've had no experience with it.

MR. HARTFORD: I'd like to tell you a little about it, Ed.

MURROW: Good.

MR. HARTFORD: As a matter of fact, there's an instrument here in the other room, in the library, that I'd like to show you. This interest of handwriting of mine has been an interest for a great number of years, and we have a Handwriting Institute over at 48th Street. This instrument is called a graphodyne. It has something called a strain gauge in it, and this is an electric pencil that you write with---

MURROW: Yes?

MR. HARTFORD: ---and I have a number of interests over there at the Handwriting Institute. It's not just a hobby. It's quite a serious scientific study, the study of handwriting.

MURROW: What, precisely, do you learn from it, Hunt?

MR. HARTFORD: Well, we have a very powerful microscope over there with which we study the diagnosis of disease, and then Dr. Epstein and I work on the study of all types of different handwritings of people from all walks of life.

MURROW: You mean handwriting may give you a clue as to a disease? Is that possible?

MR. HARTFORD: Well, yes, I believe that it can, Ed. As a matter of fact, people think of graphology or handwriting as sort of fortune telling, but, actually, it's what they call a projective technique in medicine. Something similar to the Rorschach test or something of that sort, or intelligence test.

MURROW: Well, I'm sure that all subjects are interesting if one gives them enough study, but somehow I was under the impression that your major interest was in collecting art.

MR. HARTFORD: Well, that is one of my major

MR. HARTFORD: ---and I have a number of interests over there at the Handwriting Institute. It's not just a hobby. It's quite a serious scientific study, the study of handwriting.

MURROW: What, precisely, do you learn from it, Hunt?

MR. HARTFORD: Well, we have a very powerful microscope over there with which we study the diagnosis of diseases, and then Dr. Epstein and I work on the study of all types of different handwritings of people from all walks of life.

MURROW: You mean handwriting may give you a clue as to a disease? Is that possible?

MR. HARTFORD: Well, yes, I believe that it can, Ed. As a matter of fact, people think of graphology or handwriting as sort of fortune telling, but, actually, it's what they call a projective technique in medicine. Something similar to the Rorschach test or something of that sort, or intelligence test.

MURROW: Well, I'm sure that all subjects are interesting if one gives them enough study, but somehow I was under the impression that your major interest was in collecting art.

MR. HARTFORD: Well, that is one of my major interests, Ed. This is one of our paintings that we bought in London just recently. It's by a painter named DeGaff. It was -- he painted it, I believe -- I think it's of the London Zoo. It was painted in the London Zoo, rather.

MURROW: Tell me, does Mrs. Hartford share your interest in graphology as well as in painting?

MR. HARTFORD: Yes, Ed, she certainly does. She shares all of my interests. As a matter of fact, I think she's here right now.

MURROW: Good.

MR. HARTFORD: I'd like very much for you to -- I know you would like to see her again.

MURROW: I would, indeed.

MR. HARTFORD: Hi, Margie.

MRS. HARTFORD: Hello.

MURROW: Evening, Marjorie.

MRS. HARTFORD: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

MRS. HARTFORD: Just fine.

MURROW: Tell me, does your art collecting interfere with your interest in the theater?

MRS. HARTFORD: No, I wouldn't say so because my first love is the theater, but a very close second is collecting interests, Ed. This is one of our paintings that we bought in London just recently. It's by a painter named Degaff. It was -- he painted it, I believe -- I think it's of the London Zoo. It was painted in the London Zoo, rather.

MURROW: Tell me, does Mrs. Hartford share your interest in graphology as well as in painting?

MR. HARTFORD: Yes, Ed, she certainly does. She shares all of my interests. As a matter of fact, I think she's here right now.

MURROW: Good. I'd like very much for you to -- I know you would like to see her again.

MR. HARTFORD: I would, indeed.

MURROW: Hi, Margie.

MRS. HARTFORD: Hello.

MURROW: Evening, Marjorie.

MRS. HARTFORD: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

MRS. HARTFORD: Just fine.

MURROW: Tell me, does your art collecting interfere with your interest in the theater?

MRS. HARTFORD: No, I wouldn't say so because my first love is the theater, but a very close second is collecting paintings.

MR. HARTFORD: As a matter of fact, when she was in Cat on A Hot Tin Roof, she was gone about a year, and, actually, her interest in the theater interfered with the art collecting for a while.

MURROW: Well, Hunt, as one who has little interest in collecting anything, I often wonder what is the major motivation? For example, do you collect art as an investment, for personal pleasure, or just what is the reason?

MR. HARTFORD: Well, Ed, I don't think people should collect paintings as an investment because I think if they do, they'll probably lose money. I think that if you're going to collect paintings, you should collect them because you like them and because you enjoy them. As a matter of fact, I'd like to show you some of the paintings that we've just been collecting recently.

MURROW: These are some recent acquisitions, are they?

MR. HARTFORD: Yes, they are. This is a painting by Degas. It's rather interesting because it's a classical subject by a modern master.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. HARTFORD: This here is a Courbet. It's by one paintings. Ed. This is one of our paintings that we bought in London.

MR. HARTFORD: As a matter of fact, when she was in Cat on A Hot Tin Roof, she was gone about a year, and, actually, her interest in the theater interfered with the art collecting for a while.

MURROW: Well, Hunt, as one who has little interest in collecting anything, I often wonder what is the major motivation? For example, do you collect art as an investment, for personal pleasure, or just what is the reason?

MR. HARTFORD: Well, Ed, I don't think people should collect paintings as an investment because I think if they do, they'll probably lose money. I think that if you're going to collect paintings, you should collect them because you like them and because you enjoy them. As a matter of fact, I'd like to show you some of the paintings that we've just been collecting recently.

MURROW: These are some recent acquisitions, are they?

MR. HARTFORD: Yes, they are. This is a painting by Degas. It's rather interesting because it's a classical subject by a modern master.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. HARTFORD: This here is a Courbet. It's by one of the famous French painters. We bought it at an auction just a couple of nights ago, as a matter of fact. It's of the famous castle of Chillon in Switzerland that Byron wrote about.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. HARTFORD: This is a Constable. It's quite a great painting, but then, let me see now. Oh, yes, this here is a Sargeant.

MURROW: That looks as though it came from his earlier period. Did it?

MR. HARTFORD: Yes, this is one of his earlier ones. Actually, it's much freer and looser than the later ones which look more formal and stylized. This is by my favorite artist, Marjorie, and I don't know whether you recognize the subject or not, but---

MURROW: I do, indeed. I do, indeed. Hunt. Tell me, don't you regard those as good enough to be hung, including Marjorie's, I might say?

MR. HARTFORD: Oh, they're certainly good enough to be hung. As a matter of fact, of course they're very fine paintings, and probably a little too good to be hung here in the apartment, Ed, but we're building this gallery of modern art in Columbus Circle, and that's where we hope to hang them.

of the famous French painters. We bought it at an auction just a couple of nights ago, as a matter of fact. It's of the famous castle of Chillon in Switzerland that Byron wrote about.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. HARTFORD: This is a Constable. It's quite a great painting; but then, let me see now. Oh, yes, this here is a Sargeant.

MURROW: That looks as though it came from his earlier period. Did it?

MR. HARTFORD: Yes, this is one of his earlier ones. Actually, it's much freer and looser than the later ones which look more formal and stylized. This is by my favorite artist, Marjorie, and I don't know whether you recognize the subject or not, but---

MURROW: I do, indeed. I do, indeed. Hunt. Tell me, don't you regard those as good enough to be hung, including Marjorie's, I might say?

MR. HARTFORD: Oh, they're certainly good enough to be hung. As a matter of fact, of course they're very fine paintings, and probably a little too good to be hung here in the apartment, Ed, but we're building this gallery of modern art in Columbus Circle, and that's where we hope to hang them.

MURROW: Marjorie, are you in fairly, shall I say, complete agreement with Hunt's taste?

MRS. HARTFORD: Oh, yes, I think so -- very much so. In fact, I think my husband's taste is pretty well known. At one time, about two years ago, he took a full-page ad in most of the papers expressing his point of view on art.

MURROW: I remember that.

MRS. HARTFORD: It was very strong.

MURROW: I'll say it was strong!

MRS. HARTFORD: But, actually, he's not against all abstract art; he's just against the real extremes, you know.

MURROW: Hunt, a moment ago you mentioned a gallery of modern art you're building here in New York. Is there any, shall we say, inconsistency in this considering your well known views on modern art?

MR. HARTFORD: No, I don't think so, Ed. I mean, I think because a museum is called modern, it doesn't necessarily have to show only extreme forms of abstract art. I think that it can be modern and still have a healthy point of view. I'd like to show you a picture of the museum which Mr. Stone has designed for us where the paintings are going to be shown. This is the museum. It's on Columbus Circle.

MURROW: Yes?

MURROW: Marjorie, are you in fairly, shall I say, complete agreement with Hunt's taste?

MRS. HARTFORD: Oh, yes, I think so -- very much so. In fact, I think my husband's taste is pretty well known. At one time, about two years ago, he took a full-page ad in most of the papers expressing his point of view on art.

MURROW: I remember that.

MRS. HARTFORD: It was very strong.

MURROW: I'll say it was strong!

MRS. HARTFORD: But, actually, he's not against all abstract art; he's just against the real extremes, you know.

MURROW: Hunt, a moment ago you mentioned a gallery of modern art you're building here in New York. Is there any, shall we say, inconsistency in this considering your well known views on modern art?

MR. HARTFORD: No, I don't think so, Ed. I mean, I think because a museum is called modern, it doesn't necessarily have to show only extreme forms of abstract art. I think that it can be modern and still have a healthy point of view. I'd like to show you a picture of the museum which Mr. Stone has designed for us where the paintings are going to be shown. This is the museum. It's on Columbus Circle.

MURROW: Yes?

MR. HARTFORD: And it will be built of marble and about nine stories high. Also over here we have a small model of the first four or five floors of the museum. This is where the paintings are going to be hung. It will probably hold about two or three hundred paintings.

MURROW: Ah, yes. Hunt, will there be any room for the Marjorie Steele paintings in the gallery?

MRS. HARTFORD: Oh, no!

MURROW: No?

MR. HARTFORD: Well, I don't know, Ed. I'd like to show one or two of them. This is one of her paintings, for instance. It was painted from the window here. It's of the United Nations and of the East River.

MURROW: Very nice.

MR. HARTFORD: And there's a couple more of her paintings. She was working on these down in Florida.

MRS. HARTFORD: These are my two children.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. HARTFORD: These are the two children, and this is Cathy. She's eight years old. And Jackie. He's five. They're not completed yet, as you can see.

MURROW: Very handsome, though. Marjorie, is---

MRS. HARTFORD: Yes?

MR. HARTFORD: And it will be built of marble and about nine stories high. Also over here we have a small model of the first four or five floors of the museum. This is where the paintings are going to be hung. It will probably hold about two or three hundred paintings.

MURROW: Ah, yes. Hunt, will there be any room for the Marjorie Steele paintings in the gallery?

MRS. HARTFORD: Oh, no!

MURROW: No?

MR. HARTFORD: Well, I don't know, Ed. I'd like to show one or two of them. This is one of her paintings, for instance. It was painted from the window here. It's of the United Nations and of the East River.

MURROW: Very nice.

MR. HARTFORD: And there's a couple more of her paintings. She was working on these down in Florida.

MRS. HARTFORD: These are my two children.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. HARTFORD: These are the two children, and this is Cathy. She's eight years old. And Jackie. He's five. They're not completed yet, as you can see.

MURROW: Very handsome, though. Marjorie, is---

MRS. HARTFORD: Yes?

MURROW: ---that what occupies most of your time when you're in Florida?

MRS. HARTFORD: Well, when I'm in Florida, when I'm not painting or I'm not with the children, I'm usually under the water skin diving lately.

MURROW: What attracts you to skin diving?

MRS. HARTFORD: Oh, I love the adventure of exploring underwater, going into wrecks and seeing what you can find. Actually, this summer I brought up a Roman amphora outside of San Raphael in France.

MURROW: Did you!

MRS. HARTFORD: It was really exciting.

MURROW: Oh, it must have been. Hunt, are you a skin diving enthusiast, or do you have too many other interests?

MR. HARTFORD: Well, Ed, I tried it once or twice over in the Riviera, and I must say I was a little horrified at Marjorie down with about 30 sharks in the Bahamas.--

MRS. HARTFORD: No, they were barracudas.

MR. HARTFORD: ---last week, but I do have a lot of interests to keep me very busy, particularly interests that are not only interesting, but they're financial business interests for profit. One of them is this automatic garage which will be the world's first fully automatic garage and

MURROW: ---that what occupies most of your time when you're in Florida?

MRS. HARTFORD: Well, when I'm in Florida, when I'm not painting or I'm not with the children, I'm usually under the water skin diving lately.

MURROW: What attracts you to skin diving?

MRS. HARTFORD: Oh, I love the adventure of exploring underwater, going into wrecks and seeing what you can find. Actually, this summer I brought up a Roman amphora outside of San Raphael in France.

MURROW: Did you!

MRS. HARTFORD: It was really exciting.

MURROW: Oh, it must have been. Hunt, are you a skin diving enthusiast, or do you have too many other interests?

MR. HARTFORD: Well, Ed, I tried it once or twice over in the Riviera, and I must say I was a little horrified at Marjorie down with about 30 sharks in the Bahamas--

MRS. HARTFORD: No, they were barracudas.

MR. HARTFORD: ---last week, but I do have a lot of interests to keep me very busy, particularly interests that are not only interesting, but they're financial business interests for profit. One of them is this automatic garage which will be the world's first fully automatic garage and parking garage, and the other is the Oil Shale Corporation. We have a pilot plant out at the Denver Research Institute in Denver, and I think there's a trillion-and-a-half barrels of oil untapped, and it's one of our greatest natural untapped resources in the Rockies that people know so little about, and we're very interested in developing that.

MURROW: It's to be extracted from shale, right?

MR. HARTFORD: That's right, yes.

MURROW: Well, Hunt, the considerable Hartford family fortune has given you the means and the time to engage in a great many interesting activities. Have things always been easy for you?

MR. HARTFORD: No, Ed. As you can see, I'm rather shy and I've always been that way. I'm afraid I was terribly shy when I was young, and I knew that I was coming into a great deal of money, and I didn't know what to do about it. It was a tremendous responsibility, but I couldn't -- it was difficult for me to know how to use it, and I couldn't just ignore it, but when I got older, I realized that you shouldn't be a slave to your money; that if you could control your wealth rather than your wealth controlling you, then you will know how to handle it.

MURROW: Well, Hunt, there must be many things you

parking garage, and the other is the Oil Shale Corporation. We have a pilot plant out at the Denver Research Institute in Denver, and I think there's a trillion-and-a-half barrels of oil untapped, and it's one of our greatest natural untapped resources in the Rockies that people know so little about, and we're very interested in developing that.

MURROW: It's to be extracted from shale, right?

MR. HARTFORD: That's right, yes.

MURROW: Well, Hunt, the considerable Hartford family fortune has given you the means and the time to engage in a great many interesting activities. Have things always been easy for you?

MR. HARTFORD: No, Ed. As you can see, I'm rather shy and I've always been that way. I'm afraid I was terribly shy when I was young, and I knew that I was coming into a great deal of money, and I didn't know what to do about it. It was a tremendous responsibility, but I couldn't -- it was difficult for me to know how to use it, and I couldn't just ignore it, but when I got older, I realized that you shouldn't be a slave to your money; that if you could control your wealth rather than your wealth controlling you, then you will know how to handle it.

MURROW: Well, Hunt, there must be many things you will want to tell your youngsters when they're a little bit older. Right?

MR. HARTFORD: That's right. Well, Ed, you know, we've talked a lot about art, and I think perhaps the reason that I'm interested so much in art is that the things that I feel about art I feel about life in general: that art should be positive, that it should not be destructive; that it should not be negative, and that if it must be rebellious, it should be rebellious with the idea of building something instead of destroying it.

MURROW: Very well said. Thank you very much, Hunt. Thank you, Marjorie. Thank you for letting us come.

MR. HARTFORD: Thank you, Ed.

MRS. HARTFORD: Good-bye.

MURROW: And say hello to the children when you get back to Florida. Good night.

MR. HARTFORD: Good night.

MRS. HARTFORD: Good night.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with orchestra leader Meyer Davis and his family right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: The music of Meyer Davis and his society

will want to tell your youngsters when they're a little bit older. Right?

MR. HARTFORD: That's right. Well, Ed, you know, we've talked a lot about art, and I think perhaps the reason that I'm interested so much in art is that the things that I feel about art I feel about life in general: that art should be positive, that it should not be destructive; that it should not be negative, and that if it must be rebellious, it should be rebellious with the idea of building something instead of destroying it.

MURROW: Very well said. Thank you very much, Hunt. Thank you, Marjorie. Thank you for letting us come.

MR. HARTFORD: Thank you, Ed.

MRS. HARTFORD: Good-bye.

MURROW: And say hello to the children when you get back to Florida. Good night.

MR. HARTFORD: Good night.

MRS. HARTFORD: Good night.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with orchestra leader Meyer Davis and his family right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: The music of Meyer Davis and his society

orchestras has become an institution with the international set over something like the past 40 years. His clients have included just about every name in the Blue Book from the Astors to the Vanderbilts. At last count I think he had upwards of 80 orchestras with a payroll ranging from 500 to a thousand musicians.

In addition to recording for Victor Records, he has interests in many other businesses from bowling alleys to Broadway shows.

Meyer Davis, who comes from Maryland, started his first orchestra while still a high school boy in Washington, D.C. He went to law school for a while, but to coin a phrase, he gave up the bar for the baton.

Meyer and Mrs. Davis -- she's also a professional musician -- have been married 42 years and are the parents of four children. Hilda and Meyer Davis live in a duplex apartment in this building on the West Side of Central Park here in New York City.

Evening, Mrs. Davis.

MRS. DAVIS: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Good evening, Meyer.

MR. DAVIS: Hi, Ed.

MURROW: With so many bands working for you at the orchestras has become an institution with the international set over something like the past 40 years. His clients have included just about every name in the Blue Book from the Astors to the Vanderbilts. At last count I think he had upwards of 80 orchestras with a payroll ranging from 500 to a thousand musicians.

In addition to recording for Victor Records, he has interests in many other businesses from bowling alleys to Broadway shows.

Meyer Davis, who comes from Maryland, started his first orchestra while still a high school boy in Washington, D.C. He went to law school for a while, but to coin a phrase, he gave up the bar for the baton.

Meyer and Mrs. Davis -- she's also a professional musician -- have been married 42 years and are the parents of four children. Hilda and Meyer Davis live in a duplex apartment in this building on the West Side of Central Park here in New York City.

Evening, Mrs. Davis.

MRS. DAVIS: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Good evening, Meyer.

MR. DAVIS: Hi, Ed.

MURROW: With so many bands working for you at the same time, don't people ever ask you is there a real Meyer Davis?

MR. DAVIS: Well, once in a while there are people who think that the name is sort of a trademark or just a name, but I think most people know that there actually is a Meyer Davis. I remember one of my orchestras playing for a big party at the Ritz Carlton, and they were playing a classical number arranged as a fox trot, which at the time was sort of the vogue, and this couple dancing by stopped, and the lady said to the leader, "Tschaikowsky?" He says, "No, Madam, Meyer Davis." Sort of silly.

MURROW: Mrs. Davis, as a musician yourself, have you ever been called upon in an emergency to help out in one of Meyer's bands?

MRS. DAVIS: Oh, not exactly, Ed. I write an occasional song for him. I wrote a song for Mamie Eisenhower last spring which was played at the White House at a party in which Meyer had the orchestra, called "First Lady", of course.

MURROW: "First Lady", yes. Meyer, have you ever tried your hand at composing or playing classical music?

MR. DAVIS: Well, composing in a very small way.. I've done sort of special numbers once in a while, but Hilda is the "long hair" of the family. Her tone poem actually has same time, don't people ever ask you is there a real Meyer Davis?

MR. DAVIS: Well, once in a while there are people who think that the name is sort of a trademark or just a name, but I think most people know that there actually is a Meyer Davis. I remember one of my orchestras playing for a big party at the Ritz Carlton, and they were playing a classical number arranged as a fox trot, which at the time was sort of the vogue, and this couple dancing by stopped, and the lady said to the leader, "Tschaikowsky?" He says, "No, Madam, Meyer Davis." Sort of silly.

MURROW: Mrs. Davis, as a musician yourself, have you ever been called upon in an emergency to help out in one of Meyer's bands?

MRS. DAVIS: Oh, not exactly, Ed. I write an occasional song for him. I wrote a song for Mamie Eisenhower last spring which was played at the White House at a party in which Meyer had the orchestra, called "First Lady", of course.

MURROW: "First Lady", yes. Meyer, have you ever tried your hand at composing or playing classical music?

MR. DAVIS: Well, composing in a very small way. I've done sort of special numbers once in a while, but Hilda is the "long hair" of the family. Her tone poem actually has been performed by the NBC Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra and the San Francisco Orchestra. As far as classical work on my part is concerned, I was invited on the occasion of my brother-in-law, Pierre Monteux's, 75th birthday to come to San Francisco and conduct the San Francisco Orchestra, which I did. That's about the height of my experience as a symphonic conductor.

MURROW: You must have enjoyed sharing the podium with Pierre Monteux.

MR. DAVIS: I did.

MURROW: Mrs. Davis, have any of your children followed you and Meyer in music careers?

MRS. DAVIS: Oh, yes. Jane is in Europe now. She sings all over Europe, and Meyer Davis, Jr., who died in the war, was a violinist, and Emery and Gary are musicians. Not Gary, but Emery. We're going in there to see them now, Ed.

MURROW: Good.

MRS. DAVIS: Emery is a very fine musician. We're going to meet them. This is Emery.

MURROW: Evening, Emery.

EMERY: How are you, Ed?

MRS. DAVIS: And this is Gary, Ed.

MURROW: How are you, Gary?

been performed by the NBC Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra and the San Francisco Orchestra. As far as classical work on my part is concerned, I was invited on the occasion of my brother-in-law, Pierre Monteux's, 75th birthday to come to San Francisco and conduct the San Francisco Orchestra, which I did. That's about the height of my experience as a symphonic conductor.

MURROW: You must have enjoyed sharing the podium with Pierre Monteux.

MR. DAVIS: I did.

MURROW: Mrs. Davis, have any of your children followed you and Meyer in music careers?

MRS. DAVIS: Oh, yes. Jane is in Europe now. She sings all over Europe, and Meyer Davis, Jr., who died in the war, was a violinist, and Emery and Gary are musicians. Not Gary, but Emery. We're going in there to see them now, Ed.

MURROW: Good.

MRS. DAVIS: Emery is a very fine musician. We're going to meet them. This is Emery.

MURROW: Evening, Emery.

EMERY: How are you, Ed?

MRS. DAVIS: And this is Gary, Ed.

MURROW: How are you, Gary?

GARY: Hi, Ed.

MURROW: Gary, I haven't read much recently about your world citizen activities. What are you doing now?

GARY: Why, I'm on a very enjoyable TV show, Ed. (Laughter) No, seriously, I'm rehearsing. I'm going back into show business now rehearsing in a show called "The Golden Fleecing". One of the things. And I'm finishing up on a book which I've been writing now for 10 years.

MURROW: Well, good luck to you.

GARY: I hope to get a fall publication of it.

MURROW: Good. Good luck.

GARY: Thanks very much.

MURROW: Emery, what about you? Your mother tells me you're a good musician, too.

EMERY: Well, Mother's a better musician than she is a critic. Actually, I have played in several symphonies -- in the Pittsburgh and the Detroit Symphonies, and it might be interesting for you to know that I'm playing the Marie Callas concert at the end of the month.

MURROW: Oh, are you! Good.

EMERY: Yes, and---

MURROW: No fights, though.

EMERY: No fights. And I'm doing "Redhead", the

GARY: Hi, Ed.

MURROW: Gary, I haven't read much recently about your world citizen activities. What are you doing now?

GARY: Why, I'm on a very enjoyable TV show, Ed. (laughter) No, seriously, I'm rehearsing. I'm going back in-to show business now rehearsing in a show called "The Golden Fleecing". One of the things. And I'm finishing up on a book which I've been writing now for 10 years.

MURROW: Well, good luck to you.

GARY: I hope to get a full publication of it.

MURROW: Good. Good luck.

GARY: Thanks very much.

MURROW: Emery, what about you? Your mother tells me you're a good musician, too.

EMERY: Well, Mother's a better musician than she is a critic. Actually, I have played in several symphonies -- in the Pittsburgh and the Detroit Symphonies, and it might be interesting for you to know that I'm playing the Marie Callas concert at the end of the month.

MURROW: Oh, are you! Good.

EMERY: Yes, and---

MURROW: No fights, though.

EMERY: No fights. And I'm doing "Redhead", the Gwen Verdon show which is coming into town---

MURROW: Oh, fine.

EMERY: ---on the 5th of February.

MURROW: Well, I'm sure that---

MR. DAVIS: Don't you have anything for your pop?

EMERY: I'll play for you anytime, Dad.

MURROW: Mrs. Davis, what instrument do you play?

MRS. DAVIS: Well, I play piano and organ, and upstairs I have the cutest little organ to play for you. Let's go up.

MURROW: Let's go. Good night, Fellows.

MRS. DAVIS: So long, boys.

MURROW: Good night, Gary. Good night, Emery.

GARY: Good night.

EMERY: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: Meyer?

MR. DAVIS: Yes, Ed.

MURROW: Does your clientele request much rock and roll at their affairs these days?

MR. DAVIS: Not very much, Ed. I think it's sort of in the fad class. The basic dances are really the fox trot and the waltz, and I think they'll go on forever.

MURROW: Well, Meyer, if you stick to the waltz and Gwen Verdon show which is coming into town---

MURROW: Oh, fine.

EMMERY: ---on the 5th of February.

MURROW: Well, I'm sure that---

MR. DAVIS: Don't you have anything for your pop?

EMMERY: I'll play for you anytime, Dad.

MURROW: Mrs. Davis, what instrument do you play?

MRS. DAVIS: Well, I play piano and organ, and up-stairs I have the cutest little organ to play for you. Let's go up.

MURROW: Let's go. Good night, Fellows.

MRS. DAVIS: So long, boys.

MURROW: Good night, Gary. Good night, Emery.

GARY: Good night.

EMMERY: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: Meyer?

MR. DAVIS: Yes, Ed.

MURROW: Does your clientele request much rock and roll at their affairs these days?

MR. DAVIS: Not very much, Ed. I think it's sort of in the fad class. The basic dances are really the fox trot and the waltz, and I think they'll go on forever.

MURROW: Well, Meyer, if you stick to the waltz and the fox trot, you'll go on forever, too.

MR. DAVIS: Good.

MURROW: How long do you plan to keep going?

MR. DAVIS: Well, as long as people want me, Ed. I'm fairly heavily booked for the next three to four years and scattered dates up to, oh, 1969, but I had a real thrill about two months ago.

MURROW: What was that?

MR. DAVIS: Well, I received a telegram. I'd like to show it to you, if you'll come into my room. Pardon me a moment, dear.

MRS. DAVIS: I'll see you later.

MURROW: I want to hear that organ.

MR. DAVIS: It's a telegram that I received from Mrs. Pierre du Pont, and it reads as follows: "What is so rare as a day in June? Imperative. Please reserve date for my granddaughter's debut 1975." Well, I called her up and amazingly enough, she said she was serious and she wanted me to select the date, and I selected June 21, 1975, which is the height of the June season, and the date is now in my books, and I hope I will be able to do it.

MURROW: So do I. You won't have to worry about social security, will you?

the fox trot, you'll go on forever, too.

MR. DAVIS: Good.

MURROW: How long do you plan to keep going?

MR. DAVIS: Well, as long as people want me, I'm fairly heavily booked for the next three to four years and scattered dates up to, oh, 1969, but I had a real thrill about two months ago.

MURROW: What was that?

MR. DAVIS: Well, I received a telegram. I'd like to show it to you, if you'll come into my room. Pardon me a moment, dear.

MRS. DAVIS: I'll see you later.

MURROW: I want to hear that organ.

MR. DAVIS: It's a telegram that I received from Mrs. Pierre du Pont, and it reads as follows: "What is so rare as a day in June? Imperative. Please reserve date for my granddaughter's debut 1975." Well, I called her up and amazingly enough, she said she was serious and she wanted me to select the date, and I selected June 21, 1975, which is the height of the June season, and the date is now in my books, and I hope I will be able to do it.

MURROW: So do I. You won't have to worry about social security, will you?

MR. DAVIS: Oh, I guess not, Ed.

MURROW: Meyer, how much of the far-flung Meyer Davis business is conducted from that desk behind you there?

MR. DAVIS: Well, quite a lot, as a matter of fact. I'm a very early riser and it's just a habit. Sometimes I've gotten into the habit of sort of fixing my own breakfast because I'm up even before my girls downstairs. I'm at this desk probably two or three hours before I go to my office checking on things, looking over correspondence and so forth, and then when I get to my office, well, I'm liable to be there from now on, if you know what I mean.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. DAVIS: Yes.

MURROW: Well, I suppose in your type of work the hours aren't exactly ideal, but I'm sure there are other compensations. You must meet all sorts of interesting people.

MR. DAVIS: Oh, I do, Ed, and I've played at many glamorous parties. For instance, here's a picture of King George and Queen Elizabeth---

MURROW: Ah, yes.

MR. DAVIS: ---the former reigning monarchs of England, which they sent to me after I had played a reception in their honor when they were here during the World's Fair, and

MR. DAVIS: Oh, I guess not, Ed.

MURROW: Meyer, how much of the far-flung Meyer Davis business is conducted from that desk behind you there?

MR. DAVIS: Well, quite a lot, as a matter of fact. I'm a very early riser and it's just a habit. Sometimes I've gotten into the habit of sort of fixing my own breakfast because I'm up even before my girls downstairs. I'm at this desk probably two or three hours before I go to my office checking on things, looking over correspondence and so forth, and then when I get to my office, well, I'm liable to be there from now on, if you know what I mean.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. DAVIS: Yes.

MURROW: Well, I suppose in your type of work the hours aren't exactly ideal, but I'm sure there are other compensations. You must meet all sorts of interesting people.

MR. DAVIS: Oh, I do, Ed, and I've played at many glamorous parties. For instance, here's a picture of King George and Queen Elizabeth---

MURROW: Ah, yes.

MR. DAVIS: ---the former reigning monarchs of England, which they sent to me after I had played a reception in their honor when they were here during the World's Fair, and well---

MURROW: Meyer, when you sit down and enjoy a non-business evening, what's it like?

MR. DAVIS: Well, Ed, I like to play poker, actually---

MURROW: Oh, so do I.

MR. DAVIS: ---and I'd like to show you some of the poker hands that I've held, and I think it's a sort of a record in a way because I have had four royal flushes, and I don't know of anyone who has held that number, and if there is anyone listening to us who has, I should be delighted to hear from him. Incidentally, you see that---

MURROW: Yes?

MR. DAVIS: ---blank space? I'm holding that open for a diamond royal which I haven't held yet, but I'm hoping.

MURROW: Well, I'd like to sit in on that game sometime but you'd probably fill out that diamond flush.

MRS. DAVIS: No poker games tonight, Ed. Come on, I want to play the organ for you.

MURROW: Ah, that's what we've been waiting for.

MRS. DAVIS: Here is my little wee organ. I have a big one, Ed, but I love this one. I'm going to play you a tune.

well---

MURROW: Meyer, when you sit down and enjoy a non-business evening, what's it like?

MR. DAVIS: Well, Ed, I like to play poker, actually---

MURROW: Oh, so do I.

MR. DAVIS: ---and I'd like to show you some of the poker hands that I've held, and I think it's a sort of a record in a way because I have had four royal flushes, and I don't know of anyone who has held that number, and if there is anyone listening to us who has, I should be delighted to hear from him. Incidentally, you see that---

MURROW: Yes?

MR. DAVIS: ---blank space? I'm holding that open for a diamond royal which I haven't held yet, but I'm hoping.

MURROW: Well, I'd like to sit in on that game sometime but you'd probably fill out that diamond flush.

MRS. DAVIS: No poker games tonight, Ed. Come on, I want to play the organ for you.

MURROW: Ah, that's what we've been waiting for.

MRS. DAVIS: Here is my little wee organ. I have a big one, Ed, but I love this one. I'm going to play you a tune.

MURROW: Good.

(Mrs. Davis plays organ.)

MRS. DAVIS: Hasn't it a lovely tone?

MURROW: Very nice. Thank you very much.

MRS. DAVIS: You're welcome.

MURROW: That old organ really takes me back a few years.

MRS. DAVIS: Me too.

MURROW: Meyer, your memory must go back a few years, too. I wonder if you'd mind giving us what we might call a bandstand view of presidents you have known.

MR. DAVIS: Why, I'd be delighted.

MURROW: All right, let's start at the beginning. I think it's with Harding, isn't it?

MR. DAVIS: Harding was the first president I played for. I'd say that his parties at the White House were brilliant. He was the only president who danced, actually, of all that I have played for. His favorite tunes were "La Paloma" and "The End of A Perfect Day".

MURROW: And Coolidge?

MR. DAVIS: Coolidge? Dull. But I remember one night when he actually played the harmonica and imitated locomotive whistles.

MURROW: Good.

(Mrs. Davis plays organ.)

MRS. DAVIS: Hasn't it a lovely tone?

MURROW: Very nice. Thank you very much.

MRS. DAVIS: You're welcome.

MURROW: That old organ really takes me back a few years.

MRS. DAVIS: Me too.

MURROW: Meyer, your memory must go back a few years, too. I wonder if you'd mind giving us what we might call a bandstand view of presidents you have known.

MR. DAVIS: Why, I'd be delighted.

MURROW: All right, let's start at the beginning. I think it's with Harding, isn't it?

MR. DAVIS: Harding was the first president I played for. I'd say that his parties at the White House were brilliant. He was the only president who danced, actually, of all that I have played for. His favorite tunes were "La Paloma" and "The End of A Perfect Day".

MURROW: And Coolidge?

MR. DAVIS: Coolidge? Dull. But I remember one night when he actually played the harmonica and imitated locomotive whistles.

MURROW: Did he! I didn't know he could play the harmonica. And Hoover.

MR. DAVIS: Hoover. Rather stiff. I can recall one night we were playing there when an aide came up and stopped me right in the middle of a tune. It was one o'clock and he had been instructed that the music was to stop at one, and he took this absolutely literally. He stopped me in the middle of a bar!

MURROW: And Roosevelt?

MR. DAVIS: Roosevelt. Very gay. I think the gayest of the parties were the Roosevelts. The children used to gather around the gold piano in the East Room and sing songs. Mrs. Roosevelt introduced square dances. She loved "The Blue Danube" actually, and an interesting thing about Mrs. Roosevelt is is that she's the only occupant of the White House who paid me in advance. I used to get a check several days ahead of time.

MURROW: And the bandstand view of Eisenhower.

MR. DAVIS: Charming. Considerate. He's the only president who actually receives and greets every member of the orchestra, shakes them by the hand, and makes them feel right at home in the White House.

MURROW: Meyer, that covers a span of about 40

MURROW: Did he! I didn't know he could play the harmonica. And Hoover.

MR. DAVIS: Hoover. Rather stiff. I can recall one night we were playing there when an aide came up and stopped me right in the middle of a tune. It was one o'clock and he had been instructed that the music was to stop at one, and he took this absolutely literally. He stopped me in the middle of a bar!

MURROW: And Roosevelt?

MR. DAVIS: Roosevelt. Very gay. I think the gayest of the parties were the Roosevelts. The children used to gather around the gold piano in the East Room and sing songs. Mrs. Roosevelt introduced square dances. She loved "The Blue Danube" actually, and an interesting thing about Mrs. Roosevelt is is that she's the only occupant of the White House who paid me in advance. I used to get a check several days ahead of time.

MURROW: And the bandstand view of Eisenhower.

MR. DAVIS: Charming. Considerate. He's the only president who actually receives and greets every member of the orchestra, shakes them by the hand, and makes them feel right at home in the White House.

MURROW: Meyer, that covers a span of about 40

years, but it seems I missed one president from the list.

MR. DAVIS: I think you left out Mr. Truman.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. DAVIS: I never played for him in the White House. He occupied Blair House during his administration because the White House was under repair, but I did play at an inaugural ball, and I remember about, oh, two or three months ago, he attended a function that I played for, and he greeted me, and I said, "Mr. President, can I play something for you?" He said, "Yes, play me a nice Viennese waltz. I'm so sick of the Missouri Waltz."

MURROW: Well, after several more White House parties and your 1975 booking, I hope you'll take time to write a detailed history.

MR. DAVIS: Don't forget Governor Rockefeller's Inaugural Ball, which I think compared with any of the presidential inaugural balls.

MRS. DAVIS: Right.

MURROW: Right. Good night, Hilda. Good night, Meyer. Thanks for letting us come.

MRS. DAVIS: Good night, Ed.

MR. DAVIS: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: Good night. I'll be back in a moment to years, but it seems I missed one president from the list.

MR. DAVIS: I think you left out Mr. Truman.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. DAVIS: I never played for him in the White House. He occupied Blair House during his administration because the White House was under repair, but I did play at an inaugural ball, and I remember about, oh, two or three months ago, he attended a function that I played for, and he greeted me, and I said, "Mr. President, can I play something for you?" He said, "Yes, play me a nice Viennese waltz. I'm so sick of the Missouri Waltz."

MURROW: Well, after several more White House parties and your 1975 booking, I hope you'll take time to write a detailed history.

MR. DAVIS: Don't forget Governor Rockefeller's Inaugural Ball, which I think compared with any of the presidential inaugural balls.

MRS. DAVIS: Right.

MURROW: Right. Good night, Hilda. Good night, Meyer. Thanks for letting us come.

MRS. DAVIS: Good night, Ed.

MR. DAVIS: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: Good night. I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests, right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be visiting with actor Tony Randall and his wife here in New York, and with the widow of one of baseball's greatest stars, Mrs. Babe Ruth.

There are the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

---

tell you about next week's guests, right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be visiting with actor Tony Randall and his wife here in New York, and with the widow of one of baseball's greatest stars, Mrs. Babe Ruth.

There are the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Genevieve

Mr. and Mrs. Tony Randall

January 23, 1959 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with singer, actress and television performer Genevieve and her father, and with actor Tony Randall and his wife here in New York.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Genevieve

Mr. and Mrs. Tony Randall

January 23, 1959 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with singer, actress and television performer Genevieve and her father, and with actor Tony Randall and his wife here in New York.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545
LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

(Commercial)

MURROW: A Parisian singer named Genevieve came to these shores from France less than four years ago to win almost immediate success with her songs and over-abundance and friendly flow of fractured English.

Genevieve is 28. She and her brother were born and raised in Paris and Tunisia where her father was a construction engineer. When she was just out of her teens, Genevieve went into the night club business -- owner, operator, and star. Five years of this, and she decided to seek her fortune in America. Since her arrival she has found almost constant employment in night clubs, on the stage and in television.

Now Genevieve is a New Yorker. Three months ago she settled down in a penthouse apartment on this street on the East Side of New York.

Good evening, Genevieve.

GENEVIEVE: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How are you?

GENEVIEVE: Very well. I feel very, very happy.

MURROW: Good. Genevieve, I just happened to be in the audience at your first performance in America. I gather that now you have decided to stay a while. Right?

(Commercial)

MURROW: A Parisian singer named Genevieve came to these shores from France less than four years ago to win almost immediate success with her songs and over-abundance and friendly flow of fractured English.

Genevieve is 28. She and her brother were born and raised in Paris and Tunisia where her father was a construction engineer. When she was just out of her teens, Genevieve went into the night club business -- owner, operator, and star. Five years of this, and she decided to seek her fortune in America. Since her arrival she has found almost constant employment in night clubs, on the stage and in television.

Now Genevieve is a New Yorker. Three months ago she settled down in a penthouse apartment on this street on the East Side of New York.

Good evening, Genevieve.

GENEVIEVE: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How are you?

GENEVIEVE: Very well. I feel very, very happy.

MURROW: Good. Genevieve, I just happened to be in the audience at your first performance in America. I gather that now you have decided to stay a while. Right?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, I'm not going to stay a little bit, I'm going to stay definitely because very soon I will be American citizen, and I plan to do my last year in your country.

MURROW: Why did you decide to become an American citizen?

GENEVIEVE: Because, first, I love here. I love here -- that's all, you know, and because I found only help, affection, only friends, and since the first time I met my manager -- the first time in Paris, and he bring me here, I only find affection, and the hands like that all around me to help me, so I have to be American.

MURROW: Tell me, where did you learn English?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, I learned English like that -- you know, in the street, in the grocery, in the MURROW: Did you ever study English in school?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, yes. In school?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: I learn English almost when I come here, and I learn English in school, too, when I was little girl, but I was very bad pupil?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: I was very bad pupil -- bad to learn

GENEVIEVE: Oh, I'm not going to stay a little bit, I'm going to stay definitely because very soon I will be American citizen, and I plan to do my last year in your country.

MURROW: Why did you decide to become an American citizen?

GENEVIEVE: Because, first, I love here. I love here -- that's all, you know, and because I found only help, affection, only friends, and since the first time I met my manager -- the first time in Paris, and he bring me here, I only find affection, and the hands like that all around me to help me, so I have to be American.

MURROW: Tell me, where did you learn English?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, I learned English like that -- you know, in the street, in the grocery, in the MURROW: Did you ever study English in school?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, yes. In school?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: I learn English almost when I come here, and I learn English in school, too, when I was little girl, but I was very bad pupil?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: I was very bad pupil -- bad to learn anything in my head.

MURROW: Genevieve, you've done very well in a short time. What confuses you most about the way Americans talk?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, it's, for example, when you speak between you, and when you speak with slang. This I don't understand, and when you speak too quick, I don't understand, and when the South's people speak, I don't understand, too. That's very difficult for me.

MURROW: Do you have any trouble with the signs or the advertisements in this country?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, yes. Oui, oui. No, not now, but that remind me, one time in subway, I read one way on the street, and I believe that was the name of the street, and I asked my driver, "Please, one way." So he goes -- he goes -- he goes -- and I look and I never find my street.

MURROW: But now you know, don't you?

GENEVIEVE: Yes, a little bit. Not too much.

MURROW: Tell me, do you have your new apartment completely furnished?

GENEVIEVE: You are here tonight, and I'm so proud and so happy. You asked me why I love America. You see, that is my little apartment. It is very little, but filled with anything in my head.

MURROW: Genevieve, you've done very well in a short time. What confuses you most about the way Americans talk?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, it's, for example, when you speak between you, and when you speak with slang. This I don't understand, and when you speak too quick, I don't understand, and when the South's people speak, I don't understand, too. That's very difficult for me.

MURROW: Do you have any trouble with the signs or the advertisements in this country?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, yes. Out, out. No, not now, but that reminds me, one time in subway, I read one way on the street, and I believe that was the name of the street, and I asked my driver, "please, one way." So he goes -- he goes -- he goes -- and I look and I never find my street.

MURROW: But now you know, don't you?

GENEVIEVE: Yes, a little bit. Not too much.

MURROW: Tell me, do you have your new apartment completely furnished?

GENEVIEVE: You are here tonight, and I'm so proud and so happy. You asked me why I love America. You see, that is my little apartment. It is very little, but filled with beauty. I am very proud because I did that myself. You see that little bed?

MURROW: Yes?

GENEVIEVE: That is a bed where I sleep now because my father is sleeping in my bedroom, and that is a little bed who comes from monestary?

MURROW: Yes?

GENEVIEVE: You understand?

MURROW: Right.

GENEVIEVE: Monestary -- and I dress that, you know -- and I have -- that is a little thing -- and that is -- that is with floor on this side---

MURROW: Ah, huh.

GENEVIEVE: ---and that is beautiful little trumeau. You understand trumeau?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: Is the name of that. I have one more beauty here behind the camera. My room is too little to show.

MURROW: Most of those things you brought from France, did you?

GENEVIEVE: Oui. You know why? Because I am the most lucky girl in the world. I come here -- good friend of mine has big store here in New York.

beauty. I am very proud because I did that myself. You see that little bed?

MURROW: Yes?

GENEVIEVE: That is a bed where I sleep now because my father is sleeping in my bedroom, and that is a little bed who comes from monastery?

MURROW: Yes?

GENEVIEVE: You understand?

MURROW: Right.

GENEVIEVE: Monastery -- and I dress that, you know -- and I have -- that is a little thing -- and that is -- that is with floor on this side---

MURROW: Ah, huh.

GENEVIEVE: ---and that is beautiful little trumeau. You understand trumeau?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: Is the name of that. I have one more beauty here behind the camera. My room is too little to show.

MURROW: Most of those things you brought from France, did you?

GENEVIEVE: Oui. You know why? Because I am the most lucky girl in the world. I come here -- good friend of mine has big store here in New York.

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: But he said, "Only to his friends." He said to me, "Darling, for you I will sell." -- you know -- and he said, "Darling, for you I will sell." -- you know. He said, "I will give you that for..." You know.

MURROW: Tell me, Genevieve, did you decorate the apartment yourself?

GENEVIEVE: I did that myself, but, of course, my friend helped me in that project. He said, "That will be good, and that will be, maybe." You know, he helped me lots, but I did myself; yes. I really do. Look at that. It's a little chair. Interesting?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: That is beautiful. That comes from church. It is a thing that you put between the chair and the people. You cannot see, but it is beauty.

MURROW: It is beautiful.

GENEVIEVE: I love. And that is -- I have plenty of things but you cannot see because it is too little.

MURROW: Do you have any other reminders of France in your apartment?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, yes. I have here that.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: But he said, "Only to his friends." He said to me, "Darling, for you I will sell." -- you know -- and he said, "Darling, for you I will sell." -- you know. He said, "I will give you that for..." You know.

MURROW: Tell me, Genevieve, did you decorate the apartment yourself?

GENEVIEVE: I did that myself, but, of course, my friend helped me in that project. He said, "That will be good, and that will be, maybe." You know, he helped me lots, but I did myself; yes. I really do. Look at that. It's a little chair. Interesting?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: That is beautiful. That comes from church. It is a thing that you put between the chair and the people. You cannot see, but it is beauty.

MURROW: It is beautiful.

GENEVIEVE: I love. And that is -- I have plenty of things but you cannot see because it is too little.

MURROW: Do you have any other reminders of France in your apartment?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, yes. I have here that.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

GENEVIEVE: Can you see that?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: That is from Maman, but I have somebody who remind me more -- is my father. Come, Papa. (Speaks French to father.) This is my father, Mr. ? . (Speaks French, introducing father to Ed Murrow.) Mr. Murrow.

FATHER: Bon soir, Monsieur.

MURROW: Good evening, Mr. ?

GENEIEVE: He's nice, my papa, but he just speaks French.

MURROW: Well, will you apologize to him for my inability to speak French.

GENEVIEVE: Oh, yes, (Speaks to father in French. Father replies in French.) He says he doesn't speak any English, and you should excuse him, too.

FATHER: I love America.

GENEVIEVE: He said, "I can say only I love America."

MURROW: How long have you been visiting?

(Genevieve translates question into French and father replies in French.)

GENEVIEVE: Since 35 days. It is the first time in his life he is here.

GENEVIEVE: Can you see that?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: That is from Maman, but I have somebody who reminds me more -- is my father. Come, Papa. (Speaks French to father.) This is my father, Mr. . (Speaks French, introducing father to Ed Murrow.) Mr. Murrow.

FATHER: Bon soir, Monsieur.

MURROW: Good evening, Mr.

GENEIEVE: He's nice, my papa, but he just speaks French.

MURROW: Well, will you apologize to him for my inability to speak French.

GENEVIEVE: Oh, yes. (Speaks to father in French. Father replies in French.) He says he doesn't speak any English, and you should excuse him, too.

FATHER: I love America.

GENEVIEVE: He said, "I can say only I love America."

MURROW: How long have you been visiting?

(Genevieve translates question into French and father replies in French.)

GENEVIEVE: Since 35 days. It is the first time in his life he is here.

MURROW: Well, Genevieve, will you say to your father that I hope he has enjoyed his stay and that he's going home with a good impression of America?

(Genevieve translates into French. Father replies in French.)

GENEVIEVE: You know what he said to me, my father? He says, "I'm very happy. Most of all I'm very happy because I love the impression I come back with the impression that you walk with good manners, and not with guns there like we see in the movies so often.

MURROW: Genevieve; what cities in America have you visited?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, about all the cities. I visited about all the cities -- all. San Francisco, Hollywood, St. Louis, Chicago, Detroit, Columbus.

MURROW: Did you like Detroit (pronouncing Detroit with French accent.)

GENEVIEVE: Detroit?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: Yes, but I prefer Chicago.

MURROW: Why?

GENEVIEVE: I just don't know why you fall in love with somebody or something or some city. Maybe, in fact, be-

MURROW: Well, Genevieve, will you say to your father that I hope he has enjoyed his stay and that he's going home with a good impression of America?

(Genevieve translates into French. Father replies in French.)

GENEVIEVE: You know what he said to me, my father? He says, "I'm very happy. Most of all I'm very happy because I love the impression I come back with the impression that you walk with good manners, and not with guns there like we see in the movies so often.

MURROW: Genevieve, what cities in America have you visited?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, about all the cities. I visited about all the cities -- all. San Francisco, Hollywood, St. Louis, Chicago, Detroit, Columbus.

MURROW: Did you like Detroit (pronouncing Detroit with French accent.)

GENEVIEVE: Detroit?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: Yes, but I prefer Chicago.

MURROW: Why?

GENEVIEVE: I just don't know why you fall in love with somebody or something or some city. Maybe, in fact, because it was the first city I ever visit when I was the first time in my life in America, it was Chicago where I was.

MURROW: Genevieve, when you had your own night club in Paris, just what did you do? Was it hard work?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, I worked like beaver. I did about everything in night club. It was very little, tiny place, but I worked. I tried to sing. I played my show. I have a beautiful show there with a lot of actors. I received people. I did ? you understand? 1 - 2 - 3 - 4 - 5?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: I did--oh, really everything. I cooked, too. I cooked.

MURROW: You cooked?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, I cooked menu like that. Really, I did!

MURROW: What is your specialty when it comes to cooking?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, I have no specialty. About everything, but now I don't cook anymore. Come. Come, see my kitchen. I have very little kitchen. You see my little kitchen? I don't cook too much anymore because I have never time. So you know what I said to me? Look. Don't move.

MURROW: I won't. Frozen foods.

cause it was the first city I ever visit when I was the first time in my life in America, it was Chicago where I was.

MURROW: Genevieve, when you had your own night club in Paris, just what did you do? Was it hard work?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, I worked like beaver. I did about everything in night club. It was very little, tiny place, but I worked. I tried to sing. I played my show. I have a beautiful show there with a lot of actors. I received people. I did you understand? 1 - 2 - 3 - 4 - 5?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: I did--oh, really everything. I cooked, too. I cooked.

MURROW: You cooked?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, I cooked menu like that. Really, I did!

MURROW: What is your specialty when it comes to cooking?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, I have no specialty. About everything, but now I don't cook anymore. Come. Come, see my kitchen. I have very little kitchen. You see my little kitchen? I don't cook too much anymore because I have never time. So you know what I said to me? Look. Don't move.

MURROW: I won't. Frozen foods.

GENEVIEVE: I eat frozen foods now. I become American; no?

MURROW: Tell me, what occupies your time when you're not performing on television or in the kitchen?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, my bird and my dog. Do you see my bird here?

MURROW: Oh, yes.

GENEVIEVE: I have four little birds and tonight I have one little guest. He's a little guest but he's very nosey. I'm going to buy a little girl for him. And, of course, my poodle -- my doggie.

MURROW: Genevieve, I know you frequently talk about animals on the Jack Paar Show. You must enjoy working with Jack, don't you?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, yes, of course. More than that, because Jack -- Jack gave me everything in my life. He gave me chance, luck, he give me -- he changed my life, that's all. So he's my boss and I love him, and he's a big man. I love him. Do you see that?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: Oh, I'm very proud of that because that's a humanitarian award. For this here they give me that just because I give -- oh, it's a long story. But I'm very

GENEVIEVE: I eat frozen foods now. I become American; no?

MURROW: Tell me, what occupies your time when you're not performing on television or in the kitchen?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, my bird and my dog. Do you see my bird here?

MURROW: Oh, yes.

GENEVIEVE: I have four little birds and tonight I have one little guest. He's a little guest but he's very nosy. I'm going to buy a little girl for him. And, of course, my poodle -- my doggie.

MURROW: Genevieve, I know you frequently talk about animals on the Jack Paar Show. You must enjoy working with Jack, don't you?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, yes, of course. More than that, because Jack -- Jack gave me everything in my life. He gave me chance, luck, he give me -- he changed my life, that's all. So he's my boss and I love him, and he's a big man. I love him. Do you see that?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: Oh, I'm very proud of that because that's a humanitarian award. For this here they give me that just because I give -- oh, it's a long story. But I'm very proud of it.

MURROW: Because you saved a lot of dogs' lives, didn't you.

GENEVIEVE: Oui. Oui. I tried to do that. Did you see THE NEW YORK TIMES today, what they said?

MURROW: I did. Genevieve, I wonder what does your father think of your success in America?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, he's -- out of this world. You want I ask him?

MURROW: Yes.

(Genevieve translates question into French. Father replies in French.)

GENEVIEVE: Papa said he's -- he don't say now because he's very but, what he told me two days ago, he said, "That is fabulous to work, the people." Papa speaks, you know.

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: Papa goes for walk. "The people recognize me when I'm on the street with your little dog." "Oh, you are the father of Genevieve." He is very happy.

MURROW: Do you have some big shows coming up?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, yes. First I do you know?

MURROW: Yes.

proud of it.GENEVIEVE: I get frozen feeds now, I mean American; MURROW: Tell me, what occupies your time when you're not [illegible]

GENEVIEVE: Out. Out. I tried to do that. Did you see THE NEW YORK TIMES today, what they said?

MURROW: I did. Genevieve, I wonder what does your father think of your success in America?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, he's -- out of this world. You want I ask him?

MURROW: Yes.

(Genevieve translates question into French. Father replies in French.)

GENEVIEVE: Papa said he's -- he don't say now because he's very but, what he told me two days ago, he said, "That is fabulous to work, the people." Papa speaks, you know.

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIEVE: Papa goes for walk. "The people recognize me when I'm on the street with your little dog." "Oh, you are the father of Genevieve." He is very happy.

MURROW: Do you have some big shows coming up?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, yes. First I do you know?

MURROW: Yes.

GENEVIVE: And with Jack -- we are going to Hollywood for Jack Paar Show, and I'm going to play with Jack Benny. This I am happy about. I love Jack Benny. And after that we go to Paris with Jack Paar for three weeks, and we'll be in London, and after that, I do my show with George Abbott and that I am, you know---

MURROW: With George Abbott.

GENEVIEVE: Yes. I saw him this afternoon and he finished to write the first act for me. Oh, it's beauty. You will see.

MURROW: Genevieve; do you get a lot of mail from your fans?

GENEVIEVE: Oh, yes, plenty of mail, and I receive plenty of presents. You know what I received one day? One diamond! It was not really big, but you'll see, but it was one diamond! But that I have to send back because I cannot accept that, you know.

MURROW: Well, Genevieve, I guess most attractive young ladies hate to part with diamonds.

GENEVIEVE: We don't like that.

MURROW: Thank you for letting us come.

GENEVIEVE: Thank you.

MURROW: Good night, Genevieve.

GENEVIVE: And with Jack -- we are going to Holly-wood for Jack Parr Show, and I'm going to play with Jack Benny. This I am happy about. I love Jack Benny. And after that we go to Paris with Jack Parr for three weeks, and we'll be in London, and after that, I do my show with George Abbott and that I am, you know---

MURROW: With George Abbott.

GENEVIVE: Yes. I saw him this afternoon and he finished to write the first act for me. Oh, it's beauty. You will see.

MURROW: Genevieve; do you get a lot of mail from your fans?

GENEVIVE: Oh, yes, plenty of mail, and I receive plenty of presents. You know what I received one day? One diamond! It was not really big, but you'll see, but it was one diamond! But that I have to send back because I cannot accept that, you know.

MURROW: Well, Genevieve, I guess most attractive young ladies hate to part with diamonds.

GENEVIVE: We don't like that.

MURROW: Thank you for letting us come.

GENEVIVE: Thank you.

MURROW: Good night, Genevieve.

GENEVIEVE: Good night.

MURROW: Good night, Mr. ?

FATHER: Good night.

MURROW: Good night. In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Tony Randall. And now here again, speaking for Kent, is Bob Wright.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Tony Randall has been a professional actor for the better part of 20 years. In the past few years he has attracted a good deal of attention doing comedy on television, the stage and screen, playing what he loosely calls "The normal American male".

Tony was born in Tulsa, Okla; studied at Northwestern University where he met his wife, Florence, who happened to be from Oklahoma City. He continued his dramatic studies at the Neighborhood Playhouse here in New York, and made his Broadway debut in 1941. Following his stage success in "Oh, Captain", and several recent motion pictures, he now finds himself being described as one of the most promising comedy finds in a couple of decades.

Tony Randall and his wife have lived in an apartment in that tall building here in New York City for the past five years. The Randalls boast that their apartment gives them

GENEVIEVE: Good night.

MURROW: Good night, Mr.

FATHER: Good night.

MURROW: Good night. In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Tony Randall. And now here again, speaking for Kent, is Bob Wright.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Tony Randall has been a professional actor for the better part of 20 years. In the past few years he has attracted a good deal of attention doing comedy on television, the stage and screen, playing what he loosely calls "The normal American male".

Tony was born in Tulsa, Okla; studied at Northwestern University where he met his wife, Florence, who happened to be from Oklahoma City. He continued his dramatic studies at the Neighborhood Playhouse here in New York, and made his Broadway debut in 1941. Following his stage success in "Oh, Captain", and several recent motion pictures, he now finds himself being described as one of the most promising comedy finds in a couple of decades.

Tony Randall and his wife have lived in an apartment in that tall building here in New York City for the past five years. The Randalls boast that their apartment gives them a 180-degree view of Central Park.

Evening, Tony. Good evening, Tony. Good evening, Florence.

MR. RANDALL: Did you hear what Florence just said?

MURROW: No, I didn't.

MR. RANDALL: She said, "Let's hide." Can you imagine the picture you would have gotten with no one there! Are we in the right place?

MURROW: Well, from the looks of that stack of records, I take it that you like your home filled with music.

MR. RANDALL: I'm an ardent opera fan; yes. I generally have the hi fi booming Verdi, Ed. Collecting old records -- generally opera records as old as possible, some of them over 50 years old -- that's my hobby.

MURROW: Well, Tony, just about everyone today seems to be making records. How about you? How's your singing voice?

MR. RANDALL: Some years ago at a luncheon held at Northwestern University for Carl Sandburg I led the singing, and his first words, when he arose to address the throng, were that he hoped - he was going to pray I would never be successful because success destroys people. For about 10 or 15 years it seemed to me that his prayers were being answered.

a 180-degree view of Central Park.

Evening, Tony. Good evening, Tony. Good evening, Florence.

MR. RANDALL: Did you hear what Florence just said?

MURROW: No, I didn't.

MR. RANDALL: She said, "Let's hide." Can you imagine the picture you would have gotten with no one there! Are we in the right place?

MURROW: Well, from the looks of that stack of records, I take it that you like your home filled with music.

MR. RANDALL: I'm an ardent opera fan; yes. I generally have the hi fi booming Verdi, Bd. Collecting old records -- generally opera records as old as possible, some of them over 50 years old -- that's my hobby.

MURROW: Well, Tony, just about everyone today seems to be making records. How about you? How's your singing voice?

MR. RANDALL: Some years ago at a luncheon held at Northwestern University for Carl Sandburg I led the singing, and his first words, when he arose to address the throng, were that he hoped - he was going to pray I would never be successful because success destroys people. For about 10 or 15 years it seemed to me that his prayers were being answered.

MURROW: You know, I was talking to Carl Sandburg this afternoon, and I told him you were going to say something about him, and he said, "You tell that young fellow to be careful what he says."

Tony, in your recent roles you played largely comedy, and very successfully. I suppose this is what you enjoy doing most?

MR. RANDALL: I do enjoy it, although I think I enjoy just being an actor more than anything else. I seem to find myself doing comedy ever since "Mr. Peepers," which was more or less a happenstance, as you know. I started out as a serious actor and for a number of years in radio I was a staple of such serious tragedy as "Portia Faces Life", "When A Girl Marries", "Life's True Story". I was Reggie on "I Love A Mystery". That was pretty deep, you know.

MURROW: Yeah. It really was. Florence, do you and Tony have the same tastes when it comes to music?

MRS. RANDALL: No, Ed, he likes opera and I like chamber music. But I don't like it when he rips the insides out of my best antique cabinet to install a sterophonic sound.

MURROW: Did he do that?

MRS. RANDALL: It sounds great.

MURROW: Did he really do that?

MURROW: You know, I was talking to Carl Sandburg this afternoon, and I told him you were going to say something about him, and he said, "You tell that young fellow to be careful what he says."

Tony, in your recent roles you played largely comedy, and very successfully. I suppose this is what you enjoy doing most?

MR. RANDALL: I do enjoy it, although I think I enjoy just being an actor more than anything else. I seem to find myself doing comedy ever since "Mr. Peepers," which was more or less a happenstance, as you know. I started out as a serious actor and for a number of years in radio I was a staple of such serious tragedy as "Portia Faces Life", "When A Girl Marries", "Life's True Story". I was Reggie on "I Love A Mystery". That was pretty deep, you know.

MURROW: Yeah. It really was. Florence, do you and Tony have the same tastes when it comes to music?

MRS. RANDALL: No, Ed, he likes opera and I like chamber music. But I don't like it when he rips the insides out of my best antique cabinet to install a stereophonic sound.

MURROW: Did he do that?

MRS. RANDALL: It sounds great.

MURROW: Did he really do that?

MR. RANDALL: Yes, I took the back out of it to improve the sound. It destroyed the back of the cabinet, but it improved the sound immeasurably.

MURROW: Well, Florence, is Tony as handy at repairing antiques as he is at dismembering them?

MRS. RANDALL: Oh, no. No. I let him fix a water faucet that "went on the fritz" but not any of my fine antique furniture, Ed. Would you like to see some of our old antique furniture?

MURROW: Hm, hm. Sure would.

MRS. RANDALL: Now, this is a Louis XVI bergere that we love---

MURROW: Beautiful!

MRS. RANDALL: ---and this screen is an old Chinese one. It takes a very tall ceiling before you can use this screen.

MR. RANDALL: In our last apartment it scraped the ceiling. We were lucky to get a - to be in an old building like this where the ceiling is tall enough.

MURROW: Very nice.

MRS. RANDALL: We have an old Napoleonic drum over here, Ed. He likes to play it.

MURROW: Do either of you try your hand at it, or is

MR. RANDALL: Yes, I took the back out of it to improve the sound. It destroyed the back of the cabinet, but it improved the sound immeasurably.

MURROW: Well, Florence, is Tony as handy at repairing antiques as he is at dismembering them?

MRS. RANDALL: Oh, no. No. I let him fix a water faucet that "went on the fritz" but not any of my fine antique furniture, Ed. Would you like to see some of our old antique furniture?

MURROW: Hm, hm. Sure would.

MRS. RANDALL: Now, this is a Louis XVI bergere that we love---

MURROW: Beautiful!

MRS. RANDALL: ---and this screen is an old Chinese one. It takes a very tall ceiling before you can use this screen.

MR. RANDALL: In our last apartment it scraped the ceiling. We were lucky to get a - to be in an old building like this where the ceiling is tall enough.

MURROW: Very nice.

MRS. RANDALL: We have an old Napoleonic drum over here, Ed. He likes to play it.

MURROW: Do either of you try your hand at it, or is it purely ornamental?

MR. RANDALL: Well, it's a pretty good coffee table, or an occasional table, but, actually, it's a stand-in for a piano or a harpsichord. We're looking for an antique one that's going to go in this place. I'm determined to learn how to play a musical instrument. There's a conservatory right across the street. I seem to find time to take a voice lesson every day, so I'm going to take a piano lesson, too, when I find a piano.

MRS. RANDALL: He thinks he'll learn in six lessons, Ed.

MURROW: Tell me, Tony, does Florence ever make you go antique hunting with her?

MR. RANDALL: No, she makes me go antique "paying" with her, Ed. This is my field, modern American painting. That's Bataan. That's one of my favorites. We'll show you some of our furniture. Florence is the antique buyer, but she's very good at going with me to look at paintings in galleries, so I give her more or less a free hand.

MURROW: More or less, huh.

MR. RANDALL: More or less.

MRS. RANDALL: Ed, this room is all French furniture. Nothing modern in here.

it purely ornamental?

MR. RANDALL: Well, it's a pretty good coffee table, or an occasional table, but, actually, it's a stand-in for a piano or a harpsichord. We're looking for an antique one that's going to go in this place. I'm determined to learn how to play a musical instrument. There's a conservatory right across the street. I seem to find time to take a voice lesson every day, so I'm going to take a piano lesson, too, when I find a piano.

MRS. RANDALL: He thinks he'll learn in six lessons, Ed.

MURROW: Tell me, Tony, does Florence ever make you go antique hunting with her?

MR. RANDALL: No, she makes me go antique "paying" with her, Ed. This is my field, modern American painting. That's Bateman. That's one of my favorites. We'll show you some of our furniture. Florence is the antique buyer, but she's very good at going with me to look at paintings in galleries, so I give her more or less a free hand.

MURROW: More or less, huh.

MR. RANDALL: More or less.

MRS. RANDALL: Ed, this room is all French furniture. Nothing modern in here.

MR. RANDALL: Welcome to our bedroom, folks!

MURROW: Thank you very much.

MRS. RANDALL: This room began because we found this old French canopy up in the attic of a house of a friend. We upholstered it in silk to match an evening dress of mine, and then we added the little Louis XV table with its hand-carved apron, and they didn't have plumbing in the 1700's, Ed.

MURROW: Yes?

MRS. RANDALL: This was once used for an old china cupboard. It's so old that we recently had to have it repaired because it was falling apart. This chair is part Louis Xv and part Louis XVI.

MR. RANDALL: I haven't been allowed to sit in it yet.

MURROW: How did that happen that it's part and part?

MRS. RANDALL: Well, it's a transitional period, and we think it's very beautiful.

MR. RANDALL: Can I sit in it?

MURROW: You just about made it.

MRS. RANDALL: This little miniature directoire commode was used in the 1700's by a salesman who carried them around the country and took orders for large cabinets. I use

MR. RANDALL: Welcome to our bedroom, folks!

MURROW: Thank you very much.

MRS. RANDALL: This room began because we found this old French canopy up in the attic of a house of a friend. We upholstered it in silk to match an evening dress of mine, and then we added the little Louis XV table with its hand-carved apron, and they didn't have plumbing in the 1700's, Ed.

MURROW: Yes?

MRS. RANDALL: This was once used for an old china cupboard. It's so old that we recently had to have it repaired because it was falling apart. This chair is part Louis XV and part Louis XVI.

MR. RANDALL: I haven't been allowed to sit in it yet.

MURROW: How did that happen that it's part and part?

MRS. RANDALL: Well, it's a transitional period, and we think it's very beautiful.

MR. RANDALL: Can I sit in it?

MURROW: You just about made it.

MRS. RANDALL: This little miniature directoire commode was used in the 1700's by a salesman who carried them around the country and took orders for large cabinets. I use it for a sewing box, but it can be used on another chest for jewelry or gloves.

MR. RANDALL: This mirror is of no use whatsoever because if we had it resilvered so you could see yourself in it, it wouldn't look like an antique anymore.

MRS. RANDALL: But it's a very fine old directoire mirror, Ed, and we love it.

MR. RANDALL: You look like this in it,

MRS. RANDALL: This chaise, Ed, is Louis XVI, and it has its original paint on it. Well, that isn't an antique.

MR. RANDALL: No, this is an antique from the "Mr. Peepers" Show.

MRS. RANDALL: Take it in the other room then.

MR. RANDALL: This is a present from a very dear friend, Al Peeper, who was the director of the "Peepers" show. He's dead now. One of the finest fellows I ever knew, and it came from - it was a prop on the best "Peepers" show we ever had.

MRS. RANDALL: We can show him your room.

MURROW: I take it, Tony, this is one room in the house without antiques, or am I wrong?

MR. RANDALL: You're right, except for one thing. I felt that a house that had as many pictures as this, ought it for a sewing box, but it can be used on another chest for jewelry or gloves.

MR. RANDALL: This mirror is of no use whatsoever because if we had it resilvered so you could see yourself in it, it wouldn't look like an antique anymore.

MRS. RANDALL: But it's a very fine old directoire mirror, Ed, and we love it.

MR. RANDALL: You look like this in it.

MRS. RANDALL: This chaise, Ed, is Louis XVI, and it has its original paint on it. Well, that isn't an antique.

MR. RANDALL: No, this is an antique from the "Mr. Peepers" Show.

MRS. RANDALL: Take it in the other room then.

MR. RANDALL: This is a present from a very dear friend, Al Peeper, who was the director of the "Peepers" show. He's dead now. One of the finest fellows I ever knew, and it came from - it was a prop on the best "Peepers" show we ever had.

MRS. RANDALL: We can show him your room.

MURROW: I take it, Tony, this is one room in the house without antiques, or am I wrong?

MR. RANDALL: You're right, except for one thing. I felt that a house that had as many pictures as this, ought to have at least one ancestor. I found this fellow at an auction for $65 and I adopted him as my uncle.

MURROW: What's his name?

MR. RANDALL: I'm not going to tell you because I have an ostensible name for him. I think he makes a swell ancestor.

MURROW: Very impressive.

MR. RANDALL: He's actually essentially a portrait of about the American Revolutionary period, but it's unsigned so it's of very little value. This was my first painting, the Stuart Davis. I generally get a painting to celebrate each show I'm in. This came early in the "Mr. Peepers" period. It's a very early Stuart Davis, too, but it's my first love.

MURROW: Tony, you've played both serious roles and comedy parts. Which do you find more difficult?

MR. RANDALL: I think that everybody who tried it agrees that comedy is a lot more difficult. As David Garrett said, "You can fool the town in tragedy, but comedy's a serious business." I think the toughest part I ever had was in "Inherit The Wind", though, where I had to be on stage for 15 minutes without any lines, and following the action and keeping in it was a real test of concentration. In "Oh, to have at least one ancestor. I found this fellow at an auction for $65 and I adopted him as my uncle.

MURROW: What's his name?

MR. RANDALL: I'm not going to tell you because I have an ostensible name for him. I think he makes a swell ancestor.

MURROW: Very impressive.

MR. RANDALL: He's actually essentially a portrait of about the American Revolutionary period, but it's unsigned so it's of very little value. This was my first painting, the Stuart Davis. I generally get a painting to celebrate each show I'm in. This came early in the "Mr. Peepers" period. It's a very early Stuart Davis, too, but it's my first love.

MURROW: Tony, you've played both serious roles and comedy parts. Which do you find more difficult?

MR. RANDALL: I think that everybody who tried it agrees that comedy is a lot more difficult. As David Garrett said, "You can fool the town in tragedy, but comedy's a serious business." I think the toughest part I ever had was in "Inherit The Wind", though, where I had to be on stage for 15 minutes without any lines, and following the action and keeping in it was a real test of concentration. In "Oh, Captain", though, I nearly killed myself dancing, but that was a physical strain.

MURROW: Oh, I remember watching that with great pleasure and a degree of sympathy for the physical strain.

MR. RANDALL: I looked like this when it was over.

MURROW: You really have to keep in shape for a part like that, don't you?

MR. RANDALL: An actor ought to keep in good shape. He's a fool if he doesn't keep in pretty good athletic trim. What's considerably more important, though, is, I believe, keeping your mind in shape. As I approach the stage of being the oldest practicing juvenile in the world, I am oppressed with the passage of time. This is a wonderful place, this world, and nobody lives long enough to take it all in. That's what artists are for, it seems to me. They've taken it in for us. They show us what their experiences were. A man wastes his time if he doesn't appreciate that, and "dig it", as it were. That's what books are for. That's what paintings are for. That's what music is for, but above all, that's what books are for.

MURROW: Tony, of all the books, do you read largely for pleasure, or is some of your reading in the nature of what might be called "homework"?

captain", though, I nearly killed myself dancing, but that was a physical strain.

MURROW: Oh, I remember watching that with great pleasure and a degree of sympathy for the physical strain.

MR. RANDALL: I looked like this when it was over.

MURROW: You really have to keep in shape for a part like that, don't you?

MR. RANDALL: An actor ought to keep in good shape. He's a fool if he doesn't keep in pretty good athletic trim. What's considerably more important, though, is, I believe, keeping your mind in shape. As I approach the stage of being the oldest practicing juvenile in the world, I am oppressed with the passage of time. This is a wonderful place, this world, and nobody lives long enough to take it all in. That's what artists are for, it seems to me. They've taken it in for us. They show us what their experiences were. A man wastes his time if he doesn't appreciate that, and "dig it", as it were. That's what books are for. That's what paintings are for. That's what music is for, but above all, that's what books are for.

MURROW: Tony, of all the books, do you read largely for pleasure, or is some of your reading in the nature of what might be called "homework"?

MR. RANDALL: I am afraid it's all homework because I rarely have time to read for pleasure, which is to me the greatest pleasure. I have the odd habit of reading, three or four or five books at a time, but they're generally books on the theater. I'm reading "Haslett's Essays" now, and Shaw's works on the theater. I'm also reading "Othello" which is a labor of love, and also Stanislavsky's "Notes on Othello", the reason being it's my greatest dream to do "Othello" on the stage next fall, and we will - that is, if Lee Cobb will play Othello. There's a good part in it for me, too.

MURROW: Tony, tell me, why is it that so many comedians want to play serious or even tragic roles?

MR. RANDALL: Well, I'm not at all sure I'm the right person to ask that, because I'm not sure I'm a comedian. I think of myself as an actor. One of the reasons must be, however, that the serious actors seem to get more respect, while the actors themselves know that the comedy roles are more difficult, and one of the books I'm in now is a choice one that anyone interested in the theater ought to read called, "On Actors And The Art of Acting" by the English critic of the last century, George Henry Luse, and he answers that one. He says comedy actors like to play serious parts because

MR. RANDALL: I am afraid it's all homework because I rarely have time to read for pleasure, which is to me the greatest pleasure. I have the odd habit of reading, three or four or five books at a time, but they're generally books on the theater. I'm reading "Hazlett's Essays" now, and Shaw's works on the theater. I'm also reading "Othello" which is a labor of love, and also Stanislavsky's "Notes on Othello", the reason being it's my greatest dream to do
"Othello" on the stage next fall, and we will - that is, if Lee Cobb will play Othello. There's a good part in it for me, too.

MURROW: Tony, tell me, why is it that so many comedians want to play serious or even tragic roles?

MR. RANDALL: Well, I'm not at all sure I'm the right person to ask that, because I'm not sure I'm a comedian.
I think of myself as an actor. One of the reasons must be, however, that the serious actors seem to get more respect, while the actors themselves know that the comedy roles are more difficult, and one of the books I'm in now is a choice one that anyone interested in the theater ought to read called, "On Actors And The Art of Acting" by the English critic of the last century, George Henry Lues, and he answers that one. He says comedy actors like to play serious parts because "it is an insurgence of self-respect against the implied disrespect of laughter."

MURROW: Very nice.

MR. RANDALL: Yes.

MURROW: I wasn't familiar with that. Florence, I take it with the busy schedule Tony has had, you've both done some traveling in the past year.

MRS. RANDALL: Oh, yes, Ed. Tony just finished "The Mating Game", and tonight, as soon as you go home, he catches a plane for California to do the George Gobel Show next Tuesday night. I'm not going with him this trip because I'm staying at home to do some work for March of Dimes, but I join Tony in February when he starts his next picture.

MURROW: Tony, much of your life is wrapped up in acting, but I'm sure there are some free moments when you give some serious thoughts to other things, too.

MR. RANDALL: Yes. I'm concerned with the state of the American theater. I'm more concerned with the state of American culture. Culture is all that people leave behind it. A man once said to me that the culture of the American people is the Bessemer steel converter. I hope that's not true. The Russians seem to be ahead of us in technology now. Because of that, we're putting a lot -- the Government is putting a lot

"It is an insurgence of self-respect against the implied dis-respect of laughter."

MURROW: Very nice.

MR. RANDALL: Yes.

MURROW: I wasn't familiar with that. Florence, I take it with the busy schedule Tony has had, you've both done some traveling in the past year.

MRS. RANDALL: Oh, yes, Ed. Tony just finished "The Mating Game", and tonight, as soon as you go home, he catches a plane for California to do the George Gobel Show next Tuesday night. I'm not going with him this trip because I'm staying at home to do some work for March of Dimes, but I join Tony in February when he starts his next picture.

MURROW: Tony, much of your life is wrapped up in acting, but I'm sure there are some free moments when you give some serious thoughts to other things, too.

MR. RANDALL: Yes. I'm concerned with the state of the American theater. I'm more concerned with the state of American culture. Culture is all that people leave behind it. A man once said to me that the culture of the American people is the Bessemer steel converter. I hope that's not true. The Russians seem to be ahead of us in technology now. Because of that, we're putting a lot -- the Government is putting a lot into the scientific training of people. I'm all for that, but that only trains half a man -- his mind. Art trains a man's heart. I think it's high time that the government subsidizes art. I hope we're not remembered as a people who loved only long cars. I hope you're right!

MURROW: Tony, if you weren't an actor, what do you think you'd like to be? (ETC)

MR. RANDALL: I'd rather have been Toscanini than any man who ever lived.

MURROW: Tony Randall, Florence, thank you very much for letting us come. It's been a very pleasant visit.

MRS. RANDALL: Thank you, Ed. Good night.

MURROW: Good night.

MR. RANDALL: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: Good luck on the Coast, Tony.

MR. RANDALL: Thanks.

MURROW: Good night. I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: We regret that we were unable to arrange our scheduled visit tonight to the home of Mrs. Babe Ruth.

Next week we'll be visiting with Mr. and Mrs. Danny Dayton, neither of them strangers to television. You've into the scientific training of people. I'm all for that, but that only trains half a man -- his mind. Art trains a man's heart. I think it's high time that the government subsidizes art. I hope we're not remembered as a people who loved only long cars.

MURROW: Tony, if you weren't an actor, what do you think you'd like to be?

MR. RANDALL: I'd rather have been Toscanini than any man who ever lived.

MURROW: Tony Randall, Florence, thank you very much for letting us come. It's been a very pleasant visit.

MRS. RANDALL: Thank you, Ed. Good night.

MURROW: Good night.

MR. RANDALL: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: Good luck on the Coast, Tony.

MR. RANDALL: Thanks.

MURROW: Good night. I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: We regret that we were unable to arrange our scheduled visit tonight to the home of Mrs. Babe Ruth.

Next week we'll be visiting with Mr. and Mrs. Danny Dayton, neither of them strangers to television. You've undoubtedly seen Danny perform many times, and his wife is perhaps better known as Dagmar.

Next week we'll also be calling on Mr. and Mrs. Red Smith, who will be waiting for us at their home in Stanford, Connecticut. Mr. Smith is responsible for writing one of the country's most widely read sports columns.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

---

undoubtedly seen Danny perform many times, and his wife is perhaps better known as Dagmar.

Next week we'll also be calling on Mr. and Mrs. Red Smith, who will be waiting for us at their home in Stamford, Connecticut. Mr. Smith is responsible for writing one of the country's most widely read sports columns.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Danny Dayton and Dagmar, and

Mr. and Mrs. Red Smith

January 30, 1959 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with actor Danny Dayton and his wife, Dagmar, and with sports columnist Red Smith and his wife at home in Stanford, Connecticut.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Barbara Britton speaking for Revlon.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Danny Dayton and Dagmar, and

Mr. and Mrs. Red Smith

January 30, 1959 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with actor Danny Dayton and his wife, Dagmar, and with sports columnist Red Smith and his wife at home in Stamford, Connecticut.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Barbara Britton speaking for Revlon.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545

LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

(Commercial)

MURROW: Dagmar is -- well, Dagmar. Her name before she became a late-at-night television star, was Virginia Ruth Egner, and as she has reminded more than one audience, she hails from West Virginia, the city of Huntington -- up in the hill country, as she puts it, where you can hear a car coming from two miles away.

Eight years ago Dagmar married actor Danny Dayton, who currently appears on the television program, "Keep Talking". Danny has also played on Broadway and in Hollywood. You may have seen him in "Guys And Dolls".

Mr. and Mrs. Danny Dayton live in a six-room penthouse just below that water tower and right across the street from Central Park.

Evening, Danny.

MR. DAYTON: Oh, hello, Mr. Murrow. I knew you were coming. I thought I'd get a few practice shots in. (Practicing golf swing.)

MURROW: Oh, very good.

MR. DAYTON: Hm, not bad. I might improve a little.

MURROW: Very impressive. Danny, are we in the park or on the roof of your apartment?

(Commercial)

MURROW: Dagmar is -- well, Dagmar. Her name before she became a late-at-night television star, was Virginia Ruth Egner, and as she has reminded more than one audience, she hails from West Virginia, the city of Huntington -- up in the hill country, as she puts it, where you can hear a car coming from two miles away.

Eight years ago Dagmar married actor Danny Dayton, who currently appears on the television program, "Keep Talking". Danny has also played on Broadway and in Hollywood. You may have seen him in "Guys And Dolls".

Mr. and Mrs. Danny Dayton live in a six-room penthouse just below that water tower and right across the street from Central Park.

Evening, Danny.

MR. DAYTON: Oh, hello, Mr. Murrow. I knew you were coming. I thought I'd get a few practice shots in.

(practicing golf swing.)

MURROW: Oh, very good.

MR. DAYTON: Hm, not bad. I might improve a little.

MURROW: Very impressive. Danny, are we in the park or on the roof of your apartment?

MR. DAYTON: No, you're right on the terrace right outside our apartment just across the street from Central Park, as a matter of fact. I wish you could see it. It's pretty. Right over there is Fifth Avenue and Central Park, and it's rather pretty up here, and I enjoy working out on the golf driving range every so often. As long as it's not raining or snowing, I'm out here.

MURROW: Well, if you say so, then it's all perfectly normal, but don't you occasionally miss the net and hook a few into the park down below?

MR. DAYTON: Oh, no, never. I might slice a little into my own window and break a few. No, I never hook into the park.

MURROW: You're sure Dagmar isn't down there chasing one or two unusual shots?

MR. DAYTON: No, she's not. She's right here, Mr. Murrow. If you will follow me, you will meet the lady of the house.

DAGMAR: Hello everybody, and hello, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How are you, Dag?

DAGMAR: I thought you'd never get over here, honey.

MURROW: Tell me, do you spend any time at the golf net to sort of keep in trim?

MR. DAYTON: No, you're right on the terrace right outside our apartment just across the street from Central Park, as a matter of fact. I wish you could see it. It's pretty. Right over there is Fifth Avenue and Central Park, and it's rather pretty up here, and I enjoy working out on the golf driving range every so often. As long as it's not raining or snowing, I'm out here.

MURROW: Well, if you say so, then it's all perfectly normal, but don't you occasionally miss the net and hook a few into the park down below?

MR. DAYTON: Oh, no, never. I might slice a little into my own window and break a few. No, I never hook into the park.

MURROW: You're sure Dagmar isn't down there chasing one or two unusual shots?

MR. DAYTON: No, she's not. She's right here, Mr. Murrow. If you will follow me, you will meet the lady of the house.

DAGMAR: Hello everybody, and hello, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How are you, Dag?

DAGMAR: I thought you'd never get over here, honey.

MURROW: Tell me, do you spend any time at the golf net to sort of keep in trim?

DAGMAR: That's too much exercise for me, I'm very lazy. I never like to do too much exercise, I leave that to Danny. Would you like to come in the house now, Ed?

MURROW: Sure would.

MR. DAYTON: Don't you think it's unusual having a golf driving range on a terrace in the middle of Manhattan?

MURROW: Yes.

DAGMAR: I think I waved to you, didn't I?

MURROW: Yes.

MR. DAYTON: The Concords gave it to me.

DAGMAR: Oh, yes, they did.

MR. DAYTON: You go on in, I have something to do out here.

DAGMAR: I want to show him this living room. This is a beautiful room, Ed. I think you'll like this. As a matter of fact, the first thing I want to show you is this fireplace. Danny made this fireplace in his workshop. It doesn't work, naturally, but he made it.

MURROW: Very impressive, too.

DAGMAR: Is it? See my thin figure as I'm walking over here? I want to show you this beautiful television set.

MURROW: That looks like a considerably larger television set than I've ever seen.

DAGMAR: That's too much exercise for me, I'm very lazy. I never like to do too much exercise, I leave that to Danny. Would you like to come in the house now, Ed?

MURROW: Sure would.

MR. DAYTON: Don't you think it's unusual having a golf driving range on a terrace in the middle of Manhattan?

MURROW: Yes.

DAGMAR: I think I waved to you, didn't I?

MURROW: Yes.

MR. DAYTON: The Concordes gave it to me.

DAGMAR: Oh, yes, they did.

MR. DAYTON: You go on in, I have something to do out here.

DAGMAR: I want to show him this living room. This is a beautiful room, Ed. I think you'll like this. As a matter of fact, the first thing I want to show you is this fireplace. Danny made this fireplace in his workshop. It doesn't work, naturally, but he made it.

MURROW: Very impressive, too.

DAGMAR: Is it? See my thin figure as I'm walking over here? I want to show you this beautiful television set.

MURROW: That looks like a considerably larger television set than I've ever seen.

DAGMAR: You look adorable on it every Friday night. I'll tell you what I like about this set. It makes me look small. I've been on a diet the last three months, and I've lost 25 pounds, and if you've noticed this room, everything is very large here. That's why I look so tiny. Now, I will tell you my dimensions or anything but always lie about my weight. The ladies always ask me, but I never like to tell them. I see Mr. D. coming over this way. He's going to make me look fat right away now, he's so thin.

MURROW: Danny, from all appearances you don't share Dagmar's dieting problems, do you?

MR. DAYTON: No, not at all. As a matter of fact, I always high protein things. I just like 'em. You know, steaks and stuff.

DAGMAR: I hate him! Really hate him.

MR. DAYTON: But Dag is very happy eating anything with sauces, gravies -- you know, biscuits with gravy. She likes that.

DAGMAR: And ketchup, and mustard---

MR. DAYTON: Yeah, and pickles, pickle relish, mustard, ketchup, on a loaf of bread. That's all.

DAGMAR: The last three months I've had none of that. I've been very bored, I'll tell you the truth.

DAGMAR: You look adorable on it every Friday night. I'll tell you what I like about this set. It makes me look small. I've been on a diet the last three months, and I've lost 25 pounds, and if you've noticed this room, everything is very large here. That's why I look so tiny. Now, I will tell you my dimensions or anything but always lie about my weight. The ladies always ask me, but I never like to tell them. I see Mr. D. coming over this way. He's going to make me look fat right away now, he's so thin.

MURROW: Danny, from all appearances you don't share Dagmar's dieting problems, do you?

MR. DAYTON: No, not at all. As a matter of fact, I always high protein things. I just like 'em. You know, steaks and stuff. I want to show him this living room.

DAGMAR: I hate him! Really hate him.

MR. DAYTON: But Dag is very happy eating anything with sauces, gravies -- you know, biscuits with gravy. She likes that.

DAGMAR: And ketchup, and mustard---

MR. DAYTON: Yeah, and pickles, pickle relish, mustard, ketchup, on a loaf of bread. That's all.

DAGMAR: The last three months I've had none of that. I've been very bored, I'll tell you the truth.

MURROW: I noticed at lunch today you had two boiled eggs -- that was all.

DAGMAR: Don't tell everything you know now, my dear.

MR. DAYTON: Mr. Murrow, I gave -- because of this problem I gave Dag---

DAGMAR: What problem?

MR. DAYTON: Weight problem.

DAGMAR: Oh, you scared me for a minute.

MR. DAYTON: She goes on diets so many times, up and down -- I tell you, every husband that has a wife that goes on diets -- really. I gave her a little exercising unit -- device. I'd like you to see it.

DAGMAR: Here it comes, folks.

MR. DAYTON: If you'll come this way.

DAGMAR: All right, follow me in here.

MR. DAYTON: My pleasure.

DAGMAR: Thank you, dear, you have excellent taste. Here's this horrible monster right here. Here's the monster right here, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Do you use this machine regularly?

DAGMAR: Only once in my life. I'll tell you why. You get on this machine and you're supposed to put your cor-

MURROW: I noticed at lunch today you had two boiled eggs -- that was all.

DAGMAR: Don't tell everything you know now, my dear.

MR. DAYTON: Mr. Murrow, I gave -- because of this problem I gave Dag---

DAGMAR: What problem?

MR. DAYTON: Weight problem.

DAGMAR: Oh, you scared me for a minute.

MR. DAYTON: She goes on diets so many times, up and down -- I tell you, every husband that has a wife that goes on diets -- really. I gave her a little exercising unit -- device. I'd like you to see it.

DAGMAR: Here it comes, folks.

MR. DAYTON: If you'll come this way.

DAGMAR: All right, follow me in here.

MR. DAYTON: My pleasure.

DAGMAR: Thank you, dear, you have excellent taste. Here's this horrible monster right here. Here's the monster right here, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Do you use this machine regularly?

DAGMAR: Only once in my life. I'll tell you why. You get on this machine and you're supposed to put your correct weight down.

MURROW: Yes?

DAGMAR: So I lied to the machine, I got on, and turned it on and I blew every fuse in the house. I've made myself very thin on this machine, so I've never used it again.

MR. DAYTON: I had to fix the fuses, incidentally.

DAGMAR: Yes.

MURROW: Dagmar?

DAGMAR: Yes?

MURROW: Someday I suppose you'll adjust it properly and tell the machine the truth, and then all will be well.

DAGMAR: I would if there's no one here. There's always someone here. I'm never alone. I'd like to get on this machine once and just try it, but I'd never let Danny know how much I weigh.

MR. DAYTON: It helps me a lot.

MURROW: Why don't you try it right now? Just press the button and blow the fuse.

DAGMAR: Do you want all the fuses to go out, honey? I don't think we better do it becaus- even though I'm gettin' thin, I still don't want to do that. I don't think rect weight down.

MURROW: Yes?

DAGMAR: So I ried to the machine, I got on, and turned it on and I blew every fuse in the house. I've made myself very thin on this machine, so I've never used it again.

MR. DAYTON: I had to fix the fuses, incidentally.

DAGMAR: Yes.

MURROW: Dagmar?

DAGMAR: Yes?

MURROW: Someday I suppose you'll adjust it properly and tell the machine the truth, and then all will be well.

DAGMAR: I would if there's no one here. There's always someone here. I'm never alone. I'd like to get on this machine once and just try it, but I'd never let Danny know how much I weigh.

MR. DAYTON: It helps me a lot.

MURROW: Why don't you try it right now? Just press the button and blow the fuse.

DAGMAR: Do you want all the fuses to go out, honey? I don't think we better do it because even though I'm gettin' thin, I still don't want to do that. I don't think that's chic, do you? I want you to meet Shakespeare.

MR. DAYTON: He has his house right over here, as a matter of fact. No---

DAGMAR: I don't think he wants you to come in.

MURROW: Oh, wait a minute.

MR. DAYTON: Mr. Murrow wants to come in your house. Don't you want him to come in?

DAGMAR: Won't you let him come in the house?

MURROW: Dagmar?

DAGMAR: Yes.

MURROW: Shakespeare isn't named after anyone you know, is he?

DAGMAR: Well, it's someone I used to spend a lot of time with when I was little and reading, but Danny is really the reader in the house. First I want to tell you about Shakespeare in the closet. One day my robe fell down and now he won't sleep in a bed, and now when I get to all the hotels out of town---

MR. DAYTON: Give me a kiss (to dog). Okay.

MURROW: Yes?

DAGMAR: I don't look at the suites, I just look at the closets because that's the only place he'll sleep. To get back to reading, though, Danny does most of the read-that's chic, do you? I want you to meet Shakespeare.

MR. DAYTON: He has his house right over here, as a matter of fact. No---

DAGMAR: I don't think he wants you to come in.

MURROW: Oh, wait a minute.

MR. DAYTON: Mr. Murrow wants to come in your house. Don't you want him to come in?

DAGMAR: Won't you let him come in the house?

MURROW: Dagmar?

DAGMAR: Yes.

MURROW: Shakespeare isn't named after anyone you know, is he?

DAGMAR: Well, it's someone I used to spend a lot of time with when I was little and reading, but Danny is really the reader in the house. First I want to tell you about Shakespeare in the closet. One day my robe fell down and now he won't sleep in a bed, and now when I get to all the hotels out of town---

MR. DAYTON: Give me a kiss (to dog). Okay.

MURROW: Yes?

DAGMAR: I don't look at the suites, I just look at the closets because that's the only place he'll sleep. To get back to reading, though, Danny does most of the reading. As a matter of fact, I'm glad you came. I'm glad you can't look under the bed. It's full of books. He always has chocolate cookies and milk every night.

MR. DAYTON: Frozen -- must be frozen.

DAGMAR: Wouldn't you know -- he always eats cookies in bed and I have to watch him. He has books every place. If you'll notice, he has books everywhere, and I want my mother to know I really cleaned house. Danny just got a new stack of books the other day, and there wasn't anything I could do about it.

MURROW: Danny?

MR. DAYTON: Yes, Ed.

MURROW: What sort of things do you read?

DAGMAR: You're tickled, Ed, aren't you?

MR. DAYTON: Well, I read everything I can get my hands on, I guess. It helps me a lot in "Keep Talking", too, you know, but I'm reading."Dr. Javargo" right now, with a little bit of a problem, I might add. I don't think I'm stupid? Am I?

DAGMAR: Look who he's asking!

MR. DAYTON: But I'll tell you. Every time they mention a name in this book, I have refer back to see if it's somebody I met already or I'm going to meet again.

ing. As a matter of fact, I'm glad you came. I'm glad you can't look under the bed. It's full of books. He always has chocolate cookies and milk every night.

MR. DAYTON: Frozen -- must be frozen.

DAGMAR: Wouldn't you know -- he always eats cookies in bed and I have to watch him. He has books every place. If you'll notice, he has books everywhere, and I want my mother to know I really cleaned house. Danny just got a new stack of books the other day, and there wasn't anything I could do about it.

MURROW: Danny?

MR. DAYTON: Yes, Ed.

MURROW: What sort of things do you read?

DAGMAR: You're tickled, Ed, aren't you?

MR. DAYTON: Well, I read everything I can get my hands on, I guess. It helps me a lot in "Keep Talking", too, you know, but I'm reading."Dr. Zavarro" right now, with a little bit of a problem, I might add. I don't think I'm stupid? Am I?

DAGMAR: Look who he's asking!

MR. DAYTON: But I'll tell you. Every time they mention a name in this book, I have refer back to see if it's somebody I met already or I'm going to meet again.

DAGMAR: I think that looks very confusing. Why don't you tell Ed that when I go to the door, it's never for mail; it's just for books. Really, we're going to have to get a house for these books. It's ridiculous. Do you see them every place around here?

MR. DAYTON: That's the truth. This is a favorite thing of mine, Ed. Can you see it well?

MURROW: I can't quite make it out. No, Danny.

MR. DAYTON: Well, this is actually a stereophonic speaker system. This is the Lansing Company -- it's called the Lansing Paragon, and this is the stereophonic outift used to test stereophonic records to make sure that they're perfect, and I'm so thrilled with it. It just came this week, as a matter of fact. I've been waiting for it, and I'd love to have you hear it, but it will blast you right out of the studio.

DAGMAR: Don't do that, I'd like to keep him here.

MURROW: Dag?

DAGMAR: Yes, Ed?

MURROW: Do you like to read?

DAGMAR: I love to read, but I usually read things like Earl Stanley Gardner's "Perry Mason". I've finished all his books, and if he's listening, I wish he'd get his type-

DAGMAR: I think that looks very confusing. Why don't you tell Ed that when I go to the door, it's never for mail; it's just for books. Really, we're going to have to get a house for these books. It's ridiculous. Do you see them every place around here?

MR. DAYTON: That's the truth. This is a favorite thing of mine, Ed. Can you see it well?

MURROW: I can't quite make it out. No, Danny.

MR. DAYTON: Well, this is actually a stereophonic speaker system. This is the Lansing Company -- it's called the Lansing Paragon, and this is the stereophonic outfit used to test stereophonic records to make sure that they're perfect, and I'm so thrilled with it. It just came this week, as a matter of fact. I've been waiting for it, and I'd love to have you hear it, but it will blast you right out of the studio.

DAGMAR: Don't do that, I'd like to keep him here.

MURROW: Dag?

DAGMAR: Yes, Ed?

MURROW: Do you like to read?

DAGMAR: I love to read, but I usually read things like Earl Stanley Gardner's "Perry Mason". I've finished all his books, and if he's listening, I wish he'd get his typewriter out because I've read all the books he's written.

MR. DAYTON: I think he only wrote about 54. She's read 60 so far.

DAGMAR: Yes, I did. I like other people's books -- all the other authors, I do, but he's my favorite.

MURROW: Danny, do you like mysteries, murder stories?

MR. DAYTON: Oh, not bad, but I'm not too much of a fan of them. I don't like violence, really.

DAGMAR: Ha, ha, ha!

MR. DAYTON: As a matter of fact---

DAGMAR: Hah, hah, hah. You don't like violence? Aaaaah!

MR. DAYTON: As a matter of fact, the first time I ever went out to Hollywood, I went out to do a picture as a comedian, called "At War with The Army", and the very next picture I did was a murder mystery, and I played a killer with an ice pick, and when it was first seen in New York, I think one of the funniest lines I ever heard Jack E. Leonard said of me, "They made him a killer with an ice pick. Here's a guy, when he eats, he's afraid to use a fork." But those people who really know me, they'll tell you, I'm rather mild-mannered.

writer out because I've read all the books he's written.

MR. DAYTON: I think he only wrote about 54. She's read 60 so far.

DAGMAR: Yes, I did. I like other people's books -- all the other authors, I do, but he's my favorite.

MURROW: Danny, do you like mysteries, murder stories?

MR. DAYTON: Oh, not bad, but I'm not too much of a fan of them. I don't like violence, really.

DAGMAR: Ha, ha, ha!

MR. DAYTON: As a matter of fact---

DAGMAR: Hah, hah, hah. You don't like violence? Aaaaah!

MR. DAYTON: As a matter of fact, the first time I ever went out to Hollywood, I went out to do a picture as a comedian, called "At War with The Army", and the very next picture I did was a murder mystery, and I played a killer with an ice pick, and when it was first seen in New York, I think one of the funniest lines I ever heard Jack E. Leonard said of me, "They made him a killer with an ice pick. Here's a guy, when he eats, he's afraid to use a fork." But those people who really know me, they'll tell you, I'm rather mild-mannered.

DAGMAR: I'll tell you and Shakespeare can tell you.

MR. DAYTON: Even Shakespeare can tell you.

DAGMAR: Ask him that, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: You mean Shakespeare talks?

MR. DAYTON: Oh, sure. You mean you didn't know? Oh---

DAGMAR: Certainly he talks!

MR. DAYTON: I think you said the wrong thing because -- what did Mr. Murrow say? (Dog whines) What did he say just now? You didn't know?

MURROW: Dagmar?

DAGMAR: Yes.

MURROW: Could you translate?

DAGMAR: Well, I would, honey, but it's a family show. I don't think I really should tell you what he said, but, you know, he was a gift to me on my second wedding anniversary. Danny gave me Shakespeare. We're always giving each other a lot of gifts.

MR. DAYTON: As a matter of fact, the first two years of our marriage we gave each other gifts only of furniture. You know, we were just furnishing the house, and this is something I'm really proud of. This is a cocktail table

DAGMAR: I'll tell you and Shakespeare can tell you.

MR. DAYTON: Even Shakespeare can tell you.

DAGMAR: Ask him that, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: You mean Shakespeare talks?

MR. DAYTON: Oh, sure. You mean you didn't know? Oh---

DAGMAR: Certainly he talks!

MR. DAYTON: I think you said the wrong thing because -- what did Mr. Murrow say? (Dog whines) What did he say just now? You didn't know?

MURROW: Dagmar?

DAGMAR: Yes.

MURROW: Could you translate?

DAGMAR: Well, I would, honey, but it's a family show. I don't think I really should tell you what he said, but, you know, he was a gift to me on my second wedding anniversary. Danny gave me Shakespeare. We're always giving each other a lot of gifts.

MR. DAYTON: As a matter of fact, the first two years of our marriage we gave each other gifts only of furniture. You know, we were just furnishing the house, and this is something I'm really proud of. This is a cocktail table

Dag gave me for my birthday about two years after we were married, and it's a little unique. You notice this?

MURROW: Yes.

MR. DAYTON: Something different. A little hi fi. (Hi fi record playing) Can you hear that?

MURROW: Hm, hm.

MR. DAYTON: Well, I'm very proud of it, I really am. The bowl here distributes the sound at 360 degrees, which is about the perfect way to hear music.

MURROW: Very unusual.

DAGMAR: Mr. Murrow, the man that made that table -- they only made five of them -- they could only make one a month -- he told me only millionaires and idiots bought them. You know which one I am. They always felt funny when anyone says, "What do you mean the table's playing?" I think it's cute. Did you want to ask me something?

MURROW: No, I wanted to ask Danny something.

DAGMAR: Well, all right.

MURROW: For two people whose working assignments frequently keep them apart, the Daytons seem like a very happy family, or is this the wrong impression?

MR. DAYTON: No, I would say it's right. We have a lot of fun. We've had a wonderful eight years together.

Dag gave me for my birthday about two years after we were married, and it's a little unique. You notice this?

MURROW: Yes.

MR. DAYTON: Something different. A little hi fi. (Hi fi record playing) Can you hear that?

MURROW: Hm, hm.

MR. DAYTON: Well, I'm very proud of it, I really am. The bowl here distributes the sound at 360 degrees, which is about the perfect way to hear music.

MURROW: Very unusual.

DAGMAR: Mr. Murrow, the man that made that table -- they only made five of them -- they could only make one a month -- he told me only millionaires and idiots bought them. You know which one I am. They always felt funny when anyone says, "What do you mean the table's playing?" I think it's cute. Did you want to ask me something?

MURROW: No, I wanted to ask Danny something.

DAGMAR: Well, all right.

MURROW: For two people whose working assignments frequently keep them apart, the Daytons seem like a very happy family, or is this the wrong impression?

MR. DAYTON: No, I would say it's right. We have a lot of fun. We've had a wonderful eight years together,

There's just one thing missing, we feel. We'd like very much to have a child.

DAGMAR: I think I'll try to give you a child for next Christmas or the Christmas after. Don't you think that would be a nice Christmas present, Mr. Murrow?

MR. DAYTON: That's the date on it.

DAGMAR: All right, I think we can do that -- arrange that.

MURROW: Dagmar, your eight-year marriage can't be completely perfect. Aren't there any changes you'd like to make in Danny?

DAGMAR: Yes. I think he's too thin. I'd like him to get fat and make me look thin. Get him to gain about 50 pounds.

MR. DAYTON: Hey, I hear that all the time.

DAGMAR: I've always told him that because I get real thin for me, but sitting next to him, I still look heavy. Do I look thin to you?

MURROW: Well, this must be the source of real family disagreement. Right?

DAGMAR: Yes.

MR. DAYTON: Well, just occasionally. One particular instance I can remember. She went on some kind of a diet,

There's just one thing missing, we feel. We'd like very much to have a child.

DAGMAR: I think I'll try to give you a child for next Christmas or the Christmas after. Don't you think that would be a nice Christmas present, Mr. Murrow?

MR. DAYTON: That's the date on it.

DAGMAR: All right, I think we can do that -- arrange that.

MURROW: Dagmar, your eight-year marriage can't be completely perfect. Aren't there any changes you'd like to make in Danny?

DAGMAR: Yes. I think he's too thin. I'd like him to get fat and make me look thin. Get him to gain about 50 pounds.

MR. DAYTON: Hey, I hear that all the time.

DAGMAR: I've always told him that because I get real thin for me, but sitting next to him, I still look heavy. Do I look thin to you?

MURROW: Well, this must be the source of real family disagreement. Right?

DAGMAR: Yes.

MR. DAYTON: Well, just occasionally. One particular instance I can remember. She went on some kind of a diet,

I don't know what it was, but it was just one of the regular ones, and for a week she pestered me. "Please, Danny." Every time we went out. "Please, eat veal parmesam with sauce on it." and I don't like veal parmesam with sauce on it, and she said, every time I would order steak, "No, have veal parmesam." Finally I ordered it in self-defense, and she felt much better.

DAGMAR: I'd rather see someone else have it if I can't.

MR. DAYTON: But I didn't feel much better.

DAGMAR: But, you know, Larsen's Swedish Milk Diet keeps the weight off once you get it off, I think. I've had this off now for over three months. I think it looks pretty good. Do you want to hear Shakespeare talk a little more?

MURROW: No, I wanted to ask you a question.

DAGMAR: Oh, go ahead, that's perfectly all right.

MURROW: I wanted to know what's your professional program for the immediate future?

DAGMAR: Well, I've been doing a lot of guest spots lately, and I've been reading a lot of television scripts. Everybody wants me to do a show. As a matter of fact, I've been doing this for about three years now, but the scripts aren't too good. I'd rather have people say, "What happened

I don't know what it was, but it was just one of the regular ones, and for a week she pestered me. "Please, Danny." Every time we went out. "Please, eat veal parmesan with sauce on it." and I don't like veal parmesan with sauce on it, and she said, every time I would order steak, "No, have veal parmesan." Finally I ordered it in self-defense, and she felt much better.

DAGMAR: I'd rather see someone else have it if I can't.

MR. DAYTON: But I didn't feel much better.

DAGMAR: But, you know, Larsen's Swedish Milk Diet keeps the weight off once you get it off, I think. I've had this off now for over three months. I think it looks pretty good. Do you want to hear Shakespeare talk a little more?

MURROW: No, I wanted to ask you a question.

DAGMAR: Oh, go ahead, that's perfectly all right.

MURROW: I wanted to know what's your professional program for the immediate future?

DAGMAR: Well, I've been doing a lot of guest spots lately, and I've been reading a lot of television scripts. Everybody wants me to do a show. As a matter of fact, I've been doing this for about three years now, but the scripts aren't too good. I'd rather have people say, "What happened to Dagmar?" than do a terrible show and let them say, "Look what happened to Dagmar." So I'm still going to read scripts, and I think I'll leave that for the television show, but next week I'm going to do something that's a lot of fun. I'm going down to Columbus, Ohio.

MURROW: Yes?

DAGMAR: I'm goin' to open up super market -- super duper!

MURROW: You're going to do what?

DAGMAR: That's what I thought you'd say. A super market called a super duper.

MURROW: Dagmar, I've never seen a super market, not even a super duper market, opened. What happens? Do you make a speech, or cut a ribbon, or what happens?

DAGMAR: Well, you cut a ribbon, or you make a speech. I don't know exactly what they want me to do. You see, they haven't given me my itinerary, but you know, I know that I'm going to---

MR. DAYTON: You see, Ed, she does read once in a while.

DAGMAR: But I know I'm going to cut a ribbon, and then I'm going -- my home is just 150 miles from there, as you know -- down in Huntington -- so I'm going down to see my to Dagmar?" then do a terrible show and let them say, "Look what happened to Dagmar." So I'm still going to read scripts, and I think I'll leave that for the television show, but next week I'm going to do something that's a lot of fun. I'm going down to Columbus, Ohio.

MURROW: Yes?

DAGMAR: I'm goin' to open up super market -- super duper!

MURROW: You're going to do what?

DAGMAR: That's what I thought you'd say. A super market called a super duper.

MURROW: Dagmar, I've never seen a super market, not even a super duper market, opened. What happens? Do you make a speech, or cut a ribbon, or what happens?

DAGMAR: Well, you cut a ribbon, or you make a speech. I don't know exactly what they want me to do. You see, they haven't given me my itinerary, but you know, I know that I'm going to---

MR. DAYTON: You see, Ed, she does read once in a while.

DAGMAR: But I know I'm going to cut a ribbon, and then I'm going -- my home is just 150 miles from there, as you know -- down in Huntington -- so I'm going down to see my family right after that, and, of course, Danny's on "Keep Talking" every week.

MURROW: Well, have---

DAGMAR: He likes that.

MURROW: Have a good time and open a good market. Thanks very much, Dagmar.

DAGMAR: Are you going to leave now?

MURROW: Yeah, I must go.

DAGMAR: I want to say good-bye to everybody, and listen, honey, you can come back anytime.

MURROW: Thanks very much. Good night, Danny.

DAGMAR: Good-bye.

MURROW: And say good night to Shakespeare.

MR. DAYTON: Good night. Say good night. Go, ahead.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Red Smith, and now again, speaking for Revlon, is Barbara Britton.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Walter "Red" Smith is the most widely syndicated sports columnist in the country today. He comes from Green Bay, Wisconsin, or as he puts it, "He was born about 11 million words ago."

family right after that, and, of course, Danny's on "Keep Talking" every week.

MURROW: Well, have---

DAGMAR: He likes that.

MURROW: Have a good time and open a good market. Thanks very much, Dagmar.

DAGMAR: Are you going to leave now?

MURROW: Yeah, I must go.

DAGMAR: I want to say good-bye to everybody, and listen, honey, you can come back anytime.

MURROW: Thanks very much. Good night, Danny.

DAGMAR: Good-bye.

MURROW: And say good night to Shakespeare.

MR. DAYTON: Good night. Say good night. Go, ahead.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Red Smith, and now again, speaking for Revlon, is Barbara Britton.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Walter "Red" Smith is the most widely syndicated sports columnist in the country today. He comes from Green Bay, Wisconsin, or as he puts it, "He was born about 11 million words ago."

He graduated from Notre Dame Journalism School -- went to work as a cub reporter for the MILWAUKEE SENTINEL. Then he moved on to St. Louis -- then to Philadelphia, and about 14 years ago he came to New York, where ne now turns out his column "Views of Sports" six times a week for the HERALD TRIBUNE, and also for more than 150 other papers.

Catherine and Red Smith, who have two grown children, live alone in this Cape Cod style house on the outskirts of Stanford, Connecticut. This has been their home for the past eight years.

Evening, Kay.

MRS. SMITH: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Red.

MR. SMITH: Ed, good evening.

MURROW: This, I suppose, is a sort of slack period in sports. That ought to give you a chance to put a few columns in the bank, or don't you work that way?

MR. SMITH: It should. It would be a great help if I ever did, but somehow I never manage to get ahead, Ed. Some do. I recall one time that old Henry Salsinger in Detroit told me about an occasion when he got a hundred or more columns ahead. He had them set in type and filed in the composing room, and horrified me. I said, "Henry, suppose you

He graduated from Notre Dame Journalism School -- went to work as a cub reporter for the MILWAUKEE SENTINEL. Then he moved on to St. Louis -- then to Philadelphia, and about 14 years ago he came to New York, where he now turns out his column "Views of Sports" six times a week for the HERALD TRIBUNE, and also for more than 150 other papers.

Catherine and Red Smith, who have two grown children, live alone in this Cape Cod style house on the outskirts of Stamford, Connecticut. This has been their home for the past eight years.

Evening, Kay.

MRS. SMITH: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Red.

MR. SMITH: Ed, good evening.

MURROW: This, I suppose, is a sort of slack period in sports. That ought to give you a chance to put a few columns in the bank, or don't you work that way?

MR. SMITH: It should. It would be a great help if I ever did, but somehow I never manage to get ahead, Ed. Some do. I recall one time that old Henry Salsinger in Detroit told me about an occasion when he got a hundred or more columns ahead. He had them set in type and filed in the composing room, and horrified me. I said, 'Henry, suppose you had died? You'd have six months work you wouldn't have had to do."

MURROW: Kay, when you and Red first met, were you also starting out hopefully on a newspaper career?

MRS. SMITH: Oh, no. I was still in college, but the meeting was a very happy one because Red gave me such good help on book reports.

MURROW: Did he really write them for you?

MRS. SMITH: Well, we don't say it that way.

MURROW: I imagine you probably got all A's.

MRS. SMITH: Oh, sure.

MURROW: Tell me, how often now-a-days do you suggest an idea for Red's column?

MR. SMITH: Ho, ho! Ed, all Kay wants me to do is to write columns promoting Stan Musial for president. That's her only idea.

MURROW: Red, I suppose you'll be heading South for spring training before long.

MR. SMITH: Yes, pretty soon.

MURROW: How far afield have your wanderings taken you in the business of covering sports?

MR. SMITH: The job has taken me around the world. I'd like to go some place else one of these days. I've hit had died? You'd have six months work you wouldn't have had to do."

MURROW: Kay, when you and Red first met, were you also starting out hopefully on a newspaper career?

MRS. SMITH: Oh, no. I was still in college, but the meeting was a very happy one because Red gave me such good help on book reports.

MURROW: Did he really write them for you?

MRS. SMITH: Well, we don't say it that way.

MURROW: I imagine you probably got all A's.

MRS. SMITH: Oh, sure.

MURROW: Tell me, how often now-a-days do you suggest an idea for Red's column?

MR. SMITH: Ho, ho! Ed, all Kay wants me to do is to write columns promoting Stan Musial for president. That's her only idea.

MURROW: Red, I suppose you'll be heading South for spring training before long.

MR. SMITH: Yes, pretty soon.

MURROW: How far afield have your wanderings taken you in the business of covering sports?

MR. SMITH: The job has taken me around the world. I'd like to go some place else one of these days. I've hit all the continents on this silly fun and games dodge excepting Africa, and nobody's invited me there yet, but I hope someone does.

MURROW: Is there any special technique you've developed in your travels for doing what you do?

MR. SMITH: No. You get that portable out on your knees in airplanes and on trains and in press boxes and hotel rooms, and just try to bleed the stuff out of a small vein. I think the thing a fellow strives for, doing the column, is to try to get as my boss, Stanley Woodward expressed it one time -- try to get the smell of cabbage in the hall cookin'. You know, the sense and feeling of the event.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. SMITH: That probably is no answer to your question.

MURROW: Yes, I think it is. Red, you probably conducted as many interviews as anybody in the sports business. I suppose some personalities must stand out as being more colorful than others?

MR. SMITH: Oh, sure. I read in the paper this morning about the retirement of one of the most colorful any of us has known, little Willie Peppe, who was the greatest of fighters, and a lively, fascinating little rogue. I think all the continents on this silly fun and games dodge excepting Africa, and nobody's invited me there yet, but I hope someone does.

MURROW: Is there any special technique you've developed in your travels for doing what you do?

MR. SMITH: No. You get that portable out on your knees in airplanes and on trains and in press boxes and hotel rooms, and just try to bleed the stuff out of a small vein.
I think the thing a fellow strives for, doing the column, is to try to get as my boss, Stanley Woodward expressed it one time -- try to get the smell of cabbage in the hall cookin'.
You know, the sense and feeling of the event.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. SMITH: That probably is no answer to your question.

MURROW: Yes, I think it is. Red, you probably conducted as many interviews as anybody in the sports business. I suppose some personalities must stand out as being more colorful than others?

MR. SMITH: Oh, sure. I read in the paper this morning about the retirement of one of the most colorful any of us has known, Little Willie Pepp, who was the greatest of fighters, and a lively, fascinating little rogue. I think you've talked to Rocky Marciano---

MURROW: Yes.

MR. SMITH: ---and would agree that he's a delightful guy. And little Con McCreary, the jockey, and fellows like Musial, good old Yogi Berra, so many -- I'll tell you, Ed, we've got a few of them on the wall downstairs. Could I show them to you?

MURROW: Good. Fine.

MR. SMITH: Let's go down.

MURROW: Red, with six columns a week to do, have you ever thought of easing up a little and cutting down on the volume?

MR. SMITH: No. It may sound foolish, but it seems to me that it's easier to do six a week than one a week. At least, when I was starting out writing the column, I did one a week. I did a Sunday column, and it didn't seem to work for me. At least, it didn't work satisfactorily as far as I was concerned. The ideas that came in the early part of the week that seemed good, were dry and dusty by the end of the week when I wanted to write the column, and nothing happened at the end of the week. It's better, it seems to me, if I just -- oh, stay in the groove. You seem to develop. You grow a pair of antenna that twang like guitar strings when a you've talked to Rocky Marciano---

MURROW: Yes.

MR. SMITH: ---and would agree that he's a delightful guy. And little Con McCreary, the jockey, and fellows like Musial, good old Yogi Berra, so many -- I'll tell you, Ed, we've got a few of them on the wall downstairs. Could I show them to you?

MURROW: Good. Fine.

MR. SMITH: Let's go down.

MURROW: Red, with six columns a week to do, have you ever thought of easing up a little and cutting down on the volume?

MR. SMITH: No. It may sound foolish, but it seems to me that it's easier to do six a week than one a week. At least, when I was starting out writing the column, I did one a week. I did a Sunday column, and it didn't seem to work for me. At least, it didn't work satisfactorily as far as I was concerned. The ideas that came in the early part of the week that seemed good, were dry and dusty by the end of the week when I wanted to write the column, and nothing happened at the end of the week. It's better, it seems to me, if I just -- on, stay in the groove. You seem to develop. You grow a pair of antenna that twang like guitar strings when a column comes along if you're doing it every day.

MURROW: Well, you must certainly face a few deadlines when there just isn't very much to write about. How do you pull yourself out of a dry well, Red?

MR. SMITH: Well, there's one blessed thing about working in the fun and games department as opposed to, say, a global column. You can always settle for batting averages. You know, you always have a ready-made reading public who just love to read figures beginning with a decimal point. To me it seems a very dreary business -- that's probably because I always flunked mathematics in school. You know you can go with the batting averages, Ed.

MURROW: Red, who were some of those colorful personalities?

MR. SMITH: Oh, sure. Here we have the big horse nationalist. That's Eddie Arcaro on top. That was done, as were a couple of the others, by a friend of mine named Bob Reder, and if you can see the man next to him, why, you'll recognize---

MURROW: Rocky.

MR. SMITH: ---Rocky Marciano in action.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. SMITH: This, of course, is big Ted Williams.

column comes along if you're doing it every day.

MURROW: Well, you must certainly face a few dead-lines when there just isn't very much to write about. How do you pull yourself out of a dry well, Red?

MR. SMITH: Well, there's one blessed thing about working in the fun and games department as opposed to, say, a global column. You can always settle for batting averages. You know, you always have a ready-made reading public who just love to read figures beginning with a decimal point. To me it seems a very dreary business -- that's probably because I always flunked mathematics in school. You know you can go with the batting averages, Ed.

MURROW: Red, who were some of those colorful personalities?

MR. SMITH: Oh, sure. Here we have the big horse nationalist. That's Eddie Arcaro on top. That was done, as were a couple of the others, by a friend of mine named Bob Reder, and if you can see the man next to him, why, you'll recognize---

MURROW: Rocky.

MR. SMITH: ---Rocky Marciano in action.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. SMITH: This, of course, is big Ted Williams.

I particularly like that because it seems to me to have a quality of relaxed power. He seems so relaxed and yet he's pretty attentively watching the pitcher. Down here is Mr. Fitz, our great friend.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. SMITH: The great Jim Fitzsimmons, old trainer of horses, and it pleases me that that's the only formal picture he ever posed for. When he gave it to me I was cheering about it because I think it's a lovely shot, and I was saying, "Gee, that's a handsome picture, Mr. Fitz." And he, an old jockey, you know---

MURROW: Yes.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Fitz said, "I was really trying that time." And on the far side -- I don't know how well you can see it, but a special favorite of mine -- Jesse Long sketched that -- and what I like about it, that rather untidy bundle of used laundry was, at the time the sketch was made, the most valuable player in the American League. That's our old friend, Lawrence Peter Berra.

MURROW: Yes. Kay, does Red suffer very much from writer's pains?

MRS. SMITH: A little. When he works at home, I walk very softly, and I hear moans and groans, and an occasional

I particularly like that because it seems to me to have a quality of relaxed power. He seems so relaxed and yet he's pretty attentively watching the pitcher. Down here is Mr. Fitz, our great friend.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. SMITH: The great Jim Fitzsimmons, old trainer of horses, and it pleases me that that's the only formal picture he ever posed for. When he gave it to me I was cheering about it because I think it's a lovely shot, and I was saying, "Gee, that's a handsome picture, Mr. Fitz." And he, an old jockey, you know---

MURROW: Yes.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Fitz said, "I was really trying that time." And on the far side -- I don't know how well you can see it, but a special favorite of mine -- Jesse Long sketched that -- and what I like about it, that rather untidy bundle of used laundry was, at the time the sketch was made, the most valuable player in the American League. That's our old friend, Lawrence Peter Berra.

MURROW: Yes. Kay, does Red suffer very much from writer's pains?

MRS. SMITH: A little. When he works at home, I walk very softly, and I hear moans and groans, and an occasional call upon the diety.

MURROW: Red, where is the torture chamber?

MR. SMITH: Well, I'll show it to you, Ed. It's right on through here. More often than not, at this season of the year, I reach it through the laundry room, ducking among all the drying bits of wash, but this is the -- torture chamber, did you call it? -- sweat shop. Here are all the brains, Ed. This is where the sports writer's profound knowledge comes from, you know, not out of here (pointing to his head). It's all in these books.

MURROW: How did it happen that you decided to take up journalism?

MR. SMITH: When I was a kid in Green Bay, I was wandering around in the woods, and I encountered an old, old fellow -- oh, maybe 19 -- who taught me to cast a fly---

MURROW: Yes?

MR. SMITH: ---and he was a nice guy. I liked him very much, and, well, he was going to Notre Dame and studying journalism, so what I could do but go to Notre Dame and study journalism. Of course, the thing I liked about it, too, was it seemed to me that if you sat and pounded a typewriter, you wouldn't have to be lifting things.

MURROW: That's as good a reason as any I've ever call upon the dirty.

MURROW: Red, where is the torture chamber?

MR. SMITH: Well, I'll show it to you, Ed. It's right on through here. More often than not, at this season of the year, I reach it through the laundry room, ducking among all the drying bits of wash, but this is the -- torture chamber, did you call it? -- sweat shop. Here are all the brains, Ed. This is where the sports writer's profound knowledge comes from, you know, not out of here (pointing to his head). It's all in these books.

MURROW: How did it happen that you decided to take up journalism?

MR. SMITH: When I was a kid in Green Bay, I was wandering around in the woods, and I encountered an old, old fellow -- oh, maybe 19 -- who taught me to cast a fly---

MURROW: Yes?

MR. SMITH: ---and he was a nice guy. I liked him very much, and, well, he was going to Notre Dame and studying journalism, so what I could do but go to Notre Dame and study journalism. Of course, the thing I liked about it, too, was it seemed to me that if you sat and pounded a typewriter, you wouldn't have to be lifting things.

MURROW: That's as good a reason as any I've ever heard. Were you a good athlete in school, Red?

MR. SMITH: From the time I was a kid, Ed, I was usually the smallest in the family, or the smallest in the group -- the smallest in my family, too, for that matter -- and I was four-eyed, and I lacked reflexes, and I was a bit yellow. It wasn't until I got to Notre Dame that I tried anything. I did make a pass at running a mile but just once. I finished last, and that was the end of my career as an athlete. That is, it was the end of my career then.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. SMITH: Now, of course, living out here, I have, oh, a little more opportunity for exercise. I have a whole half-acre to walk in, and out here is the smallest swimming pool in Connecticut, I'm sure. It's an opportunity for a plunge now and then -- not at this season.

MURROW: Well, be it ever so humble, it's still a swimming pool, and I imagine Mrs. Smith puts it to good use while you're on the road in the summer.

MRS. SMITH: I reckon she does. The kids get a great deal of pleasure out of it in the warm weather. That is, they did when we had kids at home.

MURROW: Mrs. Smith?

MRS. SMITH: Yes, Mr. Murrow?

heard. Were you a good athlete in school, Ed?

MR. SMITH: From the time I was a kid, Ed, I was usually the smallest in the family, or the smallest in the group -- the smallest in my family, too, for that matter -- and I was four-eyed, and I lacked reflexes, and I was a bit yellow. It wasn't until I got to Notre Dame that I tried anything. I did make a pass at running a mile but just once. I finished last, and that was the end of my career as an athlete. That is, it was the end of my career then.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. SMITH: Now, of course, living out here, I have, oh, a little more opportunity for exercise. I have a whole half-acre to walk in, and out here is the smallest swimming pool in Connecticut, I'm sure. It's an opportunity for a plunge now and then -- not at this season.

MURROW: Well, be it ever so humble, it's still a swimming pool, and I imagine Mrs. Smith puts it to good use while you're on the road in the summer.

MRS. SMITH: I reckon she does. The kids get a great deal of pleasure out of it in the warm weather. That is, they did when we had kids at home.

MURROW: Mrs. Smith?

MRS. SMITH: Yes, Mr. Murrow?

MURROW: Do either of your children have Red's flair for writing?

MRS. SMITH: Well, I think maybe. Our daughter, Kit , is married now and living in Milwaukee, the home of the Braves---

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. SMITH: ---and I think it's quite proper that I should tell you we're going to be grandparents in March.

MURROW: Oh, good! Congratulations!

MRS. SMITH: Terry is a junior at Notre Dame, and he's in the journalism department, and I think he's going to be a newspaperman.

MR. SMITH: It's a dreadful thought, isn't it, Ed?

MURROW: It is, Red.

MR. SMITH: This summer when our backs were turned, he crept around and got a job on the STANFORD ADVOCATE as a sports writer, which seems to me to be a clear case of the sins of the father.

MURROW: Red, in what order do you rate your own interests in the sports you cover?

MR. SMITH: It's awfully hard for me to answer that specifically. Well, not so hard. I like the big spectator sports, the ones that write easily. I like football, base-

MURROW: Do either of your children have Red's flair for writing?

MRS. SMITH: Well, I think maybe. Our daughter, Kit, is married now and living in Milwaukee, the home of the Braves--- four-eyed, and I lacked reflexes, and I was a bit yellow. I got to Notre Dame that I tried anything.

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. SMITH: ---and I think it's quite proper that I should tell you we're going to be grandparents in March.

MURROW: Oh, good! Congratulations!

MRS. SMITH: Terry is a junior at Notre Dame, and he's in the journalism department, and I think he's going to be a newspaperman.

MR. SMITH: It's a dreadful thought, isn't it, Ed?

MURROW: It is, Red.

MR. SMITH: This summer when our backs were turned, he crept around and got a job on the STANFORD ADVOCATE as a sports writer, which seems to me to be a clear case of the sins of the father.

MURROW: Red, in what order do you rate your own interests in the sports you cover?

MR. SMITH: It's awfully hard for me to answer that specifically. Well, not so hard. I like the big spectat-or sports, the ones that write easily. I like football, baseball, boxing and horse racing, and for some reason, I seem to have grown more and more enthusiastic about horse racing in recent years.

MURROW: But you manage to keep your enthusiasm for yachting under control, don't you? Red, you've heard and written a few thousand stories. What are some of your favorites? Let's start with baseball.

MR. SMITH: Well, of course, I'm enchanted with the one about Yogi Berra, who, when playing for the Yankees when Charlie Dressen was the coach, was told by Dressen, "Now, Yogi, when you go up there to the plate, keep thinking when you're hitting. Be aware of the situation. Don't just stand up there and swing." So Yogi went up and swung three times, struck out, came back to the bench, threw his bat away, and said, "How do they expect a guy to think when he's hittin"?"

MURROW: There must be a lot of boxing stories.

MR. SMITH: Well, there must be a lot of them. I recall the advice Dempsey gave to a young boxer one time. He said, "One day a man will hit you right between the eyes, and when you open your eyes, you'll see three opponents in the ring, and you hit the middle one because he's the guy that slugged you."

MURROW: Red, I wish we could stay and talk all ball, boxing and horse racing, and for some reason, I seem to have grown more and more enthusiastic about horse racing in recent years.

MURROW: But you manage to keep your enthusiasm for yachting under control, don't you? Red, you've heard and written a few thousand stories. What are some of your favorites? Let's start with baseball.

MR. SMITH: Well, of course, I'm enchanted with the one about Yogi Berra, who, when playing for the Yankees when Charlie Dressen was the coach, was told by Dressen, "Now, Yogi, when you go up there to the plate, keep thinking when you're hitting. Be aware of the situation. Don't just stand up there and swing." So Yogi went up and swung three times, struck out, came back to the bench, threw his bat away, and said, "How do they expect a guy to think when he's hittin'?"

MURROW: There must be a lot of boxing stories.

MR. SMITH: Well, there must be a lot of them. I recall the advice Dempsey gave to a young boxer one time. He said, "One day a man will hit you right between the eyes, and when you open your eyes, you'll see three opponents in the ring, and you hit the middle one because he's the guy that slugged you."

MURROW: Red, I wish we could stay and talk all night. Thank you for letting us come.

MR. SMITH: Thanks for visiting us.

MURROW: Thank you, Mrs. Smith.

MRS. SMITH: Thank you, Ed.

MURROW: Good night.

MRS. SMITH: Good night.

MR. SMITH: Good night.

MURROW: I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright, speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to Havana for a visit with Fidel Castro and his nine-year-old son. We'll also be calling on illustrator Norman Rockwell and his wife in their Stockbridge, Massachusetts home.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Dr. Fidel Castro, Fidel Castro, Jr.,

and Norman Rockwell and Family

February 6, 1959 - 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be making our first visit to Havana, Cuba to call on the leader of the recent revolution, Dr. Fidel Castro. And we'll also be going up to Stockbridge, Massachusetts to visit with illustrator Norman Rockwell and his family.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Dr. Fidel Castro, Fidel Castro, Jr.,

and Norman Rockwell and Family

February 6, 1959 - 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be making our first visit to Havana, Cuba to call on the leader of the recent revolution, Dr. Fidel Castro. And we'll also be going up to Stockbridge, Massachusetts to visit with illustrator Norman Rockwell and his family.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545
LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

(Commercial)

MURROW: Just 30 days ago Fidel Castro entered Havana to be greeted by cheering mobs as one of the greatest heroes in Cuba's history. A week before that General Batista and his top aides had fled the country, leaving it to Castro, his rebel Army and their supporters.

It has been a very busy month for Fidel Castro and the people of Cuba, marked by world-wide interest, both acclaim and criticism.

This week, Fidel, as everyone in Cuba calls him, has been away in the hill country where he made his home for two years. A few hours ago he returned to his apartment on the 23rd floor of the Havana-Hilton Hotel in the center of the city just a short distance from the presidential palace.

Good evening, Fidel Castro. You must have had a very busy week. How do you feel?

CASTRO: Well, I feel -- really feel well but tired, although we have to work very much. Here I am resting some minutes because this night I have to continue my job.

MURROW: Well, Fidel Castro, at the age of 32 you now have in your hands a great deal of power and a great deal of responsibility. Aren't you a little frightened by this?

CASTRO: Well, really not frightened because I have

(Commercial)

MURROW: Just 30 days ago Fidel Castro entered Havana to be greeted by cheering mobs as one of the greatest heroes in Cuba's history. A week before that General Batista and his top aides had fled the country, leaving it to Castro, his rebel Army and their supporters.

It has been a very busy month for Fidel Castro and the people of Cuba, marked by world-wide interest, both acclaim and criticism.

This week, Fidel, as everyone in Cuba calls him, has been away in the hill country where he made his home for two years. A few hours ago he returned to his apartment on the 23rd floor of the Havana-Hilton Hotel in the center of the city just a short distance from the presidential palace.

Good evening, Fidel Castro. You must have had a very busy week. How do you feel?

CASTRO: Well, I feel -- really feel well but tired, although we have to work very much. Here I am resting some minutes because this night I have to continue my job.

MURROW: Well, Fidel Castro, at the age of 32 you now have in your hands a great deal of power and a great deal of responsibility. Aren't you a little frightened by this?

CASTRO: Well, really not frightened because I have self-confidence, but a little worried, of course.

MURROW: Not frightened, but a little worried.

CASTRO: Yes.

MURROW: Now what about your personal safety. This is something you must think about, or doesn't that worry you?

CASTRO: Really, what I think is that I have no time to think about my personal safety.

MURROW: Is it true that you go wandering about the streets occasionally all by yourself?

CASTRO: Yes, of course. Most of the time my friends don't like. Sometimes they come with me, but really I don't like to be with personal worry.

MURROW: Tell me, Fidel Castro, are you concerned at all about the communist influence in Cuba?

CASTRO: Oh, I am not worried because, really, there is no threat about communism here in Cuba.

MURROW: Fidel, I'm told that you saw your mother for the first time in four years this Christmas Eve. That must have been quite a reunion. What did she have to say to you?

CASTRO: Well, really, what I remember is that she began to cry at the beginning, and that means she could not self-confidence, but a little worried, of course.

MURROW: Not frightened, but a little worried.

CASTRO: Yes.

MURROW: Now what about your personal safety. This is something you must think about, or doesn't that worry you?

CASTRO: Really, what I think is that I have no time to think about my personal safety.

MURROW: Is it true that you go wandering about the streets occasionally all by yourself?

CASTRO: Yes, of course. Most of the time my friends don't like. Sometimes they come with me, but really I don't like to be with personal worry.

MURROW: Tell me, Fidel Castro, are you concerned at all about the communist influence in Cuba?

CASTRO: Oh, I am not worried because, really, there is no threat about communism here in Cuba.

MURROW: Fidel, I'm told that you saw your mother for the first time in four years this Christmas Eve. That must have been quite a reunion. What did she have to say to you?

CASTRO: Well, really, what I remember is that she began to cry at the beginning, and that means she could not tell any word to me.

MURROW: Well, I'm sure she must have asked about her grandson. Wasn't Fidelito supposed to be with us tonight?

CASTRO: Yes, yes. Fidelito. (Fidel, Jr. enters room)

MURROW: Hello, Fidel, Jr.

FIDEL JR.: Hi!

MURROW: That's a very good-looking puppy you have there. Is he yours?

FIDEL JR.: No, somebody gave it to my father for a present.

MURROW: Do you have a dog of your own?

FIDEL JR.: Yes, I have two dogs.

MURROW: Two dogs! What kind of dogs are they?

FIDEL JR.: Well, all are little.

MURROW: Just small ones, huh?

FIDEL JR.: Yes.

MURROW: Fidel, when was the last time you were in the United States?

CASTRO: Well, I was in the United States from October to December in 1955.

MURROW: In 1955.

tell any word to me.

MURROW: Well, I'm sure she must have asked about her grandson. Wasn't Fidelito supposed to be with us tonight?

CASTRO: Yes, yes. Fidelito. (Fidel, Jr. enters room)

MURROW: Hello, Fidel, Jr.

FIDEL JR.: Hi!

MURROW: That's a very good-looking puppy you have there. Is he yours?

FIDEL JR.: No, somebody gave it to my father for a present.

MURROW: Do you have a dog of your own?

FIDEL JR.: Yes, I have two dogs.

MURROW: Two dogs! What kind of dogs are they?

FIDEL JR.: Well, all are little.

MURROW: Just small ones, huh?

FIDEL JR.: Yes.

MURROW: Fidel, when was the last time you were in the United States?

CASTRO: Well, I was in the United States from October to December in 1955.

MURROW: In 1955.

CASTRO: Yes.

MURROW: When do you think you'll be visiting us again?

CASTRO: Well, I should like -- I think when I have a chance.

MURROW: Well, will that be with the beard or without it?

CASTRO: Well, it is possible if I go so to the United States with a beard because I am not thinking now to cut beard because I am accustomed to my beard, and maybe it means many things to my country. When we have fulfilled our promise of good government, I will cut my beard.

MURROW: Fidelito, have you heard from any of your friends at school here in New York?

FIDEL JR.: Yes. I got a book here from some of my friends.

MURROW: A book of letters?

FIDEL JR.: Yes.

MURROW: Well, now what did they say?

FIDEL JR.: "To Fidel Castro, Jr. from his class at P.S. 20, Queens, New York, U.S.A."

MURROW: Ah, wonderful! A lot of letters in that book?

CASTRO: Yes.

MURROW: When do you think you'll be visiting us again?

CASTRO: Well, I should like -- I think when I have a chance.

MURROW: Well, will that be with the beard or without it?

CASTRO: Well, it is possible if I go so to the United States with a beard because I am not thinking now to cut beard because I am accustomed to my beard, and maybe it means many things to my country. When we have fulfilled our promise of good government, I will cut my beard.

MURROW: Fidelito, have you heard from any of your friends at school here in New York?

FIDEL JR.: Yes. I got a book here from some of my friends.

MURROW: A book of letters?

FIDEL JR.: Yes.

MURROW: Well, now what did they say?

FIDEL JR.: "To Fidel Castro, Jr. from his class at P.S. 20, Queens, New York, U.S.A."

MURROW: Ah, wonderful! A lot of letters in that book?

FIDEL JR.: Yes.

MURROW: You must be very proud of them.

FIDEL JR.: Yes.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Fidelito, we won't keep you up any longer. Thank you very much. Good night.

FIDEL JR.: Good night.

MURROW: Fidel Castro, were you as good-looking as your son when you were his age?

CASTRO: (Audio difficulties. Inaudible.) Here are some pictures. For example, here is this picture when I was a student. I suppose this here is a picture of myself when I was so big and not very mature.

MURROW: Youth is a wonderful period. Sometimes I suppose we appreciate it too late. Fidel Castro, what do you remember about your childhood?

CASTRO: Well, as you know, one remembers when he sees many things, but what I more remember are the mountains and the fields during my vacations in our land. I remember those days when I walked in the fields and in the mountains.

MURROW: Well, the Cuban Liberator, Jose Marti, was a particular hero of yours, I believe, and many others who have taken part in the liberation movement -- the successful ones -- have frequently mentioned the element of luck.

FIDEL JR.: Yes.

MURROW: You must be very proud of them.

FIDEL JR.: Yes.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Fidelito, we won't keep you up any longer. Thank you very much. Good night.

FIDEL JR.: Good night.

MURROW: Fidel Castro, were you as good-looking as your son when you were his age?

CASTRO: (Audio difficulties. Inaudible.) Here are some pictures. For example, here is this picture when I was a student. I suppose this here is a picture of myself when I was so big and not very mature.

MURROW: Youth is a wonderful period. Sometimes I suppose we appreciate it too late. Fidel Castro, what do you remember about your childhood?

CASTRO: Well, as you know, one remembers when one sees many things, but what I more remember are the mountains and the fields during my vacations in our land. I remember those days when I walked in the fields and in the mountains.

MURROW: Well, the Cuban Liberator, Jose Marti, was a particular hero of yours, I believe, and many others who have taken part in the liberation movement -- the successful ones -- have frequently mentioned the element of luck.

Do you believe in luck?

CASTRO: Well, what I think is that in the life of every man, luck is a part and job is the other part.

MURROW: Was there ever a time in the fight that you led that you thought things might not work out; that something would go wrong?

CASTRO: Well, sometimes we had difficulties. Everything was not always perfect, but I was always sure of the victory.

MURROW: Well, Fidel Castro, what about the trials of Batista's followers? If they were starting all over again, would you like to have them handled any differently?

CASTRO: Well, I think myself, and all of our people, that they are just; not perfect, because we are not living now in normal conditions, but actually our conditions now are not normal conditions, but you, and all the people around the world, can be sure that they are just trials. We cannot do them better.

MURROW: So if you had it to do over again, you would do it very much as it has been done. Is that right?

CASTRO: Well, without some more mistakes as a consequence of the experience of everything.

MURROW: I wonder if you could tell us, or would be

Do you believe in luck?

CASTRO: Well, what I think is that in the life of every man, luck is a part and job is the other part.

MURROW: Was there ever a time in the fight that you led that you thought things might not work out; that something would go wrong?

CASTRO: Well, sometimes we had difficulties. Everything was not always perfect, but I was always sure of the victory.

MURROW: Well, Fidel Castro, what about the trials of Batista's followers? If they were starting all over again, would you like to have them handled any differently?

CASTRO: Well, I think myself, and all of our people, that they are just; not perfect, because we are not living now in normal conditions, but actually our conditions now are not normal conditions, but you, and all the people around the world, can be sure that they are just trials. We cannot do them better.

MURROW: So if you had it to do over again, you would do it very much as it has been done. Is that right?

CASTRO: Well, without some more mistakes as a consequence of the experience of everything.

MURROW: I wonder if you could tell us, or would be willing to tell us, about the source of your arms and money during the revolution.

CASTRO: Would you like to repeat?

MURROW: The principal source of your arms and your money during the revolution.

CASTRO: Well---

MURROW: Perhaps someone off camera could translate if I didn't make that clear. (Translation from off camera.)

CASTRO: Well, really, many people -- I can say that all the people helped myself with money -- all the people of Cuba. People of all social classes. And about arms -- really, the arms we got the victory with were the arms from enemy soldiers, because fighting with them, we took the arms from their hands -- fighting very hard -- and every month more arms and more arms, and during two years we got thousands of arms from the enemy soldiers. That was the first fountain of arms.

MURROW: This is one of the great arts of guerilla warfare, isn't it? To be able to acquire your arms from the enemy, whomever that enemy happens to be.

CASTRO: Yes.

MURROW: Fidel Castro, what do you wish most for willing to tell us, about the source of your arms and money during the revolution.

CASTRO: Would you like to repeat?

MURROW: The principal source of your arms and your money during the revolution.

CASTRO: Well---

MURROW: Perhaps someone off camera could translate if I didn't make that clear. (Translation from off camera.)

CASTRO: Well, really, many people -- I can say that all the people helped myself with money -- all the people of Cuba. People of all social classes. And about arms -- really, the arms we got the victory with were the arms from enemy soldiers, because fighting with them, we took the arms from their hands -- fighting very hard -- and every month more arms and more arms, and during two years we got thousands of arms from the enemy soldiers. That was the first fountain of arms.

MURROW: This is one of the great arts of guerrilla warfare, isn't it? To be able to acquire your arms from the enemy, whomever that enemy happens to be.

CASTRO: Yes.

MURROW: Fidel Castro, what do you wish most for your country in the months ahead?

CASTRO: Really, in the next months and in all the future, what I wish most for my country is peace and progress.

MURROW: Do you expect that the tourist travel will be resumed to Cuba? That the tourists will come again?

CASTRO: Well, if you help us. For example, the United States citizens. I know that they like Cuba very much, and I see them here very happy. I find every day many tourists here in our country, and all day they shake hands with me and congratulate me because they see in Cuba what is happening, and that we have peace here, and what we ask from the United States citizens is that they come here to visit Cuba -- that it is a wonderful and friendship country.

MURROW: Tell me, when you have a moment or two to relax, do you ever get to take a swim or see a movie?

CASTRO: I can't. Really, I have no time.

MURROW: You have no time?

CASTRO: I don't know how long can I work. I have not stopped. Nine hours of work -- 20 hours. I have not -- I cannot protest to anybody.

MURROW: Can you remember the last book you read?

CASTRO: Well, I was reading about the Nuremberg judge -- the criminal wars -- about the criminals of war -- your country in the months ahead?

CASTRO: Really, in the next months and in all the future, what I wish most for my country is peace and progress.

MURROW: Do you expect that the tourist travel will be resumed to Cuba? That the tourists will come again?

CASTRO: Well, if you help us. For example, the United States citizens. I know that they like Cuba very much, and I see them here very happy. I find every day many tourists here in our country, and all day they shake hands with me and congratulate me because they see in Cuba what is happening, and that we have peace here, and what we ask from the United States citizens is that they come here to visit Cuba -- that it is a wonderful and friendship country.

MURROW: Tell me, when you have a moment or two to relax, do you ever get to take a swim or see a movie?

CASTRO: I can't. Really, I have no time.

MURROW: You have no time?

CASTRO: I don't know how long can I work. I have not stopped. Nine hours of work -- 20 hours. I have not -- I cannot protest to anybody.

MURROW: Can you remember the last book you read?

CASTRO: Well, I was reading about the Nuremberg judge -- the criminal wars -- about the criminals of war -- the war criminals.

MURROW: Yes.

CASTRO: Yes, and about the Nuremberg judge where the United States, England, French, and the nations punished the war criminals. That was the last book I read.

MURROW: Fidel, who would you say are the real heroes of the revolution?

CASTRO: Well, I think that the real hero was the people of Cuba. It is the truth. This is what I think.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Fidel Castro, for letting us come and visit you in your hotel tonight, and will you say good night to Fidelito for us, please?

CASTRO: Yes.

MURROW: Good night.

CASTRO: Good night.

MURROW: Good night. Thank you very much.

CASTRO: Thank you.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Norman Rockwell and his family. And now here again, speaking for Kent, is Bob Wright.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Norman Rockwell, America's best-known illustrator, has been painting the American scene to the de-

the war criminals.

MURROW: Yes.

CASTRO: Yes, and about the Nuremberg judge where the United States, England, French, and the nations punished the war criminals. That was the last book I read.

MURROW: Fidel, who would you say are the real heroes of the revolution?

CASTRO: Well, I think that the real hero was the people of Cuba. It is the truth. This is what I think.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Fidel Castro, for letting us come and visit you in your hotel tonight, and will you say good night to Fidelito for us, please?

CASTRO: Yes.

MURROW: Good night.

CASTRO: Good night.

MURROW: Good night. Thank you very much.

CASTRO: Thank you.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Norman Rockwell and his family. And now here again, speaking for Kent, is Bob Wright.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Norman Rockwell, America's best-known illustrator, has been painting the American scene to the delight of millions of us, for 48 years, and in recent years, his models, subjects, characters, have been drawn from among his friends and neighbors in Stockbridge, Massachusetts where he lives and works.

This is Main Street in Stockbridge, established in 1734. Population: 2200. Set in the heart of the Berkshire Mountains, and typical of other New England towns where Mr. and Mrs. Rockwell have brought up their three sons. It's here, in the bank, the grocery store, the gas station, the school, and, of course, the village barber shop, that Norman Rockwell finds the people that he paints into situations that so many of us find so realistic and so intimate.

Rockwell was born and brought up in New York, but today he prefers the rural life, and if we followed directions properly, we should find him at home, just around the corner from Main Street, on Route 7. We ought to turn the corner in just a moment. No snow in Stockbridge tonight. We ought to reach that white frame house on Route 7 in just a moment. There we are. Are you there, Norman?

ROCKWELL: Yes, Ed, we're here, and welcome to Stockbridge.

MURROW: Thank you. It seems like "big doings" on Main Street tonight.

light of millions of us, for 48 years, and in recent years, his models, subjects, characters, have been drawn from among his friends and neighbors in Stockbridge, Massachusetts where he lives and works.

This is Main Street in Stockbridge, established in 1734. Population: 2200. Set in the heart of the Berkshire Mountains, and typical of other New England towns where Mr. and Mrs. Rockwell have brought up their three sons. It's here, in the bank, the grocery store, the gas station, the school, and, of course, the village barber shop, that Norman Rockwell finds the people that he paints into situations that so many of us find so realistic and so intimate.

Rockwell was born and brought up in New York, but today he prefers the rural life, and if we followed directions properly, we should find him at home, just around the corner from Main Street, on Route 7. We ought to turn the corner in just a moment. No snow in Stockbridge tonight. We ought to reach that white frame house on Route 7 in just a moment. There we are. Are you there, Norman?

ROCKWELL: Yes, Ed, we're here, and welcome to Stockbridge.

MURROW: Thank you. It seems like "big doings" on Main Street tonight.

ROCKWELL: Oh, yes, all lit up -- quite a town.

MURROW: Who's your friend there beside you?

ROCKWELL: Oh, that's -- we call her Lolita.

MURROW: Beautiful!

ROCKWELL: Oh, she's a nice dog. A wonderful dog.

MURROW: Norman, from our quick tour of Main Street, Stockbridge appears to be a most pleasant town, and I know that personally from driving through it.

ROCKWELL: Yes, we like it very much here. We've been here, I think, about six or seven years and we really love it.

MURROW: I take it you've forsaken the big city down here forever. Is that right?

ROCKWELL: Well, I go down there once in a while but not too often.

MURROW: You know, I envy you that, but you do have to come down to New York occasionally, don't you?

ROCKWELL: Well, I tell you, the reason I go down, Ed, I go down for a rest. I work so hard here, and it's just a change. I go down to see an old pal, and we go to the movies and the theater, and go window shopping, and it's a change, and that's what I like about it.

MURROW: Do all the Rockwells share your affection

ROCKWELL: Oh, yes, all lit up -- quite a town.

MURROW: Who's your friend there beside you?

ROCKWELL: Oh, that's -- we call her Lolita.

MURROW: Beautiful!

ROCKWELL: Oh, she's a nice dog. A wonderful dog.

MURROW: Norman, from our quick tour of Main Street, Stockbridge appears to be a most pleasant town, and I know that personally from driving through it.

ROCKWELL: Yes, we like it very much here. We've been here, I think, about six or seven years and we really love it.

MURROW: I take it you've forsaken the big city down here forever. Is that right?

ROCKWELL: Well, I go down there once in a while but not too often.

MURROW: You know, I envy you that, but you do have to come down to New York occasionally, don't you?

ROCKWELL: Well, I tell you, the reason I go down, Ed, I go down for a rest. I work so hard here, and it's just a change. I go down to see an old pal, and we go to the movies and the theater, and go window shopping, and it's a change, and that's what I like about it.

MURROW: Do all the Rockwells share your affection for Stockbridge?

ROCKWELL: Oh, yes. They're here and I'd like very much to have you meet them.

MURROW: Thank you.

ROCKWELL: This is Mary, my wife.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Rockwell.

MRS. ROCKWELL: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Mrs. Rockwell, with Norman doing all his work at home, does he bother you, or do you bother him?

MRS. ROCKWELL: Neither of us bothers the other.

MURROW: And that's your son, Tommy, I take it.

ROCKWELL: This is Tommy, yes.

MURROW: Good evening, Tommy.

TOMMY: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

ROCKWELL: And this is my daughter-in-law, Gail.

GAIL: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Good evening, Gail. Tommy?

TOMMY: Yes?

MURROW: I'm told that you're the writing member of the family. Is that right?

TOMMY: Yes, Mr. Murrow, I want to be a writer. Right now I'm helping Pop with his autobiography.. It's going to be a long one because he's 65, and--- for Stockbridge?

ROCKWELL: Oh, yes. They're here and I'd like very much to have you meet them.

MURROW: Thank you.

ROCKWELL: This is Mary, my wife.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Rockwell.

MRS. ROCKWELL: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Mrs. Rockwell, with Norman doing all his work at home, does he bother you, or do you bother him?

MRS. ROCKWELL: Neither of us bothers the other.

MURROW: And that's your son, Tommy, I take it.

ROCKWELL: This is Tommy, yes.

MURROW: Good evening, Tommy.

TOMMY: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

ROCKWELL: And this is my daughter-in-law, Gail.

GAIL: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Good evening, Gail. Tommy?

TOMMY: Yes?

MURROW: I'm told that you're the writing member of the family. Is that right?

TOMMY: Yes, Mr. Murrow, I want to be a writer. Right now I'm helping Pop with his autobiography.. It's going to be a long one because he's 65, and---

ROCKWELL: Did you have to tell? (Laughter) Doubleday is publishing it.

TOMMY: Yes.

MURROW: Gail?

GAIL: Yes?

MURROW: You've married into a very busy family. What's your main activity?

GAIL: Well, Tom helps Norman with the book, and I help Tom where I can with punctuation and spelling and criticism.

MURROW: Is he a little bit deficient in spelling, would you say?

GAIL: Just a little, yes.

MURROW: Well, you know, I can see the book jacket right now: "Rockwell" by Rockwell, assisted by Rockwell. (Laughter) Norman, what are your other two sons doing?

ROCKWELL: Well, I have a son, Ed, in California -- my oldest son. I think he's 28, and he's out there now. I think he's watching this. He's with his girl friend, Carol. He's a fine arts painter. He has to help his income. He works for a grocery firm out there. I think he's at their house now. Then I have a -- the youngest son, he's 22. That's Peter. He wants to be a sculptor, and he's living down in ROCKWELL: Did you have to tell? (Laughter) Doubleday is publishing it.

TOMMY: Yes.

MURROW: Gail?

GAIL: Yes?

MURROW: You've married into a very busy family. What's your main activity?

GAIL: Well, Tom helps Norman with the book, and I help Tom where I can with punctuation and spelling and criticism.

MURROW: Is he a little bit deficient in spelling, would you say?

GAIL: Just a little, yes.

MURROW: Well, you know, I can see the book jacket right now: "Rockwell" by Rockwell, assisted by Rockwell. (Laughter) Norman, what are your other two sons doing?

ROCKWELL: Well, I have a son, Ed, in California -- my oldest son. I think he's 28, and he's out there now. I think he's watching this. He's with his girl friend, Carol. He's a fine arts painter. He has to help his income. He works for a grocery firm out there. I think he's at their house now. Then I have a -- the youngest son, he's 22. That's Peter. He wants to be a sculptor, and he's living down in Brynmawr with a wonderful wife, Cynthia, and we see them quite a lot. They come up here weekends.

MURROW: Mrs. Rockwell, with all the artists in your family, you must have quite a decorating problem. Do you keep many of Norman's original paintings on your walls?

MRS. ROCKWELL: Oh, yes, we keep quite a lot of them. Some of them are too big, but we keep sketches and etchings and drawings, and we have pictures in every room of the house.

MURROW: Norman, just where is your studio?

ROCKWELL: Well, Ed, if you'll come with me, it's right out here.

MURROW: It's a lovely house, Norman. How old is it?

ROCKWELL: Well, I don't know, Ed. I think it's pre-Revolutionary. In fact, they tell us that Aaron Burr lived here. I don't know whether that's much of a distinction inasmuch as he was the man who killed Alexander Hamilton, but if Washington had lived here, I think it would have been much more of a distinction.

MURROW: How many hours a day do you spend in that studio?

ROCKWELL: Oh, I'm out here very early -- eight

Brynmawr with a wonderful wife, Cynthia, and we see them quite a lot. They come up here weekends.

MURROW: Mrs. Rockwell, with all the artists in your family, you must have quite a decorating problem. Do you keep many of Norman's original paintings on your walls?

MRS. ROCKWELL: Oh, yes, we keep quite a lot of them. Some of them are too big, but we keep sketches and etchings and drawings, and we have pictures in every room of the house.

MURROW: Norman, just where is your studio?

ROCKWELL: Well, Ed, if you'll come with me, it's right out here.

MURROW: It's a lovely house, Norman. How old is it?

ROCKWELL: Well, I don't know, Ed. I think it's pre-Revolutionary. In fact, they tell us that Aaron Burr lived here. I don't know whether that's much of a distinction inasmuch as he was the man who killed Alexander Hamilton, but if Washington had lived here, I think it would have been much more of a distinction.

MURROW: How many hours a day do you spend in that studio?

ROCKWELL: Oh, I'm out here very early -- eight o'clock -- and generally I'm out here until they ring for me to come in for dinner. That is, I go in for lunch, of course. And here, Ed, is the studio. I'm very fond of it. I hope you like it.

MURROW: I do. Norman, that's one of your wartime "Four Freedoms" paintings, isn't it?

ROCKWELL: Well, this one is the "Freedom of Speech" that I did -- well, I did it for THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, and then the government used it. And this is the "Freedom of Worship".

MURROW: Oh, yes, I remember that very well.

ROCKWELL: And I did those in Arlington, Vermont, and these are all of my neighbors. The neighbors that lived with me -- near me there in Vermont.

MURROW: Do you have any idea of how many copies have been made of those paintings?

ROCKWELL: I don't really know. I know it runs into millions and millions. As I say, THE SATURDAY EVENING POST featured them, and then the government took them over. In fact, they're still using them. I think last week in THE NEW YORKER they had one of them -- an ad for the bond sales -- United States bond sales.

MURROW: I imagine there are very few Americans who o'clock -- and generally I'm out here until they ring for me to come in for dinner. That is, I go in for lunch, of course. And here, Ed, is the studio. I'm very fond of it. I hope you like it.

MURROW: I do. Norman, that's one of your wartime "Four Freedoms" paintings, isn't it?

ROCKWELL: Well, this one is the "Freedom of Speech" that I did -- well, I did it for THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, and then the government used it. And this is the "Freedom of Worship".

MURROW: Oh, yes, I remember that very well.

ROCKWELL: And I did those in Arlington, Vermont, and these are all of my neighbors. The neighbors that lived with me -- near me there in Vermont.

MURROW: Do you have any idea of how many copies have been made of those paintings?

ROCKWELL: I don't really know. I know it runs into millions and millions. As I say, THE SATURDAY EVENING POST featured them, and then the government took them over. In fact, they're still using them. I think last week in THE NEW YORKER they had one of them -- an ad for the bond sales -- United States bond sales.

MURROW: I imagine there are very few Americans who haven't seen those paintings at some time or other.

ROCKWELL: I imagine so.

MURROW: Norman, you've been identified with THE SATURDAY EVENING POST for many, many years.

ROCKWELL: Yes.

MURROW: When did you do your first cover for them?

ROCKWELL: Well, Ed, this happens to be the original of the first cover I did. I don't know whether it was before you were born or not.

MURROW: Ha, ha -- not quite.

ROCKWELL: That was in 1916. Well, that was -- what is it? -- 43 years ago -- about that. And this is the original of it. In those days we used only red and black.

MURROW: How many have you done since?

ROCKWELL: Well, I think somebody counted, I think, over 320.

MURROW: Well, how do you go about doing them, or is that what Tom's book is going to be all about?

ROCKWELL: Well, Tom's book is certainly going to take that up. This one here is the one that is coming out on THE SATURDAY EVENING POST next week, and this is the first little rough sketch that I show to the editor. I show them haven't seen those paintings at some time or other.

ROCKWELL: I imagine so.

MURROW: Norman, you've been identified with THE SATURDAY EVENING POST for many, many years.

ROCKWELL: Yes.

MURROW: When did you do your first cover for them?

ROCKWELL: Well, Ed, this happens to be the original of the first cover I did. I don't know whether it was before you were born or not.

MURROW: Ha, ha -- not quite.

ROCKWELL: That was in 1916. Well, that was -- what is it? -- 43 years ago -- about that. And this is the original of it. In those days we used only red and black.

MURROW: How many have you done since?

ROCKWELL: Well, I think somebody counted, I think, over 320.

MURROW: Well, how do you go about doing them, or is that what Tom's book is going to be all about?

ROCKWELL: Well, Tom's book is certainly going to take that up. This one here is the one that is coming out on THE SATURDAY EVENING POST next week, and this is the first little rough sketch that I show to the editor. I show them to the editors down in Philadelphia, and so far they've been very nice and okayed them. I've got my fingers crossed. So, if you'd like, I could go through some of the stages of my work.

MURROW: Yes, please do.

ROCKWELL: Well, these are some photos. You see, I work from photographs. Practically everybody works from photographs these days. It's about the only way we can work. Everybody's so busy.

Now, this picture here very briefly shows a setting I used for this jury picture.

MURROW: Yes.

ROCKWELL: And this is the Grange Hall in town. It used to be the Grange Hall; it's now the veterans' place. You see, here's -- this fellow's up in the picture here. He's holding the light, and we took photographs. We may have taken, oh, a hundred photographs of different poses of these people. You see, you don't just take a photograph and tint it. You reassemble and change it and so on.

MURROW: Yes.

ROCKWELL: Well, then after I've taken the photographs, I make a drawing, and this will be on paper. It was the same size as this. It's smaller here.

to the editors down in Philadelphia, and so far they've been very nice and okayed them. I've got my fingers crossed. So, if you'd like, I could go through some of the stages of my work.

MURROW: Yes, please do.

ROCKWELL: Well, these are some photos. You see, I work from photographs. Practically everybody works from photographs these days. It's about the only way we can work. Everybody's so busy.

Now, this picture here very briefly shows a setting I used for this jury picture.

MURROW: Yes.

ROCKWELL: And this is the Grange Hall in town. It used to be the Grange Hall; it's now the veterans' place. You see, here's -- this fellow's up in the picture here. He's holding the light, and we took photographs. We may have taken, oh, a hundred photographs of different poses of these people. You see, you don't just take a photograph and think it. You reassemble and change it and so on.

MURROW: Yes.

ROCKWELL: Well, then after I've taken the photographs, I make a drawing, and this will be on paper. It was the same size as this. It's smaller here.

MURROW: Yes.

ROCKWELL: And, you see, I've changed this figure here. Instead of having him facing, you'll notice he's turned into the group. And then after I've completed this drawing, then I start the painting. I put it on the canvas -- on this canvas here. And this is the stage showing where I've painted some of them. You see, there the girl's finished and some of the other models. This may be two weeks after I started this. You see, it's a long job.

MURROW: Are all the people in that painting neighbors in Stockbridge?

ROCKWELL: Yes, Ed. I always use my neighbors. I very seldom use what is called professional models. These are all my neighbors. I even used myself here. I'm about the cheapest neighbor I have -- the cheapest model I can get. This young lady here, she's this gentleman's wife.

MURROW: Yes?

ROCKWELL: He's an art director from New York, and I was doing work for him, and he came up and brought his wife, and I thought she was just the type, so I used her. This is Ed Sullivan. He runs, or did run our meat market, and Bern Bauer, who runs the Red Line Inn, and Dave Luvlin, who teaches crafts in town, and here's Louie Lamone, who is my man Friday,

MURROW: Yes.

ROCKWELL: And, you see, I've changed this figure here. Instead of having him facing, you'll notice he's turned into the group. And then after I've completed this drawing, then I start the painting. I put it on the canvas -- on this canvas here. And this is the stage showing where I've painted some of them. You see, there the girl's finished and some of the other models. This may be two weeks after I started this. You see, it's a long job.

MURROW: Are all the people in that painting neighbors in Stockbridge?

ROCKWELL: Yes, Ed. I always use my neighbors. I very seldom use what is called professional models. These are all my neighbors. I even used myself here. I'm about the cheapest neighbor I have -- the cheapest model I can get. This young lady here, she's this gentleman's wife.

MURROW: Yes?

ROCKWELL: He's an art director from New York, and I was doing work for him, and he came up and brought his wife, and I thought she was just the type, so I used her. This is Ed Sullivan. He runs, or did run our meat market, and Norm Bauer, who runs the Red Lion Inn, and Dave Lavlin, who teaches crafts in town, and here's Louie Lamone, who is my man Friday, and so on around the studio, and this is Oliver Kempton, the insurance man, who -- well, really, he's quite an arguer and talker and so on. And then this is the banker here in town.

MURROW: And the lady juror is holding out against all of them. Right?

ROCKWELL: That's right.

MURROW: Where do you get your ideas? That painting of the jury room, for example.

ROCKWELL: This particular idea -- you see, about seven years ago I lived in Vermont, and I was on a jury up there, and we had one man who just wouldn't vote with us. Early in the afternoon we had all decided, except this one man, that the party was guilty. It was a civil case. There was nothing very tragic about it, but he wouldn't vote with us. And then, finally, when the village church rang out twelve o'clock, all of a sudden, he said, "I'm voting with you." And we said, "Well, why have you suddenly changed at twelve o'clock?" We said, "Don't you realize that at twelve o'clock we get another ten dollars for the next day?" So then we all went home and went to bed, thank goodness!

MURROW: Norman, after a tough day's work, after you and Mary have washed your brushes and put them away, how and so on around the studio, and this is Oliver Kempton, the insurance man, who -- well, really, he's quite an arguer and talker and so on. And then this is the banker here in town.

MURROW: And the lady juror is holding out against all of them. Right?

ROCKWELL: That's right.

MURROW: Where do you get your ideas? That painting of the jury room, for example.

ROCKWELL: This particular idea -- you see, about seven years ago I lived in Vermont, and I was on a jury up there, and we had one man who just wouldn't vote with us. Early in the afternoon we had all decided, except this one man, that the party was guilty. It was a civil case. There was nothing very tragic about it, but he wouldn't vote with us. And then, finally, when the village church rang out twelve o'clock, all of a sudden, he said, "I'm voting with you." And we said, Well, why have you suddenly changed at twelve o'clock? We said, "Don't you realize that at twelve o'clock we get another ten dollars for the next day?" So then we all went home and went to bed, thank goodness!

MURROW: Norman, after a tough day's work, after you and Mary have washed your brushes and put them away, how do you spend the evenings in the Berkshires there at Stock-Bridge?

ROCKWELL: Well, there's a lot to do. For instance, not in the evenings, but in the daytime I go to Peggy Best's sketch class on Wednesday afternoons, and then I have a luncheon and chowder club. The men have this little club -- businessmen and all different kinds of men -- or else I stay at home and look at television -- look at your show, which is very good. And then I also -- I'm usually tearing paint rags. You see, we use a lot of paint rags to wipe the paint off with. So I use this diaper cloth. It's a wonderful cloth. It's not only absorbent, but it doesn't go through.

MURROW: Well, I'm sure that you're eager to get to doing that right now. Norman, thank you very much, and will you say good night to the rest of the family, please?

ROCKWELL: I will, and thank you, Ed.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

ROCKWELL: Thank you very much.

MURROW: Good night.

I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be visiting with Harry

do you spend the evenings in the Berkshires there at Stock-Bridge?

ROCKWELL: Well, there's a lot to do. For instance, not in the evenings, but in the daytime I go to Peggy Best's sketch class on Wednesday afternoons, and then I have a luncheon and chowder club. The men have this little club -- businessmen and all different kinds of men -- or else I stay at home and look at television -- look at your show, which is very good. And then I also -- I'm usually tearing paint rags. You see, we use a lot of paint rags to wipe the paint off with. So I use this diaper cloth. It's a wonderful cloth. It's not only absorbent, but it doesn't go through.

MURROW: Well, I'm sure that you're eager to get to doing that right now. Norman, thank you very much, and will you say good night to the rest of the family, please?

ROCKWELL: I will, and thank you, Ed.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

ROCKWELL: Thank you very much.

MURROW: Good night.

I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be visiting with Harry

Golden in Charlotte, North Carolina. He's the author of the best-selling book, "Only in America". We'll also be calling on British actress Claire Bloom, now starring in the Broadway play, "Rashomon".

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: Tonight's visit to Cuba was arranged with the cooperation of Telemundo in Havana.

PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer, and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

Golden in Charlotte, North Carolina. He's the author of the best-selling book, "Only in America". We'll also be calling on British actress Claire Bloom, now starring in the Broadway play, "Rashomon".

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: Tonight's visit to Cuba was arranged with the cooperation of Telemundo in Havana.

PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer, and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Harry Golden

Claire Bloom

February 13, 1959 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be going down to Charlotte, North Carolina for a visit with author and newspaper editor Harry Golden. We'll also be calling on actress Claire Bloom here in New York.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Barbara Britton speaking for Revlon.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Harry Golden

Claire Bloom

February 13, 1959 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be going down to Charlotte, North Carolina for a visit with author and newspaper editor Harry Golden. We'll also be calling on actress Claire Bloom here in New York.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Barbara Britton speaking for Revlon.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545
LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

(Commercial)

MURROW: Harry Golden is editor, publisher and writer of a newspaper that has no news, no pictures, no headlines. His bi-monthly paper called "The Carolina Israelite" covers topics ranging from politics in the South to Kato's cure for a hangover. His most recent social item told of the visit of Cleopatra to Julius Cesaer in 46 B.C.

Harry Golden also writes editorials on just about anything. In recent months, this 57-year-old New Yorker, native of the Lower East Side, has attracted national attention with his best selling book, "Only In America". It's a collection of random essays about America.

It's been a long and eventful career for this former teacher, hotel clerk, reporter, who settled in Charlotte, North Carolina, in 1941 and founded his "Carolina Israelite" with about 800 subscribers, I think it was, and he's watched that number grow to almost 35,000.

Harry Golden makes his home and his office in this nine-room frame house on Elizabeth Avenue in Charlotte.

Evening, Harry.

MR. GOLDEN: Good evening, Ed. It's nice to see you.

MURROW: Thank you. Are you sampling some of that

(Commercial)

MURROW: Harry Golden is editor, publisher and writer of a newspaper that has no news, no pictures, no headlines. His bi-monthly paper called "The Carolina Israelite" covers topics ranging from politics in the South to Keto's cure for a hangover. His most recent social item told of the visit of Cleopatra to Julius Ceaser in 46 B.C.

Harry Golden also writes editorials on just about anything. In recent months, this 57-year-old New Yorker, native of the Lower East Side, has attracted national attention with his best selling book, "Only In America". It's a collection of random essays about America.

It's been a long and eventful career for this former teacher, hotel clerk, reporter, who settled in Charlotte, North Carolina, in 1941 and founded his "Carolina Israelite" with about 800 subscribers, I think it was, and he's watched that number grow to almost 35,000.

Harry Golden makes his home and his office in this nine-room frame house on Elizabeth Avenue in Charlotte.

Evening, Harry.

MR. GOLDEN: Good evening, Ed. It's nice to see you.

MURROW: Thank you. Are you sampling some of that balmy North Carolina weather?

MR. GOLDEN: Well, it hasn't been "balmy" tonight, but it stopped the minute we got on the air.

MURROW: Good. Someone has written -- I've forgotten just who --"Harry Golden sits on a high tower and watches the world revolve." Are you watching?

MR. GOLDEN: Yes, I'm watching, Ed. You know, a philosopher once said, "You do not have to leave your room to see the world." And I watch it from here.

MURROW: Has the paper closed shop for the night, or is your staff still at work?

MR. GOLDEN: Oh, no, Ed. The staff goes home at five o'clock, and I'd like you to see my office here. We have here the outer office where my two secretaries sit and take care of the subscriptions, and my correspondence, and a few other girls back there. And over here I have my two files. You know, originally, Ed, I had a barrel---

MURROW: Yes?

MR. GOLDEN: ---and I wrote the articles and I just threw them in there. When I went to print, I just scooped up a bunch of 'em and sent 'em to the printer, but now I've become fancy and I have them in steel cases, and I would say, Ed, that this paper will be posthumously edited for at least three balmy North Carolina weather?

MR. GOLDEN: Well, it hasn't been "balmy" tonight, but it stopped the minute we got on the air.

MURROW: Good. Someone has written -- I've forgotten just who --"Harry Golden sits on a high tower and watches the world revolve." Are you watching?

MR. GOLDEN: Yes, I'm watching, Ed. You know, a philosopher once said, "You do not have to leave your room to see the world." And I watch it from here.

MURROW: Has the paper closed shop for the night, or is your staff still at work?

MR. GOLDEN: Oh, no, Ed. The staff goes home at five o'clock, and I'd like you to see my office here. We have here the outer office where my two secretaries sit and take care of the subscriptions, and my correspondence, and a few other girls back there. And over here I have my two files. You know, originally, Ed, I had a barrel---

MURROW: Yes?

MR. GOLDEN: ---and I wrote the articles and I just threw them in there. When I went to print, I just scooped up a bunch of 'em and sent 'em to the printer, but now I've become fancy and I have them in steel cases, and I would say, Ed, that this paper will be posthumously edited for at least three years with the stuff I have here.

MURROW: Could you give us a sampling of your editorial matter?

MR. GOLDEN: Yes, I have a few here for the next paper. For example, I have a story on "What Happened to Dorothy Arnold", and an article, "The Interesting Story of Senator Kennedy And The South", and then a little sketch of when I was a newsboy, and we stood outside of Captain Churchill's Restaurant on 49th Street and Broadway. I heard him say, "There she is. There she is behind the post!" There she is, Ed, a girl smoking a cigarette. All this within 45 years.

MURROW: Harry, where do you do your writing?

MR. GOLDEN: Well, Ed, right here. This is my office. This is where I sit and write, and I have a lot of books here, and as Mr. Thorrow said, "Pasture enough for my imagination."

MURROW: Harry Golden, I know your "Only in America" consists of articles that have appeared in your paper. Did you anticipate the book's great success?

MR. GOLDEN: Oh, no, Ed. I had no such idea. As a matter of fact, I prepared a letter for the publisher that after the first printing, if he had a few thousand left, he could give 'em away free with a new subscription to the paper.

years with the stuff I have here.

MURROW: Could you give us a sampling of your editorial matter?

MR. GOLDEN: Yes, I have a few here for the next paper. For example, I have a story on "What Happened to Dorothy Arnold", and an article, "The Interesting Story of Senator Kennedy And The South", and then a little sketch of when I was a newsboy, and we stood outside of Captain Churchill's Restaurant on 49th Street and Broadway. I heard him say, "There she is. There she is behind the post!" There she is, Ed, a girl smoking a cigarette. All this within 45 years.

MURROW: Harry, where do you do your writing?

MR. GOLDEN: Well, Ed, right here. This is my office. This is where I sit and write, and I have a lot of books here, and as Mr. Thorrow said, "Pasture enough for my imagination."

MURROW: Harry Golden, I know your "Only in America" consists of articles that have appeared in your paper. Did you anticipate the book's great success?

MR. GOLDEN: Oh, no, Ed. I had no such idea. As a matter of fact, I prepared a letter for the publisher that after the first printing, if he had a few thousand left, he could give 'em away free with a new subscription to the paper.

I had no idea that we would be in the 11th or 12th printing with nearly a quarter of a million, but with the correspondence, and after thinking it over, I realized, Ed, that, you know, there's a great longing out there. There's a longing and a hunger out there. There's a search for identity of some kind.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. GOLDEN: It's a tremendous thing, Ed, and a very heartening thing, too. I feel that perhaps we have struck with this book, and others which have been in the same vein, upon the real human story, Ed. The real human story, Ed, is a man and a woman and a home, and in each generation they think that the thundering events of the day are world-shattering, but in the last analysis the story remains the same: getting the children ready for school in the morning. And even in outer space basically the human story is not the mysteries of outer space as much as it is the mystery of the human heart---

MURROW: Yes.

MR. GOLDEN: ---and I think there we may have struck a chord among the people to capture this human story.

MURROW: Harry?

MR. GOLDEN: Yes.

MURROW: Harry, how did you happen to settle down

I had no idea that we would be in the 11th or 12th printing with nearly a quarter of a million, but with the correspondence, and after thinking it over, I realized, Ed, that, you know, there's a great longing out there. There's a longing and a hunger out there. There's a search for identity of some kind.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. GOLDEN: It's a tremendous thing, Ed, and a very heartening thing, too. I feel that perhaps we have struck with this book, and others which have been in the same vein, upon the real human story, Ed. The real human story, Ed, is a man and a woman and a home, and in each generation they think that the thundering events of the day are world-shattering, but in the last analysis the story remains the same: getting the children ready for school in the morning. And even in outer space basically the human story is not the mysteries of outer space as much as it is the mystery of the human heart---

MURROW: Yes.

MR. GOLDEN: ---and I think there we may have struck a chord among the people to capture this human story.

MURROW: Harry?

MR. GOLDEN: Yes.

MURROW: Harry, how did you happen to settle down and start your paper in North Carolina?

MR. GOLDEN: The pattern is the same, Ed. It's an industrialization. Thousands of people are coming here, and I was down here for awhile working for a special edition outfit. Then I came to Charlotte for a few months and decided to stay here. I decided that I could make a living by starting a personal journal.

MURROW: Why did you decide to start a personal journal rather than, say, a regular weekly paper?

MR. GOLDEN: Ed, I couldn't possibly compete with the news of the social events, and, furthermore, I felt that I had two great advantages in starting a personal journal. One was the uninterrupted reading for about 45 years, and the second, if I have any talent at all, it's a memory. I just remember everything I've ever read, everything I've seen, every conversation I've ever had, every person I've known, and this has stood me in good stead, and I knew that I could draw upon this memory, and this reading, and just write a personal journal of the great news events of the past and some observations of the current scene.

MURROW: Harry, that dart board behind you. I wonder if it has any significance.

MR. GOLDEN: Well, no, not necessarily. This is and start your paper in North Carolina?

MR. GOLDEN: The pattern is the same, Ed. It's an industrialization. Thousands of people are coming here, and I was down here for awhile working for a special edition outfit. Then I came to Charlotte for a few months and decided to stay here. I decided that I could make a living by starting a personal journal.

MURROW: Why did you decide to start a personal journal rather than, say, a regular weekly paper?

MR. GOLDEN: Ed, I couldn't possibly compete with the news of the social events, and, furthermore, I felt that I had two great advantages in starting a personal journal. One was the uninterrupted reading for about 45 years, and the second, if I have any talent at all, it's a memory. I just remember everything I've ever read, everything I've seen, every conversation I've ever had, every person I've known, and this has stood me in good stead, and I knew that I could draw upon this memory, and this reading, and just write a personal journal of the great news events of the past and some observations of the current scene.

MURROW: Harry, that dart board behind you. I wonder if it has any significance.

MR. GOLDEN: Well, no, not necessarily. This is my only exercise, Ed. It's relaxing and I'm pretty good at it too, but there's no significance. I don't shoot at it, and if I have any anger, I take it out on the dart board. I don't write in anger. I grant humanity to everyone. I think this perhaps might be a bit effective in my writings here.

MURROW: Harry?

MR. GOLDEN: Yes, Ed.

MURROW: You went to North Carolina as a Yankee. Did that cause you any minor difficulties?

MR. GOLDEN: No, Ed. Well, as a matter of fact, Ed, I came as a member of two minorities: a Yankee and a Jew.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. GOLDEN: And I came here as a Jew in the most Gentile section of our country, but there's no problem. Here I met some of the kindest people in the world, but something more than that, Ed. I think it's a matter of participation. I'm interested in the welfare of the city and the community and the state. I'm interested in their joys and their welfare and their sorrows, and in their great problems. This is what interests me.

MURROW: Harry Golden, you seem to be addressing yourself, indirectly at least, to the South's current great debate. Has your paper's voice had any effect on the intemy only exercise, Ed. It's relaxing and I'm pretty good at it too, but there's no significance. I don't shoot at it, and if I have any anger, I take it out on the dart board. I don't write in anger. I grant humanity to everyone. I think this perhaps might be a bit effective in my writings here.

MURROW: Harry?

MR. GOLDEN: Yes, Ed.

MURROW: You went to North Carolina as a Yankee. Did that cause you any minor difficulties?

MR. GOLDEN: No, Ed. Well, as a matter of fact, Ed, I came as a member of two minorities: a Yankee and a Jew.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. GOLDEN: And I came here as a Jew in the most gentile section of our country, but there's no problem. Here I met some of the kindest people in the world, but something more than that, Ed. I think it's a matter of participation. I'm interested in the welfare of the city and the community and the state. I'm interested in their joys and their welfare and their sorrows, and in their great problems. This is what interests me.

MURROW: Harry Golden, you seem to be addressing yourself, indirectly at least, to the South's current great debate. Has your paper's voice had any effect on the integration problem?

MR. GOLDEN: Well, Ed, quite frankly, I didn't -- I never tried for effectiveness, so to speak. I think if there has been any effectiveness, it is based on the fact that I say it here. I do not say it elsewhere. What I have to say on this great debate on the racial question, I say it here in Raleigh, in Atlanta, and in Chapel Hill, and among my neighbors, and I also use a bit of humor which has proven to be a bit effective. Now, right after the Supreme Court decision, I offered as a solution the vertical plan. You know---

MURROW: The vertical plan?

MR. GOLDEN: The vertical plan. You know, in the South there's no vertical segregation. The Negro walks completely free in supermarkets, and he pays his bills at windows with everybody else. It's only when he starts sittin' down that there's a little bit of trouble.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. GOLDEN: So I suggested that we just take the chairs out of the schoolhouses and let all the kids stand up at these old-fashioned bookkeeping desks, and that would solve the problem. Of course, they didn't do it, but at least they laughed.

Now I'd like to take another moment of this. My gration problem?

MR. GOLDEN: Well, Ed, quite frankly, I didn't -- I never tried for effectiveness, so to speak. I think if there has been any effectiveness, it is based on the fact that I say it here. I do not say it elsewhere. What I have to say on this great debate on the racial question, I say it here in Raleigh, in Atlanta, and in Chapel Hill, and among my neighbors, and I also use a bit of humor which has proven to be a bit effective. Now, right after the Supreme Court decision, I offered as a solution the vertical plan. You know---

MURROW: The vertical plan?

MR. GOLDEN: The vertical plan. You know, in the South there's no vertical segregation. The Negro walks completely free in supermarkets, and he pays his bills at windows with everybody else. It's only when he starts sittin' down that there's a little bit of trouble.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. GOLDEN: So I suggested that we just take the chairs out of the schoolhouses and let all the kids stand up at these old-fashioned bookkeeping desks, and that would solve the problem. Of course, they didn't do it, but at least they laughed.

Now I'd like to take another moment of this. My beloved friend, Carl Sandburg, and I have discussed this many times. You know, when we have a discussion, it's equal time. He talks a half-hour and I talk a half-hour, and after the Supreme Court decision, Mr. Sandburg gave in his opinion that the Negroes should have made their stand on the health facilities -- the expansion of the health facilities rather than on the schools. He thought there would have been less emotion. But the problem is not necessarily the fact of a Negro child going to school. This is only the dramatic symbol of the major problem, which is: Shall we permit 26% of our population to enter the industrial age of the 20th Century? This is the major problem we have, and it's not the school problem at all. That's only part of it.

MURROW: You were speaking of our old and mutual friend, Carl Sandburg. He certainly reared back and made himself quite a speech to that joint session of Congress, didn't he?

MR. GOLDEN: You bet, Ed! Probably one of the greatest television things I've ever seen in my life. And by the way, Ed, I'd like to show you something about Sandburg. Oh, a minute, Ed. Many of my books here have a brown paper cover on it.

MURROW: Yes.

beloved friend, Carl Sandburg, and I have discussed this many times. You know, when we have a discussion, it's equal time. He talks a half-hour and I talk a half-hour, and after the Supreme Court decision, Mr. Sandburg gave in his opinion that the Negroes should have made their stand on the health facilities -- the expansion of the health facilities rather than on the schools. He thought there would have been less emotion. But the problem is not necessarily the fact of a Negro child going to school. This is only the dramatic symbol of the major problem, which is: Shall we permit 26% of our population to enter the industrial age of the 20th Century? This is the major problem we have, and it's not the school problem at all. That's only part of it.

MURROW: You were speaking of our old and mutual friend, Carl Sandburg. He certainly reared back and made himself quite a speech to that joint session of Congress, didn't he?

MR. GOLDEN: You bet, Ed! Probably one of the greatest television things I've ever seen in my life. And by the way, Ed, I'd like to show you something about Sandburg. Oh, a minute, Ed. Many of my books here have a brown paper cover on it.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. GOLDEN: I'd like to explain that a year ago I had a fire in another building which destroyed about 2,000 of my books, but we could save a few of them, even though the covers were charred, by putting a brown wrapper on them, and this Bible was open during the fire, and, significantly, it burned right up to my favorite chapter in Amos: "Let justice well up like water, and righteousness is a mighty stream."

MURROW: Yes.

MR. GOLDEN: But come in here, Ed. I want to show you something interesting here. This is my bedroom. I sleep here, and I call this "The Sandburg Room". I'm preparing a book on Carl Sandburg, sort of a commentary.

MURROW: Oh, good!

MR. GOLDEN: Something like "Only In America", and I have here vast correspondence from Mr. Sandburg -- some of his, and some I've secured on my own, but this isn't all. My eldest son, Richard, a writer, and art director of the Jewish Community Center of Hartford, has most of Sandburg's papers. Now he does research work for me. And my other son, Harry, Jr., of the Detroit Free Press, edited my book, "Only In America", and he's completing my other book -- the companion book to "Only In America" -- called, "For Two Cents Plain". It will be out later this year.

MR. GOLDEN: I'd like to explain that a year ago I had a fire in another building which destroyed about 2,000 of my books, but we could save a few of them, even though the covers were charred, by putting a brown wrapper on them, and this Bible was open during the fire, and, significantly, it burned right up to my favorite chapter in Amos: "Let justice well up like water, and righteousness is a mighty stream."

MURROW: Yes.

MR. GOLDEN: But come in here, Ed. I want to show you something interesting here. This is my bedroom. I sleep here, and I call this "The Sandburg Room". I'm preparing a book on Carl Sandburg, sort of a commentary.

MURROW: Oh, good!

MR. GOLDEN: Something like "Only In America", and I have here vast correspondence from Mr. Sandburg -- some of his, and some I've secured on my own, but this isn't all. My eldest son, Richard, a writer, and art director of the Jewish Community Center of Hartford, has most of Sandburg's papers. Now he does research work for me. And my other son, Harry, Jr., of the Detroit Free Press, edited my book, "Only In America", and he's completing my other book -- the companion book to "Only In America" -- called, "For Two Cents Plain". It will be out later this year.

MURROW: Are there any other Harry Golden projects in the works?

MR. GOLDEN: Yes. And I'd like to mention Billy, my youngest son, who's down to Tulane teaching English. Yes, there is another project, Ed. I'm starting a syndicated column this weekend in many major newspapers of America: THE PHILADELPHIA ENQUIRER, THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS, and, significantly, THE WORLD TELEGRAM AND SUN of New York, and THE CHARLOTTE OBSERVER of Charlotte, my two home town papers, and this is a delightful thing. Now, Ed, there's been much other correspondence, of course.

MURROW: Harry?

MR. GOLDEN: Yes.

MURROW: As a detached observer of the American scene, what do you feel is the major problem that confronts us today?

MR. GOLDEN: Ed, I think the major problem today is that we've made a cult of comfort. It goes back to my mother who couldn't read and write. She could barely read the prayers out of a prayer book, and she constantly told us, "It's bad when things are too good." Well, for a long time we indulged her. We thought it was old world folklore, or superstition like Friday, the 13th today---

MURROW: Are there any other Harry Golden projects in the works?

MR. GOLDEN: Yes. And I'd like to mention Billy, my youngest son, who's down to Tulane teaching English. Yes, there is another project, Ed. I'm starting a syndicated column this weekend in many major newspapers of America: THE PHILADELPHIA ENQUIRER, THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS, and, significantly, THE WORLD TELEGRAM AND SUN of New York, and THE CHARLOTTE OBSERVER of Charlotte, my two home town papers, and this is a delightful thing. Now, Ed, there's been much other correspondence, of course.

MURROW: Harry?

MR. GOLDEN: Yes.

MURROW: As a detached observer of the American scene, what do you feel is the major problem that confronts us today?

MR. GOLDEN: Ed, I think the major problem today is that we've made a cult of comfort. It goes back to my mother who couldn't read and write. She could barely read the prayers out of a prayer book, and she constantly told us, "It's bad when things are too good." Well, for a long time we indulged her. We thought it was old world folklore, or superstition like Friday, the 13th today---

MURROW: Yes.

MR. GOLDEN: ---but when I began to inquire into the natural sciences, or philosophy, as we call it, I found the amazing thing that most of the great minds of civilization had said the same thing. I remember specifically -- well, Albert Einstein.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. GOLDEN: I remember that time when he said he would like to be a plumber. We've made a cult of comfort, and an old Hindu philosopher, his wonderful poem: "Comfort comes into your house as a guest, stays as the host, and eventually becomes your master."

MURROW: Very true. Harry?

MR. GOLDEN: Yes, Ed.

MURROW: I'm terribly sorry we've got to leave you. I hope to come down and have some coversation and a dart game with you one day.

MR. GOLDEN: It will be a wonderful treat. Thank you very much.

MURROW: Thank you for letting us come. Good night.

MR. GOLDEN: Good night.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Claire Bloom right after a word from Revlon.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. GOLDEN: ---but when I began to inquire into the natural sciences, or philosophy, as we call it, I found the amazing thing that most of the great minds of civilization had said the same thing. I remember specifically -- well, Albert Einstein.

MURROW: Yes.

MR. GOLDEN: I remember that time when he said he would like to be a plumber. We've made a cult of comfort, and an old Hindu philosopher, his wonderful poem: "Comfort comes into your house as a guest, stays as the host, and eventually becomes your master."

MURROW: Very true. Harry?

MR. GOLDEN: Yes, Ed.

MURROW: I'm terribly sorry we've got to leave you. I hope to come down and have some conversation and a part game with you one day.

MR. GOLDEN: It will be a wonderful treat. Thank you very much.

MURROW: Thank you for letting us come. Good night.

MR. GOLDEN: Good night.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Claire Bloom right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Claire Bloom became stage-struck when she was five years old, but she had to wait ten long years before she got her chance in the professional theater. Once it came, at the age of 15, it wasn't long before Claire Bloom was starring in Shakespearian roles with the Old Vick Company in England where she was born.

She's worked in television, and in such movies as "Lion Light", "Richard III", and "Look Back in Anger", which will soon be released, and she's now appearing on the Broadway stage in David Susskind's production of "Rashomon".

Claire Bloom lives in a one-room apartment in a converted town house, the one there in the middle on this block in Midtown Manhattan.

Evening, Claire.

MISS BLOOM: Good evening.

MURROW: How are you?

MISS BLOOM: Oh, all right. Rushed.

MURROW: Well, I see you got home from the theater all right.

MISS BLOOM: Just.

MURROW: Have you caught your breath yet?

MISS BLOOM: No.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Claire Bloom became stage-struck when she was five years old, but she had to wait ten long years before she got her chance in the professional theater. Once it came, at the age of 15, it wasn't long before Claire Bloom was starring in Shakespearian roles with the Old Vick Company in England where she was born.

She's worked in television, and in such movies as "Lion Light", "Richard III", and "Look Back in Anger", which will soon be released, and she's now appearing on the Broadway stage in David Susskind's production of "Rashomon".

Claire Bloom lives in a one-room apartment in a converted town house, the one there in the middle on this block in Midtown Manhattan.

Evening, Claire.

MISS BLOOM: Good evening.

MURROW: How are you?

MISS BLOOM: Oh, all right. Rushed.

MURROW: Well, I see you got home from the theater all right.

MISS BLOOM: Just.

MURROW: Have you caught your breath yet?

MISS BLOOM: No.

MURROW: Claire, does this rush and hustle and bustle of New York ever make you long for the more placid pace of London?

MISS BLOOM: No, I like it. It does me good. I think I need it. I think everybody needs it. London is nice to live in, but there's much more excitement in every way for me here. Much!

MURROW: Does this go for the New York theater as well?

MISS BLOOM: More than for any other reason. Yes, it does. There's more chance for young people, I find. There's more interest in young people. There's more diversity of projects. Many more things happening.

MURROW: Claire, actors usually find it difficult to explain just what it is they like about being on the stage. How do you explain your feelings about this?

MISS BLOOM: Well, many times I don't like it at all, but it is the only art that I am proficient in, that I can do professionally. I need to express myself in some way like that, and I wanted to be an actress. I suppose no one knows why one wants to do something in the beginning, and, of course, there's an amount of childishness, or romaticism -- I don't know which it is -- in actors -- some -- especially in MURROW: Claire, does this rush and hustle and bustle of New York ever make you long for the more placid pace of London?

MISS BLOOM: No, I like it. It does me good. I think I need it. I think everybody needs it. London is nice to live in, but there's much more excitement in every way for me here. Much!

MURROW: Does this go for the New York theater as well?

MISS BLOOM: More than for any other reason. Yes, it does. There's more chance for young people, I find. There's more interest in young people. There's more diversity of projects. Many more things happening.

MURROW: Claire, actors usually find it difficult to explain just what it is they like about being on the stage. How do you explain your feelings about this?

MISS BLOOM: Well, many times I don't like it at all, but it is the only art that I am proficient in, that I can do professionally. I need to express myself in some way like that, and I wanted to be an actress. I suppose no one knows why one wants to do something in the beginning, and, of course, there's an amount of childishness, or romanticism -- I don't know which it is -- in actors -- some -- especially in me, and you can live your dream life for two hours, and four hours on matinee days.

MURROW: Claire, what about the unromantic aspects of the theater?

MISS BLOOM: I don't like the hours. I don't like to go to bed late and get up late. I feel it's sordid. I like the morning and there is no morning. You get up practically in the afternoon. Otherwise, you're too tired for the performance. But one outweighs the other. I'm glad I'm an actress.

MURROW: Well, I should imagine the unusual hours create something of a housekeeping problem for you.

MISS BLOOM: Well, I've made it as easy as I can because this is my dining room, and---

MURROW: Yes?

MISS BLOOM: ---this is my library and my desk -- and my room. It's all I have.

MURROW: Well, I know that you lived in this country for a while during the war, didn't you?

MISS BLOOM: Well, yes.

MURROW: What do you remember most about those years?

MISS BLOOM: Well, I try to forget most of them.

me, and you can live your dream life for two hours, and four hours on matinee days.

MURROW: Claire, what about the unromantic aspects of the theater?

MISS BLOOM: I don't like the hours. I don't like to go to bed late and get up late. I feel it's sordid. I like the morning and there is no morning. You get up practically in the afternoon. Otherwise, you're too tired for the performance. But one outweighs the other. I'm glad I'm an actress.

MURROW: Well, I should imagine the unusual hours create something of a housekeeping problem for you.

MISS BLOOM: Well, I've made it as easy as I can because this is my dining room, and---

MURROW: Yes?

MISS BLOOM: ---this is my library and my desk -- and my room. It's all I have.

MURROW: Well, I know that you lived in this country for a while during the war, didn't you?

MISS BLOOM: Well, yes.

MURROW: What do you remember most about those years?

MISS BLOOM: Well, I try to forget most of them.

MURROW: Why?

MISS BLOOM: Because they weren't very happy. We didn't have a great deal of money; in fact, hardly any, and first went to relatives and were very unhappy in Florida. It was all unfortunate, and they didn't like us, and, oh, it was awful. And then we came to New York---

MURROW: Yes?

MISS BLOOM: ---and lived in one room and my mother was very ill, and everything was very bad, and I said I'd never come back, but here I am in one room again, and I'm back.

MURROW: Claire, have you toured much around this country?

MISS BLOOM: Oh, yes, the key cities. Oh, no, not only the key cities. Bloomington and Lafayette, I think, in Indiana for some reason with The Old Vick, but those are the only country or smaller places -- Philadelphia, Boston, Washington -- but to me, I don't know, to most actors, I think in touring you don't see, even if you try to see, places that you go to because there's the threat of the first night, of coming into New York, or whatever it is, and there's a strain, and the living in hotels, which I hate. But I managed to see a bit of the country. I've seen some of the country other ways, but

MURROW: Why?

MISS BLOOM: Because they weren't very happy. We didn't have a great deal of money; in fact, hardly any, and first went to relatives and were very unhappy in Florida. It was all unfortunate, and they didn't like us, and, oh, it was awful. And then we came to New York---

MURROW: Yes?

MISS BLOOM: ---and lived in one room and my mother was very ill, and everything was very bad, and I said I'd never come back, but here I am in one room again, and I'm back.

MURROW: Claire, have you toured much around this country?

MISS BLOOM: Oh, yes, the key cities. Oh, no, not only the key cities. Bloomington and Lafayette, I think, in Indiana for some reason with The Old Vick, but those are the only country or smaller places -- Philadelphia, Boston, Washington -- but to me, I don't know, to most actors, I think in touring you don't see, even if you try to see, places that you go to because there's the threat of the first night, of coming into New York, or whatever it is, and there's a strain, and the living in hotels, which I hate. But I managed to see a bit of the country. I've seen some of the country other ways, but when touring one manages to see certain interesting things. Niagara Falls!

MURROW: While you've had very considerable success, I suppose even Claire Bloom has had some rather disappointing moments.

MISS BLOOM: Oh, yes, many. Well, the worst -- the worst happened a long time ago, thank goodness!

MURROW: What was that?

MISS BLOOM: Well, I was 15, and I went to the Old Vick. It was the two great years, 1944 and 1945 when Olivier and Richardson played Peer Gynt, and, of course, they were just gods to me, and I went every Saturday night. Then I got a job walking on in a play called, "The White Devil" with Michael Benton and Robert Hauptmann had produced, and Olivier was going to make the film "Hamlet" and wanted Jean Simmons, and then at one point it looked as though he couldn't get her, and he was testing girls, and they recommended me and tested me, and quite wrongly, I'm sure, from certain things he said, I thought I had the part, and I couldn't believe it, and I was walking on air for two days because Olivier and Ophelia -- I mean it was marvelous! Anyway, then that was on a Friday, and on a Monday in the papers it said, "Jean Simmons is going to play Ophelia." I couldn't hear the words for six months with-when touring one manages to see certain interesting things. Niagara Falls!

MURROW: While you've had very considerable success, I suppose even Claire Bloom has had some rather disappointing moments.

MISS BLOOM: Oh, yes, many. Well, the worst -- the worst happened a long time ago, thank goodness!

MURROW: What was that?

MISS BLOOM: Well, I was 15, and I went to the Old Vic. It was the two great years, 1944 and 1945 when Olivier and Richardson played Peer Gynt, and, of course, they were just gods to me, and I went every Saturday night. Then I got a job walking on in a play called, "The White Devil" with Michael Benton and Robert Hauptmann had produced, and Olivier was going to make the film "Hamlet" and wanted Jean Simmons, and then at one point it looked as though he couldn't get her, and he was testing girls, and they recommended me and tested me, and quite wrongly, I'm sure, from certain things he said, I thought I had the part, and I couldn't believe it, and I was walking on air for two days because Olivier and Ophelia -- I mean it was marvelous! Anyway, then that was on a Friday, and on a Monday in the papers it said, "Jean Simmons is going to play Ophelia." I couldn't hear the words for six months without crying. Then I was taken to Stratford by Benton and Hauptmann in '47 and I played Ophelia with Paul Scofield, and Robert Hauptmann, so it was pretty good compensation.

MURROW: Have you ever regretted giving up civilian life as a child in order to go into the theater?

MISS BLOOM: Yes. Mind, you, not quite as a child. I was 15.

MURROW: That's young.

MISS BLOOM: Pretty young. Yes, I feel that I went from being a child to being a grown-up. I feel I lost my adolescence. I think I'm very young in many ways for my age now, but it's, as I say, outweighed. I'm glad I did in many ways.

MURROW: Claire, I suppose you didn't have much time to learn the domestic sciences, did you?

MISS BLOOM: I'm a very great cook.

MURROW: Are you?

MISS BLOOM: Excuse me, this is the only way I know to open this door. This is my kitchen. It's all very compact.

MURROW: Very attractive. I suppose, being British, your specialty should be steak and kidney pie, kippers, and boiled mutton and brussels sprouts.

out crying. Then I was taken to Stratford by Benton and Hauptmann in '47 and I played Ophelia with Paul Scofield, and Robert Hauptmann, so it was pretty good compensation.

MURROW: Have you ever regretted giving up civilian life as a child in order to go into the theater?

MISS BLOOM: Yes. Mind you, not quite as a child. I was 15.

MURROW: That's young.

MISS BLOOM: Pretty young. Yes, I feel that I went from being a child to being a grown-up. I feel I lost my adolescence. I think I'm very young in many ways for my age now, but it's, as I say, outweighed. I'm glad I did in many ways.

MURROW: Claire, I suppose you didn't have much time to learn the domestic sciences, did you?

MISS BLOOM: I'm a very great cook.

MURROW: Are you?

MISS BLOOM: Excuse me, this is the only way I know to open this door. This is my kitchen. It's all very compact.

MURROW: Very attractive. I suppose, being British, your specialty should be steak and kidney pie, kippers, and boiled mutton and brussels sprouts.

MISS BLOOM: Oh, that sounds like Dickens! That's terrible! No, it's not! I never cooked such things.

MURROW: Not even brussels sprouts?

MISS BLOOM: No. Well, they can be very nice if they're cooked properly.

MURROW: They can, indeed. Claire, speaking of things British, do you have any "touches" of England around the house?

MISS BLOOM: No. I have a lot of American Colonial furniture. Well, I have antiques that -- well, some I bought, some I was sent. I love looking for antiques. I have a vase that Julie Andrews gave me, but I think the only thing about that that is British is that she is. I think she got it here -- and -- no, except myself. Nothing else.

MURROW: Well, fortunately, you and Miss Andrews haven't suffered the actor's chronic plight of unemployment, but when you're working on the stage, don't you get a little tired of repeating the same play night after night?

MISS BLOOM: Yes, but then I've been spoiled by doing a lot of repertories, so that you play one play one night and you are not in the play the night after. I find that, of course, ideal. I think it is difficult. You feel that sometimes a sword is hanging over your head every night because

MISS BLOOM: Oh, that sounds like Dickens! That's terrible! No, it's not! I never cooked such things.

MURROW: Not even brussels sprouts?

MISS BLOOM: No. Well, they can be very nice if they're cooked properly.

MURROW: They can, indeed. Claire, speaking of things British, do you have any "touches" of England around the house?

MISS BLOOM: No. I have a lot of American Colonial furniture. Well, I have antiques that -- well, some I bought, some I was sent. I love looking for antiques. I have a vase that Julie Andrews gave me, but I think the only thing about that that is British is that she is. I think she got it here -- and -- no, except myself. Nothing else.

MURROW: Well, fortunately, you and Miss Andrews haven't suffered the actor's chronic plight of unemployment, but when you're working on the stage, don't you get a little tired of repeating the same play night after night?

MISS BLOOM: Yes, but then I've been spoiled by doing a lot of repertories, so that you play one play one night and you are not in the play the night after. I find that, of course, ideal. I think it is difficult. You feel that sometimes a sword is hanging over your head every night because you've got to be on form, and you mustn't tire yourself in the day. Sometimes you feel a slave to that performance.

MURROW: Yes. What do you like to do when you're away from "Rashomon"?

MISS BLOOM: Rest, nothing, read, play my gramophone. Gramophone! Record player. My only as a hobby is photography, and I've taken a picture of my brother, which I'm fond of. I've taken a lot of pictures, but this is the best I think I've taken.

MURROW: Oh, very nice, indeed. Is he in the theater?

MISS BLOOM: No, thank goodness, he's not in the theater. He's learning to be a film editor. He lives on a boat in Chelsea.

MURROW: Wonderful! Claire, you spoke of reading. What's your preferred reading material?

MISS BLOOM: Virginia Wolff, Willa Catha, Thomas Wolf. I love reading letters. I'm a snooper. I love to read private letters of great people. Perhaps as an actress I feel that one gets tremendous insight into them. If you read the letters from Napoleon to Marie Louisa, instead of thinking of him as a great figure far away, you think and realize him much more as a man. I like snooping reading.

you've got to be on form, and you mustn't tire yourself in the day. Sometimes you feel a slave to that performance.

MURROW: Yes. What do you like to do when you're away from "Rashomon"?

MISS BLOOM: Rest, nothing, read, play my gramophone. Gramophone! Record player. My only as a hobby is photography, and I've taken a picture of my brother, which I'm fond of. I've taken a lot of pictures, but this is the best I think I've taken.

MURROW: Oh, very nice, indeed. Is he in the theater?

MISS BLOOM: No, thank goodness, he's not in the theater. He's learning to be a film editor. He lives on a boat in Chelsea.

MURROW: Wonderful! Claire, you spoke of reading. What's your preferred reading material?

MISS BLOOM: Virginia Wolff, Willa Cathe, Thomas Wolf. I love reading letters. I'm a snooper. I love to read private letters of great people. Perhaps as an actress I feel that one gets tremendous insight into them. If you read the letters from Napoleon to Marie Louise, instead of thinking of him as a great figure far away, you think and realize him much more as a man. I like snooping reading.

MURROW: Claire, what's your reaction to the fame that comes with success as an actress?

MISS BLOOM: Oh, I don't think I have any reaction. I think my reaction would have been -- I was so ambitious. I was terribly ambitious when I was younger -- terrible -- and I think my reaction would have been, if I had not succeeded at all, I would have been awful. As it is, I don't think I think of it. Emily Dickenson, and I'm not going to quote to you, I swear, said that no one hears the strains of victory like those who are defeated and dying, which is strong -- a strong way of putting it -- but you want what you haven't got.

MURROW: Aren't you bothered at all by the loss of anonymity, being recognized wherever you go and so forth?

MISS BLOOM: Well, no. First of all, it doesn't happen to me that much. I am, I suppose, quiet in my life. No. Well, everyone wants what they haven't got. I like to live a quiet life and be an anonymous person. Hamlet -- the clown wants to play Hamlet, and always you want what you haven't got.

MURROW: Well, Claire Bloom, I'm sure that you won't become anonymous for a long, long time. Thank you very much for letting us come.

MISS BLOOM: Oh, good night.

MURROW: Claire, what's your reaction to the fame that comes with success as an actress?

MISS BLOOM: Oh, I don't think I have any reaction. I think my reaction would have been -- I was so ambitious. I was terribly ambitious when I was younger -- terrible -- and I think my reaction would have been, if I had not succeeded at all, I would have been awful. As it is, I don't think I think of it. Emily Dickenson, and I'm not going to quote to you, I swear, said that no one hears the strains of victory like those who are defeated and dying, which is strong -- a strong way of putting it -- but you want what you haven't got.

MURROW: Aren't you bothered at all by the loss of anonymity, being recognized wherever you go and so forth?

MISS BLOOM: Well, no. First of all, it doesn't happen to me that much. I am, I suppose, quiet in my life. No. Well, everyone wants what they haven't got. I like to live a quiet life and be an anonymous person. Hamlet -- the clown wants to play Hamlet, and always you want what you haven't got.

MURROW: Well, Claire Bloom, I'm sure that you won't become anonymous for a long, long time. Thank you very much for letting us come.

MISS BLOOM: Oh, good night.

MURROW: Good night. Thank you again.

I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next weeks' guests right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be visiting in Washington with Miss Clorey Gifford, President of the Federation of Women's Clubs. We'll also be calling on Antonino Rocca, one of wrestling's most popular and successful figures.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

MURROW: Good night. Thank you again.

I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next weeks' guests right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be visiting in Washington with Miss Clorey Gifford, President of the Federation of Women's Clubs. We'll also be calling on Antonino Rocca, one of wrestling's most popular and successful figures.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Antonino Rocca

Chloe Gifford

February 20, 1959 - 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with a man who is no stranger to anyone who follows wrestling, Antonino Argentino Rocca. We'll also be going to Washington, D. C. for a visit with Miss Chloe Gifford, President of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

We'll be ready to go right a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Antonino Rocca

Chloe Gifford

February 20, 1959 - 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with a man who is no stranger to anyone who follows wrestling, Antonino Argentino Rocca. We'll also be going to Washington, D. C. for a visit with Miss Chloe Gifford, President of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

We'll be ready to go right a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545

LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

(Commercial)

MURROW: Antonino Rocca is a 32-year-old Argentinian who speaks six languages. He has a degree in electrical engineering, and has become perhaps the world's most successful professional wrestler, and one of the highest paid athletes of our time. His flair for the dramatic inside the ring, in addition to his talent as a wrestler, has helped make all this possible.

Tony Rocca was born near Venice. At the age of 11 he moved from Italy to Argentina. He was raised there; graduated from Rosario University, and became one of Argentina's champion soccer players. Then he turned to wrestling. He came to this country about ten years ago, and in well over a thousand matches, has yet to be beaten.

When he's not traveling and wrestling, which is most of the time, Tony Rocca lives alone in a small apartment in that sire building, the one on the right, West 57th Street here in New York City.

Good evening, Tony.

ROCCA: Hi, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

ROCCA: Just fine. Thank you.

MURROW: Tony, you wrestled last night in Washing-

(Commercial)

MURROW: Antonino Rocca is a 32-year-old Argentinian who speaks six languages. He has a degree in electrical engineering, and has become perhaps the world's most successful professional wrestler, and one of the highest paid athletes of our time. His flair for the dramatic inside the ring, in addition to his talent as a wrestler, has helped make all this possible.

Tony Rocca was born near Venice. At the age of 11 he moved from Italy to Argentina. He was raised there; graduated from Rosario University, and became one of Argentina's champion soccer players. Then he turned to wrestling. He came to this country about ten years ago, and in well over a thousand matches, has yet to be beaten.

When he's not traveling and wrestling, which is most of the time, Tony Rocca lives alone in a small apartment in that site building, the one on the right, West 57th Street here in New York City.

Good evening, Tony.

ROCCA: Hi, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

ROCCA: Just fine. Thank you.

MURROW: Tony, you wrestled last night in Washington. I assume the winning streak is still intact?

ROCCA: Yes, Ed, but the big job will be this coming Monday, you know, in the Garden.

MURROW: Who are you wrestling then?

ROCCA: We got a big match against Lewis and Curtiss, you know.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

ROCCA: Yes.

MURROW: Tony, one of your trademarks is wrestling in bare feet. Isn't that a little unusual even for what is frequently termed "the grunt and groan" profession?

ROCCA: Well, it gives me more balance, you know, and I walk bare feet in my apartment here, and also in the morning I walk sometimes in Central Park when it's wet -- the ground, you know---

MURROW: Yes?

ROCCA: I walk around. It gives me strength and magnitude from the ground, I always say.

MURROW: Tony, it would seem to me that electrical engineering would have been a little easier on the bones than wrestling. What prompted you to make the switch?

ROCCA: Well, Ed, the trouble is that always I was with the desire to compete in an individual sport, you know.

ton. I assume the winning streak is still intact?

ROCCA: Yes, Ed, but the big job will be this coming Monday, you know, in the Garden.

MURROW: Who are you wrestling then?

ROCCA: We got a big match against Lewis and Curtiss, you know.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

ROCCA: Yes.

MURROW: Tony, one of your trademarks is wrestling in bare feet. Isn't that a little unusual even for what is frequently termed "the grunt and groan" profession?

ROCCA: Well, it gives me more balance, you know, and I walk bare feet in my apartment here, and also in the morning I walk sometimes in Central Park when it's wet -- the ground, you know---

MURROW: Yes?

ROCCA: I walk around. It gives me strength and magnitude from the ground, I always say.

MURROW: Tony, it would seem to me that electrical engineering would have been a little easier on the bones than wrestling. What prompted you to make the switch?

ROCCA: Well, Ed, the trouble is that always I was with the desire to compete in an individual sport, you know.

That's the reason why I took wrestling, and I remember very well the first bout I had against Colignanani, you know?

MURROW: Yes.

ROCCA: I remember once on the following day, I was just laying down like that, and moved my head in such a way, and I couldn't even eat soup, you know, but it was a good start, and I'm very proud of it.

MURROW: Well, after a long, hard match, it must be something of a problem to unwind. What have you found to be the best method of relaxing?

ROCCA: Well, the best method of relaxing is just have a big bath and sleep good, and, of course, I got something very good here: my hi fi, you know.

MURROW: Yes?

ROCCA: This is plenty of enjoyment, plenty of music, lots of records.

MURROW: Well, from those stacks of records, it's obvious that you enjoy listening to music.

ROCCA: I love it, Ed, because music elevates me. I got here a collection of about 800 records, and one of my preferred, I would say, is the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven---

MURROW: Oh, yes.

ROCCO: ---done by a very great friend of mine, too

That's the reason why I took wrestling, and I remember very well the first bout I had against Colignemant, you know?

MURROW: Yes.

ROCCA: I remember once on the following day, I was just laying down like that, and moved my head in such a way, and I couldn't even eat soup, you know, but it was a good start, and I'm very proud of it.

MURROW: Well, after a long, hard match, it must be something of a problem to unwind. What have you found to be the best method of relaxing?

ROCCA: Well, the best method of relaxing is just have a big bath and sleep good, and, of course, I got something very good here: my hi fi, you know.

MURROW: Yes?

ROCCA: This is plenty of enjoyment, plenty of music, lots of records.

MURROW: Well, from those stacks of records, it's obvious that you enjoy listening to music.

ROCCA: I love it, Ed, because music elevates me. I got here a collection of about 800 records, and one of my preferred, I would say, is the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven---

MURROW: Oh, yes.

ROCCO: ---done by a very great friend of mine, too,

and friend of lots of people, Arturo Toscanini.

MURROW: Yes.

ROCCA: Yes. He recalled me, and they used to call me "The Ballet" -- I imagine through television, you know -- He used to, I would say, be excited as much as me, and perspire as much as me, you know, because he said, "Son, when you wrestle over there, you give me something like a symphony." And I believe wrestling today is like a symphony -- like a terrific music, you know, and that is the way that I feel when I am wrestling, Ed. That's the truth.

MURROW: Tony, tell me, does listening to music relax you before a match?

ROCCA: Yes. It all depends, you know, what kind of weather is outside. I am not temperamental, but when the sky is covered, you know -- wake up, maybe a rainy day, then I love music with lots of rhythm and lots of staccato, you know, and if the day is just blue, nice, then some music just to relax, like that, you know.

MURROW: Well, for the past ten years you've appeared in just about every country in the world, haven't you?

ROCCA: That's right, Ed. I would recall -- that reminds me very well when I was in Murano, about 28 kilometers from my city of Proviso, where I was born, and there they show and friend of lots of people, Arturo Toscanini.

MURROW: Yes.

ROCCA: Yes. He recalled me, and they used to call me "The Ballet" -- I imagine through television, you know -- He used to, I would say, be excited as much as me, and perspire as much as me, you know, because he said, "Son, when you wrestle over there, you give me something like a symphony." And I believe wrestling today is like a symphony -- like a terrific music, you know, and that is the way that I feel when I am wrestling, Ed. That's the truth.

MURROW: Tony, tell me, does listening to music relax you before a match?

ROCCA: Yes. It all depends, you know, what kind of weather is outside. I am not temperamental, but when the sky is covered, you know -- wake up, maybe a rainy day, then I love music with lots of rhythm and lots of staccato, you know, and if the day is just blue, nice, then some music just to relax, like that, you know.

MURROW: Well, for the past ten years you've appeared in just about every country in the world, haven't you?

ROCCA: That's right, Ed. I would recall -- that reminds me very well when I was in Murano, about 28 kilometers from my city of Provisco, where I was born, and there they know me how to blow this little thing here, and I'm pretty proud of it, you know. It took me about 40 minutes, and the 17th time I come out with a little thing like that, which I will give a name of an ash tray, I think maybe, I don't know. Something very unusual and good, I guess.

MURROW: Tony?

ROCCA: Yes.

MURROW: Many people consider a professional wrestling match something of a dramatic performance. There always seems to be a hero and a villain.

ROCCA: Oh, just a moment, I will explain to you something about that. You know, it's a very good part, but, see, in my opinion, a villain is a man who is always out of shape -- out of condition -- overweight maybe, you know, and a hero is a man with ambition, you know, streamlined, with a great condition to compete with, and of course, for that, you know, we got to believe today -- I got here something very unusual but beautiful -- vitamins.

MURROW: Is this the way you stay in condition? eating vitamins?

ROCCA: Exactly -- vitamins -- and I will come up in a match with minds -- some study that I had for two or three years made, and I guarantee you with that you're going to conquer me how to blow this little thing here, and I'm pretty proud of it, you know. It took me about 40 minutes, and the 17th time I come out with a little thing like that, which I will give a name of an ash tray, I think maybe, I don't know. Something very unusual and good, I guess.

MURROW: Tony?

ROCCA: Yes.

MURROW: Many people consider a professional wrestling match something of a dramatic performance. There always seems to be a hero and a villain.

ROCCA: Oh, just a moment, I will explain to you something about that. You know, it's a very good part, but, see, in my opinion, a villain is a man who is always out of shape -- out of condition -- overweight maybe, you know, and a hero is a man with ambition, you know, streamlined, with a great condition to compete with, and of course, for that, you know, we got to believe today -- I got here something very unusual but beautiful -- vitamins.

MURROW: Is this the way you stay in condition? eating vitamins?

ROCCA: Exactly -- vitamins -- and I will come up in a match with minds -- some study that I had for two or three years made, and I guarantee you with that you're going to conquer everything. I would say, Ed, that today is the era of guided missile and vitamins.

MURROW: Tony, tell me, during a match when you're all wound up with an opponent, what do you think about?

ROCCA: Well, Ed, my opinion, you know, is this. Any wrestler -- and now I talk for myself too -- should go over, Ed, like I do always, try to win, try to be honest with the people, and, of course, having besides, showmanship. The very life without showmanship is nothing. Try to please the people and they patronize you better.

MURROW: Well, you think about pleasing the people when you're all wrapped up in a knot there, is that right?

ROCCA: Well, that's right, but, you know, when you are in condition, Ed, you're not afraid of your body. That's right.

MURROW: Tony, some of your performances, especially here at the Garden, have led to rather near riots by your partisan fans. Is this something that is peculiar to New York?

ROCCA: Well, I would say yes, Ed, because, you know, my followers here in the Garden, the majority, they are Puerto Ricans, you know---

MURROW: Yes?

ROCCA: ---and lots of times I remember when the everything. I would say, Ed, that today is the era of guided missile and vitamins.

MURROW: Tony, tell me, during a match when you're all wound up with an opponent, what do you think about?

ROCCA: Well, Ed, my opinion, you know, is this. Any wrestler -- and now I talk for myself too -- should go over, Ed, like I do always, try to win, try to be honest with the people, and, of course, having besides, showmanship. The very life without showmanship is nothing. Try to please the people and they patronize you better.

MURROW: Well, you think about pleasing the people when you're all wrapped up in a knot there, is that right?

ROCCA: Well, that's right, but, you know, when you are in condition, Ed, you're not afraid of your body. That's right.

MURROW: Tony, some of your performances, especially here at the Garden, have led to rather near riots by your partisan fans. Is this something that is peculiar to New York?

ROCCA: Well, I would say yes, Ed, because, you know, my followers here in the Garden, the majority, they are Puerto Ricans, you know---

MURROW: Yes?

ROCCA: ---and lots of times I remember when the match was very hot, Ed, I used to just come up and say (speaks Spanish). In Spanish, of course. We got to show to them that we are gentlemen like everybody, and you'd be surprised, you know, the crowd, they come down, and they listen to me. They seem to me that they believe that I got something to come over them, you know?

MURROW: So, apparently you have adopted them as well. Is that right?

ROCCA: I would say so, Ed, yes, and I'm very proud of it, you know, because when you got some responsibility over there, you must take the minority of maybe Italians and Jewish people, or colored people, of 20 or 30 years ago, you know?

MURROW: Yes.

ROCCA: Of course, they got to go with us too. They got to try to learn English, which with that, we conjugate all together. And, of course, above everything else, is I want to fight. I want to fight one big thing, you know, today: juvenile delinquency.

MURROW: Yes.

ROCCA: We got to just unionize and fight that disease. In my dictionary just doesn't exist the disease of delinquency, but in the practice we have it. Now, of course, I got very well here, Ed -- I will show something. I got few match was very hot, Ed, I used to just come up and say (speaks Spanish). In Spanish, of course. We got to show to them that we are gentlemen like everybody, and you'd be surprised, you know, the crowd, they come down, and they listen to me. They seem to me that they believe that I got something to come over them, you know?--

MURROW: So, apparently you have adopted them as well. Is that right?

ROCCA: I would say so, Ed, yes, and I'm very proud of it, you know, because when you got some responsibility over there, you must take the minority of maybe Italians and Jewish people, or colored people, of 20 or 30 years ago, you know?

MURROW: Yes.

ROCCA: Of course, they got to go with us too. They got to try to learn English, which with that, we conjugate all together. And, of course, above everything else, is I want to fight. I want to fight one big thing, you know, today: juvenile delinquency.

MURROW: Yes.

ROCCA: We got to just unlearn and fight that disease. In my dictionary just doesn't exist the disease of delinquency, but in the practice we have it. Now, of course, I got very well here, Ed -- I will show something. I got few diplomas here made by the Boys Club of America, a new one.

MURROW: Yes?

ROCCA: I got ? diploma, Italian humanitarian, and Doctor of Humanity from the ? Rio de Janeiro.

MURROW: What else is there in the apartment that brings back memories of Italy?

ROCCO: Oh, heck, you know this is the most fantastic thing in your life -- my mother. That's this young lady here. Of course, some time ago -- she died two years ago, but still in my memory. She was a great lady. And here I got my Aunt Maria, another great lady, you know, which I'm proud because they teach me how to be a man with a responsibility.

MURROW: Yes.

ROCCA: And, of course, Ed, here I got a beauty of sunbeam, Lake Luigicomo by Luigi Canyani.

MURROW: Oh, yes. That must remind you of a place you know very well, Tony.

ROCCA: Yes, Lake Luigicomo. I was walking around over there lots of times and see the beauty -- natural beauty -- of the flowers, child, scenery over there, of course, and that, see? -- like this one here.

MURROW: Tony, you've appeared in a lot of cities diplomas here made by the Boys Club of America, a new one.

MURROW: Yes?

ROCCA: I got diplomas, Italian humanitarian, and Doctor of Humanity from the Rio de Janeiro.

MURROW: What else is there in the apartment that brings back memories of Italy?

ROCCO: Oh, heck, you know this is the most fantastic thing in your life -- my mother. That's this young lady here. Of course, some time ago -- she died two years ago, but still in my memory. She was a great lady. And here I got my Aunt Maria, another great lady, you know, which I'm proud because they teach me how to be a man with a responsibility.

MURROW: Yes.

ROCCA: And, of course, Ed, here I got a beauty of sunbeam, Lake Luigicomo by Luigi Canyani.

MURROW: Oh, yes. That must remind you of a place you know very well, Tony.

ROCCA: Yes, Lake Luigicomo. I was walking around over there lots of times and see the beauty -- natural beauty of the flowers, child, scenery over there, of course, and that, see? -- like this one here.

MURROW: Tony, you've appeared in a lot of cities

in the United States.

ROCCA: Yes.

MURROW: Which have impressed you most?

ROCCA: Well, Ed, the more to me was Detroit, I would say. I remember well when I was a kid, you know, they used to say, "Well, one time maybe you go to America. You count 1 - 2 - 3, open up your eyes, and an automobile will be in front of you." While I was in Detroit I closed my eyes like that, count 1 - 2 - 3, and a car was in front of me. That is something beautiful.

MURROW: Tony, I had a feeling a moment ago that you wanted to talk a little more about art. Is that right?

ROCCA: Yes, Ed. I just condemn this modern art of Modigliani, and I won't say -- well, I don't want to mention no more names, but you can find beauty, art and paintings made just to relax you. When you come with this thousand five different colors, a shocking feeling is in your mind, and that, I can't stand it. I can't stand it at all.

MURROW: Tony, how long do you think you'll keep on wrestling?

ROCCA: Well, until I am -- I won't say 150, but about 55 -- 50, 55, you know. There's a very interesting how and when you got to quit. 'Til your blood circulation is good, in the United States.

ROCCA: Yes.

MURROW: Which have impressed you most?

ROCCA: Well, Ed, the more to me was Detroit, I would say. I remember well when I was a kid, you know, they used to say, "Well, one time maybe you go to America. You count 1 - 2 - 3, open up your eyes, and an automobile will be in front of you." While I was in Detroit I closed my eyes like that, count 1 - 2 - 3, and a car was in front of me. That is something beautiful.

MURROW: Tony, I had a feeling a moment ago that you wanted to talk a little more about art. Is that right?

ROCCA: Yes, Ed. I just condemn this modern art of Modigliani, and I won't say -- well, I don't want to mention no more names, but you can find beauty, art and paintings made just to relax you. When you come with this thousand five different colors, a shocking feeling is in your mind, and that, I can't stand it. I can't stand it at all.

MURROW: Tony, how long do you think you'll keep on wrestling?

ROCCA: Well, until I am -- I won't say 150, but about 55 -- 50, 55, you know. There's a very interesting how and when you got to quit. 'Til your blood circulation is good, and your reflexes good, you can go and win matches. Yes.

MURROW: Well, Tony Rocca, each of us has his own idea what constitutes living the good life. What's yours?

ROCCA: Well, Ed, I believe one thing. You don't have to be a conqueror, but moderation of everything is good for you. See, when you go up in the level, out of the medium, you are good. When you try to penetrate the impossible, then you are a conqueror, and conqueror is no good. You become a totalitarian of yourself, and totalitarian with the masses. Here in this country I learned lots of things, Ed. This is a country of a feudal, but we American because soon I got very big news for you too. Very soon, in 30 days, I will be American citizen.

MURROW: How wonderful!

ROCCA: Yes.

MURROW: Congratulations!

ROCCA: Thank you very much, Ed. I'm very, very proud of it, and if tomorrow America needs me, my blood, my everything, I'll be just delighted to give it because America give me the best, and I'm just very grateful to live here in this great, great country.

MURROW: Tony Rocca, thank you very much for letting us come and visit you. It has been very pleasant, indeed.

and your reflexes good, you can go and win matches. Yes.

MURROW: Well, Tony Rocca, each of us has his own idea what constitutes living the good life. What's yours?

ROCCA: Well, Ed, I believe one thing. You don't have to be a conqueror, but moderation of everything is good for you. See, when you go up in the level, out of the medium, you are good. When you try to penetrate the impossible, then you are a conqueror, and conqueror is no good. You become a totalitarian of yourself, and totalitarian with the masses. Here in this country I learned lots of things, Ed. This is a country of a feudal, but we American because soon I got very big news for you too. Very soon, in 30 days, I will be American citizen.

MURROW: How wonderful!

ROCCA: Yes.

MURROW: Congratulations!

ROCCA: Thank you very much, Ed. I'm very, very proud of it, and if tomorrow America needs me, my blood, my everything, I'll be just delighted to give it because America give me the best, and I'm just very grateful to live here in this great, great country.

MURROW: Tony Rocca, thank you very much for letting us come and visit you. It has been very pleasant, indeed.

ROCCA: Thank you very much, Ed.

MURROW: Good night, Tony.

ROCCA: Good night.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Miss Chloe Gifford, President of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, right after a word from Bob Wright, speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Miss Chloe Gifford is President of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, an international organization comprising some 11 million members in about 50 countries. She's the 22nd woman to hold the office since the Federation was founded in 1890.

Chloe Gifford is exceptionally well qualified for her tasks. She was born in Mt. Olivet, Kentucky; grew up in Lexington; became a lawyer when she was just 21; went into teaching and concentrated on activities and club work, and at last count, Miss Gifford belonged to, I think it was 26 national and international service committees. Currently she's on leave from the faculty of the University of Kentucky for the two years of her term as president of the Federation.

Chloe Gifford has been living in this house in ROCCA: Thank you very much, Ed.

MURROW: Good night, Tony.

ROCCA: Good night.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Miss Chloe Gifford, President of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, right after a word from Bob Wright, speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Miss Chloe Gifford is President of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, an international organization comprising some 11 million members in about 50 countries. She's the 22nd woman to hold the office since the Federation was founded in 1890.

Chloe Gifford is exceptionally well qualified for her tasks. She was born in Mt. Olivet, Kentucky; grew up in Lexington; became a lawyer when she was just 21; went into teaching and concentrated on activities and club work, and at last count, Miss Gifford belonged to, I think it was 26 national and international service committees. Currently she's on leave from the faculty of the University of Kentucky for the two years of her term as president of the Federation.

Chloe Gifford has been living in this house in Washington since she took office last summer. It's the International Headquarters of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

Good evening, Miss Gifford.

GIFFORD: Good evening, Mr. Murrow. Welcome to General Federation Headquarters, my home for two years.

MURROW: Thank you very much. Miss Gifford, the past eight months must have been rather busy ones for you.

GIFFORD: They have been terrifically busy ones and very hard, but very exciting, let me say. You know, you really need to be two individuals to carry on this job. I often say twins. I'm big enough to divide in two, but I've never found a way to do it yet.

MURROW: The work requires a lot of traveling, doesn't it?

GIFFORD: Oh, yes, quite a bit. I've traveled over a hundred thousand miles in the last 12 months. I've been to Europe twice in the last six, and just last Sunday I returned from visiting clubs in Puerto Rico, in Jamaica, and then I was down with Castro and the rebels in Cuba.

MURROW: Miss Gifford, what quality would you say a Federation president needs most?

GIFFORD: Oh, I would definitely say a good sense

Washington since she took office last summer. It's the International Headquarters of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

Good evening, Miss Gifford.

GIFFORD: Good evening, Mr. Murrow. Welcome to General Federation Headquarters, my home for two years.

MURROW: Thank you very much. Miss Gifford, the past eight months must have been rather busy ones for you.

GIFFORD: They have been terrifically busy ones and very hard, but very exciting, let me say. You know, you really need to be two individuals to carry on this job. I often say twins. I'm big enough to divide in two, but I've never found a way to do it yet.

MURROW: The work requires a lot of travelling, doesn't it?

GIFFORD: Oh, yes, quite a bit. I've traveled over a hundred thousand miles in the last 12 months. I've been to Europe twice in the last six, and just last Sunday I returned from visiting clubs in Puerto Rico, in Jamaica, and then I was down with Castro and the rebels in Cuba.

MURROW: Miss Gifford, what quality would you say a Federation president needs most?

GIFFORD: Oh, I would definitely say a good sense of humor. You know, how would you like to be president of 11 million females?

MURROW: Oh, that would be very formidable for any man. A very frightening thought.

GIFFORD: Well, you know, it's a lot of fun, though, really, when men, as a rule, are scared to death of women in the mass---

MURROW: Yes?

GIFFORD: ---but I always say to them the time to be frightened is when one gets you in the corner.

MURROW: Wise words for the wary male. Miss Gifford, how much time do you spend on administrative work in Washington?

GIFFORD: Well, I wish I could tell you that I spend more time at this desk, but regrettably I do not because with all the traveling I do, I do not have too much time for working here actively.

MURROW: It's a very neat and tidy desk. Miss Gifford, what do you most hope to see accomplished by the Federation during the Chloe Gifford administration?

GIFFORD: Well, you know, Ed, each president has the right to put emphasis on the programs she desires, and so during this administration I am putting emphasis on community of humor. You know, how would you like to be president of 11 million females?

MURROW: Oh, that would be very formidable for any man. A very frightening thought.

GIFFORD: Well, you know, it's a lot of fun, though, really, when men, as a rule, are scared to death of women in the mass---

MURROW: Yes?

GIFFORD: ---but I always say to them the time to be frightened is when one gets you in the corner.

MURROW: Wise words for the very male. Miss Gifford, how much time do you spend on administrative work in Washington?

GIFFORD: Well, I wish I could tell you that I spend more time at this desk, but regrettably I do not because with all the traveling I do, I do not have too much time for working here actively.

MURROW: It's a very neat and tidy desk. Miss Gifford, what do you most hope to see accomplished by the federation during the Chloe Gifford administration?

GIFFORD: Well, you know, Ed, each president has the right to put emphasis on the programs she desires, and so during this administration I am putting emphasis on community development and international understanding.

Now, in the field of community development, all of my clubs are working -- clubwomen, rather, are working very actively on the community level trying to make the community a better place in which to live, and working with them is the NUEA, which is the National University Extension Association, that is allied with all institutions of higher learning, and then, you know, Ed, we're putting on a contest, and the Sears-Roebuck Foundation is giving the prizes to this contest that will be over $100,000. That's worth working for, don't you think?

MURROW: It is, indeed.

GIFFORD: And then in foreign affairs, of course we are working on the person-to-person program, and through working very definitely with CARE, we are giving service and self-help to 13 countries, especially in the Near and the Far East.

MURROW: Miss Gifford, I imagine it would be fair to say that most of your members in this country have never had a chance to visit your combined working and living headquarters.

GIFFORD: That's true, and I should love very much for them to catch a glimpse of their headquarters here in development and international understanding.

Now, in the field of community development, all of my clubs are working -- clubwomen, rather, are working very actively on the community level trying to make the community a better place in which to live, and working with them is the NUEA, which is the National University Extension Association, that is allied with all institutions of higher learning, and then, you know, Ed, we're putting on a contest, and the Sears-Roebuck Foundation is giving the prizes to this contest that will be over $100,000. That's worth working for, don't you think?

MURROW: It is, indeed.

GIFFORD: And then in foreign affairs, of course we are working on the person-to-person program, and through working very definitely with CARE, we are giving service and self-help to 13 countries, especially in the Near and the Far East.

MURROW: Miss Gifford, I imagine it would be fair to say that most of your members in this country have never had a chance to visit your combined working and living headquarters.

GIFFORD: That's true, and I should love very much for them to catch a glimpse of their headquarters here in Washington.

MURROW: Good.

GIFFORD: If you will join me, I should like to go downstairs and show you some of the headquarters.

MURROW: Tell me, did you bring many of your own things from Lexington?

GIFFORD: Very few because the president's apartment is perfectly furnished. Of course, you bring a few things along to make your surroundings appear homelike.

MURROW: What a lovely stairway.

GIFFORD: Isn't this a lovely stairway? I wish you'd spend two or three hours with me and I could show you all around. I'd love to take you out to the tearoom that's at the end of our driveway. Perhaps sometime you can come and have lunch or dinner with me out there.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

GIFFORD: I'd love to have you. And now, Mr. Murrow, I want you to look at this beautiful painting of Mt. McKinley.

MURROW: Yes?

GIFFORD: It was done by the great artist, Sidney Lawrence, and it was given to us by the Alaskan Federation of Women's Clubs.

Washington.

MURROW: Good.

GIFFORD: If you will join me, I should like to go downstairs and show you some of the headquarters.

MURROW: Tell me, did you bring many of your own things from Lexington?

GIFFORD: Very few because the president's apartment is perfectly furnished. Of course, you bring a few things along to make your surroundings appear homelike.

MURROW: What a lovely stairway.

GIFFORD: Isn't this a lovely stairway? I wish you'd spend two or three hours with me and I could show you all around. I'd love to take you out to the terrace that's at the end of our driveway. Perhaps sometime you can come and have lunch or dinner with me out there.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

GIFFORD: I'd love to have you. And now, Mr. Murrow, I want you to look at this beautiful painting of Mt. McKinley.

MURROW: Yes?

GIFFORD: It was done by the great artist, Sidney Lawrence, and it was given to us by the Alaskan Federation of Women's Clubs.

MURROW: One of your---

GIFFORD: And now, Mr. Murrow, I should love for you to meet my mother, who is living with me here in Washington. Mother, this is Mr. Murrow.

MRS. GIFFORD: I'm so happy to meet you, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: I'm honored to meet you, Mrs. Gifford. Mrs. Gifford, are you enjoying your visit to Washington?

MRS. GIFFORD: Oh, very much. Very much.

MURROW: Have you been as much of a joiner as your daughter?

MRS. GIFFORD: No, hardly. I've joined some clubs but most of my work has been with my church.

MURROW: President Gifford.

GIFFORD: Yes.

MURROW: We are constantly being reminded that women have tremendous influence in our social, economic and political life. How wisely do you think they're using this influence?

GIFFORD: Oh, Ed, I have implicit faith in the women. Where they have proper leadership I think they do a remarkable job, and of course you know women are very vocal, and, consequently, if they know what to do, they can do it

MURROW: One of your---

GIFFORD: And now, Mr. Murrow, I should love for you to meet my mother, who is living with me here in Washington. Mother, this is Mr. Murrow.

MRS. GIFFORD: I'm so happy to meet you, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: I'm honored to meet you, Mrs. Gifford. Mrs. Gifford, are you enjoying your visit to Washington?

MRS. GIFFORD: Oh, very much. Very much.

MURROW: Have you been as much of a joiner as your daughter?

MRS. GIFFORD: No, hardly. I've joined some clubs but most of my work has been with my church.

MURROW: President Gifford.

GIFFORD: Yes.

MURROW: We are constantly being reminded that women have tremendous influence in our social, economic and political life. How wisely do you think they're using this influence?

GIFFORD: Oh, Ed, I have implicit faith in the women. Where they have proper leadership I think they do a remarkable job, and of course you know women are very vocal, and, consequently, if they know what to do, they can do it beautifully when they are informed, and I believe that all women should be informed, and then when they're well qualified, to be participating citizens of this one world in which we are living.

MURROW: You think we need more "eggheads", male and female?

GIFFORD: Yes, indeed I do. I think it's a shame to hold down the "egghead" because, after all, when you think of this world in which we are living, we need more and more brains.

MURROW: Very well put, indeed. Tell me, do you conduct study groups in these quarters?

GIFFORD: Well, yes. Mother, you excuse me just a moment. I'll see you later.

MURROW: Good night, Mrs. Gifford.

GIFFORD: Mr. Murrow, we conduct some study groups, but not nearly so much as we do on the community level in the state groups.

MURROW: Yes.

GIFFORD: Now I'm taking you into our dining room. Here's where we entertain officially, and I hope you will notice some of the silver that's been given to us by the various state organizations. That lovely ladle there was used by Maxmillian, beautifully when they are informed, and I believe that all women should be informed, and then when they're well qualified, to be participating citizens of this one world in which we are living.

MURROW: You think we need more "egghead", male and female?

GIFFORD: Yes, indeed I do. I think it's a shame to hold down the "egghead" because, after all, when you think of this world in which we are living, we need more and more brains.

MURROW: Very well put, indeed. Tell me, do you conduct study groups in these quarters?

GIFFORD: Well, yes. Mother, you excuse me just a moment. I'll see you later.

MURROW: Good night, Mrs. Gifford.

GIFFORD: Mr. Murrow, we conduct some study groups, but not nearly so much as we do on the community level in the state groups.

MURROW: Yes.

GIFFORD: Now I'm taking you into our dining room. Here's where we entertain officially, and I hope you will notice some of the silver that's been given to us by the various state organizations. That lovely ladle there was used by Maximilian, and the Texas Federation had the punch bowl made to go with the ladle.

MURROW: Is the traffic pretty heavy in this room?

GIFFORD: Indeed it is. We do loads of official entertaining here, and if you'll come with me, I'll take you into the sun parlor. Here is where we sit have a cup of tea with our foreign delegates and our guests. It's informal here and we have many lovely visitors here. In fact, we have visitors every day of the year. And now we're entering the drawing room.

MURROW: Yes?

GIFFORD: This is where we do our official entertaining.

MURROW: It's a very impressive house. Miss Gifford, what's your major project at the moment?

GIFFORD: Well, my major project at the moment is one that I shall be very happy to talk to you about because this is Heart Month, Ed, you know---

MURROW: Yes.

GIFFORD: ---and I am tremendously interested, and have been since the inception, of Heart, and I'd like for you to see a portrait here of Mrs. Eisenhower crowning little Debbie Quinn, and it reads on there: "To Miss Gifford, with and the Texas Federation had the punch bowl made to go with the ladle.

MURROW: Is the traffic pretty heavy in this room?

GIFFORD: Indeed it is. We do loads of official entertaining here, and if you'll come with me, I'll take you into the sun parlor. Here is where we sit have a cup of tea with our foreign delegates and our guests. It's informal here and we have many lovely visitors here. In fact, we have visitors every day of the year. And now we're entering the drawing room.

MURROW: Yes?

GIFFORD: This is where we do our official entertaining.

MURROW: It's a very impressive house. Miss Gifford, what's your major project at the moment?

GIFFORD: Well, my major project at the moment is one that I shall be very happy to talk to you about because this is Heart Month, Ed, you know---

MURROW: Yes.

GIFFORD: ---and I am tremendously interested, and have been since the inceptiion, of Heart, and I'd like for you to see a portrait here of Mrs. Eisenhower crowning little Debbie Quinn, and it reads on there: "To Miss Gifford, with all my heart. Love, Debbie Quinn." And you know, Ed, that this is Heart Month, and on Sunday thousands upon thousands of volunteer workers will be ringing doorbells all over this vast country of ours, and I hope, and I know you join me in this, I hope that everyone will give generously to help this disease.

MURROW: I'll expect a doorbell to ring on Sunday, Chloe. I've been noticing that medal you're wearing.

GIFFORD: Oh, this is the president's pin of the General Federation. You see, this is the international bar.

MURROW: Yes?

GIFFORD: You remember that we have clubs in 50 countries of the world outside the United States, and this pin a president may wear as long as she's president. You know, nothing is as dead as a past General Federation president, Ed, and this pin causes great comment, because when I get on an airplane, or go into a hotel, people invariably say, "What is the pin?" Is it a country decoration? A government decoration?" Well, I think the most amusing incident that I have ever had was when I was in Lisbon in October. I went up on the elevator for breakfast up on the 14th floor---

MURROW: Yes?

GIFFORD: ---one morning, and this little boy about 14 years of age kept staring at me, and staring, and I couldn't all my heart. Love, Debbie Quinn." And you know, Ed, that this is Heart Month, and on Sunday thousands upon thousands of volunteer workers will be ringing doorbells all over this vast country of ours, and I hope, and I know you join me in this, I hope that everyone will give generously to help this disease.

MURROW: I'll expect a doorbell to ring on Sunday, Chloe. I've been noticing that medal you're wearing.

GIFFORD: Oh, this is the president's pin of the General Federation. You see, this is the international bar.

MURROW: Yes?

GIFFORD: You remember that we have clubs in 50 countries of the world outside the United States, and this pin a president may wear as long as she's president. You know, nothing is as dead as a past General Federation president, Ed, and this pin causes great comment, because when I get on an airplane, or go into a hotel, people invariably say, "What is the pin?" Is it a country decoration? A government decoration?" Well, I think the most amusing incident that I have ever had was when I was in Lisbon in October. I went up on the elevator for breakfast up on the 14th floor---

MURROW: Yes?

GIFFORD: ---one morning, and this little boy about 14 years of age kept staring at me, and staring, and I couldn't get him to talk with me at all, and a few minutes later a man who was on the trip with me came in, and he said, "Oh, here you are." He said, "When I got on the elevator, the young boy said, 'Please, what does the lady general command?'" And of course he had to say, "Just 11 million women."

MURROW: Well, you're also a Kentucky Colonel, aren't you?

GIFFORD: Oh, indeed I am.

MURROW: Chloe, with all the traveling and entertaining you do, is your wardrobe a big problem?

GIFFORD: Oh, my wardrobe. Heavens, no, I'm not a bit clothes conscious, Ed. I shop twice a year and that's it. But that brings to mind a very interesting story. I happened to be in the State of Indiana, and I was there to speak, and I always get in in time to eat. You can tell that by looking at me, and here we were having lunch, and, of course, the store thought it was a grand time to put on a style show, and all these dear little manikins wearing sizes 8, 9, 10, 11's and 12's, and there wasn't a single woman in the room that could have gotten her hipline in anything that was being shown. All of a sudden I was called to the telephone, and it meant that I had to walk the full length of the room to get out, and all of a sudden I saw two fat sisters just about my size, eat-get him to talk with me at all, and a few minutes later a man who was on the trip with me came in, and he said, "Oh, here you are." He said, "When I got on the elevator, the young boy said, 'Please, what does the lady general command?'" And of course he had to say, "Just 11 million women."

MURROW: Well, you're also a Kentucky Colonel, aren't you?

GIFFORD: Oh, indeed I am.

MURROW: Chloe, with all the traveling and entertaining you do, is your wardrobe a big problem?

GIFFORD: Oh, my wardrobe. Heavens, no, I'm not a bit clothes conscious, No. I shop twice a year and that's it. But that brings to mind a very interesting story. I happened to be in the State of Indiana, and I was there to speak, and I always get in in time to eat. You can tell that by looking at me, and here we were having lunch, and, of course, the store thought it was a grand time to put on a style show, and all these dear little manikins wearing sizes 8, 9, 10, 11's and 12's, and there wasn't a single woman in the room that could have gotten her hipline in anything that was being shown. All of a sudden I was called to the telephone, and it meant that I had to walk the full length of the room to get out, and all of a sudden I saw two fat sisters just about my size, eating twice as much food as they should have been consuming. One had a big bite of lemon chiffon pie enroute to her mouth the moment she spied me. Then she said, "There comes something I could wear." And by that time she said to me, "How much is that dress you're wearing?" And so I awkwardly pivoted and said, "$98.95," and kept on walking. I often wondered, Ed, what she thought when I got up to speak that afternoon.

MURROW: Chloe, have you found being single to be an advantage or a disadvantage in your work?

GIFFORD: Oh, I think it's a lot of fun because I'm the first old maid that's ever been president of the General Federation, and I like to boast of it, and maybe the first professional woman.

MURROW: Does this cause some members of the clubs to doubt your wisdom in matters of, say, family life?

GIFFORD: Oh, I don't know, but I do know one thing. You never saw an old maid in your life that couldn't tell you how to hold your husband and rear your children.

MURROW: Chloe Gifford, thank you very much.

GIFFORD: Thank you, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: It has been a very pleasant visit, indeed, and would you say good night to your mother for us?

ing twice as much food as they should have been consuming. One had a big bite of lemon chiffon pie enroute to her mouth the moment she spied me. Then she said, "There comes something I could wear." And by that time she said to me, "How much is that dress you're wearing?" And so I awkwardly pivoted and said, "$98.95," and kept on walking. I often wondered, Ed, what she thought when I got up to speak that afternoon.

MURROW: Chloe, have you found being single to be an advantage or a disadvantage in your work?

GIFFORD: Oh, I think it's a lot of fun because I'm the first old maid that's ever been president of the General Federation, and I like to boast of it, and maybe the first professional woman.

MURROW: Does this cause some members of the clubs to doubt your wisdom in matters of, say, family life?

GIFFORD: Oh, I don't know, but I do know one thing. You never saw an old maid in your life that couldn't tell you how to hold your husband and rear your children.

MURROW: Chloe Gifford, thank you very much.

GIFFORD: Thank you, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: It has been a very pleasant visit, indeed, and would you say good night to your mother for us?

GIFFORD: Indeed I will. Thank you so much.

MURROW: Thank you. Good night.

GIFFORD: Good night.

MURROW: I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to Scarsdale, New York for a visit with Dr. and Mrs. Howard A. Rusk. Dr. Rusk is one of the country's foremost authorities on physical rehabilitation, having served in this capacity with the Army Air Force during World War II.

Next week we'll also be visiting with Jack Wrather and his wife, actress Bonita Granville. Mr. Wrather is a man with many varied interests ranging all the way from the Disneyland Hotel and Texas oil to such television properties as "Lassie" and "The Lone Ranger".

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

GIFFORD: Indeed I will. Thank you so much.

MURROW: Thank you. Good night.

GIFFORD: Good night.

MURROW: I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to Scarsdale, New York for a visit with Dr. and Mrs. Howard A. Rusk. Dr. Rusk is one of the country's foremost authorities on physical rehabilitation, having served in this capacity with the Army Air Force during World War II.

Next week we'll also be visiting with Jack Wrather and his wife, actress Bonita Granville. Mr. Wrather is a man with many varied interests ranging all the way from the Dallas-Cleveland Hotel and Texas oil to such television properties as "Lassie" and "The Lone Ranger".

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Dr. Howard A. Rusk, and family,

and, Jack D. Wrather and Bonita Granville.

February 27, 1959 10:30 PM EST.

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with Industrialist Jack Wrather and his wife actress Bonita Granville. We'll also be calling on one of the country's outstanding authorities on physical rehabilitation, Dr. Howard Rusk and hiw wife in Scarsdale, New York.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Revlon.

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Dr. Howard A. Rusk, and family,

and, Jack D. Wrather and Bonita Granville.

February 27, 1959 10:30 PM EST.

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with Industrialist Jack Wrather and his wife actress Bonita Granville. We'll also be calling on one of the country's outstanding authorities on physical rehabilitation, Dr. Howard Rusk and his wife in Scarsdale, New York.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Revlon.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Jack Wrather is the son of one of the pioneers in the oil industry. Jack graduated from the University of Texas, went into the oil fields and then after four years with the Marines during World War II decided to sort of spread out into other industries. He started making motion pictures, tried his hand at real estate, hotels, and he bought and operated a few radio and television stations. Today Mr. Wrather is president of a large organization with varied differences, including Muzak, Lassie, The Lone Ranger, and a corporation which produces and distributes twenty-four television film series. Twelve years ago Jack married actress Bonita Granville who has appeared in fifty-four movies in twenty-six years and still works in Hollywood and on television.

The Wrathers have a home in California and they own an apartment in New York at the Hotel Pierre. Good evening, Bonita.

GRANVILLE: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Good evening, Jack.

WRATHER: Good evening, Ed.

GRANVILLE: Ed, I would like you to meet our youngsters. This is Linda.

LINDA: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Jack Wrather is the son of one of the pioneers in the oil industry. Jack graduated from the University of Texas, went into the oil fields and then after four years with the Marines during World War II decided to sort of spread out into other industries. He started making motion pictures, tried his hand at real estate, hotels, and he bought and operated a few radio and television stations. Today Mr. Wrather is president of a large organization with varied differences, including Muzak, Lassie, The Lone Ranger, and a corporation which produces and distributes twenty-four television film series. Twelve years ago Jack married actress Bonita Granville who has appeared in fifty-four movies in twenty-six years and still works in Hollywood and on television.

The Wrathers have a home in California and they own an apartment in New York at the Hotel Pierre. Good evening, Bonita.

GRANVILLE: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Good evening, Jack.

WRATHER: Good evening, Ed.

GRANVILLE: Ed, I would like you to meet our youngsters. This is Linda.

LINDA: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Linda.

GRANVILLE. And this is Christopher.

CHRIS: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How are you, Chris?

CHRIS: Fine.

MURROW: Good. Bonita, after the warmth of the wide open spaces in California, how does the family like New York?

GRANVILLE: Oh, we all love New York, Ed. As a matter of fact we put Linda and Chris in a professional children's school here and plan to do so every year for a couple of months during the wintertime. One of the things we love about New York is the climate. We adore the cold and Linda and Chris can't wait for it to snow.

MURROW: And they like skating too, I imagine.

WRATHER: They are ice skaters, Ed. We look out of our window here on Central Park where they go every day.

MURROW: Now, Chris, who is the best skater in the family.

CHRIS: Daddy is, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Is he?

GRANVILLE: You can see how he rates.

MURROW: Jack, you are a very fortunate father,

MURROW: Good evening, Linda.

GRANVILLE. And this is Christopher.

CHRIS: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How are you, Chris?

CHRIS: Fine.

MURROW: Good. Bonita, after the warmth of the wide open spaces in California, how does the family like New York?

GRANVILLE: Oh, we all love New York, Ed. As a matter of fact we put Linda and Chris in a professional children's school here and plan to do so every year for a couple of months during the wintertime. One of the things we love about New York is the climate. We adore the cold and Linda and Chris can't wait for it to snow.

MURROW: And they like skating too, I imagine.

WRATHER: They are ice skaters, Ed. We look out of our window here on Central Park where they go every day.

MURROW: Now, Chris, who is the best skater in the family.

CHRIS: Daddy is, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Is he?

GRANVILLE: You can see how he rates.

MURROW: Jack, you are a very fortunate father, being able to move your family to New York when business demands that you spend some time here.

WRATHER: Well, I am fortunate in that regard, Ed, but I think the more fortunate in the fact that all of my businesses seem to give pleasure to my family. We participate in all of them. In fact each child has his own particular favorite.

MURROW: Now, Linda, what is your pet project in your father's vast projects?

LINDA: Disneyland, Mr. Murrow. It is terrific.

MURROW: It is?

LINDA: Oh, yes.

MURROW: I have heard that; I have never seen it. Chris, what is your favorite?

CHRIS: Horizon in Palm Springs, Mr. Murrow.

GRANVILLE. That's another hotel, Ed - Horizon and Disneyland are both hotels that Jack has brought up from scratch.

MURROW: What do you like about that particular hotel, Chris?

CHRIS: Well, I get to roam around in the desert.

MURROW: Oh, that's fine. Bonita, how do you participate in Jack's business activities?

being able to move your family to New York when business demands that you spend some time here.

WRATHER: Well, I am fortunate in that regard, Ed, but I think the more fortunate is the fact that all of my businesses seem to give pleasure to my family. We participate in all of them. In fact each child has his own particular favorite.

MURROW: Now, Linda, what is your pet project in your father's vast projects?

LINDA: Disneyland, Mr. Murrow. It is terrific.

MURROW: It is?

LINDA: Oh, yes.

MURROW: I have heard that; I have never seen it. Chris, what is your favorite?

CHRIS: Horizon in Palm Springs, Mr. Murrow.

GRANVILLE: That's another hotel, Ed - Horizon and Disneyland are both hotels that Jack has brought up from scratch.

MURROW: What do you like about that particular hotel, Chris?

CHRIS: Well, I get to roam around in the desert.

MURROW: Oh, that's fine. Bonita, how do you participate in Jack's business activities?

GRANVILLE: Well, Ed, I am vitally interested, of course, in all of them but to be specific I supervised all the interior decoration of the Disneyland Hotel and at the present time I'm Associate Producer on the Lassie television series and incidentally, Linda, our little girl, plays a running part in Lassie. The whole family gets in the act, but you know, Ed, my real special favorite for just pure enjoyment and pleasure is, I believe, Muzak. You know we have it in all of our offices, of course, but we also have it in our New York apartment and our home in California and it is so wonderful to wake up in the morning bright and cheerful to music by Muzak.

MURROW: Jack, it seems to me with all the help you get from your own family, the executives of your various companies must have a real easy job.

WRATHER: I can imagine them sitting at home chewing their nails and grinding their teeth at that.

MURROW: Linda, a friend of yours told me that you are a good piano player. Is that right?

LINDA: That friend of yours must be Mommie.

MURROW: You're quite right. Will you play something for us tonight?

LINDA: Yes.

GRANVILLE: Well, Ed, I am vitally interested, of course, in all of them but to be specific I supervised all the interior decoration of the Disneyland Hotel and at the present time I'm Associate Producer on the Lassie television series and incidentally, Linda, our little girl, plays a running part in Lassie. The whole family gets in the act, but you know, Ed, my real special favorite for just pure enjoyment and pleasure is, I believe, Muzak. You know we have it in all of our offices, of course, but we also have it in our New York apartment and our home in California and it is so wonderful to wake up in the morning bright and cheerful to music by Muzak.

MURROW: Jack, it seems to me with all the help you get from your own family, the executives of your various companies must have a real easy job.

WRATHER: I can imagine them sitting at home chewing their nails and grinding their teeth at that.

MURROW: Linda, a friend of yours told me that you are a good piano player. Is that right?

LINDA: That friend of yours must be Mommie.

MURROW: You're quite right. Will you play something for us tonight?

LINDA: Yes.

MURROW: Good.

GRANVILLE: Okay, here we go. Linda, how about "Tea for Two?" We have it practiced.

LINDA: Yes.

[Linda plays]

GRANVILLE: Good girl.

MURROW: Very nice. Thank you, Linda. Could we ask for an encore?

CHRIS: Linda, how about playing St. Louis Blues?

MURROW: Oh, good.

[Linda plays]

GRANVILLE: I think you have stolen enough of the lime light about now.

MURROW: Oh, very nice.

GRANVILLE: It's bedtime too. Say good night to Mr. Murrow.

LINDA: Good night, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good night, Linda. Thank you very much. Good night, Chris.

CHRIS: Good night, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good night.

Jack, where are your older children tonight?

MURROW: Good.

GRANVILLE: Okay, here we go. Linda, how about "Tea for Two?" We have it practiced.

LINDA: Yes.

[Linda plays]

GRANVILLE: Good girl.

MURROW: Very nice. Thank you, Linda. Could we ask for an encore?

CHRIS: Linda, how about playing St. Louis Blues?

MURROW: Oh, good.

[Linda plays]

GRANVILLE: I think you have stolen enough of the time light about now.

MURROW: Oh, very nice.

GRANVILLE: It's bedtime too. Say good night to Mr. Murrow.

LINDA: Good night, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good night, Linda. Thank you very much. Good night, Chris.

CHRIS: Good night, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good night.

Jack, where are your older children tonight?

WRATHER: Well, I can show you pictures of them, Ed. I have them here. This is my son Jack who is fourteen. He is at Brooks School in Andover, Massachusetts.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

WRATHER: This is my daughter Mollie, sixteen years old. She goes to school at Westlake, a school for girls in Los Angeles. We are very sorry, incidentally, they can't be here with us.

MURROW: I'm sorry too. Jack, tell me this. When you come to live in New York, is it just to check on your organization, or do you keep regular office hours?

WRATHER: Well, Ed, this is one of my headquarters; the other two are Dallas, Texas and Los Angeles and actually I don't keep working hours regularly any place. This is my office in the apartment here and I get away from the hustle and bustle of down town by working and planning in this office whenever I can.

MURROW: How do you manage to keep track of all your businesses?

WRATHER: Well, that is a good question, actually. All of these businesses, The Lone Ranger, Lassie, the oil, the hotels, the TV distribution and programming, etcetera, have management of their own, all independent, operated WRATHER: Well, I can show you pictures of them, Ed. I have them here. This is my son Jack who is fourteen. He is at Brooks School in Andover, Massachusetts.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

WRATHER: This is my daughter Molly, sixteen years old. She goes to school at Westlake, a school for girls in Los Angeles. We are very sorry, incidentally, they can't be here with us.

MURROW: I'm sorry too. Jack, tell me this. When you come to live in New York, is it just to check on your organization, or do you keep regular office hours?

WRATHER: Well, Ed, this is one of my headquarters; the other two are Dallas, Texas and Los Angeles and actually I don't keep working hours regularly any place. This is my office in the apartment here and I get away from the hustle and bustle of down town by working and planning in this office whenever I can.

MURROW: How do you manage to keep track of all your businesses?

WRATHER: Well, that is a good question, actually. All of these businesses, The Lone Ranger, Lassie, the oil, the hotels, the TV distribution and programming, etcetera, have management of their own, all independent, operated independently. The executives of my organization - the Jack Wrather organization - coordinate and supervise these businesses and I, personally, have the responsibility for planning the expansion of the oil enterprise.

MURROW: How much of your time do you spend in production of your films?

WRATHER: Well, not too much, Ed. I might say that happens to be sort of my pet. I started in production and actually it is sort of a pet hobby of mine, you might say. My organization thinks I spend about three times too much time there.

MURROW: Bonita, even with a home on each coast it must be difficult keeping up with Jack, isn't it?

GRANVILLE: Oh, no, it is not difficult, it's impossible. As a matter of fact I have learned to live in a suit case and love it.

MURROW: Jack, with your pre-war background in the oil fields, a rough-neck on drilling rigs, pipe line walker, a wild catter, how did you find your way into this jungle of films and television?

WRATHER: Well, Ed, like so many young men, when I came out of the war in 1946 I was ripe for a change and I had always been fascinated by the motion picture business. I independently. The executives of my organization - the Jack Wrather organization - coordinate and supervise these businesses and I, personally, have the responsibility for planning the expansion of the oil enterprise.

MURROW: How much of your time do you spend in production of your films?

WRATHER: Well, not too much, Ed. I might say that happens to be sort of my pet. I started in production and actually it is sort of a pet hobby of mine, you might say. My organization thinks I spend about three times too much time there.

MURROW: Bonita, even with a home on each coast it must be difficult keeping up with Jack, isn't it?

GRANVILLE: Oh, no, it is not difficult, it's impossible. As a matter of fact I have learned to live in a suit case and love it.

MURROW: Jack, with your pre-war background in the oil fields, a rough-neck on drilling rigs, pipe line walker, a wild cutter, how did you find your way into this jungle of films and television?

WRATHER: Well, Ed, like so many young men, when I came out of the war in 1946 I was ripe for a change and I had always been fascinated by the motion picture business. I moved to Hollywood to try my hand at it and while in production out there in some films I met the lovely young lady whom I married - my wife Bonnie - on a blind date, incidentally, and we were married and that's about it.

MURROW: Jack, sometime ago we asked you if you could arrange to have a picture made of the wall in your California home, the one that had the complete picture story of Bonita's movie career. Did you do it?

WRATHER: Yes, certainly I did, Ed. In fact that is the gallery where we have the stills from Bonnie's fifty-four movies and I have several of them in the lounge and I'll show them to you. I will let Bonnie do so.

GRANVILLE: Ed, I am always embarrassed by this because when I tell anyone that I have been in motion pictures twenty-six years, they look at me as if I must be ancient. As you can see from this picture here with William Farnum, I was only six years old when I started to work. The next one is from "These Three" and I was about eleven here, starring Merle Oberon and Miriam Hopkins.

MURROW: Yes.

GRANVILLE: And you may remember from the famous Broadway play, "The Children's Hour" I played a rather sinister, evil little brat.

moved to Hollywood to try my hand at it and while in production out there in some films I met the lovely young lady whom I married - my wife Bonnie - on a blind date, incidentally, and we were married and that's about it.

MURROW: Jack, sometime ago we asked you if you could arrange to have a picture made of the wall in your California home, the one that had the complete picture story of Bonita's movie career. Did you do it?

WRATHER: Yes, certainly I did, Ed. In fact that is the gallery where we have the stills from Bonnie's fifty-four movies and I have several of them in the lounge and I'll show them to you. I will let Bonnie do so.

GRANVILLE: Ed, I am always embarrassed by this because when I tell anyone that I have been in motion pictures twenty-six years, they look at me as if I must be ancient. As you can see from the picture here with William Farnum, I was only six years old when I started to work. The next one is from "These Three" and I was about eleven here, starring Merle Oberon and Miriam Hopkins.

MURROW: Yes.

GRANVILLE: And you may remember from the famous Broadway play, "The Children's Hour" I played a rather sinister, evil little brat.

MURROW: I do indeed.

WRATHER: In fact for her performance, Ed, in that she was nominated for the Academy award.

MURROW: Yes.

GRANVILLE: The next one, oh, is our children's favorite. I played Nancy Drew, detective, in the "Nancy Drew series." It was a series of books for girls and all the girls still read them - the Nancy Drew stories. The next, "Hitler's Children" a kind of sensational picture during the war years. I was pretty well grown up here and the last, of course, you recognize Micky Rooney as Andy Hardy. I did several of the Andy Hardy pictures too.

MURROW: Yes.

GRANVILLE: That about does it.

MURROW: And which was your first picture?

GRANVILLE: My very first picture, Ed, was a picture called "Hollywood Kids." An interesting anecdote about that: In the picture I was six years old and my mother was a woman, a character actress, named Florence Lake.

MURROW: Yes.

GRANVILLE: Some twenty-five years later I was taking little Linda on the set also age six to do her first part in a film television show and who should be playing her

MURROW: I do indeed.

WRATHER: In fact for her performance, Ed, in that she was nominated for the Academy award.

MURROW: Yes.

GRANVILLE: The next one, oh, is our children's favorite. I played Nancy Drew, detective, in the "Nancy Drew series." It was a series of books for girls and all the girls still read them - the Nancy Drew stories. The next, "Hitler's Children" a kind of sensational picture during the war years. I was pretty well grown up here and the last, of course, you recognize Micky Rooney as Andy Hardy. I did several of the Andy Hardy pictures too.

MURROW: Yes.

GRANVILLE: That about does it.

MURROW: And which was your first picture?

GRANVILLE: My very first picture, Ed, was a picture called "Hollywood Kids." An interesting anecdote about that: In the picture I was six years old and my mother was a woman, a character actress, named Florence Lake.

MURROW: Yes.

GRANVILLE: Some twenty-five years later I was taking little Linda on the set also age six to do her first part in a film television show and who should be playing her mother, twenty-five years later, but Florence Lake.

WRATHER: A coincidence.

MURROW: Jack, I have been reading in the trade press where your organization has been buying up and developing film property. What about the future? What do you and your boys plan to develop, oh, say, five or ten years from now?

WRATHER: Ed, that is a long time in the distance and I really don't know the answer to that. I wish I did. I can say productionwise we are in the entertainment business and the key word is quality and we are just going to try to make the best entertainment film that we can.

MURROW: Are you interested only in the entertainment films or are you perhaps thinking of doing documentaries or even live television?

WRATHER: I think for the nonce we will leave the documentary to the experts such as yourself and as far as I was concerned I have no plans for that.

MURROW: Well, I know that you are now operating in England, aren't you?

WRATHER: Yes, we are.

MURROW: Do you have an active interest in television all over the world or only just here and in England?

mother, twenty-five years later, but Florence Lake.

WRATHER: A coincidence.

MURROW: Jack, I have been reading in the trade press where your organization has been buying up and developing film property. What about the future? What do you and your boys plan to develop, oh, say, five or ten years from now?

WRATHER: Ed, that is a long time in the distance and I really don't know the answer to that. I wish I did. I can say productionwise we are in the entertainment business and the key word is quality and we are just going to try to make the best entertainment film that we can.

MURROW: Are you interested only in the entertainment films or are you perhaps thinking of doing documentaries or even live television?

WRATHER: I think for the nonce we will leave the documentary to the experts such as yourself and as far as I was concerned I have no plans for that.

MURROW: Well, I know that you are now operating in England, aren't you?

WRATHER: Yes, we are.

MURROW: Do you have an active interest in television all over the world or only just here and in England?

WRATHER: We are rather an international concern, Ed. In fact I suppose we are the first truly international concern. Our partners, an independent television corporation, are the associated television people in London, England and they are about the biggest television people outside of the United States and through them we participate in broadcasting, you might say, world-wide.

MURROW: Well, Bonita, Jack, thank you very much for letting us come. Will you say good night to Linda and Chris?

WRATHER: Sure will.

GRANVILLE: Yes.

MURROW: Thank you a lot.

GRANVILLE: Thanks very much, Ed.

MURROW: Somebody will be around to sign Linda up pretty soon I think.

GRANVILLE: I certainly hope so. I have always wanted her to play the piano.

MURROW: She was wonderful. Thank you again.

GRANVILLE: Good night.

WRATHER: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: In just a moment we will take you for a visit with Dr. and Mrs. Rusk and here again, speaking for Revlon is Barbara Britton.

WRATHER: We are rather an international concern, Ed. In fact I suppose we are the first truly international concern. Our partners, an independent television corporation, are the associated television people in London, England and they are about the biggest television people outside of the United States and through them we participate in broadcasting, you might say, world-wide.

MURROW: Well, Bonita, Jack, thank you very much for letting us come. Will you say good night to Linda and Chris?

WRATHER: Sure will.

GRANVILLE: Yes.

MURROW: Thank you a lot.

GRANVILLE: Thanks very much, Ed.

MURROW: Somebody will be around to sign Linda up pretty soon I think.

GRANVILLE: I certainly hope so. I have always wanted her to play the piano.

MURROW: She was wonderful. Thank you again.

GRANVILLE: Good night.

WRATHER: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: In just a moment we will take you for a visit with Dr. and Mrs. Rusk and here again, speaking for Revlon is Barbara Britton.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Dr. Howard A. Rusk is known to many survivors of the Korean fighting as Dr. Live-Again - the name the Koreans affectionately gave him for his help in rehabilitating thousands who were handicapped in the course of that war. Dr. Rusk's efforts in the same field while serving with the United States Army Air Force in World War II have also not gone unnoticed. And, now, as a director of the Institute of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation at the New York University Bellevue Center, Dr. Rusk, at the age of fifty-eight, is still devoting all of his time and energy to the many problems of health and welfare, not only in this country but throughout the world.

Dr. and Mrs. Rusk live in this house on a quiet street in Scarsdale, New York, a surburb some thirty miles North of Manhattan. Good evening, Dr. Rusk.

DR. RUSK: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: We have been looking forward to this visit for a long time.

RUSK: So have we. It is nice to have you here in our house.

MURROW: It is a rather unusual occasion for you, isn't it? The luxury of spending a quiet evening at home?

[Commercial]

MURROW: Dr. Howard A. Rusk is known to many survivors of the Korean fighting as Dr. Live-Again - the name the Koreans affectionately gave him for his help in rehabilitating thousands who were handicapped in the course of that war. Dr. Rusk's efforts in the same field while serving with the United States Army Air Force in World War II have also not gone unnoticed. And, now, as a director of the Institute of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation at the New York University Bellevue Center, Dr. Rusk, at the age of fifty-eight, is still devoting all of his time and energy to the many problems of health and welfare, not only in this country but throughout the world.

Dr. and Mrs. Rusk live in this house on a quiet street in Scarsdale, New York, a surburb some thirty miles North of Manhattan. Good evening, Dr. Rusk.

DR. RUSK: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: We have been looking forward to this visit for a long time.

RUSK: So have we. It is nice to have you here in our house.

MURROW: It is a rather unusual occasion for you, isn't it? The luxury of spending a quiet evening at home?

RUSK: It is wonderful to have an evening at home. It isn't too quiet but it is lots of fun.

MURROW: Dr. Rusk, of your many activities, which is occupying most of your time at the moment?

RUSK: Well, I have been in Washington this week, a good part of the time on the new health for peace program; a bill has been introduced into the Congress by Lister Hill. It would set up a new institute for international research that would be an all out attack on cancer and heart disease and the other scourges of mankind, joining hands with all nations, all over the world, in this war that we can all fight together on.

MURROW: Well, from time to time you have remarked that health and medicine constitute a common world language. Is this sort of an expansion of that idea?

RUSK: Yes, it always has been. Ehrlich [?] said it fifty years ago when he said, "Medicine has never known an international boundary." Our knowledge of microorganisms came from Holland, bacteriology from England, immunology with smallpox vaccination from England, Penicillin from England, sulfonamides from Germany, Cortizone from the United States, Insulin from Canada, and anesthesia from our own country and now after four hundred years of lying dormant, rawalfia from RUSK: It is wonderful to have an evening at home. It isn't too quiet but it is lots of fun.

MURROW: Dr. Rusk, of your many activities, which is occupying most of your time at the moment?

RUSK: Well, I have been in Washington this week, a good part of the time on the new health for peace program; a bill has been introduced into the Congress by Lister Hill. It would set up a new institute for international research that would be an all out attack on cancer and heart disease and the other scourges of mankind, joining hands with all nations, all over the world, in this war that we can all fight together on.

MURROW: Well, from time to time you have remarked that health and medicine constitute a common world language. Is this sort of an expansion of that idea?

RUSK: Yes, it always has been. Ehrlich said [?] it fifty years ago when he said, "Medicine has never known an international boundary." Our knowledge of microorganisms came from Holland, bacteriology from England, immunology with smallpox vaccination from England, Penicillin from England, sulfonamides from Germany, Cortizone from the United States, Insulin from Canada, and anesthesia from our own country and now after four hundred years of lying dormant, rawalfia from India, that is our best weapon against high blood pressure and certain types of mental disease; it is truly international.

MURROW: And I suppose, Howard, this international character is reflected in the Institute of Physical Rehabilitation right here in New York, isn't it?

RUSK: Well, I say we have a little United Nations. We are right down the street from them. We have trained more than three hundred doctors and we have seventy from thirty-two countries in training as of tonight. They like to leave us something at the Institute so we have set up an international doll collection. This young lady comes from Poland in her party dress.

MURROW: Yes.

RUSK: These two dolls came just last month from out of Hungary. I don't know how they got out - from the mother of one of our doctors. She is Siamese. We have a team of four in Thailand we trained and now have a center there and, of course, these three are from Korea which has a very soft spot in our hearts.

MURROW: I know it has. I imagine many of your patients also make a point of keeping in touch with you even after they are dismissed.

RUSK: They do. There are so many things that

India, that is our best weapon against high blood pressure and certain types of mental disease; it is truly international.

MURROW: And I suppose, Howard, this international character is reflected in the Institute of Physical Rehabilitation right here in New York, isn't it?

RUSK: Well, I say we have a little United Nations. We are right down the street from them. We have trained more than three hundred doctors and we have seventy from thirty-two countries in training as of tonight. They like to leave us something at the Institute so we have set up an international doll collection. This young lady comes from Poland in her party dress.

MURROW: Yes.

RUSK: These two dolls came just last month from out of Hungary. I don't know how they got out - from the mother of one of our doctors. She is Siamese. We have a team of four in Thailand we trained and now have a center there and, of course, these three are from Korea which has a very soft spot in our hearts.

MURROW: I know it has. I imagine many of your patients also make a point of keeping in touch with you even after they are dismissed.

RUSK: They do. There are so many things that are rewarding in this program as the Lasker [?] awards and the Chris [?] awards but the things that come from patients are really the things that mean the most. This painting was done by a boy paralyzed from his chest down, nothing in his hands to function but with a brush around his elbow, fastened here, he did this oil. He learned it all while he was a patient. He lives now in Florida and makes his living painting. We have one rule at the Institute that no one can tell a patient what they can't do and this is good evidence of how it works.

MURROW: It certainly is. Dr. Rusk, I suppose your work has taken you to just about every country in the world, hasn't it?

RUSK: Yes, including the Soviet Union. We have been all over the world.

MURROW: What about your wife, does Mrs. Rusk do much traveling with you?

RUSK: Absolutely she has been every place except the Soviet Union.

MRS. RUSK: Good evening, Ed.

RUSK: Ed, this is my mother.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Rusk.

RUSK: Who was eighty-seven last week.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Rusk.

are rewarding in this program as the Lasker awards and the Chris awards but the things that come from patients are really the things that mean the most. This painting was done by a boy paralyzed from his chest down, nothing in his hands to function but with a brush around his elbow, fastened here, he did this oil. He learned it all while he was a patient. He lives now in Florida and makes his living painting. We have one rule at the Institute that no one can tell a patient what they can't do and this is good evidence of how it works.

MURROW: It certainly is. Dr. Rusk, I suppose your work has taken you to just about every country in the world, hasn't it?

RUSK: Yes, including the Soviet Union. We have been all over the world.

MURROW: What about your wife, does Mrs. Rusk do much traveling with you?

RUSK: Absolutely she has been every place except the Soviet Union.

MRS. RUSK: Good evening, Ed.

RUSK: Ed, this is my mother.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Rusk.

RUSK: Who was eighty-seven last week.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Rusk.

RUSK: Don't get up.

MURROW: Mrs. Rusk, you must be very proud of your son.

MRS. RUSK, SR: What?

MURROW: You must be very proud of your son, Mrs. Rusk.

MRS. RUSK, SR: I do love my son and I do feel happy that he has the kind of work that he wants because that was always what he wanted to do, just what he is doing now.

MURROW: And I am sure you must be equally proud of your grandchildren, aren't you?

MRS. RUSK, SR: Yes, I am proud of my grandchildren. I have four.

MRS. RUSK: Ed, we would like you to meet our children. I am sorry they couldn't be here tonight. This is Martha, who has Susie and Lucy and live in New York and that is John who lives in Philadelphia, goes to medical school.

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. RUSK: And Howard, Jr. and his Laura who live in New York and works for the Children's Village out here in Westchester.

MURROW: Mrs. Rusk, of the many countries you

RUSK: Don't get up.

MURROW: Mrs. Rusk, you must be very proud of your son.

MRS. RUSK, SR: What?

MURROW: You must be very proud of your son, Mrs. Rusk.

MRS. RUSK, SR: I do love my son and I do feel happy that he has the kind of work that he wants because that was always what he wanted to do, just what he is doing now.

MURROW: And I am sure you must be equally proud of your grandchildren, aren't you?

MRS. RUSK, SR: Yes, I am proud of my grandchildren. I have four.

MRS. RUSK: Ed, we would like you to meet our children. I am sorry they couldn't be here tonight. This is Martha, who has Susie and Lucy and live in New York and that is John who lives in Philadelphia, goes to medical school.

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. RUSK: And Howard, Jr. and his Laura who live in New York and works for the Children's Village out here in Westchester.

MURROW: Mrs. Rusk, of the many countries you have visited with your husband, which did you find the most interesting?

MRS. RUSK: Well, they are all interesting, Ed, but I must say I loved Korea the most. You know that is our beach head half way across the world for all democracy and they say if you go once to Korea you never leave.

RUSK: We found that out. You have been three times and I have been four.

MURROW: Oh, yes, I think every one who has gone there feels the same way. Dr. Rusk, that mural behind you, did you bring that back from one of your Korean trips?

RUSK: Well, really it isn't a mural. It is a screen and it was a present that the President and Mrs. Rhee brought us when they were here in 1954.

Mother, I think you have been up long enough. You are far beyond your bedtime and you stayed up this late to see Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good night, Mrs. Rusk. Good night.

RUSK: This came, as I said, in 1954 and I can hear the President now saying, "Peace, Peace! I am sick of the word 'peace' - I want to hear more about justice. If you have justice then peace will come" and as he said it he blew on his fingers because as you remember he had the bamboo have visited with your husband, which did you find the most interesting?

MRS. RUSK: Well, they are all interesting, Ed, but I must say I loved Korea the most. You know that is our beach head half way across the world for all democracy and they say if you go once to Korea you never leave.

RUSK: We found that out. You have been three times and I have been four.

MURROW: Oh, yes, I think every one who has gone there feels the same way. Dr. Rusk, that mural behind you, did you bring that back from one of your Korean trips?

RUSK: Well, really it isn't a mural. It is a screen and it was a present that the President and Mrs. Rhee brought us when they were here in 1954.

Mother, I think you have been up long enough. You are far beyond your bedtime and you stayed up this late to see Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good night, Mrs. Rusk. Good night.

RUSK: This came, as I said, in 1954 and I can hear the President now saying, "Peace, Peace! I am sick of the word 'peace' - I want to hear more about justice. If you have justice then peace will come" and as he said it he blew on his fingers because as you remember he had the bamboo driven under them many times; that it has become a reflex with him.

Ed, this house is a strange old house. With the children it sort of expands, children and grandchildren and a lot of things from a lot of places. These are old apothecary jars that we have collected and these came from Mexico. She was from China and he is from Hong Kong and this Icon came out of Russia before the Communists came in and in this room here there is more Korea. This is a typical Korean painting, women washing in the stream with a special technique. It was given to Mrs. Rusk and to me by General G- .

MURROW: Oh, yes.

RUSK: Who is the Chief of Staff of the Korean Army but there are a lot of things here that just aren't Korea. Let's see, these lights came from an old, old church in North Missouri in the part of theworld that Mrs. Rusk and I came from and this candelabra was from our home in Saint Louis. We brought it so we would remember.

MURROW: You started your medical practice in Saint Louis, didn't you?

RUSK: That's right. I practiced there for some fifteen years before the war and then went to Jefferson Barracks and set up the first rehabilitation program in the driven under them many times; that it has become a reflex with him.

Ed, this house is a strange old house. With the children it sort of expands, children and grandchildren and a lot of things from a lot of places. These are old apothecary jars that we have collected and these came from Mexico. She was from China and he is from Hong Kong and this Icon came out of Russia before the Communists came in and in this room here there is more Korea. This is a typical Korean painting, women washing in the stream with a special technique. It was given to Mrs. Rusk and to me by General G-

MURROW: Oh, yes.

RUSK: Who is the Chief of Staff of the Korean Army but there are a lot of things here that just aren't Korea. Let's see, these lights came from an old, old church in North Missouri in the part of thework that Mrs. Rusk and I came from and this candelabra was from our home in Saint Louis. We brought it so we would remember.

MURROW: You started your medical practice in Saint Louis, didn't you?

RUSK: That's right. I practiced there for some fifteen years before the war and then went to Jefferson Barracks and set up the first rehabilitation program in the Air Force. It started with one and ended with a program in 253 hospitals and twelve rehabilitation centers.

MURROW: You believe that psychology plays an important part in medicine, don't you?

RUSK: Fundamental. There is no use to teach somebody to walk if they have such an anxiety that they won't go outside the house. This has to be a total program to meet the total needs of people. Campanella, who is an old friend of yours---

MURROW: Yes.

RUSK: ---who has been on with you before is a good example.

MURROW: Is he what you would call a model patient, Howard?

RUSK: He was a magnificent patient because he had courage and he worked and although he has come back very little neurologically he can do so many things functionally. You know all of us have been disturbed about this recent problem of his, this attack of the heart as it was.

MURROW: Yes.

RUSK: But I will say this, that Campy is better able to meet and solve this problem now because he solved his own problem, than he ever was before. I think he epitomizes

Air Force. It started with one and ended with a program in 253 hospitals and twelve rehabilitation centers.

MURROW: You believe that psychology plays an important part in medicine, don't you?

RUSK: Fundamental. There is no use to teach somebody to walk if they have such an anxiety that they won't go outside the house. This has to be a total program to meet the total needs of people. Campanella, who is an old friend of yours---

MURROW: Yes.

RUSK: ---who has been on with you before is a good example.

MURROW: Is he what you would call a model patient, Howard?

RUSK: He was a magnificent patient because he had courage and he worked and although he has come back very little neurologically he can do so many things functionally. You know all of us have been disturbed about this recent problem of his, this attack of the heart as it was.

MURROW: Yes.

RUSK: But I will say this, that Campy is better able to meet and solve this problem now because he solved his own problem, than he ever was before. I think he epitomizes the fact that you can't disable ambition and courage.

MURROW: Mrs. Rusk, you must find a great deal of satisfaction in the work your husband is doing.

MRS. RUSK: I do, Ed. Rehabilitation is wonderful for individuals but it is wonderful for countries too. In Scarsdale this week we are starting something very exciting. We are having, or we are organizing the whole village, the scouts, the Junior League, the PTA, the Legion, we are going to have a celebration on the fourth of July which will be not only to make money but also to celebrate liberty and to do honor to Korea and we are going, we hope, to show what a village can do for a country.

MURROW: Well, I wish you much luck.

MRS. RUSK: Thank you.

MURROW: Dr. Rusk, I think it was Arnold Toynbee who once said, "The twentieth century will be chiefly remembered as an age in which we thought of the welfare of the whole human race." Do you agree?

RUSK: I agree and I like to feel that we in the United States and especially those of us working in this program epitomize that. We had a little blind boy at the Institute recently who summed it up so nicely - one of our main problems - when he said, "You know, I have heard so the fact that you can't disable ambition and courage.

MURROW: Mrs. Rusk, you must find a great deal of satisfaction in the work your husband is doing.

MRS. RUSK: I do, Ed. Rehabilitation is wonderful for individuals but it is wonderful for countries too. In Scarsdale this week we are starting something very exciting. We are having, or we are organizing the whole village, the scouts, the Junior League, the PTA, the Legion, we are going to have a celebration on the fourth of July which will be not only to make money but also to celebrate liberty and to do honor to Korea and we are going, we hope, to show what a village can do for a country.

MURROW: Well, I wish you much luck.

MRS. RUSK: Thank you.

MURROW: Dr. Rusk, I think it was Arnold Toynbee who once said, "The twentieth century will be chiefly remembered as an age in which we thought of the welfare of the whole human race." Do you agree?

RUSK: I agree and I like to feel that we in the United States and especially those of us working in this program epitomize that. We had a little blind boy at the Institute recently who summed it up so nicely - one of our main problems - when he said, "You know, I have heard so much about integration. What is it all about? I have never seen color. What is color? I guess I am lucky I have never seen color because maybe it puts prejudices in your heart and I am better off." It is such a great privilege to work with disabled people because they have such a great, great depth of spirit and I believe what the old British philosopher said, some four hundred years ago. He said that "if every man would mend a man then all the world would be mended." I think when you mend men maybe you build one little brick in world understanding that hopefully may let us live together in peace one day.

MURROW: And you have contributed more to that mending than any man in this country and thank you very much for letting us come. Will you say good night to your mother for us.

RUSK: Thank you.

MURROW: Good night, Mrs. Rusk.

MRS. RUSK: Good night.

MURROW: Thank you, very much.

RUSK: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: I will be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests, right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

much about integration. What is it all about? I have never seen color. What is color? I guess I am lucky I have never seen color because maybe it puts prejudices in your heart and I am better off." It is such a great privilege to work with disabled people because they have such a great, great depth of spirit and I believe what the old British philosopher said, some four hundred years ago. He said that "if every man would mend a man then all the world would be mended." I think when you mend men maybe you build one little brick in world understanding that hopefully may let us live together in peace one day.

MURROW: And you have contributed more to that mending than any man in this country and thank you very much for letting us come. Will you say good night to your mother for us.

RUSK: Thank you.

MURROW: Good night, Mrs. Rusk.

MRS. RUSK: Good night.

MURROW: Thank you, very much.

RUSK: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: I will be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests, right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Next week we will be visiting in California with actress Shirley McLean who this week was nominated for the Academy award. We will also be calling on Pulitzer Prize Cartoonist Rube Goldberg and his wife here in New York.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: Person to Person is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now, from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Next week we will be visiting in California with actress Shirley McLean who this week was nominated for the Academy award. We will also be calling on Pulitzer Prize Cartoonist Rube Goldberg and his wife here in New York.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: Person to Person is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now, from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: RUBE GOLDBERG and

SHIRLEY MacLAINE,

MARCH 6, 1959 -- 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON Tonight we'll be going to California for a visit with actress ShirleyMacLaine and her family. We'll also be dropping in on Pulitzer Prize winning Cartoonist Rube Goldberg and his wife here in New York.

We'll be ready to go after a word from Bob Wright for Kent.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Shirley MacLaine is frequently described as the imp with the lawn mower hair cut. Along with her unusual hair style she has an unusual amount of style which she has demonstrated on Broadway and in Hollywood and on television. She is equally good as a singer, dancer, commedienne and actress and is now a strong contender for the Academy award as the best actress of the year for her performance in "Some Came Running." Four years ago she was a seventy-five dollar a week dancerin the chorus of a Broadway musical. Shirley and her husband, Steve Parker, a television and motion picture producer, have been married five years and have a two year old daughter. This is their home in Royal Oaks, California, overlooking San Fernando Valley some five thousand miles from Japan where they also have a home and where Steve does much of his work. Evening, Shirley. Evening, Steve.

PARKER: Hi, Ed.

MacLaine: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Good evening, Shirley. I don't want to start a family argument, but where would you rather be at this moment, California or Japan?

PARKER: We love both of them, Ed, but it's pretty

MURROW: Shirley Maclaine is frequently described as the imp with the lawn mower hair cut. Along with her unusual hair style she has an unusual amount of style which she has demonstrated on Broadway and in Hollywood and on television. She is equally good as a singer, dancer, comedienne and actress and is now a strong contender for the Academy award as the best actress of the year for her performance in "Some Came Running." Four years ago she was a seventy-five dollar a week dancer in the chorus of a Broadway musical. Shirley and her husband, Steve Parker, a television and motion picture producer, have been married five years and have a two year old daughter. This is their home in Royal Oaks, California, overlooking San Fernando Valley some five thousand miles from Japan where they also have a home and where Steve does much of his work. Evening, Shirley. Evening, Steve.

PARKER: Hi, Ed.

Maclaine: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Good evening, Shirley. I don't want to start a family argument, but where would you rather be at this moment, California or Japan?

PARKER: We love both of them, Ed, but it's pretty hard to beat this California climate.

MURROW: Well, I imagine it takes a little juggling of your schedules so the two of you can be together. Shirley, how do you handle this problem?

MacLAINE: Well, at first it was a little difficult, Ed, but we worked it out and for the last year and a half we both love to travel so whenever I am off I take a quick jump for maybe three days to Japan or Honk Kong or where ever Steve is and he comes back whenever he can. We are not separated much. We spend quite a bit of time together considering all the traveling we do.

MURROW: When are you going back, Steve?

PARKER: I'm going back tomorrow, Ed. I am in the middle of a lot of pre-production work for a film I am going to do this winter or early next year.

MURROW: You must feel pretty proud about that Academy award nomination, don't you?

PARKER: I couldn't be prouder - wonderful.

MURROW: What about you, Shirley, a little bit nervous?

MacLAINE: Oh, I really am. It seems such a wonderful thing, Ed, to have such a good time working on a hard to beat this California climate.

MURROW: Well, I imagine it takes a little juggling of your schedules so the two of you can be together. Shirley, how do you handle this problem?

MacLAINE: Well, at first it was a little difficult, Ed, but we worked it out and for the last year and a half we both love to travel so whenever I am off I take a quick jump for maybe three days to Japan or Hong Kong or wherever Steve is and he comes back whenever he can. We are not separated much. We spend quite a bit of time together considering all the traveling we do.

MURROW: When are you going back, Steve?

PARKER: I'm going back tomorrow, Ed. I am in the middle of a lot of pre-production work for a film I am going to do this winter or early next year.

MURROW: You must feel pretty proud about that Academy award nomination, don't you?

PARKER: I couldn't be prouder - wonderful.

MURROW: What about you, Shirley, a little bit nervous?

MacLAINE: Oh, I really am. It seems such a wonderful thing, Ed, to have such a good time working on a picture like I have been doing in "Some Came Running" with Frank Sinatra and Bill L- (?) and also to think back I have been a dancer all my life, since I was two and a half years old, and when I came to Hollywood in films I had never danced, I had only acted, so this is such a nice combination to be known only for acting. I love it.

MURROW: Perhaps you are better off if you never took any formal instruction in acting, would you think?

MacLAINE: Well, I think maybe I am. I don't think that the method kind of schooling would be good for me. It just doesn't seem to work. I more or less keep my eyes and ears open and watch things that go on around me and then if I ever happen to use it in a scene I do.

MURROW: Well, with Steve away from home so much you must find the evenings long and sometimes lonely, don't you?

MacLAINE: Well, they are but most of our work, whenever he's gone, I've been awfully busy so that simultaneously the work occurred and by the time I got home from the studio every night working from six to six-thirty I was tired and only had time maybe to breath and listen to music or watch television or something. Steve brought me some encyclopedias for Christmas and I am up to the Y's now. I also love to picture like I have been doing in "Some Came Running" with Frank Sinatra and Bill L- (?) and also to think back I have been a dancer all my life, since I was two and a half years old, and when I came to Hollywood in films I had never danced, I had only acted, so this is such a nice combination to be known only for acting. I love it.

MURROW: Perhaps you are better off if you never took any formal instruction in acting, would you think?

MacLAINE: Well, I think maybe I am. I don't think that the method kind of schooling would be good for me. It just doesn't seem to work. I more or less keep my eyes and ears open and watch things that go on around me and then if I ever happen to use it in a scene I do.

MURROW: Well, with Steve away from home so much you must find the evenings long and sometimes lonely, don't you?

MacLAINE: Well, they are but most of our work, whenever he's gone, I've been awfully busy so that simultaneously the work occurred and by the time I got home from the studio every night working from six to six-thirty I was tired and only had time maybe to bresth and listen to music or watch television or something. Steve brought me some encyclopedias for Christmas and I am up to the Y's now. I also love to read and study maps and find out where he is.

MURROW: Of course I suppose fixing up the new house will keep you busy too, won't it?

MacLaine: Oh, yes, Ed, that will be something. This, of course, is the first home we have ever owned so it is quite an experience and we don't have very much furniture. The furniture will be here Monday. There's none here now.

MURROW: Well, I am sure that Steve will find a few unusual things for you out in the Orient.

MacLAINE: Yes, he has. He has brought some back; a few of these pieces he brought back.

PARKER: You know, Ed, we used to have a real English style home and none of these Japanese things fit in it but now that Shirley decided to move in here I am real happy in this house. These things go really well with a modern home. Some of these things -- this is a Korean chest I brought back from Korea.

MURROW: Yes.

PARKER: And a Kabuki dancer here and this is real interesting. Every Japanese home that has a daughter has one of these because it is a dream for a daughter really. It is a symbol of a husband and family and the entire life read and study maps and find out where he is.

MURROW: Of course I suppose fixing up the new house will keep you busy too, won't it?

MacLaine: Oh, yes, Ed, that will be something. This, of course, is the first home we have ever owned so it is quite an experience and we don't have very much furniture. The furniture will be here Monday. There's none here now.

MURROW: Well, I am sure that Steve will find a few unusual things for you out in the Orient.

MacLAINE: Yes, he has. He has brought some back; a few of these pieces he brought back.

PARKER: You know, Ed, we used to have a real English style home and none of these Japanese things fit in it but now that Shirley decided to move in here I am real happy in this house. These things go really well with a modern home. Some of these things -- this is a Korean chest I brought back from Korea.

MURROW: Yes.

PARKER: And a Kabuki dancer here and this is real interesting. Every Japanese home that has a daughter has one of these because it is a dream for a daughter really. It is a symbol of a husband and family and the entire life she would want. This is the husband and the wife and children, the retainers in the family, the warriors that guard the home. Every Japanese girl would like to have this type of home. The boys, of course, they have a carp, the pride of the house, a fish which is a symbol of courage, of course, because the carp is so strong but we have a daughter so we have to have this.

MURROW: Shirley, I understand you are quite a bargain hunter. Is this so?

MacLAINE: Oh, gracious me, I'm afraid I am. ... I have been that way all my life and I love it. Sometimes I am pennywise and dollar foolish. I went into a place, oh, I suppose five or so years ago. I will never forget. I saw a beautiful gown I wanted. I just wanted the dress; I didn't want the belt that went with it.

MURROW: Yes.

MacLAINE: And that was one of the first t-dresses.

MURROW: Shirley, where is your daughter tonight, asleep?

MacLAINE: Sleepy?

MURROW: Yes.

MacLAINE: She is here. We worked out a schedule

she would want. This is the husband and the wife and children, the retainers in the family, the warriors that guard the home. Every Japanese girl would like to have this type of home. The boys, of course, they have a carp, the pride of the house, a fish which is a symbol of courage, of course, because the carp is so strong but we have a daughter so we have to have this.

MURROW: Shirley, I understand you are quite a bargain hunter. Is this so?

MacLAINE: Oh, gracious me, I'm afraid I am. ...I have been that way all my life and I love it. Sometimes I am pennywise and dollar foolish. I went into a place, oh, I suppose five or so years ago. I will never forget. I saw a beautiful gown I wanted. I just wanted the dress; I didn't want the belt that went with it.

MURROW: Yes.

MacLAINE: And that was one of the first t-dresses.

MURROW: Shirley, where is your daughter tonight, asleep?

MacLAINE: Sleepy?

MURROW: Yes.

MacLAINE: She is here. We worked out a schedule

so that when we work we leave the house maybe at six in the morning and get home at six-thirty or seven at night and Stephanie, or Steppie, as we call her, she goes to bed a little late too. Here she is now. Hello, precious. Hello, sweetheart. Say hello to Mr. Murrow.

STEPPIE: Hello, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Hello, Steppie, how are you?

MacLAINE: Say, "I'm fine, Mr. Murrow."

STEPPIE: Fine, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How are you? Now question who she looks like.

MacLAINE: No.

MURROW: Stephanie, I saw some photographs of you and your mother recently in Life magazine making all sorts of funny faces. Shirley, do you think there is going to be another actress in the family?

MacLAINE: Well, I think maybe so.

PARKER: I think so.

MacLAINE: I think so. We go around most of the day making faces at each other. Can you do that, sweetheart. You remember what we did on the picture?

MURROW: Wonderful.

MacLAINE: I think maybe.

so that when we work we leave the house maybe at six in the morning and get home at six-thirty or seven at night and Stephanie, or Steppie, as we call her, she goes to bed a little late too. Here she is now. Hello, precious. Hello, sweetheart. Say hello to Mr. Murrow.

STEPPIE: Hello, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Hello, Steppie, how are you?

MacLAINE: Say, "I'm fine, Mr. Murrow."

STEPPIE: Fine, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How are you? Now question who she looks like.

MacLAINE: No.

MURROW: Stephanie, I saw some photographs of you and your mother recently in Life magazine making all sorts of funny faces. Shirley, do you think there is going to be another actress in the family?

MacLAINE: Well, I think maybe so.

PARKER: I think so.

MacLAINE: I think so. We go around most of the day making faces at each other. Can you do that, sweetheart. You remember what we did on the picture?

MURROW: Wonderful.

MacLAINE: I think maybe.

MURROW: Yes.

MacLAINE: That's Daddy.

MURROW: That's Daddy. She'll recognize him. Shirley?

MacLAINE: Yes.

MURROW: You don't have to think back too far to your own childhood.

MacLAINE: There's not that much difference in our ages. That is why we get along so well. I can remember playing baseball with the fellows...

MURROW: What was your batting average?

MacLAINE: Batting average?

MURROW: Yes.

MacLAINE: 425 -425.

MURROW: You still play baseball?

MacLAINE: Oh, no, Ed, no. I gave that up when I was about fifteen. My batting average was good on baseball but not with the fellows so I gave up baseball.

MURROW: Did you have that---

MacLAINE: Excuse me a moment. I think maybe I better put her to bed.

MURROW: Before you go I wanted to know if you had that hairdo as a ballplayer?

MURROW: Yes.

MacLAINE: That's Daddy.

MURROW: That's Daddy. She'll recognize him. Shirley?

MacLAINE: Yes.

MURROW: You don't have to think back too far to your own childhood.

MacLAINE: There's not that much difference in our ages. That is why we get along so well. I can remember playing baseball with the fellows...

MURROW: What was your batting average?

MacLAINE: Batting average?

MURROW: Yes.

MacLAINE: 425 -425.

MURROW: You still play baseball?

MacLAINE: Oh, no, Ed, no. I gave that up when I was about fifteen. My batting average was good on baseball but not with the fellows so I gave up baseball,

MURROW: Did you have that---

MacLAINE: Excuse me a moment. I think maybe I better put her to bed.

MURROW: Before you go I wanted to know if you had that hatrdo as a ballplayer?

MacLAINE: As a ball player?

MURROW: Yes.

MacLAINE: No, I got it when I was about, well, I suppose I was about, maybe, sixteen in a Broadway show and it was long; I used to have long red hair. Steve used to always tease me and whenever I did a Pierrot, a turn on the stage, the audience's eyes were all going to me instead of the star and I was just a chorus dancer, so the producer took me in between the first and second act one night, downstairs, and said, "Young lady, you cut your hair or otherwise you are out of this show," so I dunked it in the sink and of course my hair was all wet and I didn't have time to curl it, and I didn't have too much time and so my head is kind of pointed anyway and it came up like this and I got fired anyway.

MURROW: Steve, I meant to ask you this before. Why do you do so much of your work in Japan instead of here?

PARKER: Well, Ed, I have a firm belief that much of the future of the world lies in Asia and with the world getting so small with jet travel and modern age and jet travel upon us it will only be a matter of one or two more years before going to Tokyo is as simple as traveling from MacLAINE: As a ball player?

MURROW: Yes.

MacLAINE: No, I got it when I was about, well, I suppose I was about, maybe, sixteen in a Broadway show and it was long; I used to have long red hair. Steve used to always tease me and whenever I did a Pierrot, a turn on the stage, the audience's eyes were all going to me instead of the star and I was just a chorus dancer, so the producer took me in between the first and second act one night, downstairs, and said, "Young lady, you cut your hair or otherwise you are out of this show," so I dunked it in the sink and of course my hair was all wet and I didn't have time to curl it, and I didn't have too much time and so my head is kind of pointed anyway and it came up like this and I got fired anyway.

MURROW: Steve, I meant to ask you this before. Why do you do so much of your work in Japan instead of here?

PARKER: Well, Ed, I have a firm belief that much of the future of the world lies in Asia and with the world getting so small with jet travel and modern age and jet travel upon us it will only be a matter of one or two more years before going to Tokyo is as simple as traveling from

Los Angeles to New York and it's going to take a lot of understanding between peoples and I don't think there is any better medium than the visual medium of motion pictures and television to teach people to understand each other and I would like to be a part of that when it happens.

MURROW: What's the reaction to the Orient to the movies Hollywood is turning out these days, Steve.

PARKER: Well, in the Orient, they are very influenced; the people are very influenced by American films and whatever they see they take for granted as being a part of American life and I think here that more time should be given to the content of films that we export abroad because it does affect these people tremendously and we should show them the honest side of it instead of the crime and etcetera. It has a tremendous effect on them.

MURROW: Shirley, very few people in show business have come along as fast and successfuly as you have. What would you say was the big turning point?

MacLAINE: Well, frankly, I did work awfully hard from the time I was two. The turning point came, a break, when I was in a show called "Pajama Game."

MURROW: Yes.

Los Angeles to New York and it's going to take a lot of understanding between peoples and I don't think there is any better medium than the visual medium of motion pictures and television to teach people to understand each other and I would like to be a part of that when it happens.

MURROW: What's the reaction to the Orient to the movies Hollywood is turning out these days, Steve.

PARKER: Well, in the Orient, they are very influenced; the people are very influenced by American films and whatever they see they take for granted as being a part of American life and I think here that more time should be given to the content of films that we export abroad because it does affect these people tremendously and we should show them the honest side of it instead of the crime and etcetera. It has a tremendous effect on them.

MURROW: Shirley, very few people in show business have come along as fast and successfully as you have. What would you say was the big turning point?

MacLAINE: Well, frankly, I did work awfully hard from the time I was two. The turning point came, a break, when I was in a show called "Pajama Game."

MURROW: Yes.

MacLAINE: I was a chorus dancer and had a few lines to sing because I sang loud, that was all, and the star of the show, the hit of the show, was a woman named Carol Haney.

MURROW: Yes,

MacLAINE: A wonderful girl and she broke her ankle the very night of the show and I, as her understudy, went on and then I was signed by Mr. Hitchcock and Mr. Wallace and I came to Hollywood and the same thing happened in television. Betty Grable broke her leg before a big show and naturally they called me and so I did.it. I suppose that some day something will happen to me and maybe my understudy will go on and I hope she is as lucky as I was.

PARKER: We have someone waiting for you right now.

MacLAINE: That's so.

MURROW: Shirley, you are frequently described in print as one of Hollywood's more rugged individuals. Are you?

MacLAINE: Well, Ed, I really like to be myself. I have no time to do anything else. I enjoy it and I hope I don't hurt anyone's feelings by sometimes being frank and too honest and speaking my mind but that is the way I am. If MacLAINE: I was a chorus dancer and had a few lines to sing because I sang loud, that was all, and the star of the show, the hit of the show, was a woman named Carol Haney.

MURROW: Yes, happens.

MacLAINE: A wonderful girl and she broke her ankle the very night of the show and I, as her understudy, went on and then I was signed by Mr. Hitchcock and Mr. Wallace and I came to Hollywood and the same thing happened in television. Betty Grable broke her leg before a big show and naturally they called me and so I did it. I suppose that some day something will happen to me and maybe my understudy will go on and I hope she is as lucky as I was.

PARKER: We have someone waiting for you right now.

MacLAINE: That's so.

MURROW: Shirley, you are frequently described in print as one of Hollywood's more rugged individuals. Are you?

MacLAINE: Well, Ed, I really like to be myself. I have no time to do anything else. I enjoy it and I hope I don't hurt anyone's feelings by sometimes being frank and too honest and speaking my mind but that is the way I am. If that means I am a rugged individualist then I am.

MURROW: And your marriage seems to have worked out very well too, despite the long separation because of Steve's work in Japan.

MacLAINE: It has, Ed. It certainly has. We feel and I feel very strongly that what Steve is doing is tremendously important. It is vital to not only the film industry or the television industry like the Japanese show that we did but it is important to the people on both sides of the world because he is really acting as more or less an intermediary between the two cultures. He understands them and portrays them authentically and I think they appreciate that and have more of a co-production feeling - if we could all get together. This is something both Steve and I feel is bigger than us.

MURROW: Well, much luck to both of you.

MacLAINE: Thank you.

MURROW: Thank you, Shirley, for letting us come. Good night, Steve.

PARKER: Goodnight.

MacLAINE: Good night.

MURROW: Have a very safe trip back to Japan and Shirley, good luck on the Academy award.

that means I am a rugged individualist then I am.

MURROW: And your marriage seems to have worked out very well too, despite the long separation because of Steve's work in Japan.

MacLAINE: It has, Ed. It certainly has. We feel and I feel very strongly that what Steve is doing is tremendously important. It is vital to not only the film industry or the television industry like the Japanese show that we did but it is important to the people on both sides of the world because he is really acting as more or less an intermediary between the two cultures. He understands them and portrays them authentically and I think they appreciate that and have more of a co-production feeling - if we could all get together. This is something both Steve and I feel is bigger than us.

MURROW: Well, much luck to both of you.

MacLAINE: Thank you.

MURROW: Thank you, Shirley, for letting us come. Good night, Steve.

PARKER: Goodnight.

MacLAINE: Good night.

MURROW: Have a very safe trip back to Japan and Shirley, good luck on the Academy award.

MacLAINE: Thank you very much.

MURROW: In just a moment we will take you for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Rube Goldberg right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

[Commercial]

MacLAINE: Thank you very much.

MURROW: In just a moment we will take you for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Rube Goldberg right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Rube Goldberg is called The Dean of American Cartoonists. His formal art training, as he tells it, started when he was twelve years old. His instructor was a neighborhood sign painter in his native San Francisco. The lessons ended after eighteen months because the sign painter fell off a scaffold and broke his arm. Rube Goldberg who is now seventy-five years old took leave of art and studied mining engineering at the University of California, even spent, I think it was sixteen months, designing sewers for San Francisco but soon he was back at the drawing board, starting a career that has taken him through the comic pages, on to the editorial pages, and a Pulitzer prize in 1948. Right now Rube's editorial cartoons appear in the New York Journal American and newspapers all across the country through the King Features Syndicate.

Rube Goldberg and his wife have been living in that apartment in New York City for some twenty years. Their two grown sons visit here frequently. For those who are not acquainted with Rube Goldberg's inventions we offer this very simple method of watering a flower in your button hole.

Good evening, Mrs. Goldberg.

MRS. GOLDBERG: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Rube.

MURROW: Rube Goldberg is called The Dean of American Cartoonists. His formal art training, as he tells it, started when he was twelve years old. His instructor was a neighborhood sign painter in his native San Francisco. The lessons ended after eighteen months because the sign painter fell off a scaffold and broke his arm. Rube Goldberg who is now seventy-five years old took leave of art and studied mining engineering at the University of California, even spent, I think it was sixteen months, designing sewers for San Francisco but soon he was back at the drawing board, starting a career that has taken him through the comic pages, on to the editorial pages, and a Pulitzer prize in 1948. Right now Rube's editorial cartoons appear in the New York Journal American and newspapers all across the country through the King Features Syndicate.

Rube Goldberg and his wife have been living in that apartment in New York City for some twenty years. Their two grown sons visit here frequently. For those who are not acquainted with Rube Goldberg's inventions we offer this very simple method of watering a flower in your button hole.

Good evening, Mrs. Goldberg.

MRS. GOLDBERG: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Rube.

MR. GOLDBERG: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Rube, invented anything lately?

GOLDBERG: Well, I am working on a couple of very very important inventions, one, a music turner, so you don't have to take your hands off the keys and another is a money feeler, so when you put your hand in your pocket you know when you are grabbing a five or one.

MURROW: How are they coming on?

GOLDBERG: They are coming on pretty well. I am about in the third stage - about like that rocket up there.

MURROW: Rube, just how would you define a Rube Goldberg invention?

GOLDBERG: Well, I have been called the father of automation. It's one thing after another. I mean, well, that is really the thing and it is an illogical bunch of things which are put in a logical sequence, like if you take a midget and a half cantaloupe and bicycle pump and a lot of things and finally it comes out a small piece of candy with a hole in it, that's my type of invention.

MURROW: Rube, have any learned technical societies recognized your contributions?

GOLDBERG: Well, not exactly, but they stem from a course I took at the University of California in analytical

MR. GOLDBERG: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Rube, invented anything lately?

GOLDBERG: Well, I am working on a couple of very very important inventions, one, a music turner, so you don't have to take your hands off the keys and another is a money feeler, so when you put your hand in your pocket you know when you are grabbing a five or one.

MURROW: How are they coming on?

GOLDBERG: They are coming on pretty well. I am about in the third stage - about like that rocket up there.

MURROW: Rube, just how would you define a Rube Goldberg invention?

GOLDBERG: Well, I have been called the father of automation. It's one thing after another. I mean, well, that is really the thing and it is an illogical bunch of things which are put in a logical sequence, like if you take a midget and a half cantaloupe and bicycle pump and a lot of things and finally it comes out a small piece of candy with a hole in it, that's my type of invention.

MURROW: Rube, have any learned technical societies recognized your contributions?

GOLDBERG: Well, not exactly, but they stem from a course I took at the University of California in analytical mechanics. The object of this course was to find the weight of the earth. We didn't care much about the weight of the earth. I think it is a little lighter today but the professor was very profound. At the end of the course we all turned in our answers and every one was correct because the earth weighs differently on different days and it didn't matter because nobody cared and so that was the inspiration of these complicated things we do because they are really so unimportant at the end.

MURROW: Mrs. Goldberg, with Rube spending so many years telling millions of us how to get things done, he must be a perfect handy-man around the house.

MRS. GOLDBERG: We have been married forty-two years, Mr. Murrow, and he hasn't invented anything useful as yet, like either fixing a bar or electric switch, but it seems to me I remember one thing he once had a little statue--a little kitty, and the head broke off. You remember?

GOLDBERG: Yes, but I got the head on.

MRS. GOLDBERG: But it didn't last very long.

GOLDBERG: No.

MURROW: Rube, you switched to editorial cartoons about twenty years ago I think, wasn't it?

mechanics. The object of this course was to find the weight of the earth. We didn't care much about the weight of the earth. I think it is a little lighter today but the professor was very profound. At the end of the course we all turned in our answers and every one was correct because the earth weighs differently on different days and it didn't matter because nobody cared and so that was the inspiration of these complicated things we do because they are really so unimportant at the end.

MURROW: Mrs. Goldberg, with Rube spending so many years telling millions of us how to get things done, he must be a perfect handy-man around the house.

MRS. GOLDBERG: We have been married forty-two years, Mr. Murrow, and he hasn't invented anything useful as yet, like either fixing a bar or electric switch, but it seems to me I remember one thing he once had a little statue--a little kitty, and the head broke off. You remember?

GOLDBERG: Yes, but I got the head on.

MRS. GOLDBERG: But it didn't last very long.

GOLDBERG: No.

MURROW: Rube, you switched to editorial cartoons about twenty years ago I think, wasn't it?

GOLDBERG: Yes.

MURROW: Well, what made you break away from comic cartoons?

GOLDBERG: Well, times have changed, Ed, and the story type of cartoon, the serial type of cartoon, was becoming very popular and my work was a little bit out of date and I was a little tired of doing it and, in fact, I was due for a change and so I was really up a tree for a while until The Sun -- the Editor of The Sun -- called up and asked me if I would like to do editorial cartoons and that was quite a shock because I had never figured myself that high so I came home and I asked Erma shall I do it and she said, "you go ahead and do it," so the next thing I called up and said, "Listen, Ed, I'll do this if you don't tell anybody about it; let me sneak in so if I flop I will sneak out and nobody will know the difference," so I am still in it about twenty years. That was about twenty years ago.

MURROW: Mrs. Goldberg, do either of your sons do Rube's type of work?

MRS. GOLDBERG: No, but they are both different sort of creators. George is a TV and screen writer. He lives out in Hollywood and Tom is an artist and he lives up

GOLDBERG: Yes.

MURROW: Well, what made you break away from comic cartoons?

GOLDBERG: Well, times have changed, Ed, and the story type of cartoon, the serial type of cartoon, was becoming very popular and my work was a little bit out of date and I was a little tired of doing it and, in fact, I was due for a change and so I was really up a tree for a while until The Sun -- the Editor of The Sun -- called up and asked me if I would like to do editorial cartoons and that was quite a shock because I had never figured myself that high so I came home and I asked Erma shall I do it and she said, "you go ahead and do it," so the next thing I called up and said, "Listen, Ed, I'll do this if you don't tell anybody about it; let me sneak in so if I flop I will sneak out and nobody will know the difference," so I am still in it about twenty years. That was about twenty years ago.

MURROW: Mrs. Goldberg, do either of your sons do Rube's type of work?

MRS. GOLDBERG: No, but they are both different sort of creators. George is a TV and screen writer. He lives out in Hollywood and Tom is an artist and he lives up in Rockland County.

GOLDBERG: The boys have changed their names. They have taken the names of Thomas George and George Gouvernor George but they didn't want to trade on my reputation. They got tired of everybody saying, "he is another little Rube," or something. Now you go ahead.

MRS. GOLDBERG: Here is a picture that Tom painted many years ago. It is a copy of a very famous painting. It is now in the B- Gallery in New York and here is one of his recent pictures. It's called "Sea Song." It is very beautiful and has many lovely little colors, pastel colors. I wish you could see it, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: So do I.

MRS. GOLDBERG: I think you would enjoy it.

MURROW: I would like to see it in color.

Rube, when you were a youngster in San Francisco in the 1890's, did your father encourage you to do cartoons?

GOLDBERG: My father encouraged me to draw; in fact he was very proud and he wanted me to study mining engineering because a lot of his friend were in that line and he thought if I were in an art I would have to associate with newspaper men which would be a dreadful thing.

MURROW: Mrs. Goldberg, you must have some of

in Rockland County.

GOLDBERG: The boys have changed their names. They have taken the names of Thomas George and George Governor George but they didn't want to trade on my reputation. They got tired of everybody saying, "He is another little Rube," or something. Now you go ahead.

MRS. GOLDBERG: Here is a picture that Tom painted many years ago. It is a copy of a very famous painting. It is now in the B- Gallery in New York and here is one of his recent pictures. It's called "Sea Song." It is very beautiful and has many lovely little colors, pastel colors. I wish you could see it, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: So do I.

MRS. GOLDBERG: I think you would enjoy it.

MURROW: I would like to see it in color. Rube, when you were a youngster in San Francisco in the 1890's, did your father encourage you to do cartoons?

GOLDBERG: My father encouraged me to draw; in fact he was very proud and he wanted me to study mining engineering because a lot of his friend were in that line and he thought if I were in an art I would have to associate with newspaper men which would be a dreadful thing.

MURROW: Mrs. Goldberg, you must have some of Rube's earlier creations in your apartment, haven't you?

MRS. GOLDBERG: We have quite a few but they are not in this room.

GOLDBERG: I will go inside, Ed. This is the slumming department where we don't have our best friends. I will show you a few of the things we have here. Now, this, Ed, is a chandelier that I did, oh, about twenty-five years ago with some of my characters on there; the one in the center is Boob McNutt which is an old figure, and Mike and Ike, they look alike, and a few of the others and I treasure that very highly because it is a nice souvenir of my other career.

MURROW: How about the hundreds and thousands of cartoons that have come off your drawing board. Could we see a few of them?

GOLDBERG: Well, I would like to show you some, Ed, but I have them down in my studio but I have a reproduction here of a Pulitzer prize cartoon that I did about eight years ago. This is in a text book of the famous artist school up in Westport where I am one of the professors. This cartoon won the Pulitzer prize in 1948 and I think it is just as fresh - the idea is just as fresh today.

MURROW: So do I.

Rube's earlier creations in your apartment, haven't you?

MRS. GOLDBERG: We have quite a few but they are not in this room.

GOLDBERG: I will go inside, Ed. This is the slumming department where we don't have our best friends. I will show you a few of the things we have here. Now, this, Ed, is a chandelier that I did, oh, about twenty-five years ago with some of my characters on there; the one in the center is Boob McNutt which is an old figure, and Mike and Ike, they look alike, and a few of the others and I treasure that very highly because it is a nice souvenir of my other career.

MURROW: How about the hundreds and thousands of cartoons that have come off your drawing board. Could we see a few of them?

GOLDBERG: Well, I would like to show you some, Ed, but I have them down in my studio but I have a reproduction here of a Pulitzer prize cartoon that I did about eight years ago. This is in a text book of the famous artist school up in Westport where I am one of the professors. This cartoon won the Pulitzer prize in 1948 and I think it is just as fresh - the idea is just as fresh today.

MURROW: So do I.

GOLDBERG: Then over here -- I don't know whether you have seen one of these before -- but this is the certificate of the Pulitzer prize. Of course it is the most important thing inthis room although it is the smallest which is one of my contrasts which I always look for when I am trying to do something funny.

MURROW: Any other Goldberg awards in your study, Rube?

GOLDBERG: Well, now, here is one, that is one of my favorites. This is called The Ruben. This is the equivalent of the moving picture award which is the Oscar and this is voted upon by the cartoonists -- National Cartoonist Society -- for the most outstanding cartoonist of the year. I never won it myself but I designed it and it is called The Ruben. It is an acrobatic type as you see, all these men holding up a little bottle of ink. It is the acrobatic type of cartoon which I like very much.

MURROW: It is a very nice piece of sculpture.

GOLDBERG: Well, I hope I can take up sculpture some day. I will put it over here.

MURROW: Rube, will you agree that The Ruben is typical of your cartoon humor?

GOLDBERG: Then over here -- I don't know whether you have seen one of these before -- but this is the certificate of the Pulitzer prize. Of course it is the most important thing inthis room although it is the smallest which is one of my contrasts which I always look for when I am trying to do something funny.

MURROW: Any other Goldberg awards in your study, Rube?

GOLDBERG: Well, now, here is one, that is one of my favorites. This is called The Ruben. This is the equivalent of the moving picture award which is the Oscar and this is voted upon by the cartoonists -- National Cartoonist Society -- for the most outstanding cartoonist of the year. I never won it myself but I designed it and it is called The Ruben. It is an acrobatic type as you see, all these men holding up a little bottle of ink. It is the acrobatic type of cartoon which I like very much.

MURROW: It is a very nice piece of sculpture.

GOLDBERG: Well, I hope I can take up sculpture some day. I will put it over here.

MURROW: Rube, will you agree that The Ruben is typical of your cartoon humor?

GOLDBERG: Yes, I think it is. It is quite cock-eyed, a little bit crazy, but I don't say all humor has got to be like mine but I wish there were more laughs in the world and as your friend Malcolm Muggeride said, he said, "the only difference between man and animals is that man can laugh," and I think that is pretty profound.

MURROW: So do I. I agree, but Rube, aside, from the humor you occasionally work into your editorial cartoons, you are now primarily concerned with the big issues of our times, aren't you?

GOLDBERG: Yes, I am, Ed, but one of the big issues which I am working on now is how to remove the cotton from a bottle of asprin. I have a little book coming out in about two weeks but I don't have the book here. I have a few of the drawings which I can show you. I don't want to show the whole thing because it will tip you off. It starts with some moths eating up a cashmere coat. It might be a Vicuna and that releases this plunge which starts a terrific explosion. We have a number two with a football going through an art gallery where there is a combination of sculpture and then here is a wine making machine which is part of the invention and I hope that we can in a couple of GOLDBERG: Yes, I think it is. It is quite cock-eyed, a little bit crazy, but I don't say all humor has got to be like mine but I wish there were more laughs in the world and as your friend Malcolm Muggeridge said, he said, "the only difference between man and animals is that man can laugh," and I think that is pretty profound.

MURROW: So do I. I agree, but Rube, aside, from the humor you occasionally work into your editorial cartoons, you are now primarily concerned with the big issues of our times, aren't you?

GOLDBERG: Yes, I am, Ed, but one of the big issues which I am working on now is how to remove the cotton from a bottle of aspirin. I have a little book coming out in about two weeks but I don't have the book here. I have a few of the drawings which I can show you. I don't want to show the whole thing because it will trip you off. It starts with some moths eating up a cashmere coat. It might be a Vicuna and that releases this plunge which starts a terrific explosion. We have a number two with a football going through an art gallery where there is a combination of sculpture and then here is a wine making machine which is part of the invention and I hope that we can in a couple of weeks -- within a couple of weeks it will be out. Here is the jacket. The boys over at Dohbleday are a little bit slow.

MURROW: You are a very modest author. You didn't tell us the title, Rube. Oh yes, I can't read it from there.

GOLDBERG: The title is "How to Remove the Cotton from a Bottle of Asprin."

MURROW: Sorry I missed it.

GOLDBERG: Yes, that's it.

MURROW: Rube, how do you explain the fact that there is less humor abroad in the land today than, oh, say, fifty years ago?

GOLDBERG: I say I think because the opportunities are not as great. I think the tempos of the times are not as great. I think the men like Irving Cobb and Ring Lardner wouldn't be as great today as they were in their time because the tempo and opportunity isn't quite as good.

MURROW: Mrs. Goldberg, do you by any chance draw or paint?

MRS. GOLDBERG: No, I haven't any talent, I'm sorry to say, but with so many creators in the family some-weeks -- within a couple of weeks it will be out. Here is the jacket. The boys over at Doubleday are a little bit slow.

MURROW: You are a very modest author. You didn't tell us the title, Rube. Oh yes, I can't read it from there.

GOLDBERG: The title is "How to Remove the Cotton from a Bottle of Aspirin."

MURROW: Sorry I missed it.

GOLDBERG: Yes, that's it.

MURROW: Rube, how do you explain the fact that there is less humor abroad in the land today than, oh, say, fifty years ago?

GOLDBERG: I say I think because the opportunities are not as great. I think the tempos of the times are not as great. I think the men like Irving Cobb and King Lardner wouldn't be as great today as they were in their time because the tempo and opportunity isn't quite as good.

MURROW: Mrs. Goldberg, do you by any chance draw or paint?

MRS. GOLDBERG: No, I haven't any talent, I'm sorry to say, but with so many creators in the family somebody has to be the audience.

MURROW: And the critic.

MRS. GOLDBERG: And the critic.

GOLDBERG: She does pretty well. She is a real critic, and sometimes we don't like it but we always find out she is right.

MRS. GOLDBERG: I think I am a poor critic but I am severe at times.

MURROW: Rube, do you still find it fun sitting down at your drawing board or is it sometimes a difficult chore?

GOLDBERG: Well, it is fun all right. I think it is fun but in the end it is very rewarding and I like to say a word right here about the fact that nobody asks an artist or a writer to draw. Nobody makes you do it. You must have a little motor inside of you. You have to be self propelled and I believe that the desire and the energy and the industry is about seventy-five per cent and the talent is about twenty-five per cent.

MURROW: Rube, as The Dean of American cartoonists you must look back on your long career of fifty-five years, as I figure it, with a good deal of satisfaction, don't you?

body has to be the audience.

MURROW: And the critic.

MRS. GOLDBERG: And the critic.

GOLDBERG: She does pretty well. She is a real critic, and sometimes we don't like it but we always find out she is right.

MRS. GOLDBERG: I think I am a poor critic but I am severe at times.

MURROW: Rube, do you still find it fun sitting down at your drawing board or is it sometimes a difficult chore?

GOLDBERG: Well, it is fun all right. I think it is fun but in the end it is very rewarding and I like to say a word right here about the fact that nobody asks an artist or a writer to draw. Nobody makes you do it. You must have a little motor inside of you. You have to be self propelled and I believe that the desire and the energy and the industry is about seventy-five per cent and the talent is about twenty-five per cent.

MURROW: Rube, as The Dean of American cartoonists you must look back on your long career of fifty-five years, as I figure it, with a good deal of satisfaction, don't you?

GOLDBERG: Yes, I do but I don't care to talk too much about old age. Old age has a certain connotation. I like to talk about growing older and I don't think when a person gets older he should become more diginified and change his style of talking. I talk like I did, I hope, when I was about twenty years old and the strange part of it is that everybody wants to be healthy. Everybody is taking medicine. Everybody is exercising and if you are well you are going to live and you are going to get older so I figure that being older is not a penalty. It is more of a reward.

MURROW: Well, Rube, don't change. Thank you very much. Thank you, Mrs. Goldberg.

GOLDBERG: Thank you.

MURROW: It has been very pleasant.

GOLDBERG: We enjoyed it.

MURROW: Good night.

MRS. GOLDBERG: Good night.

MURROW: We will be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word by Revlon.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to Poughkeepsie New York for a visit with the first woman President of Vassar

GOLDBERG: Yes, I do but I don't care to talk too much about old age. Old age has a certain connotation. I like to talk about growing older and I don't think when a person gets older he should become more dignified and change his style of talking. I talk like I did, I hope, when I was about twenty years old and the strange part of it is that everybody wants to be healthy. Everybody is taking medicine. Everybody is exercising and if you are well you are going to live and you are going to get older so I figure that being older is not a penalty. It is more of a reward.

MURROW: Well, Rube, don't change. Thank you very much. Thank you, Mrs. Goldberg.

GOLDBERG: Thank you.

MURROW: It has been very pleasant.

GOLDBERG: We enjoyed it.

MURROW: Good night.

MRS. GOLDBERG: Good night.

MURROW: We will be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word by Revlon.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to Poughkeepsie New York for a visit with the first woman President of Vassar College, Sarah Gibson Blanding. We'll also be calling on author Budd Schulberg and his family in Princeton, New Jersey.

And, now, from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

College, Sarah Gibson Blanding. We'll also be calling on author Budd Schulberg and his family in Princeton, New Jersey.

And, now, from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Budd Schulberg, and

Sarah Gibson Blanding

March 13, 1959 - 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with author Budd Schulberg and his family in Princeton, New Jersey. Then we'll move on to Poughkeepsie, New York, and the home of Sarah Gibson Blanding, president of Vassar College.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Revlon.

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Budd Schulberg, and

Sarah Gibson Blanding

March 13, 1959 - 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with author Budd Schulberg and his family in Princeton, New Jersey. Then we'll move on to Poughkeepsie, New York, and the home of Sarah Gibson Blanding, president of Vassar College.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Revlon.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545
LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

(Commercial)

MURROW: Budd Schulberg started writing poetry when he was about 10 years old. At 15 he had completed five chapters of a novel. As he describes it, those chapters were, fortunately, lost to posterity. But since then Budd Schulberg has written a number of books, plays, movies and magazine articles. He's a native of New York; was raised in Hollywood, where his father, B.P. Schulberg, was once head of Paramount Studios.

Budd started writing for pictures soon after he graduated from Dartmouth. His first big literary success was the novel, "What Makes Sammy Run". He also wrote "The Harder They Fall", "A Face in The Cloud", "On The Waterfront", and "The Disenchanted", which is now a play on Broadway.

Budd and Vickie Schulberg and their two sons now live in this house in Princeton, New Jersey. It is also the scene of Budd's current literary effort.

Evening, Vickie.

MRS. SCHULBERG: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Budd.

MR. SCHULBERG: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Are you snowed in at Princeton?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, not really. I wish we could

(Commercial)

MURROW: Budd Schulberg started writing poetry when he was about 10 years old. At 15 he had completed five chapters of a novel. As he describes it, those chapters were, fortunately, lost to posterity. But since then Budd Schulberg has written a number of books, plays, movies and magazine articles. He's a native of New York; was raised in Hollywood, where his father, B.P. Schulberg, was once head of Paramount studios.

Budd started writing for pictures soon after he graduated from Dartmouth. His first big literary success was the novel, "What Makes Sammy Run". He also wrote "The Harder They Fall", "A Face in The Cloud", "On The Waterfront", and "The Disenchanted", which is now a play on Broadway.

Budd and Vickie Schulberg and their two sons now live in this house in Princeton, New Jersey. It is also the scene of Budd's current literary effort.

Evening, Vickie.

MRS. SCHULBERG: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Budd.

MR. SCHULBERG: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Are you snowed in at Princeton?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, not really. I wish we could say it, it would be much more dramatic, but, really, there are some ways out. We had a little snow, though.

MURROW: Budd, it must be very good to be able to just walk a few steps to your place of business. Have you got anything cooking on the typewriter?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, if it's cooking, I don't hear the smoke, Ed. I've been taking it a little bit easy since we got the play on.

MURROW: Must be good to have a chance to unwind a little. Vickie, I gather that Budd is now relaxing between his self-assigned tasks. Does he relax easily?

MRS. SCHULBERG: Well, Mr. Murrow, this is the illusion he lives with. It doesn't really exist. He thinks he is, but he no sooner finished launching "Disenchanted" when off he went to Cuba in the culmination of a revolution, and that's the way he does -- always to involve himself very deeply in all kinds of projects.

MURROW: Just likes the quiet, contemplative life, eh?

MRS. SCHULBERG: Yes.

MURROW: Tell me, do your two boys share Budd's interests and enthusiasms?

MRS. SCHULBERG: Yes, they do, very much, I would say it, it would be much more dramatic, but, really, there are some ways out. We had a little snow, though.

MURROW: Budd, it must be very good to be able to just walk a few steps to your place of business. Have you got anything cooking on the typewriter?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, if it's cooking, I don't hear the smoke, Ed. I've been taking it a little bit easy since we got the play on.

MURROW: Must be good to have a chance to unwind a little. Vicki, I gather that Budd is now relaxing between his self-assigned tasks. Does he relax easily?

MRS. SCHULBERG: Well, Mr. Murrow, this is the illusion he lives with. It doesn't really exist. He thinks he is, but he no sooner finished launching "Disenchanted" when off he went to Cuba in the culmination of a revolution, and that's the way he does -- always to involve himself very deeply in all kinds of projects.

MURROW: Just likes the quiet, contemplative life, eh?

MRS. SCHULBERG: Yes.

MURROW: Tell me, do your two boys share Budd's interests and enthusiasms?

MRS. SCHULBERG: Yes, they do, very much. I would say. They have also their own bents, which is a way of sort of finding out that their father is not sort of omnipotent, shall we say.

MURROW: Budd, I'm sure that much of your interest in writing must have stemmed from the atmosphere of your home when your father was a movie producer. Right?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, as it turned out, it did, Ed. I think my father was rather what might be called an "off-horse". He was a movie producer, and I think a very good one, and people have some sort of sterotype in their minds, I find, about movie producers. They think of them as illiterate, noisy, saying, "You do this and not this."

MURROW: Yes?

MR. SCHULBERG: But, actually, my father was a writer. He had been a newspaperman and was very interested in the printed word. He was a fair -- well, I say fair -- writer himself, and very often on a Sunday -- this sounds like three centuries ago because history moves so fast -- he would read to us out loud, and he would read Conrad, Dogwood and Melville, and so we did get some feeling about writing, I think, from my father, and also from my mother. They were both interested in his writing, even though we were living plunk in the middle of old-time Hollywood.

say. They have also their own benta, which is a way of sort of finding out that their father is not sort of omnipotent, shall we say.

MURROW: Budd, I'm sure that much of your interest in writing must have stemmed from the atmosphere of your home when your father was a movie producer. Right?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, as it turned out, it did, Ed. I think my father was rather what might be called an "off-horse". He was a movie producer, and I think a very good one, and people have some sort of stereotype in their minds, I find, about movie producers. They think of them as illiterate, noisy, saying, "You do this and not this."

MURROW: Yes?

MR. SCHULBERG: But, actually, my father was a writer. He had been a newspaperman and was very interested in the printed word. He was a fair -- well, I say fair -- writer himself, and very often on a Sunday -- this sounds like three centuries ago because history moves so fast -- he would read to us out loud, and he would read Conrad, Dogwood and Melville, and so we did get some feeling about writing, I think, from my father, and also from my mother. They were both interested in his writing, even though we were living plunk in the middle of old-time Hollywood.

MURROW: There must have been a number of guests in the home, too.

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, Ed, of course there were some. Some of them were, you know, sort of dragged in. There were some very fine writers that came into our house, playwrights and novelists, who wrote to make enough money out of this low craft of movies to get back to something that they really started to do.

MURROW: Mrs. Schulberg, do you write, too, or are you partial to your sons' interests in science?

MRS. SCHULBERG: No, I neither write, Mr. Murrow, nor am I partial to my sons' interests in science. I'm like a great, I guess vassal, in which I'm fascinated by all the things they do and very much---

MURROW: There they are.

MRS. SCHULBERG: May I introduce my sons? This is Steven, Mr. Murrow, and this is David.

STEVEN: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Hi, Steven.

DAVID: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: David, how are you?

MRS. SCHULBERG: They just barged in.

MURROW: What are you fellows up to?

MURROW: There must have been a number of guests in the home, too.

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, Ed, of course there were some. Some of them were, you know, sort of dragged in. There were some very fine writers that came into our house, playwrights and novelists, who wrote to make enough money out of this low craft of movies to get back to something that they really started to do.

MURROW: Mrs. Schulberg, do you write, too, or are you partial to your sons' interests in science?

MRS. SCHULBERG: No, I neither write, Mr. Murrow, nor am I partial to my sons' interests in science. I'm like a great, I guess vessel, in which I'm fascinated by all the things they do and very much---

MURROW: There they are.

MRS. SCHULBERG: May I introduce my sons? This is Steven, Mr. Murrow, and this is David.

STEVEN: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Hi, Steven.

DAVID: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: David, how are you?

MRS. SCHULBERG: They just barged in.

MURROW: What are you fellows up to?

DAVID: We're going to the kitchen to make ourselves some snacks.

MR. SCHULBERG: It sounds familiar.

MURROW: It does, indeed.

MR. SCHULBERG: This is Steven and David.

MURROW: Right.

MRS. SCHULBERG: They'll say good night then and make their snacks.

BOYS: Good night.

MURROW: Good night, fellows. This is certainly a home of varied interests. Budd, I've read many of your boxing stories. How did you become a fight fan?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, I was sort of led to it very early. In those days in Hollywood, the Hollywood Legion Stadium on Friday night was the event. It was the social athletic event of the week, and my father was a fight fan, and so I just sort of went along with him. I was about 12 and I followed fights from about that time on. I got interested in our California fighters. I still sort of rise with pride to think of, you know, Jackie Gills, Rusty Callahan---

MURROW: Yes?

MR. SCHULBERG: I could go on with a long list of our California fighters, and I got to know them. In fact, over

DAVID: We're going to the kitchen to make ourselves some snacks.

MR. SCHULBERG: It sounds familiar.

MURROW: It does, indeed.

MR. SCHULBERG: This is Steven and David.

MURROW: Right.

MRS. SCHULBERG: They'll say good night then and make their snacks.

BOYS: Good night.

MURROW: Good night, fellows. This is certainly a home of varied interests. Budd, I've read many of your boxing stories. How did you become a fight fan?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, I was sort of led to it very early. In those days in Hollywood, the Hollywood Legion Stadium on Friday night was the event. It was the social athletic event of the week, and my father was a fight fan, and so I just sort of went along with him. I was about 12 and I followed fights from about that time on. I got interested in our California fighters. I still sort of rise with pride to think of, you know, Jackie Gills, Rusty Callahan---

MURROW: Yes?

MR. SCHULBERG: I could go on with a long list of our California fighters, and I got to know them. In fact, over my bed for many years, when I was just about Steven's and David's age, I had Rusty Callahan's gloves hanging over my bed.

MRS. SCHULBERG: Mr. Murrow, may I interrupt? Budd has quite a collection of fight prints. He only has a few of them here, but perhaps you'd like to back in the study and see the few---

MURROW: Good.

MRS. SCHULBERG: ---and perhaps your audience might even enjoy them.

MURROW: Let's do that. Can we go, Budd?

MR. SCHULBERG: All right, fine.

MURROW: Budd, what do you think of boxers and boxing today?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, Ed, you know, I start off sounding like a great fan. I think I am a fan, but I'm also ambivalent about boxing. I tried to write something about it. I don't think ever too well, but I think that there are many things wrong with it as well as right, and it's often bothered me that there's so much corruption in the sport of boxing, and that there has been in the past, control by racketeers, and there's been control through monopolies, and even lately I think television has hurt boxing in many ways too.

my bed for many years, when I was just about Steven's and David's age, I had Rusty Callahan's gloves hanging over my bed.

MRS. SCHULBERG: Mr. Murrow, may I interrupt? Budd has quite a collection of fight prints. He only has a few of them here, but perhaps you'd like to look in the study and see the few---

MURROW: Good.

MRS. SCHULBERG: ---and perhaps your audience might even enjoy them.

MURROW: Let's do that. Can we go, Budd?

MR. SCHULBERG: All right, fine.

MURROW: Budd, what do you think of boxers and boxing today?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, Ed, you know, I start off sounding like a great fan. I think I am a fan, but I'm also ambivalent about boxing. I tried to write something about it. I don't think ever too well, but I think that there are many things wrong with it as well as right, and it's often bothered me that there's so much corruption in the sport of boxing, and that there has been in the past, control by racketeers, and there's been control through monopolies, and even lately I think television has hurt boxing in many ways too.

MURROW: You mean bringing on young boys too fast? That sort of thing?

MR. SCHULBERG: Yes, I do, because now there's only one fight -- there's just this one fight a week that everybody watches, and a fighter will be a main eventer after 12 or 14 or 16 fights, when in the old days it would be 40 or 50, and they were much more experienced then than they are now. I think it's all part of a sort of a high pressure system that's working on boxing as it works on many other things. At the same time, as I say, I both love it and hate it. When I love it, I want to say that I love it, and when I hate it, I have tried to point out as best I could, where I think it's wrong, and often, in the past, I think it has been in the last 20 years, I think. There were many things wrong with it.

MURROW: Budd, if I may lead you to another form of combat, I would guess that your most memorable achievement to date was the book and the movie, "On The Waterfront". Do you agree?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, I truly don't think of it in quite that way. I don't think you or I, or anyone, sits down and thinks what is my most memorable experience? It was very gratifying to move toward a subject that you were really devoted to, and to believe in it, and then to find that other people MURROW: You mean bringing on young boys too fast? That sort of thing?

MR. SCHULBERG: Yes, I do, because now there's only one fight -- there's just this one fight a week that everybody watches, and a fighter will be a main eventer after 12 or 14 or 16 fights, when in the old days it would be 40 or 50, and they were much more experienced then than they are now. I think it's all part of a sort of a high pressure system that's working on boxing as it works on many other things. At the same time, as I say, I both love it and hate it. When I love it, I want to say that I love it, and when I hate it, I have tried to point out as best I could, where I think it's wrong, and often, in the past, I think it has been in the last 20 years, I think. There were many things wrong with it.

MURROW: Budd, if I may lead you to another form of combat, I would guess that your most memorable achievement to date was the book and the movie, "On The Waterfront". Do you agree?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, I truly don't think of it in quite that way. I don't think you or I, or anyone, sits down and thinks what is my most memorable experience? It was very gratifying to move toward a subject that you were really devoted to, and to believe in it, and then to find that other people also were responsive to it, and I'll make no bones about the fact that I was very that the picture "On The Waterfront" did as well as it did, and that people saw that picture, and that it went over as it was, and I was very pleased with that. It's because I think I said something about our country. The fact that we can touch on a subject, if we fight hard enough, and say something, and that the people will be there. I was pleased with that.

MURROW: Were you a little disappointed with the net result so far as the waterfront is concerned?

MR. SCHULBERG: Ed, in some ways I was, yes. I had hoped -- I think we should always hope too much. You know, I don't think it's a bad thing to hope too much. I had hoped that the picture would do a little more than it did to effect the waterfront, and I feel that the waterfront is not as improved or as changed as I would like to see it. Many of the conditions that we show in that picture, and in the book that I did, are still prevailing. There have been improvements, and I think the fact that you keep pressure on a subject has improved the waterfront, but still, and I hate to mention names, but sometimes in this life I think you have to mention names, and the ? are still on the West Side, and I know there's a very dangerous man called Accolitis.

also were responsive to it, and I'll make no bones about the fact that I was very that the picture "On The Waterfront" did as well as it did, and that people saw that picture, and that it went over as it was, and I was very pleased with that. It's because I think I said something about our country. The fact that we can touch on a subject, if we fight hard enough, and say something, and that the people will be there. I was pleased with that.

MURROW: Were you a little disappointed with the net result so far as the waterfront is concerned?

MR. SCHULBERG: Ed, in some ways I was, yes. I had hoped -- I think we should always hope too much. You know, I don't think it's a bad thing to hope too much. I had hoped that the picture would do a little more than it did to effect the waterfront, and I feel that the waterfront is not as improved or as changed as I would like to see it. Many of the conditions that we show in that picture, and in the book that I did, are still prevailing. There have been improvements, and I think the fact that you keep pressure on a subject has improved the waterfront, but still, and I hate to mention names, but sometimes in this life I think you have to mention names, and the are still on the West Side, and I know there's a very dangerous man called Accolitis.

He's still down there on Pier 32, and the piers down below, and until that situation is completely cleared up, I wouldn't feel that -- I would hate to say that our picture solved it. It didn't.

MURROW: It's never a mistake to hope too much. What a wonderful phrase. Mrs. Schulberg, this must be the room where Budd labors. Right?

MRS. SCHULBERG: Yes, that is true, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How close do you get to him when he's in production?

MRS. SCHULBERG: Well, as close as he wishes us to. In other words, it's a respect for privacy. When he wishes us to participate, sometimes he practically throws a manuscript in our lap and says, "Read it." You know? He wants editorial comment and attention, but otherwise we leave him alone to do it really in the way he would like to do it.

MURROW: Budd, at this stage in your career, what do you consider the best training ground for aspiring young writers?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, Ed, I wish I could say that I have found one. I don't think that there is one. Some people have come out of newspaper work, like Ernest Hemingway, who was a writer of newspaper articles once, and John O'Hara

He's still down there on Pier 32, and the piers down below, and until that situation is completely cleared up, I wouldn't feel that -- I would hate to say that our picture solved it. It didn't.

MURROW: It's never a mistake to hope too much. What a wonderful phrase. Mrs. Schulberg, this must be the room where Budd labors. Right?

MRS. SCHULBERG: Yes, that is true, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How close do you get to him when he's in production?

MRS. SCHULBERG: Well, as close as he wishes us to. In other words, it's a respect for privacy. When he wishes us to participate, sometimes he practically throws a manuscript in our lap and says, "Read it." You know? He wants editorial comment and attention, but otherwise we leave him alone to do it really in the way he would like to do it.

MURROW: Budd, at this stage in your career, what do you consider the best training ground for aspiring young writers?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, Ed, I wish I could say that I have found one. I don't think that there is one. Some people have come out of newspaper work, like Ernest Hemingway, who was a writer of newspaper articles once, and John O'Hara was, and you might say, well, of course, that's it, but I don't think there's any one way. I think it's mostly just living and looking and watching and trying to tell the truth as best you can. I wish I could tell you, or all writers in general, or myself, that there is a training ground. I don't think that there is.

MURROW: Just a case of writing and searching for the turth. It's as simple and difficult as that. Is that right, Budd?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, I'm a great believer in this, Ed: that if you try hard to try what you want to write, that very often people will be with you. In other words, I believe in trying to do what you want to do, and in many cases the people will be there, and sometimes they're not there, and as you know, I was disappointed that we didn't have as large an audience for that picture, but I think you just have to keep on trying along the line that you begin with.

MURROW: I suppose that's the secret to most things, isn't it? Thank you very much, Budd. Good night, Mrs. Schulberg. Thank you very much, and will you say good night to the boys, please?

MRS. SCHULBERG: Yes, we will, and good night, Mr. Murrow.

was, and you might say, well, of course, that's it, but I don't think there's any one way. I think it's mostly just living and looking and watching and trying to tell the truth as best you can. I wish I could tell you, or all writers in general, or myself, that there is a training ground. I don't think that there is.

MURROW: Just a case of writing and searching for the truth. It's as simple and difficult as that. Is that right, Budd?

MR. SCHULBERG: Well, I'm a great believer in this, Ed: that if you try hard to try what you want to write, that very often people will be with you. In other words, I believe in trying to do what you want to do, and in many cases the people will be there, and sometimes they're not there, and as you know, I was disappointed that we didn't have as large an audience for that picture, but I think you just have to keep on trying along the line that you begin with.

MURROW: I suppose that's the secret to most things, isn't it? Thank you very much, Budd. Good night, Mrs. Schulberg. Thank you very much, and will you say good night to the boys, please?

MRS. SCHULBERG: Yes, we will, and good night, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good night. Thank you very much.

MRS. SCHULBERG: Thank you.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Sarah Gibson Blanding right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Sarah Gibson Blanding, long recognized as one of the country's outstanding educators, is the first woman president in the 98-year history of Vassar College. Miss Blanding, whose ancestors fought against the British in the American Revolution, was born in Lexington, Kentucky; taught physical education for a time at the University of Kentucky, and at the ripe old age of 23, had already become dean of women there. Eventually she moved on to join the faculty of Cornell University, and in 1946 was installed as president of Vassar, the post she has held for the past 13 years.

Sarah Gibson Blanding and her sister live in this 65-year-old house, the official president's residence, on the Vassar campus in Poughkeepsie, New York.

Good evening, Miss Blanding.

MISS BLANDING: Good evening, Mr. Murrow. I'm terribly glad that you remembered to say that I was the first

MURROW: Good night. Thank you very much.

MRS. SCHULBERG: Thank you.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Sarah Gibson Blanding right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Sarah Gibson Blanding, long recognized as one of the country's outstanding educators, is the first woman president in the 98-year history of Vassar College. Miss Blanding, whose ancestors fought against the British in the American Revolution, was born in Lexington, Kentucky; taught physical education for a time at the University of Kentucky, and at the ripe old age of 23, had already become dean of women there. Eventually she moved on to join the faculty of Cornell University, and in 1946 was installed as president of Vassar, the post she has held for the past 13 years.

Sarah Gibson Blanding and her sister live in this 65-year-old house, the official president's residence, on the Vassar campus in Poughkeepsie, New York.

Good evening, Miss Blanding.

MISS BLANDING: Good evening, Mr. Murrow. I'm terribly glad that you remembered to say that I was the first woman president of Vassar. Not long ago I was introduced as the first president of Vassar, and this is a little hard to take.

MURROW: Well, Miss Blanding, living right on the campus as you do, it must go a long way toward keeping you young at heart.

MISS BLANDING: One couldn't live among 1400 beautiful and brainy girls without being young, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Miss Blanding, are there any problems in running a woman's college that, oh, say, wouldn't exist in a co-educational school?

MISS BLANDING: Well, interestingly enough, I thought when I got to be the president of a woman's college, that my football troubles were over for the rest of my life, but there were a hundred G.I.'s going to college at Vassar when I came, and my first major crisis was a football crisis when the Skidmore G.I.'s challenged the Vassar G.I.'s to a football game.

MURROW: Who won? Do you remember?

MISS BLANDING: I put my foot firmly down on it.

MURROW: Did you?

MISS BLANDING: I certainly did.

MURROW: Miss Blanding, you've been an educator woman president of Vassar. Not long ago I was introduced as the first president of Vassar, and this is a little hard to take.

MURROW: Well, Miss Blandting, living right on the campus as you do, it must go a long way toward keeping you young at heart.

MISS BLANDING: One couldn't live among 1400 beautiful and bratty girls without being young, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Miss Blandting, are there any problems in running a woman's college that, oh, say, wouldn't exist in a co-educational school?

MISS BLANDING: Well, interestingly enough, I thought when I got to be the president of a woman's college, that my football troubles were over for the rest of my life, but there were a hundred G.I.'s going to college at Vassar when I came, and my first major crisis was a football crisis when the Skidmore G.I.'s challenged the Vassar G.I.'s to a football game.

MURROW: Who won? Do you remember?

MISS BLANDING: I put my foot firmly down on it.

MURROW: Did you?

MISS BLANDING: I certainly did.

MURROW: Miss Blandting, you've been an educator for almost 40 years. Have young people changed much during that time?

MISS BLANDING: I don't think they've changed fundamentally, Mr. Murrow. Of course, the world has changed. We're living in an age of anxiety, and I think that young people are reflecting this anxiety. They certainly are marrying much younger, and having large and many children. Well, perhaps not large children, but many children. This means that when they get to be 30, 35, 40, their children will be in school, and we are rather interested that the pattern of women's lives may be changing. We think it's important, for example, for women to have something to do of a professional sort when their children have grown.

MURROW: What about the attitudes over just the past few years? Much change there?

MISS BLANDING: Well, I think this generation is probably more conformist than certainly the generation of the 30's were.

MURROW: Fewer inclined to revolt. Is that right?

MISS BLANDING: Yes, I think so.

MURROW: With the many problems of running a women's college, I imagine yours is pretty much a round-the-clock job, isn't it?

for almost 40 years. Have young people changed much during that time?

MISS BLANDING: I don't think they've changed fundamentally, Mr. Murrow. Of course, the world has changed. We're living in an age of anxiety, and I think that young people are reflecting this anxiety. They certainly are marrying much younger, and having large and many children. Well, perhaps not large children, but many children. This means that when they get to be 30, 35, 40, their children will be in school, and we are rather interested that the pattern of women's lives may be changing. We think it's important, for example, for women to have something to do of a professional sort when their children have grown.

MURROW: What about the attitudes over just the past few years? Much change there?

MISS BLANDING: Well, I think this generation is probably more conformist than certainly the generation of the 30's were.

MURROW: Fewer inclined to revolt. Is that right?

MISS BLANDING: Yes, I think so.

MURROW: With the many problems of running a women's college, I imagine yours is pretty much a round-the-clock job, isn't it?

MISS BLANDING: Yes, indeed, it is. You know, I'd never be able to run this job, the job itself, and run this house, if it were not for my sister. My sister not only runs the house, but she's a bird watcher; she's a mountain climber; she's a great person for family. Come on in, Ellen, over here, and be introduced to Mr. Murrow. This is my sister, Ellen, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Miss Ellen.

MISS ELLEN: How do you do, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: In running the Blanding household, are you ever called on to serve any of the traditional southern dishes?

MISS ELLEN: Well, Sarah and I serve the southern dishes more frequently when we are alone when the girls are out on Thursday. Then---

MISS BLANDING: Don't forget that I like old ham. You don't give it to me very often.

MISS ELLEN: Well, she also likes hominy grits and country sausage with a lot of red hot pepper in it and hush puppies, and soda bread.

MURROW: So do I. May I come some Thursday?

MISS ELLEN: Do. We'd be delighted to have you.

MURROW: Thank you. It's obvious that you both still

MISS BLANDING: Yes, indeed, it is. You know, I'd never be able to run this job, the job itself, and run this house, if it were not for my sister. My sister not only runs the house, but she's a bird watcher; she's a mountain climber; she's a great person for family. Come on in, Ellen, over here, and be introduced to Mr. Murrow. This is my sister, Ellen, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Miss Ellen.

MISS ELLEN: How do you do, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: In running the Blanding household, are you ever called on to serve any of the traditional southern dishes?

MISS ELLEN: Well, Sarah and I serve the southern dishes more frequently when we are alone when the girls are out on Thursday. Then---

MISS BLANDING: Don't forget that I like old ham. You don't give it to me very often.

MISS ELLEN: Well, she also likes hominy grits and country sausage with a lot of red hot pepper in it and hush puppies, and soda bread.

MURROW: So do I. May I come some Thursday?

MISS ELLEN: Do. We'd be delighted to have you.

MURROW: Thank you. It's obvious that you both still have a sentimental attachment toward your childhood days in the South.

MISS ELLEN: We surely do.

MISS BLANDING: Our grandfather was a lieutenant general on General Lee's staff. You might be interested in this certificate. It's a certificate of the Society of Cincinnati. My great-great grandfather, I think he was, was a charter member. It was an organziation of which the officers of the Revolution belonged. The interesting thing about it, however, is that it's signed by George Washington. You won't be able to see the signature because it's getting very dim and brown now, but it's an interesting document.

MURROW: It is, indeed. Miss Blanding, as a youngster did you have your sights set on a teaching career, or did you think you might perhaps do something else?

MISS BLANDING: I rather wanted to be a doctor, but we were very poor and so I had to go into teaching, You know, teachers' salaries in those days were very small, and so in the depression I even raised a crop of tobacco to get a little money. It was a beautiful crop, though. Goodness, people came from all around to see it, and I was determined to see it sold, and so I went in with the boy who had raised it.

MURROW: Yes?

have a sentimental attachment toward your childhood days in the South.

MISS ELLEN: We surely do.

MISS BLANDING: Our grandfather was a lieutenant general on General Lee's staff. You might be interested in this certificate. It's a certificate of the Society of Cincinnati. My great-great grandfather, I think he was, was a charter member. It was an organization of which the officers of the Revolution belonged. The interesting thing about it, however, is that it's signed by George Washington. You won't be able to see the signature because it's getting very dim and brown now, but it's an interesting document.

MURROW: It is, indeed. Miss Blanding, as a youngster did you have your sights set on a teaching career, or did you think you might perhaps do something else?

MISS BLANDING: I rather wanted to be a doctor, but we were very poor and so I had to go into teaching. You know, teachers' salaries in those days were very small, and so in the depression I even raised a crop of tobacco to get a little money. It was a beautiful crop, though. Goodness, people came from all around to see it, and I was determined to see it sold, and so I went in with the boy who had raised it.

MURROW: Yes?

MISS BLANDING: He went over for lunch and I saw this man walking up and down the breaks. I thought he was admiring the crop of tobacco. But his curiosity got the better of him, and he finally stuck his head in the cab door and said, "Lady, is your husband dead?"

MURROW: And now you're probably working as hard as you ever did in those earlier days.

MISS BLANDING: Yes, we work very hard all day long, and then, of course, we do a good deal of entertaining in this house. It's a simple house. We have a lot of groups of students come over. They sit all over the floor. This is the room in which we do more formal entertaining. I can assure you we don't serve hominy grits and sausage in this room.

This is a rather interesting silver bowl, Mr. Murrow. You know, we've always had many foreign students at Vassar. This bowl was given to one of our Japanese students who was here in the late 1890's. It was given to her because she had done such wonderful work in the Russo-Japanese War. She, in turn, gave it to Vassar. It's a very beautiful bowl, I think.

MURROW: It is, indeed. Miss Ellen, there must be many things around the house that former students have sent.

MISS ELLEN: Yes, there are; both students and

MISS BLANDING: He went over for lunch and I saw this man walking up and down the breaks. I thought he was admiring the crop of tobacco. But his curiosity got the better of him, and he finally stuck his head in the cab door and said, "Lady, is your husband dead?"

MURROW: And now you're probably working as hard as you ever did in those earlier days.

MISS BLANDING: Yes, we work very hard all day long, and then, of course, we do a good deal of entertaining in this house. It's a simple house. We have a lot of groups of students come over. They sit all over the floor. This is the room in which we do more formal entertaining. I can assure you we don't serve hominy grits and sausage in this room.

This is a rather interesting silver bowl, Mr. Murrow. You know, we've always had many foreign students at Vassar. This bowl was given to one of our Japanese students who was here in the late 1890's. It was given to her because she had done such wonderful work in the Russo-Japanese War. She, in turn, gave it to Vassar. It's a very beautiful bowl, I think.

MURROW: It is, indeed. Miss Allen, there must be many things around the house that former students have sent.

MISS ALLEN: Yes, there are; both students and alumnae. They have been very generous in giving us beautiful china, glassware, silver, furniture, rugs. One of our prized things is a beautiful Copenhagen lamp that has come from an alumna. They're very generous with us.

MURROW: Well, Miss Blanding, you're liable to run out of storage space after a while, aren't you?

MISS BLANDING: Not in this house. It's a very large house. I think if you'll excuse me, Ellen, I'll go and show them a few of the other rooms in the house.

This, as you've seen, is the living room. This is the hall. The house was built, you know, in the Victorian period, and it was very dark and ugly, but we've introduced a lot of color into it. Of course, students like color. This is the library in which we have about a third of our volumes.

This is a very prized possessinn of Vassar. It is from Matthew Vassar -- Matthew Vassar being the family, as you know.

MURROW: Yes.

MISS BLANDING: Matthew Vassar's own beer stein. There was time that we didn't mention the fact that Matthew Vassar was a brewer. It has on it a picture of the brewery, and on the other side a picture of Spring Side, his residence. It's about 110 years old, I should say.

alumnae. They have been very generous in giving us beautiful china, glassware, silver, furniture, rugs. One of our prized things is a beautiful Copenhagen lamp that has come from an alumna. They're very generous with us.

MURROW: Well, Miss Blandding, you're liable to run out of storage space after a while, aren't you?

MISS BLANDDING: Not in this house. It's a very large house. I think if you'll excuse me, Allen, I'll go and show them a few of the other rooms in the house.

This, as you've seen, is the living room. This is the hall. The house was built, you know, in the Victorian period, and it was very dark and ugly, but we've introduced a lot of color into it. Of course, students like color. This is the library in which we have about a third of our volumes.

This is a very prized possession of Vassar. It is from Matthew Vassar -- Matthew Vassar being the family, as you know.

MURROW: Yes.

MISS BLANDDING: Matthew Vassar's own beer stein. There was time that we didn't mention the fact that Matthew Vassar was a brewer. It has on it a picture of the brewery, and on the other side a picture of Spring Side, his residence. It's about 110 years old, I should say.

MURROW: Well, Miss Blanding, since the time of Matthew Vassar, the college has had a long and distinguished history. Has the educational system at Vassar changed much over the years?

MISS BLANDING: No, I think not. Of course, we've introduced new subjects like child study, but, essentially, the college has been a liberal arts college from its very beginning. Our students are taught to go back to sources. We use few textbooks. We give them a broad, general education, and then as they progress, they go into more depth of study.

MURROW: Well, the house you live in contains many memories of Vassar. I suppose it also reflects something of the Blanding family, too, doesn't it?

MISS BLANDING: Well, this is a rather interesting thing. This is a portable desk that belonged to my great-grandfather, who was chief justice of Pennsylvania from 1818 to 1853. He carried it around with him on his cases.

MURROW: Well, Miss Blanding, I suppose like most educators these days, I suppose you're concerned about the state of American education in general.

MISS BLANDING: Oh, yes. I think, Mr. Murrow, everybody is concerned about the state of education. Certainly all educators are.

MURROW: Well, Miss Blanding, since the time of Matthew Vassar, the college has had a long and distinguished history. Has the educational system at Vassar changed much over the years?

MISS BLANDING: No, I think not. Of course, we've introduced new subjects like child study, but, essentially, the college has been a liberal arts college from its very beginning. Our students are taught to go back to sources. We use few textbooks. We give them a broad, general education, and then as they progress, they go into more depth of study.

MURROW: Well, the house you live in contains many memories of Vassar. I suppose it also reflects something of the Blanding family, too, doesn't it?

MISS BLANDING: Well, this is a rather interesting thing. This is a portable desk that belonged to my great-grandfather, who was chief justice of Pennsylvania from 1818 to 1853. He carried it around with him on his cases.

MURROW: Well, Miss Blanding, I suppose like most educators these days, I suppose you're concerned about the state of American education in general.

MISS BLANDING: Oh, yes. I think, Mr. Murrow, everybody is concerned about the state of education. Certainly all educators are.

MURROW: Well, as you see it, where is our greatest weakness?

MISS BLANDING: I think I agree with Mr. Conant that we need to improve our secondary school system very greatly. We find that students come to college without sufficient mathematics; not knowing as much as they ought to know about English. Of course, we like them to have a good foreign language, and I think we need very much to think in terms of the improvement of our secondary education along with the improvement of our college education.

MURROW: If the secondary education is improved, that, in turn, would improve higher education. Is that right?

MISS BLANDING: I am sure it would.

MURROW: We often hear the term "liberal arts". What does that mean in the Vassar tradition?

MISS BLANDING: Well, liberal arts means training both in breadth and in depth. It means training not for a particular vocation, and I think women's colleges have been more successful than perhaps men's colleges because men's colleges so often have been high-pressured into teaching subjects with a professional content, or with a professional orientation. By and large, women's colleges have stuck to the general education. We, for example, here at Vassar, require MURROW: Well, as you see it, where is our greatest weakness?

MISS BLANDING: I think I agree with Mr. Conant that we need to improve our secondary school system very greatly. We find that students come to college without sufficient mathematics; not knowing as much as they ought to know about English. Of course, we like them to have a good foreign language, and I think we need very much to think in terms of the improvement of our secondary education along with the improvement of our college education.

MURROW: If the secondary education is improved, that, in turn, would improve higher education. Is that right?

MISS BLANDING: I am sure it would.

MURROW: We often hear the term "liberal arts". What does that mean in the Vassar tradition?

MISS BLANDING: Well, liberal arts means training both in breadth and in depth. It means training not for a particular vocation, and I think women's colleges have been more successful than perhaps men's colleges because men's colleges so often have been high-pressured into teaching subjects with a professional content, or with a professional orientation. By and large, women's colleges have stuck to the general education. We, for example, here at Vassar, require our students to have something in each of the four great areas: the arts, the sciences, the social sciences, the foreign language. Then we have one more qualification which we call historical development because we believe that every age builds on the other age, and that students should have a long view of things.

MURROW: Well, Miss Blanding, as a former physical education teacher, you must think pretty highly of sports. Is that right?

MISS BLANDING: Oh, yes, indeed. I'm a great swimmer. Well, I'm frequently charged with going in while the ice is still on the lake and being the last one to come out in the fall.

MURROW: What's the real key to improving education in this country today?

MISS BLANDING: I think the real key is to raise the level of expectancy. I'm just as sure as anything that as we expect young people to do better work, they will do the better work.

MURROW: As Budd Schulberg said, it is never a mistake to hope for too much.

MISS BLANDING: That's certainly true.

MURROW: Thank you very much, indeed, Miss Bland-

our students to have something in each of the four great areas: the arts, the sciences, the social sciences, the foreign language. Then we have one more qualification which we call historical development because we believe that every age builds on the other age, and that students should have a long view of things.

MURROW: Well, Miss Blanding, as a former physical education teacher, you must think pretty highly of sports. Is that right?

MISS BLANDING: Oh, yes, indeed. I'm a great swimmer. Well, I'm frequently charged with going in while the ice is still on the lake and being the last one to come out in the fall.

MURROW: What's the real key to improving education in this country today?

MISS BLANDING: I think the real key is to raise the level of expectancy. I'm just as sure as anything that as we expect young people to do better work, they will do the better work.

MURROW: As Budd Schulberg said, it is never a mistake to hope for too much.

MISS BLANDING: That's certainly true.

MURROW: Thank you very much, indeed, Miss Bland-

ing, for letting us come and visit you tonight, and will you say good night to Miss Ellen for us?

MISS BLANDING: I certainly shall, and thank you very much, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you very much. Good night.

I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll make our first live television visit to South Carolina when we call on former Secretary of State, James F. Byrnes and his wife in Columbia. Mr. Byrnes, now in retirement, at the age of 79, has probably held more varied positions in government than any public figure in our time.

Next week we'll also be calling on opera star Eleanor Stieber and her husband here in New York. In the past year Miss Stieber completed a tour of 15 Asian countries during the course of which she met and married Major Gordon Andrews, an information officer with the United States Army.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John

ing, for letting us come and visit you tonight, and will you say good night to Miss Ellen for us?

MISS BLANDING: I certainly shall, and thank you very much, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you very much. Good night.

I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll make our first live television visit to South Carolina when we call on former Secretary of State, James F. Byrnes and his wife in Columbia. Mr. Byrnes, now in retirement, at the age of 79, has probably held more varied positions in government than any public figure in our time.

Next week we'll also be calling on opera star Eleanor Steber and her husband here in New York. In the past year Miss Steber completed a tour of 15 Asian countries during the course of which she met and married Major Gordon Andrews, an information officer with the United States Army.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John

A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer, and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer, and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

MRS BLANKINGS: I certainly again, and thank you very much, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you very much. Good night.

I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll make our first live television visit to South Carolina when we call on former Secretary of State, James F. Byrnes and his wife in Columbia. Mr. Byrnes, now in retirement, at the age of 79, has probably held more varied positions in government than any public figure in our time.

Next week we'll also be calling on opera star Eleanor Steber and her husband here in New York. In the past year Miss Steber completed a tour of 15 Asian countries during the course of which she met and married Major Gordon Anderson, an information officer with the United States Army.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by Jesse

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Governor James F. Byrnes, and

Eleanor Steber

March 20, 1959 10:30 P.M.

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be going to Columbia, South Carolina, for a visit with former Secretary of State James F. Byrnes and his wife. We'll also be calling on opera singer Eleanor Steber and her husband, here in New York.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

[Commercial]

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Governor James F. Byrnes, and

Eleanor Steber

March 20, 1959 10:30 P.M.

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be going to Columbia, South Carolina, for a visit with former Secretary of State James F. Byrnes and his wife. We'll also be calling on opera singer Eleanor Steber and her husband, here in New York.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

[Commercial]

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE

224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK

Pioneer 6-5545

LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

MURROW: James F. Byrnes has held more high offices in the government of this country than anybody since the time of Thomas Jefferson. Starting as a court stenographer in his native South Carolina, James Byrnes became a congressman and a senator, was appointed to the Supreme Court by President Roosevelt, and Secretary of State by President Truman. And during World War II he was Economic Stabilizer, Director of War Mobilization, and Assistant President.

When he left Washington he entered his public life thus far as Governor of South Carolina. Governor Byrnes is now seventy-nine. Recently he looked back at almost a half century of public service in a most informative book called "All In One Lifetime."

Governor and Mrs. Byrnes now live in Columbia, South Carolina. Their white brick home is set in the midst of flourishing spruce trees, oak, dogwood, wisteria and, of course, magnolia.

Good evening, Mrs. Byrnes.

MRS. BYRNES: How do you do, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Governor.

BYRNES: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Tell me, who is in charge of the floral display that surrounds your home?

MURROW: James F. Byrnes has held more high offices in the government of this country than anybody since the time of Thomas Jefferson. Starting as a court steno-rpher in his native South Carolina, James Byrnes became a congressman and a senator, was appointed to the Supreme Court by President Roosevelt, and Secretary of State by President Truman. And during World War II he was Economic Stabilizer, Director of War Mobilization, and Assistant President.

When he left Washington he entered his public life thus far as Governor of South Carolina. Governor Byrnes is now seventy-nine. Recently he looked back at almost a half century of public service in a most informative book called "All In One Lifetime." Byrnes and his wife. We'll also be Governor and Mrs. Byrnes now live in Columbia, South Carolina. Their white brick home is set in the midst of flourishing spruce trees, oak, dogwood, wisteria and, of course, magnolia.

Good evening, Mrs. Byrnes.

MRS. BYRNES: How do you do, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Governor.

BYRNES: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Tell me, who is in charge of the floral display that surrounds your home?

BYRNES: I promptly answer Mrs. Byrnes.

MURROW: Mrs. Byrnes, have you completely adjusted yourself to the quiet life of a private citizen after all of your years in Washington and the Governor's mansion in Columbia?

MRS. BYRNES: Oh, yes, Mr. Murrow. I'm very happy to be in my own home and to have my own garden, because after fifty--almost fifty--years of traveling around and living in hotels and apartments it's awfully nice to be settled down. And I enjoy working in my garden always.

MURROW: Mrs. Byrnes, what is your gardening specialty?

MRS. BYRNES: Well, I've got camellias. As you see, we have lots of them all around. And besides camellias we do have azaleas and all the spring bulbs, and we have azaleas, and then the dogwood trees will be in bloom very soon. And my garden, as well as all over Columbia: the city is one big garden. It's perfectly beautiful. You should be there to see it.

MURROW: I wish I were there. Governor, now that you're no longer actively concerned with affairs of state, you must have at least a little free time for other interests.

BYRNES: Yes, but I---I keep busy all the time.

BYRNES: I promptly answer Mrs. Byrnes.

MURROW: Mrs. Byrnes, have you completely adjusted yourself to the quiet life of a private citizen after all of your years in Washington and the Governor's mansion in Columbia?

MRS. BYRNES: Oh, yes, Mr. Murrow. I'm very happy to be in my own home and to have my own garden, because after fifty--almost fifty- years of traveling around and living in hotels and apartments it's awfully nice to be settled down. And I enjoy working in my garden always.

MURROW: Mrs. Byrnes, what is your gardening specialty?

MRS. BYRNES: Well, I've got camellias. As you see, we have lots of them all around. And besides camellias we do have azaleas and all the spring bulbs, and we have azaleas, and then the dogwood trees will be in bloom very soon. And my garden, as well as all over Columbia: the city is one big garden. It's perfectly beautiful. You should be there to see it.

MURROW: I wish I were there. Governor, now that you're no longer actively concerned with affairs of state, you must have at least a little free time for other interests.

BYRNES: Yes, but I---I keep busy all the time.

As a matter of fact, I---all my life I've been interested in fishing. I wanted to own a boat. A few weeks ago I got hold of one and I look forward to some very fancy fishing this summer. And then I have another interest in the way of recreation. I stopped playing golf when Pearl Harbor was attacked but about a month ago I went back to it and I've---I've been doing pretty well.

MURROW: Well, that's a long layoff for any golfer. How's the game coming?

BYRNES: Oh, I play Civil War golf--out in sixty and back in sixty-five.

MURROW: Well, sir, I'm sure the local comments on your golf game are much milder than the barbs you were accustomed to receiving in political Washington.

BYRNES: You're surely right. But whenever a man enters public life he must expect, if he has convictions and the courage of his convictions, to become rather controversial. I think you could understand that better than most people.

MURROW: Yes, sir. Well, aside from the story you've told in your books, have you kept any material reminders of the good and the bad days?

BYRNES: Yes. I think about the best reminder I have is the collection of cartoons I have hung in my study.

As a matter of fact, I---all my life I've been interested in fishing. I wanted to own a boat. A few weeks ago I got hold of one and I look forward to some very fancy fishing this summer. And then I have another interest in the way of recreation. I stopped playing golf when Pearl Harbor was attacked but about a month ago I went back to it and I've---I've been doing pretty well.

MURROW: Well, that's a long layoff for any golfer. How's the game coming?

BYRNES: Oh, I play Civil War golf--out in sixty and back in sixty-five.

MURROW: Well, sir, I'm sure the local comments on your golf game are much milder than the barbs you were accustomed to receiving in political Washington.

BYRNES: You're surely right. But whenever a man enters public life he must expect, if he has convictions and the courage of his convictions, to become rather controversial. I think you could understand that better than most people.

MURROW: Yes, sir. Well, aside from the story you've told in your books, have you kept any material reminders of the good and the bad days?

BYRNES: Yes. I think about the best reminder I have is the collection of cartoons I have hung in my study.

Those cartoons carry me back to the days of my service with the Federal government.

MURROW: Could we see some of them, Governor?

BYRNES: Yes, I'd be delighted to show them to you.

MURROW: Governor---

BYRNES: If you'll excuse us.

MURROW: Governor, in reading "All In One Lifetime" I was particularly impressed with your view that the art of legislating is the art of intelligent compromise. How does one decide where to start compromising and where to end?

BYRNES: Well, I know of no hard and fast rules. The fact is that in all the relations of life it is necessary to compromise at times. I think that if we would agree there could be no worthwhile legislation without compromise, and I think that if husbands and wives did not make concessions we would have more divorces and less happiness.

MURROW: Well, sir, in the endless days when you were negotiating with the Russians--with Molotov and Gromyko and the others--did you ever find any spirit of compromise?

BYRNES: Oh, yes. The Russians will compromise with you but when you look at what you get out of the compromise you find you get nothing but experience. Any---any

Those cartoons carry me back to the days of my service with the Federal government.

MURROW: Could we see some of them, Governor?

BYRNES: Yes, I'd be delighted to show them to you.

MURROW: Governor---

BYRNES: If you'll excuse us.

MURROW: Governor, in reading "All In One Lifetime" I was particularly impressed with your view that the art of legislating is the art of intelligent compromise. How does one decide where to start compromising and where to end?

BYRNES: Well, I know of no hard and fast rules. The fact is that in all the relations of life it is necessary to compromise at times. I think that if we would agree there could be no worthwhile legislation without compromise, and I think that if husbands and wives did not make concessions we would have more divorces and less happiness.

MURROW: Well, sir, in the endless days when you were negotiating with the Russians--with Molotov and Gromyko and the others--did you ever find any spirit of compromise?

BYRNES: Oh, yes. The Russians will compromise with you but when you look at what you get out of the compromise you find you get nothing but experience. Any---any promises made in the compromise will be violated by the Soviets. If I might do so, I would point to this cartoon picturing Molotov, Bevin, and me, when the Paris peace conference was held. We grew old trying to agree on procedures. We did not spend the time discussing the merits of the issues but only discussing what we would discuss at the conference. Negotiating with the Russians is something out of this world. I never would want to undertake it again.

MURROW: Well, Governor, on the basis of your long experience do you see any merit in the current Soviet charge that our position on Berlin is inflexible?

BYRNES: No, I do not. I lose patience with those who, in this country who seemingly agree with that statement. The fact is that after the cessation of hostilities the Soviets claimed the reason for their maintenance of troops in the Balkan States and Poland was their fear of German rearmament.

MURROW: Yes, sir.

BYRNES: And because of that excuse--that's all it was--with the approval of the President I offered to Stalin a forty-year treaty under which the Four Powers would keep Germany disarmed. Mr. Stalin agreed to it, but a few months later rejected it. They were afraid that if we stayed in Europe for forty years, or forty days--- promises made in the compromise will be violated by the Soviets. If I might do so, I would point to this cartoon picturing Molotov, Bevin, and me, when the Paris peace conference was held. We grew old trying to agree on procedures. We did not spend the time discussing the merits of the issues but only discussing what we would discuss at the conference. Negotiating with the Russians is something out of this world. I never would want to undertake it again.

MURROW: Well, Governor, on the basis of your long experience do you see any merit in the current Soviet charge that our position on Berlin is inflexible?

BYRNES: No, I do not. I lose patience with those who, in this country who seemingly agree with that statement. The fact is that after the cessation of hostilities the Soviets claimed the reason for their maintenance of troops in the Balkan States and Poland was their fear of German rearmament.

MURROW: Yes, sir.

BYRNES: And because of that excuse--that's all it was--with the approval of the President I offered to Stalin a forty-year treaty under which the Four Powers would keep Germany disarmed. Mr. Stalin agreed to it, but a few months later rejected it. They were afraid that if we stayed in Europe for forty years, or forty days---

MURROW: Yes.

BYRNES: ---they would never get what they want---wanted: control of all of Germany. And when they now urge the President to force West Germany to merge with East Germany they have the same motive. They want the western governments out of Germany so that they can control all Germany.

MURROW: Governor Byrnes, I was very much impressed with that portion of your book that revealed the vast areas of government you supervised when you were Assistant President for Mr. Roosevelt. What are your thoughts on an official assistant president?

BYRNES: Well, knowing how busy I was during all of the war making decisions for the President in matters delegated to me by him, I know there is a need for an assistant president. But I think the Vice-President of the United States ought to be that assistant president. He ought to have an office in the White House. He would be in training on the job. Now he's only a waiter--waiting around the Capitol to see if there's a tie vote during the sessions of Congress---

MURROW: Yes.

BYRNES: ---and he can break the tie. When the Congress is not in session, waiting around the capital to see if the President comes through the day. I think he ought to

MURROW: Yes.

BYRNES: ---they would never get what they want---wanted: control of all of Germany. And when they now urge the President to force West Germany to merge with East Germany they have the same motive. They want the western governments out of Germany so that they can control all Germany.

MURROW: Governor Byrnes, I was very much impressed with that portion of your book that revealed the vast areas of government you supervised when you were Assistant President for Mr. Roosevelt. What are your thoughts on an official assistant president?

BYRNES: Well, knowing how busy I was during all of the war making decisions for the President in matters delegated to me by him, I know there is a need for an assistant president. But I think the Vice-President of the United States ought to be that assistant president. He ought to have an office in the White House. He would be in training on the job. Now he's only a waiter--waiting around the Capitol to see if there's a tie vote during the sessions of Congress---

MURROW: Yes.

BYRNES: ---and he can break the tie. When the Congress is not in session, waiting around the capital to see if the President comes through the day. I think he ought to be in the White House, and be so acquainted with all of the policies of the President that he'd be ready to take over the job.

MURROW: Well, sir, in another part of your book you described how, when you were Governor of South Carolina, you took action to improve the education of negro children. What effect has that had?

BYRNES: I think it had a very salutary effect. We were living then under the doctrine of separate but equal facilities. I thought they ought to have facilities that were, in fact, equal. I urged a sales tax and the issuance of bonds. The legislature agreed. Of the first $75 million spent on that program of construction, 70% went to schools for colored students. And today in every school district are good elementary schools and good high schools for colored students.

It has had a wonderful effect, I think, upon our relations and I believe when other states are having trouble and we do not have any disorder and we have no lawsuits pending, that great credit is due to the leaders of the colored people. They have contributed to that happy result.

MURROW: Governor Byrnes, I imagine that not very many Americans know that since you left active politics you made another career, financing a college education for orphans.

be in the White House, and be so acquainted with all of the policies of the President that he'd be ready to take over the job.

MURROW: Well, sir, in another part of your book you described how, when you were Governor of South Carolina, you took action to improve the education of negro children. What effect has that had?

BYRNES: I think it had a very salutary effect. We were living then under the doctrine of separate but equal facilities. I thought they ought to have facilities that were, in fact, equal. I urged a sales tax and the issuance of bonds. The legislature agreed. Of the first $75 million spent on that program of construction, 70% went to schools for colored students. And today in every school district are good elementary schools and good high schools for colored students. It has had a wonderful effect, I think, upon our relations and I believe when other states are having trouble and we do not have any disorder and we have no lawsuits pending, that great credit is due to the leaders of the colored people. They have contributed to that happy result.

MURROW: Governor Byrnes, I imagine that not very many Americans know that since you left active politics you made another career, financing a college education for orphans.

How is that project getting on?

BYRNES: Wonderful. It---the money from the publication of the book "Speaking Frankly" was devoted to that foundation for the education of---college education of needy orphans. Annually I receive contributions from a number of good friends. As a result, to date we have been able to assist 136 boys and girls to receive a college education. Because we have been selling quite a number of "All In One Lifetime"--more than 20,000 of them--this week we made twenty-five additional awards so that next session we will have assisted 160-some.

MURROW: Do you keep in fairly close touch with them?

BYRNES: Oh, yes. We keep in touch because they're orphans. We try to take the place of the deceased parents; we receive their reports--my secretary, Miss Conner, helps me go through them; we flatter them if they do good and we censure them if they are not doing good. It's---more valuable than the financial aid is the personal interest we try to show in them.

MURROW: This must be a source of great pleasure and pride to both you and Mrs. Byrnes.

BYRNES: Nothing like it in our lives. It really

How is that project getting on?

BYRNES: Wonderful. It---the money from the publication of the book "Speaking Frankly" was devoted to that foundation for the education of---college education of needy orphans. Annually I receive contributions from a number of good friends. As a result, to date we have been able to assist 136 boys and girls to receive a college education. Because we have been selling quite a number of "All In One Lifetime"--more than 20,000 of them--this week we made twenty-five additional awards so that next session we will have assisted 160-some.

MURROW: Do you keep in fairly close touch with them?

BYRNES: Oh, yes. We keep in touch because they're orphans. We try to take the place of the deceased parents: we receive their reports--my secretary, Miss Conner, helps me go through them; we flatter them if they do good and we censure them if they are not doing good. It's---more valuable than the financial aid is the personal interest we try to show in them.

MURROW: This must be a source of great pleasure and pride to both you and Mrs. Byrnes.

BYRNES: Nothing like it in our lives. It really has given us pleasure and we're happy to have these youngsters show such---show us such acts of kindness. We are always receiving letters from them from all over the world, and I believe that it is the best thing that we have done in our lives.

MURROW: I'm sure it must be a source of great satisfaction. Mrs. Byrnes?

MRS. BYRNES: Yes, Mr. Murrow?

MURROW: I'm sure that your adopted youngsters start families and give you any number of adopted grandchildren. How many are there in all?

MRS. BYRNES: Well, I can't tell you exactly how many we have right now. You know, with a number of young couples like that the score changes constantly. But we're very happy to have---always hear from them and they're very good about writing us and sending us pictures of the babies as they come along, and as Mr. Byrnes has said, that that has given us more pleasure than anything we've ever done in our lives and we just feel that it's a great privilege to have been able to do this for these young people.

MURROW: It must be. Governor, if you had it to do all over again, you wouldn't hesitate would you?

BYRNES: Not for a second. I---I really had, has given us pleasure and we're happy to have these youngsters show such---show us such acts of kindness. We are always receiving letters from them from all over the world, and I believe that it is the best thing that we have done in our lives.

MURROW: I'm sure it must be a source of great satisfaction, Mrs. Byrnes?

MRS. BYRNES: Yes, Mr. Murrow?

MURROW: I'm sure that your adopted youngsters start families and give you any number of adopted grandchildren. How many are there in all?

MRS. BYRNES: Well, I can't tell you exactly how many we have right now. You know, with a number of young couples like that the score changes constantly. But we're very happy to have---always hear from them and they're very good about writing us and sending us pictures of the babies as they come along, and as Mr. Byrnes has said, that that has given us more pleasure than anything we've ever done in our lives and we just feel that it's a great privilege to have been able to do this for these young people.

MURROW: It must be. Governor, if you had it to do all over again, you wouldn't hesitate would you?

BYRNES: Not for a second. I---I really had,

in writing this book, the hope that in writing it I might encourage young men to devote their time and their energies to public service. I really believe, as I wrote in the last paragraph, that Tolstoy was right when he said that the sole meaning of life is to serve humanity.

MURROW: Thank you, sir, very much indeed; and thank you, Mrs. Byrnes, for letting us come tonight. Good night, sir. Good night, Mrs. Byrnes.

MRS. BYRNES: Good night.

BYRNES: Delighted to have you.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Eleanor Steber and her husband, right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Eleanor Steber is widely known in this country, and throughout much of the Western world, as one of the leading sopranos of the Metropolitan Opera Company. But in the Far East where she toured a little over a year ago, she is now known as the "Primitive Donna" in Saigon and in Hong Kong as "Number One Sing-Song Girl U.S.A."--both descriptions being a personal compliment from many who had never seen or heard an American opera star before.

While in Indo China Miss Steber was introduced in writing this book, the hope that in writing it I might encourage young men to devote their time and their energies to public service. I really believe, as I wrote in the last paragraph, that Tolstoy was right when he said that the sole meaning of life is to serve humanity.

MURROW: Thank you, sir, very much indeed; and thank you, Mrs. Byrnes, for letting us come tonight. Good night, sir. Good night, Mrs. Byrnes.

MRS. BYRNES: Good night.

BYRNES: Delighted to have you.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Eleanor Steber and her husband, right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Eleanor Steber is widely known in this country, and throughout much of the Western world, as one of the leading sopranos of the Metropolitan Opera Company. But in the Far East where she toured a little over a year ago, she is now known as the "Primitive Donna" in Saigon and in Hong Kong as "Number One Sing-Song Girl U.S.A."--both descriptions being a personal compliment from many who had never seen or heard an American opera star before.

While in Indo China Miss Steber was introduced to an Army information officer stationed there, and now she and Major Gordon G. Andrews are husband and wife. When they're in New York City, Eleanor Steber and her husband, Major Andrews, stay in a studio apartment in this building in mid-town Manhattan only a few blocks away from the Metropolitan Opera House. They also have a home on Long Island.

'Evening, Eleanor.

STEBER: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: 'Evening, Major.

ANDREWS: Fine, thanks. I imagine that you must rather look forward to an occasional evening away from the opera when you can just relax and don't have to sing?

STEBER: Well, I certainly look forward to those evenings and I have been looking forward to this one especially. As far as singing is concerned, you know, Ed, I sing all the time. As a matter of fact, I've been known to sing at the drop of a hat--and I've gotten quite a collection that way.

MURROW: I've heard that sometimes you even sing in a taxicab. Is that right?

STEBER: Yes, I think I am---I have the distinction of singing to more taxicab drivers in New York than---City than any other singer.

MURROW: Well the cab driver who gets tied up in to an Army information officer stationed there, and now she and Major Gordon G. Andrews are husband and wife. When they're in New York City, Eleanor Steber and her husband, Major Andrews, stay in a studio apartment in this building in mid-town Manhattan only a few blocks away from the Metropolitan Opera House. They also have a home on Long Island.

STEBER: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Evening, Major.

ANDREWS: Fine, thanks. I imagine that you must rather look forward to an occasional evening away from the opera when you can just relax and don't have to sing?

STEBER: Well, I certainly look forward to those evenings and I have been looking forward to this one especially. As far as singing is concerned, you know, Ed, I sing all the time. As a matter of fact, I've been known to sing at the drop of a hat--and I've gotten quite a collection that way.

MURROW: I've heard that sometimes you even sing in a taxicab. Is that right?

STEBER: Yes, I think I am---I have the distinction of singing to more taxicab drivers in New York than---City than any other singer.

MURROW: Well the cab driver who gets tied up in traffic and has you as a passenger can almost save himself the price of admission, can't he?

STEBER: Well, I have been known to get almost through a complete opera between Idlewild and New York.

MURROW: Do you sing much at home?

STEBER: Oh, yes. I sing all the time really, I think.

MURROW: Major Andrews, any complaints from the neighbors?

ANDREWS: No, not at all, Ed. As a matter of fact, I think that if we were to open the door we'd find some watching and listening.

MURROW: Well, Major, your Army duties and Eleanor's traveling must frequently keep you apart; does it?

ANDREWS: Well, no, actually they don't although I must admit just before we were married I said to Eleanor, "Now, I definitely am not going to follow you all around the United States nor around the world," and then of course the next day I got on a plane and I haven't missed a performance.

MURROW: Tell me, were you an opera fan before you met Eleanor?

ANDREWS: No, Ed, as a matter of fact I'll tell you: I probably had the greatest concentrated education in traffic and has you as a passenger can almost save himself the price of admission, can't he?

STEBER: Well, I have been known to get almost through a complete opera between Idlewild and New York.

MURROW: Do you sing much at home?

STEBER: Oh, yes. I sing all the time really, I think.

MURROW: Major Andrews, any complaints from the neighbors?

ANDREWS: No, not at all, Ed. As a matter of fact, I think that if we were to open the door we'd find some watching and listening.

MURROW: Well, Major, your Army duties and Eleanor's traveling must frequently keep you apart; does it?

ANDREWS: Well, no, actually they don't although I must admit just before we were married I said to Eleanor, "Now, I definitely am not going to follow you all around the United States nor around the world," and then of course the next day I got on a plane and I haven't missed a performance.

MURROW: Tell me, were you an opera fan before you met Eleanor?

ANDREWS: No, Ed, as a matter of fact I'll tell you: I probably had the greatest concentrated education in the field of opera of any individual during the past year. I must say, however, of course I'm the No. 1 fan of Eleanor Steber. Let me give you an example of what I'm talking about. This is our study here and this, of course, is the desk where Eleanor does much of her work. And over here is mine: I have the opportunity of taping much of the work that Eleanor does both on radio and television. It's really a very great pleasure.

STEBER: Ed, you know we have quite a number of souvenirs from our trips and I don't know whether you happened to notice this one, but it is a ---

MURROW: Yes

STEBER: ---lovely screen, a Hong Kong screen, a Chinese screen that I bought in Hong Kong. It's the largest souvenir that I brought back.

MURROW: It's beautiful.

STEBER: It is...as you know...a...chances are the world tour that I made was quite a exciting, wonderful trip. I think I have the distinction of being the first European singer--first Western singer--to go on a long, extended tour of thirty-three concerts in three and a half months in seventeen countries throughout the world.

MURROW: Eleanor, those singing tours must take the field of opera of any individual during the past year. I must say, however, of course I'm the No. 1 fan of Eleanor Steber. Let me give you an example of what I'm talking about. This is our study here and this, of course, is the desk where Eleanor does much of her work. And over here is mine: I have the opportunity of taping much of the work that Eleanor does both on radio and television. It's really a very great pleasure.

STEBER: Ed, you know we have quite a number of souvenirs from our trips and I don't know whether you happened to notice this one, but it is a ----an the door we'd

MURROW: Yes

STEBER: ---lovely screen, a Hong Kong screen, a Chinese screen that I bought in Hong Kong. It's the largest souvenir that I brought back.

MURROW: It's beautiful.

STEBER: It is...as you know...a...chances are the world tour that I made was quite a exciting, wonderful trip. I think I have the distinction of being the first European singer--first Western singer--to go on a long, extended tour of thirty-three concerts in three and a half months in seven-teen countries throughout the world.

MURROW: Eleanor, those singing tours must take a lot out of you.

STEBER: Well, this was a really, really strenuous trip. We were going constantly and it was really rugged. Of course the way I kept up my strength was by eating. I assure you that when you sing an opera or a concert that it takes as much energy as it does a man to dig a ditch, and you can't do that on a lettuce sandwich. So I go for the meat and the potatoes.

MURROW: Tell me, who's the cook in the family?

ANDREWS: She is.

STEBER: He is.

ANDREWS: Well, as a matter of fact, Ed, Eleanor really is a magnificent cook. And her German background provides her the ability to be able to prepare marvelous German meals,and to say nothing of this magnificent West Virginia fried chicken.

STEBER: And you should taste Gordon's wonderful gumbo creole. It is magnificent.

MURROW: Your trip to Asia must have been exciting. Did you get to do very much sightseeing?

STEBER: My sightseeing had to be limited because I was making side trips in order to get to more local people than I was in the usual concerts that were already set for a lot out of you.

STEBER: Well, this was a really, really strenuous trip. We were going constantly and it was really rugged. Of course the way I kept up my strength was by eating. I assure you that when you sing an opera or a concert that it takes as much energy as it does a man to dig a ditch, and you can't do that on a lettuce sandwich. So I go for the meat and the potatoes.

MURROW: Tell me, who's the cook in the family?

ANDREWS: She is.

STEBER: He is.

ANDREWS: Well, as a matter of fact, Ed, Eleanor really is a magnificent cook. And her German background provides her the ability to be able to prepare marvelous German meals, and to say nothing of this magnificent West Virginia fried chicken.

STEBER: And you should taste Gordon's wonderful gumbo creole. It is magnificent.

MURROW: Your trip to Asia must have been exciting. Did you get to do very much sightseeing?

STEBER: My sightseeing had to be limited because I was making side trips in order to get to more local people than I was in the usual concerts that were already set for me. And, so I had to go to places like University of Dacca and do lectures and things of that sort. So that it generally doesn't---I saw a lot of things but in the nature of duty, as it were.

MURROW: Eleanor, that picture behind you: is that your way of relaxing offstage?

STEBER: Well, horseback riding is one of my hobbies but that picture is actually a picture of me as Minnie, the Girl of the Golden West. It was taken in Florence, Italy, when I did it a few years ago and it is one of my favorite roles. I am going to do it in Denver and Red Rock this summer and who knows, maybe some one of these days I'll be riding onto the Metropolitan Opera stage as Minnie.

MURROW: I was just wondering how, with your impressive list of roles, you happened to miss that one.

STEBER: Well, I don't know, but I'd like to show you a collection of figurines that I've gotten together for some of my roles.

Oh, but before I would like to introduce you to a member of our family. Pocco, come here, look here. I want you to meet Pocco, our wonder dog. You know, he's a thespian. He's been in opera too.

MURROW: Has he?

me. And, so I had to go to places like University of Decca and do lectures and things of that sort. So that it generally doesn't---I saw a lot of things but in the nature of duty, as it were. The way I kept up my strength was by eating. I assure you that when I was a child, and you can't do a dish, and you can't do a dish, and you can't do a dish

STEBER: As a matter of fact, he did---Here, boy. Say hello to Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Hello, Pocco.

STEBER: He did Rosenkavalier and stole the scene from the tenor. Over here I have some figurines of characters that---some of my roles. Here's (indistinct - operatic roles)

Here I have a portrait done by Mr. Bill Fields of Fayetteville, North Carolina, of myself as ? in Cosi Fan Tutti.

MURROW: That's lovely. Eleanor, of the many roles you've sung, which is your favorite?

STEBER: Well, the favorite role is the one that I am doing at the present moment and speaking of that, would you like to have an impromptu concert?

MURROW: Very much.

STEBER: Well, you know my most recent role has been Marie in---

MURROW: Yes.

STEBER: ---at the Met last week at the premiere, and while I've been studying the part it also seems that Pocco has been learning the part too. Pocco, would you like to play some [indistinct] for me? [Steber sings] Bravo.

MURROW: [Laughter] Bravo.

STEBER: As a matter of fact, he did---Here, boy. Say hello to Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Hello, Pocco.

STEBER: He did Rosenkavalier and stole the scene from the tenor. Over here I have some figurines of characters that---some of my roles. Here's

Here I have a portrait done by Mr. Bill Fields of Fayetteville, North Carolina, of myself as ? in Cosi Fan Tutti.

MURROW: That's lovely. Eleanor, of the many roles you've sung, which is your favorite?

STEBER: Well, the favorite role is the one that I am doing at the present moment and speaking of that, would you like to have an impromptu concert?

MURROW: Very much.

STEBER: Well, you know my most recent role has been Marie in---

MURROW: Yes.

STEBER: ---at the Met last week at the premiere, and while I've been studying the part it also seems that Pocco has been learning the part too. Pocco, would you like to play some [indistinct] for me? [Steber sings] Bravo.

MURROW: [laughter] Bravo.

STEBER: Caviar afterwards, you know.

MURROW: Bravo. Very unusual. Tell me, does Pocco play by ear?

STEBER: I think he plays by eye because he always likes to have me turn the pages. Sometimes he plays duets with himself with all four paws.

MURROW: He certainly creates a different sound. Incidentally, to get back to your tour for a moment. There's quite a difference between Oriental music and the music we are accustomed to hearing in our part of the world. Did that cause you any difficulty?

STEBER: It gave me some reason to wonder what I should do about interesting the audiences in the Orient, so the only thing that I could discover was to perhaps try to bridge the gap by singing some arias and songs in their language or some of their folk songs. So that when I was in Japan I sang Japanese folk songs, and I sang Mandarin folk songs; and where I could not sing the language I learned many of the stock phrases so that at least we were able to speak with them.

And of course this is one of the important things, I believe, in contacting and making a contact--a human contact--with the people on the other side of the world is to STEEER: Cavier afterwards, you know.

MURROW: Bravo. Very unusual. Tell me, does Pocco play by ear?

STEEER: I think he plays by eye because he always likes to have me turn the pages. Sometimes he plays duets with himself with all four paws.

MURROW: He certainly creates a different sound. Incidentally, to get back to your tour for a moment. There's quite a difference between Oriental music and the music we are accustomed to hearing in our part of the world. Did that cause you any difficulty?

STEEER: It gave me some reason to wonder what I should do about interesting the audiences in the Orient, so the only thing that I could discover was to perhaps try to bridge the gap by singing some arias and songs in their language or some of their folk songs. So that when I was in Japan I sang Japanese folk songs, and I sang Mandarin folk songs; and where I could not sing the language I learned many of the stock phrases so that at least we were able to speak with them.

And of course this is one of the important things, I believe, in contacting and making a contact--a human contact--with the people on the other side of the world is to give them a feeling that you really want to learn to know about them at the same time that they are learning to know about you.

MURROW: Major Andrews, will you say that Eleanor proved herself a fairly good American ambassador?

ANDREWS: Well I'd say an excellent one, Ed, and I think that the work she did on her tour was simply magnificent. Of course, that brings me into the subject dearest to our heart and that is we plan to make another trip. We had the wonderful opportunity last week to speak at the White House with President Eisenhower on this subject, and that is the subject of the people-to-people program with which I know you're familiar.

MURROW: Yes, I am.

ANDREWS: And of course, we feel that every American is a diplomat and every American is an individual public relations representative and as such, when they go overseas they carry with them the good will of the United States, and they carry with them something which is very dear and that is that they must behave and act in the manner in which we want them to act. And that goes for members of the military; it goes for the secretary who saved up all of her life to go to Europe; and it even goes for opera singers.

give them a feeling that you really want to learn to know about them at the same time that they are learning to know about you.

MURROW: Major Andrews, will you say that Eleanor proved herself a fairly good American ambassador?

ANDREWS: Well I'd say an excellent one, Ed, and I think that the work she did on her tour was simply magnificent. Of course, that brings me into the subject dearest to our heart and that is we plan to make another trip. We had the wonderful opportunity last week to speak at the White House with President Eisenhower on this subject, and that is the subject of the people-to-people program with which I know you're familiar.

MURROW: Yes, I am.

ANDREWS: And of course, we feel that every American is a diplomat and every American is an individual public relations representative and as such, when they go overseas they carry with them the good will of the United States, and they carry with them something which is very dear and that is that they must behave and act in the manner in which we want them to act. And that goes for members of the military; it goes for the secretary who saved up all of her life to go to Europe; and it even goes for opera singers.

STEBER: I hope we can make that trip, Ed, in the very near future; and this time we want to extend it much, much farther along. And, of course, we intend to go back to that romantic place, Saigon, because that's where we met.

MURROW: Well, I hope you have much luck and a very pleasant trip. Eleanor, just for the fun of it: have you ever been asked by your friends to break into a little rock and roll?

STEBER: Oh Ed, I don't dig that very well.

MURROW: You don't.

STEBER: But I do jitterbug a little, and I do a mean Charleston.

MURROW: Well, you wouldn't like to try a little Charleston for us right now, would you?

STEBER: Oh, oh well, maybe sometime later on.

MURROW: When we come back again.

STEBER: Thank you.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Eleanor. Thank you, Major.

ANDREWS: Good night, and thank you.

STEBER: It's been so nice for you to be with us.

MURROW: Good luck on that next trip to the Orient.

STEBER: I hope we can make that trip, Ed, in the very near future; and this time we want to extend it much, much farther along. And, of course, we intend to go back to that romantic place, Saigon, because that's where we met.

MURROW: Well, I hope you have much luck and a very pleasant trip. Eleanor, just for the fun of it: have you ever been asked by your friends to break into a little rock and roll?

STEBER: Oh Ed, I don't dig that very well.

MURROW: You don't.

STEBER: But I do jitterbug a little, and I do a mean Charleston.

MURROW: Well, you wouldn't like to try a little Charleston for us right now, would you?

STEBER: Oh, oh well, maybe sometime later on.

MURROW: When we come back again.

STEBER: Thank you.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Eleanor. Thank you, Major.

ANDREWS: Good night, and thank you.

STEBER: It's been so nice for you to be with us.

MURROW: Good luck on that next trip to the Orient.

ANDREWS: Thank you, Ed.

STEBER: Thank you very much.

MURROW: Thank you again for letting us come. Good night.

I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests, right after a word from Revlon.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Next Friday night I'll be in London, so I've asked my good friend Audrey Meadows, who was once a guest on PERSON TO PERSON, to sit in for me. Miss Meadows will visit with sports columnist Jimmy Cannon, a veteran newspaperman who has also served as a foreign correspondent. Miss Meadows will also call on Josh Logan and his wife. Mr. Logan, who won a Pulitzer Prize for directing and producing South Pacific, has been closely associated with a number of other Hollywood and Broadway hits, among them Bus Stop, On Borrowed Time, and the current play, The World of Suzie Wong.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

[Credits]

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John Aaron and Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

ANDREWS: Thank you, Ed.

STEBER: Thank you very much.

MURROW: Thank you again for letting us come. Good night.

I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests, right after a word from Revlon.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Next Friday night I'll be in London, so I've asked my good friend Audrey Meadows, who was once a guest on PERSON TO PERSON, to sit in for me. Miss Meadows will visit with sports columnist Jimmy Cannon, a veteran newspaperman who has also served as a foreign correspondent. Miss Meadows will also call on Josh Logan and his wife. Mr. Logan, who won a Pulitzer Prize for directing and producing South Pacific, has been closely associated with a number of other Hollywood and Broadway hits, among them Bus Stop, On Borrowed Time, and the current play, The World of Suzie Wong.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

[Credits]

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John Aaron and Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with AUDREY MEADOWS

Guests: Jimmy Cannon, and

Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Logan

March 27, 1959 - 10:30 PM EST

MEADOWS: Good evening. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON, and I'm Audrey Meadows, sitting in for Ed Murrow tonight while he's away in England.

Two friends of mine, sportswriter Jimmy Cannon, and producer Joshua Logan, are waiting for us at home. We'll be calling on them right after a word from Revlon.

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with AUDREY MEADOWS

Guests: Jimmy Cannon, and

Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Logan

March 27, 1959 - 10:30 PM EST

MEADOWS: Good evening. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON, and I'm Audrey Meadows, sitting in for Ed Murrow tonight while he's away in England.

Two friends of mine, sportswriter Jimmy Cannon, and producer Joshua Logan, are waiting for us at home. We'll be calling on them right after a word from Revlon.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE

224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK

Pioneer 6-5545

LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

(Commercial)

MEADOWS: The only thing more colorful than the sports column that Jimmy Cannon writes is Jimmy Cannon himself. An introduction of Jimmy in his own familiar second person style might go something like this: You're Jimmy Cannon. You were born and brought up in a tough tenement section of New York City. You had one year of high school, but you didn't stop learning. You were a copy boy at 16. You learned the news business from the bottom up. You were Sergeant Jimmy Cannon, combat correspondent, in the war. You became a sports writer who left to report another war, Korea. You're now a syndicated columnist for the NEW YORK JOURNAL AMERICAN and King Features. You're a confirmed bachelor. You gave up hotel living a year ago to establish your first permanent home in that tall building on the west side of Central Park here in New York.

Good evening, Jimmy.

CANNON: Good evening, Audrey, and welcome to my humble lodgings.

MEADOWS: Well, thank you. I'm delighted to visit with you.

CANNON: Well, it's a small place, but any place I hang my hat---

(Commercial)

MEADOWS: The only thing more colorful than the sports column that Jimmy Cannon writes is Jimmy Cannon himself. An introduction of Jimmy in his own familiar second person style might go something like this: You're Jimmy Cannon. You were born and brought up in a tough tenement section of New York City. You had one year of high school, but you didn't stop learning. You were a copy boy at 16. You learned the news business from the bottom up. You were Sergeant Jimmy Cannon, combat correspondent, in the war. You became a sports writer who left to report another war, Korea. You're now a syndicated columnist for the NEW YORK JOURNAL AMERICAN and King Features. You're a confirmed bachelor. You gave up hotel living a year ago to establish your first permanent home in that tall building on the west side of Central Park here in New York.

Good evening, Jimmy.

CANNON: Good evening, Audrey, and welcome to my humble lodgings.

MEADOWS: Well, thank you. I'm delighted to visit with you.

CANNON: Well, it's a small place, but any place I hang my hat---

MEADOWS: Is home.

CANNON: Yeah.

MEADOWS: Jimmy, don't you find living a bachelor's life a little lonesome?

CANNON: I wouldn't say so -- that is, in the daytime. I've got five columns a week to do, and I occasionally do a television show like this, or now and then an editor is silly enough to hire me to do a magazine piece.

MEADOWS: And I've read some and they're wonderful. Tell me something, Jimmy. Why have you decided to remain a bachelor?

CANNON: Well, nobody's asked me to marry them.

MEADOWS: Ha, ha! I know you've just got back from covering spring training in Florida, and I think you're a pretty lucky fellow, you know, spending all that time down there and getting paid for it, too.

CANNON: Well, it was great -- just wonderful. Just before coming up here, I had seven straight days of rain, and look at this "kisser" of mine. I'm pale as a flounder's belly, and it looks like I spent the rest of the time in the basement.

MEADOWS: I think you brought some of that rain back with you.

MEADOWS: Is home.

CANNON: Yeah.

MEADOWS: Jimmy, don't you find living a bachelor's life a little lonesome?

CANNON: I wouldn't say so -- that is, in the day-time. I've got five columns a week to do, and I occasionally do a television show like this, or now and then an editor is silly enough to hire me to do a magazine piece.

MEADOWS: And I've read some and they're wonderful. Tell me something, Jimmy. Why have you decided to remain a bachelor?

CANNON: Well, nobody's asked me to marry them.

MEADOWS: Ha, ha! I know you've just got back from covering spring training in Florida, and I think you're a pretty lucky fellow, you know, spending all that time down there and getting paid for it, too.

CANNON: Well, it was great -- just wonderful. Just before coming up here, I had seven straight days of rain, and look at this "kisser" of mine. I'm pale as a flounder's belly, and it looks like I spent the rest of the time in the basement.

MEADOWS: I think you brought some of that rain back with you.

CANNON: Well, I put it in a trunk, you know.

MEADOWS: Did you bring up any good stories from down there?

CANNON: I've got one, and it's about, of course, Yogi Berra. What a wonderful guy, Audrey, this little man is. He's not only a great catcher, but he's a dear feller, and he recently bought a grand piano for his house in Jersey, and he said to John Grenninger, who is the baseball writer and quite a classical pianist -- he said, "John, I wish you'd come over to my house some night and show me how the piano works."

MEADOWS: Oh, it's typical Yogi. Jimmy, do you remember, by any chance, the time that I was a baseball coach?

CANNON: I'll never forget it. I'll never forget it. It was an absolute desecration of the national pastime. The Toots Shor Bums, and they were rightly named, played the 21 Gentlemen at Yankeee Stadium, and I took you and Margaret Truman, and you coached. And, incidentally, you were the prettiest coaches I've ever seen, and that's as far as I want to go. I don't remember the score, but all I could say was the Toots Shor people outuglied the 21 group.

MEADOWS: I don't remember the score, but I'm sure we must have won. Jimmy, who decorated your apartment? You didn't, by any chance, do it yourself, did you?

CANNON: Well, I put it in a trunk, you know.

MEADOWS: Did you bring up any good stories from down there?

CANNON: I've got one, and it's about, of course, Yogi Berra. What a wonderful guy, Audrey, this little man is. He's not only a great catcher, but he's a dear fellow, and he recently bought a grand piano for his house in Jersey, and he said to John Grennnger, who is the baseball writer and quite a classical pianist -- he said, "John, I wish you'd come over to my house some night and show me how the piano works."

MEADOWS: Oh, it's typical Yogi. Jimmy, do you remember, by any chance, the time that I was a baseball coach?

CANNON: I'll never forget it. I'll never forget it. It was an absolute desecration of the national pastime. The Toots Shor Bums, and they were rightly named, played the 21 Gentlemen at Yankees Stadium, and I took you and Margaret Truman, and you coached. And, incidentally, you were the prettiest coaches I've ever seen, and that's as far as I want to go. I don't remember the score, but all I could say was the Toots Shor people outnglied the 21 group.

MEADOWS: I don't remember the score, but I'm sure we must have won. Jimmy, who decorated your apartment? You didn't, by any chance, do it yourself, did you?

CANNON: No. Audrey, I couldn't hang a "pitcher." A friend of mine, who is a professional decorator, a fellow by the name of Stanley Smilo, did it, and, by the way, I want to show you a couple of "pitchers." This one, it's a view of New York, dreamy and flog-like, and yet incandescent and thrilling, as this town always is. It's by an artist who is known in another field. It's by Frank Sinatra.

MEADOWS: Oh, it's wonderful. I didn't know that he painted.

CANNON: I didn't know either, but he made me a present of it, and I said "present", by the way, and he made me a present of it, and I'm quite fond of it because I think it tells a lot about this town. And this is one of my favorite guys, and one of my favorite paintings of all times, and, incidentally, I know little about art. This is by John Grove and this shows the Kentucky Derby after it's been run. These are the tired horses coming back. The grooms throwing the blankets on them, and here the twin spires of Churchill Downs. And, incidentally, there's always a bit of sadness for me when I look at this thing, because, surely, as you know, Bill Coram was president of the Derby, Audrey---

MEADOWS: Yes.

CANNON: ---and I'm flattered, but I succeeded him

CANNON: No. Audrey, I couldn't hang a "pitcher." A friend of mine, who is a professional decorator, a fellow by the name of Stanley Smith, did it, and, by the way, I want to show you a couple of "pitchers." This one, it's a view of New York, dreamy and fog-like, and yet incandescent and thrilling, as this town always is. It's by an artist who is known in another field. It's by Frank Sinatra.

MEADOWS: Oh, it's wonderful. I didn't know that he painted.

CANNON: I didn't know either, but he made me a present of it, and I said "present", by the way, and he made me a present of it, and I'm quite fond of it because I think it tells a lot about this town. And this is one of my favorite guys, and one of my favorite paintings of all times, and, incidentally, I know little about art. This is by John Grove and this shows the Kentucky Derby after it's been run. These are the tired horses coming back. The grooms throwing the blankets on them, and here the twin spires of Churchill Downs. And, incidentally, there's always a bit of address for me when I look at this thing, because, surely, as you know, Bill Coram was president of the Derby, Audrey---

MEADOWS: Yes.

CANNON: ---and I'm flattered, but I succeeded him on the JOURNAL AMERICAN, and he was one of the great champions of all time.

MEADOWS: He certainly was. Jimmy, you start a great many of your columns, "Nobody asked me, but..." and then you list a few dozen observations on people and things in general. Where do you get the ideas from?

CANNON: Well, the first was a breeze. I had to make a trip, and I just sat down one day, so I had a traveling column, and I wrote 55 general observations. They provoked so much mail that I continued them, but the more columns of this type I write, the tougher they become, and now I have to walk around the streets and observe people, and I ride the subways a great deal, or sit in cafeterias and take notes on them.

MEADOWS: And listen in on them.

CANNON: Yeah, if I can.

MEADOWS: Well, every so often you devote a column to a most unusual horseplayer. Do you really know that character?

CANNON: Well, I guess you mean Two-Head Charlie.

MEADOWS: Yes.

CANNON: Yes, I know him but he's a mythical character. He's all the horseplayers, Audrey -- all the sad, wonderful losers, you know, and I sit around with guys in on the JOURNAL AMERICAN, and he was one of the great champions of all time.

MEADOWS: He certainly was. Jimmy, you start a great many of your columns, "Nobody asked me, but..." and then you list a few dozen observations on people and things in general. Where do you get the ideas from?

CANNON: Well, the first was a breeze. I had to make a trip, and I just sat down one day, so I had a travelling column, and I wrote 55 general observations. They provoked so much mail that I continued them, but the more columns of this type I write, the tougher they become, and now I have to walk around the streets and observe people, and I ride the subways a great deal, or sit in cafeterias and take notes on them.

MEADOWS: And listen in on them.

CANNON: Yeah, if I can.

MEADOWS: Well, every so often you devote a column to a most unusual horseplayer. Do you really know that character?

CANNON: Well, I guess you mean Two-Head Charlie.

MEADOWS: Yes.

CANNON: Yes, I know him but he's a mythical character. He's all the horseplayers, Audrey -- all the sad, wonderful losers, you know, and I sit around with guys in Lindy's, and around Toots', and all the places they congregate, and they're sad and mournful, and yet sometimes, if I catch them right, and my ear is accurate, I think their comedy has a wonderful, mournful metropolitan poetry to it.

MEADOWS: How did you happen to become a sports writer?

CANNON: Well, I was covering the Hauptmann trial; i.e. the trial of Bruno Hauptmann for the murderous kidnaping of the Lindbergh baby, and Damon Runyon, who was the greatest reporter I've ever seen operate, also was covering it for the old AMERICAN, and he said to me -- he said, "You know, you're a bum." And that was proof he was a good reporter, I guess, and I didn't protest too much, and he said, "You should write sports." He said, "You can make a living and be a bum at the same time. You can sleep late."

MEADOWS: Oh, you're not a bum, Jimmy. But you do get to meet an awful lot of fascinating people in the sports world. Who would be some of your heroes?

CANNON: Well, I don't know if I would say heroes, but they're people that I admire greatly, and this guy (pointing to picture) Joe Louis. What a wonderful guy he is! And, incidentally, it's been real rough for him lately, but he's never disappointed me. And the next, of course, Joe DiMaggio, the Lindy's, and around Toots', and all the places they congregate, and they're sad and mournful, and yet sometimes, if I catch them right, and my ear is accurate, I think their comedy has a wonderful, mournful metropolitan poetry to it.

MEADOWS: How did you happen to become a sports writer?

CANNON: Well, I was covering the Hauptmann trial; i.e. the trial of Bruno Hauptmann for the murderous kidnaping of the Lindbergh baby, and Damon Runyon, who was the greatest reporter I've ever seen operate, also was covering it for the old AMERICAN, and he said to me -- he said, "You know, you're a bum." And that was proof he was a good reporter, I guess, and I didn't protest too much, and he said, "You should write sports." He said, "You can make a living and be a bum at the same time. You can sleep late."

MEADOWS: Oh, you're not a bum, Jimmy. But you do get to meet an awful lot of fascinating people in the sports world. Who would be some of your heroes?

CANNON: Well, I don't know if I would say heroes, but they're people that I admire greatly, and this guy (pointing to picture) Joe Louis. What a wonderful guy he is! And, incidentally, it's been real rough for him lately, but he's never disappointed me. And the next, of course, Joe DiMaggio, the greatest ballplayer of his generation. Incidentally, this is a boat we had at Palm Beach, and Joe, as you know, is the son of a San Francisco fisherman, and this was the first time he'd ever gone fishing for the big ones in the Gulf, and he hadn't dropped the line over when in five minutes he got this big sailfish that you see here.

MEADOWS: Oh, it must be something that runs in the family.

CANNON: Yes, I guess it does.

MEADOWS: Fisherman's luck or instinct. Jimmy, you write mainly about men of action. What does Jimmy Cannon do for his exercise?

CANNON: Well, I'll tell you what Jimmy Cannon does. When the weather's right and it isn't snowing, poor Jimmy Cannon -- fat old Jimmy Cannon -- goes out on this terrace, and here I lie in a prone position and get a little bit of the sun. Incidentally, this place is like being in a suburb -- not tonight, of course. This is like being in Nome, Alaska. But at the same time, I can keep my eye on this town. When I say "keep my eye on it", I mean feast my eyes on it. But there's something else I want to point out. Can you see that Statue of Liberty over there on the Liberty warehouse?

MEADOWS: Yes, I can.

greatest ballplayer of his generation. Incidentally, this is a boat we had at Palm Beach, and Joe, as you know, is the son of a San Francisco fisherman, and this was the first time he'd ever gone fishing for the big ones in the Gulf, and he hadn't dropped the line over when in five minutes he got this big sailfish that you see here.

MEADOWS: Oh, it must be something that runs in the family.

CANNON: Yes, I guess it does.

MEADOWS: Fisherman's luck or instinct. Jimmy, you write mainly about men of action. What does Jimmy Cannon do for his exercise?

CANNON: Well, I'll tell you what Jimmy Cannon does. When the weather's right and it isn't snowing, poor Jimmy Cannon -- fat old Jimmy Cannon -- goes out on this terrace, and here I lie in a prone position and get a little bit of the sun. Incidentally, this place is like being in a suburb -- not tonight, of course. This is like being in Nome, Alaska. But at the same time, I can keep my eye on this town. When I say "keep my eye on it", I mean feast my eyes on it. But there's something else I want to point out. Can you see that statue of Liberty over there on the Liberty warehouse?

MEADOWS: Yes, I can.

CANNON: Well, that makes this apartment a dear apartment for me, and the Statue of Liberty stands for me for something more than a great symbol of freedom because my mother, believe it or not, was born on Bedloe's Island where the Statue of Liberty stands.

MEADOWS: Oh, no!

CANNON: Oh, yes! Her father was an electrician over there.

MEADOWS: Jimmy, did you know the statue was there when you moved into that apartment?

CANNON: No, I didn't, but I told my mother that I had it put there in memory of her.

MEADOWS: Well, you couldn't ask for a more formidable reminder of your mother.

CANNON: Yeah. Incidentally, Audrey, you've never seen my mother---

MEADOWS: No.

CANNON: ---but I've got a picture of her right here.

MEADOWS: I would love to see it.

CANNON: This is a picture of my mother and my dad, who has passed on, but he was a guy who loved New York.

MEADOWS: Oh, and that's a beautiful picture.

CANNON: Well, that makes this apartment a dear apartment for me, and the Statue of Liberty stands for me for something more than a great symbol of freedom because my mother, believe it or not, was born on Bedloe's Island where the statue of Liberty stands.

MEADOWS: Oh, no!

CANNON: Oh, yes! Her father was an electrician over there.

MEADOWS: Jimmy, did you know the statue was there when you moved into that apartment?

CANNON: No, I didn't, but I told my mother that I had it put there in memory of her.

MEADOWS: Well, you couldn't ask for a more formidable reminder of your mother.

CANNON: Yeah. Incidentally, Audrey, you've never seen my mother---

MEADOWS: No.

CANNON: ---but I've got a picture of her right here.

MEADOWS: I would love to see it.

CANNON: This is a picture of my mother and my dad, who has passed on, but he was a guy who loved New York.

MEADOWS: Oh, and that's a beautiful picture.

CANNON: He really and truly loved it.

MEADOWS: Jimmy, I can imagine how proud your parents were when they saw your first column. And you have to go out day and night to cover your stories. When do you get time to write them?

CANNON: Well, this is the place that I -- this is the galley, and what I like to do is just to get this thing away before midnight. Sometimes it's difficult because I've got a night ballgame to go to, or a fight, but most of the time the copy is done about midnight and a messenger comes here and takes it down to the JOURNAL AMERICAN.

MEADOWS: You have quite a reputation, James, for being outspoken. Do you get much mail in reply to your crisp comments?

CANNON: I do because sports fans are highly opinionated, and they write a lot, but, oddly enough, the most vicious, the most terrible letters I get are from women, especially blondes. Now, this is a funny thing. Anything you say about a blonde, Audrey, she complains, and I don't know why they complain so much because most of them are brunettes and are phony blondes.

MEADOWS: To keep the record straight, I'm a redhead, Jimmy.

CANNON: He really and truly loved it.

MEADOWS: Jimmy, I can imagine how proud your parents were when they saw your first column. And you have to go out day and night to cover your stories. When do you get time to write them?

CANNON: Well, this is the place that I -- this is the galley, and what I like to do is just to get this thing away before midnight. Sometimes it's difficult because I've got a night ballgame to go to, or a fight, but most of the time the copy is done about midnight and a messenger comes here and takes it down to the JOURNAL AMERICAN.

MEADOWS: You have quite a reputation, James, for being outspoken. Do you get much mail in reply to your crisp comments?

CANNON: I do because sports fans are highly opinionated, and they write a lot, but, oddly enough, the most vicious, the most terrible letters I get are from women, especially blondes. Now, this is a funny thing. Anything you say about a blonde, Audrey, she complains, and I don't know why they complain so much because most of them are brunettes and are phony blondes.

MEADOWS: To keep the record straight, I'm a redhead, Jimmy.

CANNON: Well, that gives you a pass. Redheads, by the way, seem bored with life.

MEADOWS: Well---

CANNON: That's according to the mail, I mean, I'm not---

MEADOWS: Oh, I see. What is it you like most about sports writing?

CANNON: I'll tell you something, and this may sound overly dramatic, but I don't think so. This is a time when people gather in multitudes to do harm to one another. They're there to burn people in effigy, to stone embassies, even gathered in those kind of political lynchings overseas that I read about in the Middle East, but I, in this time, have a rare job. I'm with people who are gathered in places for glad reasons. And another thing about it. I think it's better than the theater. This drama that I see is genuine. Of course, I'm in the toy department, and these people are toy people, but they're never toy people when you see a pitcher pitching for his livelihood with a sore arm; when you see a fighter taking a licking so that he makes a living at his trade, and somehow I'm touched by it, and it makes me happy for the simple reason -- well, all I can say is I'm in a lot of places where music plays, and, Audrey, how can you knock that?

CANNON: Well, that gives you a pass. Redheads, by the way, seem bored with life.

MEADOWS: Well---

CANNON: That's according to the mail, I mean, I'm not---

MEADOWS: Oh, I see. What is it you like most about sports writing?

CANNON: I'll tell you something, and this may sound overly dramatic, but I don't think so. This is a time when people gather in multitudes to do harm to one another. They're there to burn people in effigy, to stone embassies, even gathered in those kind of political lynchings overseas that I read about in the Middle East, but I, in this time, have a rare job. I'm with people who are gathered in places for glad reasons. And another thing about it. I think it's better than the theater. This drama that I see is genuine. Of course, I'm in the toy deparrtment, and these people are toy people, but they're never toy people when you see a pitcher pitching for his livelihood with a sore arm; when you see a fighter taking a licking so that he makes living at his trade, and somehow I'm touched by it, and it makes me happy for the simple reason -- well, all I can say is I'm in a lot of places where music plays, and, Audrey, how can you knock that?

MEADOWS: You're right. I gather you like being a sports writer.

CANNON: The best job in the world.

MEADOWS: Jimmy, what story would you most like to write?

CANNON: Well, I would like to write a story about an old uncle who died a very pleasant death, and who left me 10 million bucks. Then I would be able to write what I wanted to.

MEADOWS: Jimmy, it was such fun visiting with you tonight. I've enjoyed myself tremendously and I'm sorry that we haven't got more time to go right on visiting for another 15 minutes or an hour.

CANNON: The latchstring is always out for you, Audrey.

MEADOWS: Thank you, Jimmy, and good night.

CANNON: Good night to you.

MEADOWS: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Josh Logan right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MEADOWS: Joshua Logan was born in Texarkana, Texas on the paved side of the street, he says. He grew up in Mans-

MEADOWS: You're right. I gather you like being a sports writer.

CANNON: The best job in the world.

MEADOWS: Jimmy, what story would you most like to write?

CANNON: Well, I would like to write a story about an old uncle who died a very pleasant death, and who left me 10 million bucks. Then I would be able to write what I wanted to.

MEADOWS: Jimmy, it was such fun visiting with you tonight. I've enjoyed myself tremendously and I'm sorry that we haven't got more time to go right on visiting for another 15 minutes or an hour.

CANNON: The latchstring is always out for you, Audrey.

MEADOWS: Thank you, Jimmy, and good night.

CANNON: Good night to you.

MEADOWS: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Josh Logan right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MEADOWS: Joshua Logan was born in Texarkana, Texas on the paved side of the street, he says. He grew up in Mansfield, Louisiana; attended Culver Military Academy and Princeton, which he left six months before graduating to accept a scholarship; to study with Russia's foremost director, Stanislavsky. Today, and for quite some time now, Joshua Logan, has been a triple-threat expert writer, producer and director. He has had such hits as the Pulitzer Prize-winning "South Pacific," which he co-authored, and among others, "Mr. Roberts", "Picnic", "Sayonara", and the current "World of Susie Wong."

During World War II Mr. Logan served overseas with the Army Air Corps. Then he returned to Broadway to direct "Annie Get Your Gun." He married actress Netta Harrigan, and today they have two young children.

The Logan family lives in Connecticut, but the demands of the theater and his other projects are such that Joshua and Mrs. Logan spend some of their time in an apartment in this building on Manhattan's East Side. It also serves as a business office.

Good evening, Netta -- Mr. Logan.

MRS. LOGAN: Good evening, Audrey.

LOGAN: Hello, Audrey.

MEADOWS: I know it's a rare night to catch you in the apartment and not at work. How many projects are you juggling these days in round numbers?

field, Louisiana; attended Culver Military Academy and Princeton, which he left six months before graduating to accept a scholarship to study with Russia's foremost director, Stanislavsky. Today, and for quite some time now, Joshua Logan has been a triple-threat expert writer, producer and director. He has had such hits as the Pulitzer Prize-winning "South Pacific," which he co-authored, and among others, "Mr. Roberts" "Picnic", "Sayonara", and the current "World of Susie Wong."

During World War II Mr. Logan served overseas with the Army Air Corps. Then he returned to Broadway to direct "Annie Get Your Gun." He married actress Nedda Harrigan, and today they have two young children.

The Logan family lives in Connecticut, but the demands of the theater and his other projects are such that Joshua and Mrs. Logan spend some of their time in an apartment in this building on Manhattan's East Side. It also serves as a business office.

Good evening, Nedda -- Mr. Logan.

MRS. LOGAN: Good evening, Audrey.

LOGAN: Hello, Audrey.

MEADOWS: I know it's a rare night to catch you in the apartment and not at work. How many projects are you juggling these days in round number?

LOGAN: Well, not as many as I have in past times. Right now I have a play running on Broadway, "The World of Susie Wong," and I also have a picture that's almost finished a run, "South Pacific." It's just finishing a year's run. And I'm preparing two motion pictures. One is going to be called "Young Parish" for Warner Bros., and after that I'm going to do the film version of "Fanny", the play I did on Broadway several years ago. I'm going to do that in Marseilles, France.

MEADOWS: You know, I never cease to wonder at the number of things you do in movies and on Broadway. Did all this start as the result of being born into a theatrical family?

LOGAN: Oh, no, no. I'm not a theatrical man from that point of view at all, although I started wanting to go into the theater when I was a baby, I guess. I can't remember when I didn't. My father was a lumberman and creosoting man. My grandfather on my mother's side was a cotton planter. He had two cotton plantations. The real theatrical member of our family is Mrs. Logan, who is the daughter of Ned Harrigan, the great Harrigan of Harrigan and Hart.

MEADOWS: Of course. Your father was the original H-A-double R-I G-A-N spells Harrigan.

LOGAN: Well, not as many as I have in past times. Right now I have a play running on Broadway, "The World of Suzie Wong," and I also have a picture that's almost finished a run, "South Pacific." It's just finishing a year's run. And I'm preparing two motion pictures. One is going to be called "Young Parish" for Warner Bros., and after that I'm going to do the film version of "Fanny", the play I did on Broadway several years ago. I'm going to do that in Marseilles, France.

MEADOWS: You know, I never cease to wonder at the number of things you do in movies and on Broadway. Did all this start as the result of being born into a theatrical family?

LOGAN: Oh, no, no. I'm not a theatrical man from that point of view at all, although I started wanting to go into the theater when I was a baby, I guess. I can't remember when I didn't. My father was a lumberman and creosoting man. My grandfather on my mother's side was a cotton planter. He had two cotton plantations. The real theatrical member of our family is Mrs. Logan, who is the daughter of Ned Harrigan, the great Harrigan of Harrigan and Hart.

MEADOWS: Of course. Your father was the original H-A-double R-I G-A-N spells Harrigan.

MRS. LOGAN: Well, that part is written about my father. John Cohan patterned many of his things on him, so he did write that, and there were 10 in our family -- 10 children -- but only three of us went on the stage. So, actually, I guess Josh went farther than I did. There's two in your family.

MEADOWS: How about your youngsters, Netta? Where are they?

MRS. LOGAN: Oh, they live in Connecticut, and, you see, we're here most of the time in the daytime, and then we go out to Connecticut at night. That's because Josh has his conferences here, and his auditions here, and all kinds of work here. So they stay out there.

MEADOWS: I know, I've attended some of those work sessions in other parts of town and they can really be hectic. Josh, I would guess that a good deal of theatrical history must have taken place in your room.

LOGAN: This room, yes. In our lives this is a very famous room. Lots of historic things have taken place in here. Oscar and I wrote the book "South Pacific", half of it, in this room -- half of it at his place -- and then Arthur Colber and I worked on "Wish You Were Here" here, and Sam Berman and I wrote "Fanny" in this room. Harold Rome played the score of "Fanny" on the piano over there. I also wrote

MRS. LOGAN: Well, that part is written about my father. John Cohan patterned many of his things on him, so he did write that, and there were 10 in our family -- 10 children but only three of us went on the stage. So, actually, I guess Josh went farther than I did. There's two in your family.

MEADOWS: How about your youngsters, Nettie? Where are they?

MRS. LOGAN: Oh, they live in Connecticut, and, you see, we're here most of the time in the daytime, and then we go out to Connecticut at night. That's because Josh has his conferences here, and his auditions here, and all kinds of work here. So they stay out there.

MEADOWS: I know, I've attended some of those work sessions in other parts of town and they can really be hectic. Josh, I would guess that a good deal of theatrical history must have taken place in your room.

LOGAN: This room, yes. In our lives this is a very famous room. Lots of historic things have taken place in here. Oscar and I wrote the book "South Pacific", half of it, in this room -- half of it at his place -- and then Arthur Colber and I worked on "Wish You Were Here" here, and Sam Berman and I wrote "Fanny" in this room. Harold Rome played the score of "Fanny" on the piano over there. I also wrote

"The Wisteria Trees" in this room, and, in fact, one of the most important things that happened in this room is that Mary Martin first heard "I'm in Love With A Wonderful Guy" played by Dick Rodgers, and he played it at this piano. And another very important thing that happened in this room is that Dick Rodgers was here one day when Oscar handed him a lyric, and we saw Dick write a few notes on a paper, and he sat down at the piano, right here, and he played in almost the same amount of time it takes to play it, he composed and wrote it -- "Balihi"-- the song "Balihi." It was written right here while we were watching him.

MRS. LOGAN: It was thrilling.

LOGAN: It was fascinating.

MEADOWS: It was such a great show and great score. Netta, when Josh is working here, what is your assignment? Do you concentrate on being the hostess, or are you a participant?

MRS. LOGAN: Well, I think I'll let you answer that question.

LOGAN: She's everything. She's a participatant. She's the judge. She's the Solomon, she's the critic. When Tom Hegg and I were writing "Mr. Roberts", we were living up in Connecticut, and we would work at night, and sometimes we'd

"The Wisteria Trees" in this room, and, in fact, one of the most important things that happened in this room is that Mary Martin first heard "I'm in Love With A Wonderful Guy" played by Dick Rodgers, and he played it at this piano. And another very important thing that happened in this room is that Dick Rodgers was here one day when Oscar handed him a lyric, and we saw Dick write a few notes on a paper, and he sat down at the piano, right here, and he played in almost the same amount of time it takes to play it, he composed and wrote it -- "Faith" -- the song "Faith." It was written right here while we were watching him.

MRS. LOGAN: It was thrilling.

LOGAN: It was fascinating.

MEADOWS: It was such a great show and great score. Nette, when Josh is working here, what is your assignment? Do you concentrate on being the hostess, or are you a participant?

MRS. LOGAN: Well, I think I'll let you answer that question.

LOGAN: She's everything. She's a participant. She's the judge. She's the Solomon, she's the critic. When Tom Hagg and I were writing "Mr. Roberts", we were living up in Connecticut, and we would work at night, and sometimes we'd finish a scene, but we wouldn't go on to the next scene unless we had read the scene to Netta, and sometimes it was in the middle of the night. Tom and I would wake Netta up, read her the scene, and she would try to stay asleep, you know, and sometimes she'd go this way, and sometimes she'd go that way, and anyway, we knew whether we had to rewrite it or not.

MEADOWS: You're sort of a sounding board, then.

LOGAN: She certainly is. She is a great one, her father being such a great artist.

MEADOWS: Of course. Then this room is your rehearsal hall, and your study, and your office, and---

LOGAN: No, not the office. No, we do auditions here, and we sometimes have experiences here, but as far as the office goes, this is the office. We're in the office now. There are generally three or four people here. In the daytime, of course, it's very active. And we keep all of our files here behind these doors. These are our files on plays that I'm going to write or have written. Here, as a matter of fact, they came out of here -- no, down in here -- these are the dictaphone belts when Oscar and I dictated "South Pacific" and sometimes you hear Oscar's voice being De Becque, and then I grab the microphone, and I'd be Nellie Forbush because I have a southern accent, or he'd be Bloody Mary, and I'd be Lt. Cable, finish a scene, but we wouldn't go on to the next scene unless we had read the scene to Netta, and sometimes it was in the middle of the night. Tom and I would wake Netta up, read her the scene, and she would try to stay asleep, you know, and sometimes she'd go this way, and sometimes she'd go that way, and anyway, we knew whether we had to rewrite it or not.

MEADOWS: You're sort of a sounding board, then.

LOGAN: She certainly is. She is a great one, her father being such a great artist.

MEADOWS: Of course. Then this room is your rehearsal hall, and your study, and your office, and---

LOGAN: No, not the office. No, we do auditions here, and we sometimes have experiences here, but as far as the office goes, this is the office. We're in the office now. There are generally three or four people here. In the daytime, of course, it's very active. And we keep all of our files here behind these doors. These are our files on plays that I'm going to write or have written. Here, as a matter of fact, they came out of here -- no, down in here -- these are the dictaphone belts when Oscar and I dictated "South Pacific" and sometimes you hear Oscar's voice being De Becque, and then I grab the microphone, and I'd be Nellie Forbush because I have a southern accent, or he'd be Bloody Mary, and I'd be Lt. Cable, or I'd be Luther Billis, which was my favorite part.

MEADOWS: Well, that's really a collector's item. Could you play any part of it for us?

LOGAN: Oh, Audrey, I don't think that it would be very interesting to play because they're all full of "er's" and "ah's", and "What do you think of this, Oscar?" and a sort of a passionate-sounding thing that only a secretary could understand, and then "Oh, that's terrible," and then some very censurable things, too, you know. When you're writing, you get a little touchy.

MEADOWS: Um, hm. Well, I suppose---

LOGAN: Now in here we have other things over here. That's part of our business. We also have another business. These are the files of Pleasant Flowers. That's a flower shop that Netta and I are partners in with a very talented artist by the name of Pleasant Mundy. It's on 74th Street and Madison, and it's a wonderful flower shop.

MEADOWS: I know the flower shop, Josh. I got a very beautiful Christmas tree sent to me from there.

LOGAN: Oh, she's a great artist, Pleasant.

MEADOWS: She certainly is.

LOGAN: And then there's all kinds of things in here. I even think that I have all the dope I had in the Army or I'd be Luther Billis, which was my favorite part.

MEADOWS: Well, that's really a collector's item. Could you play any part of it for us?

LOGAN: Oh, Audrey, I don't think that it would be very interesting to play because they're all full of "er's" and "ah's", and "What do you think of this, Oscar?" and a sort of a passionate-sounding thing that only a secretary could understand, and then "Oh, that's terrible," and then some very censurable things, too, you know. When you're writing, you get a little touchy.

MEADOWS: Um, hm. Well, I suppose---

LOGAN: Now in here we have other things over here. That's part of our business. We also have another business. These are the files of Pleasant Flower. That's a flower shop that Netta and I are partners in with a very talented artist by the name of Pleasant Mundy. It's on 74th Street and Madison, and it's a wonderful flower shop.

MEADOWS: I know the flower shop, Joan. I got a very beautiful Christmas tree sent to me from there.

LOGAN: Oh, she's a great artist, Pleasant.

MEADOWS: She certainly is.

LOGAN: And then there's all kinds of things in here. I even think that I have all the dope I had in the Army in here.

MRS. LOGAN: Yes, I know you have.

MEADOWS: Josh, your experiences in the service must have certainly helped with some of your post-war productions.

LOGAN: Yes. Yes, there are long gobs of bits of "Mr. Roberts" that came right out of the fighter pilots that I worked with. And then I was very lucky. I was brought up in three parts of the country. I was brought up in Louisiana, and then my adolescence in Indiana, and then in the East I went to college, and I've been around the world with Netta, and we've had experiences all around the world -- in Europe and in the East.

MEADOWS: Netta, if I'd been along on some of those trips, I think I would have found time to do a little shopping.

MRS. LOGAN: Oh, Audrey, shopping! We've done lots of it. Most of the things, though, are in the country where we live, but we do keep here a few dolls. They're really for the children, but we keep them here because we don't want them to play with them yet because we're afraid they'd spoil them. They're really for when they grow up. Oh, incidentally, this is Tom and this is Susan, our children. (Shows pictures.)

MEADOWS: Oh, lovely pictures of them.

in here.

MRS. LOGAN: Yes, I know you have.

MEADOWS: Joan, your experiences in the service must have certainly helped with some of your post-war productions.

LOGAN: Yes. Yes, there are long gobs of bits of "Mr. Roberts" that came right out of the fighter pilots that I worked with. And then I was very lucky. I was brought up in three parts of the country. I was brought up in Louisiana, and then my adolescence in Indiana, and then in the East I went to college, and I've been around the world with Nette, and we've had experiences all around the world -- in Europe and in the East.

MEADOWS: Nette, if I'd been along on some of those trips, I think I would have found time to do a little shopping.

MRS. LOGAN: Oh, Audrey, shopping! We've done lots of it. Most of the things, though, are in the country where we live, but we do keep here a few dolls. They're really for the children, but we keep them here because we don't want them to play with them yet because we're afraid they'd spoil them. They're really for when they grow up. Oh, incidentally, this is Tom and this is Susan, our children. (Shows pictures.)

MEADOWS: Oh, lovely pictures of them.

LOGAN: This is Tom and Sue. I want to show them this doll that David Merrick gave me, and he's a very fine French doll about a hundred years old. David gave me this. I don't know whether you can see it. I do hope that---

MEADOWS: Yes, I can.

LOGAN: Watch his mouth now. Is it coming out?

MEADOWS: Smoking! Oh, that's marvelous.

LOGAN: Can you see the smoke?

MEADOWS: Yes, he smokes.

MRS. LOGAN: He certainly is.

LOGAN: Well, now we've got some others too.

MEADOWS: Oh, wonderful, and that one is about 100 years old.

LOGAN: Yes, that's a hundred years old, and they're made in France and Switzerland. We have this one that commemorates "Fanny." She does a little funny kind of a jiggle. And here's our favorite doll which I want to demonstrate for you now. I hope you can see it.

MRS. LOGAN: Can you see what she's doing?

MEADOWS: I certainly can. Delightful!

LOGAN: Yes, it's a very charming little doll. It's still got the same little dress on her of a hundred years ago.

MEADOWS: Yes. Do you collect at random, or is

LOGAN: This is Tom and Sue. I want to show them this doll that David Merrick gave me, and he's a very fine French doll about a hundred years old. David gave me this. I don't know whether you can see it. I do hope that---

MEADOWS: Yes, I can.

LOGAN: Watch his mouth now. Is it coming out?

MEADOWS: Smoking! Oh, that's marvelous.

LOGAN: Can you see the smoke?

MEADOWS: Yes, he smokes.

MRS. LOGAN: He certainly is.

LOGAN: Well, now we've got some others too.

MEADOWS: Oh, wonderful, and that one is about 100 years old.

LOGAN: Yes, that's a hundred years old, and they're made in France and Switzerland. We have this one that commemorates "Fanny." She does a little funny kind of a jiggle. And here's our favorite doll which I want to demonstrate for you now. I hope you can see it.

MRS. LOGAN: Can you see what she's doing?

MEADOWS: I certainly can. Delightful!

LOGAN: Yes, it's a very charming little doll. It's still got the same little dress on her of a hundred years ago.

MEADOWS: Yes. Do you collect at random, or is there some design in what you buy?

LOGAN: No, not particularly. We just buy things that we like, that's all.

MEADOWS: I'm surprised you don't have an Oriental collection because---

LOGAN: Oh, we have an Oriental collection in the country. That's where most of our things are, really, the things that we've picked up.

MEADOWS: Oh, really?

LOGAN: Oh, yes. The Orient has been very good to me, Audrey. My biggest success, of course, was "South Pacific" and that was an oriental background, and then so far my most successful motion picture, from a monetary point of view certainly, is "Sayonara" which was made in Japan, and now "The World of Susie Wong" which is going on Broadway, and Lord knows how long it may play. It's going to be one of my biggest hits, I'm sure.

MEADOWS: Netta, I read that Josh used to be an actor way back. Did you know him then?

MRS. LOGAN: Well, no. He tells me that he wasn't a very good actor, but I don't believe him.

LOGAN: Well, she'd better believe me. I used to say that I gave up acting because everybody'd say, "Youre a there some design in what you buy?

LOGAN: No, not particularly. We just buy things that we like, that's all.

MEADOWS: I'm surprised you don't have an Oriental collection because---

LOGAN: Oh, we have an Oriental collection in the country. That's where most of our things are, really, the things that we've picked up.

MEADOWS: Oh, really?

LOGAN: Oh, yes. The Orient has been very good to me, Audrey. My biggest success, of course, was "South Pacific" and that was an oriental background, and then so far my most successful motion picture, from a monetary point of view certainly, is "Sayonara" which was made in Japan, and now "The World of Suzie Wong" which is going on Broadway, and Lord knows how long it may play. It's going to be one of my biggest hits, I'm sure.

MEADOWS: Netta, I read that Josh used to be an actor way back. Did you know him then?

MRS. LOGAN: Well, no. He tells me that he wasn't a very good actor, but I don't believe him.

LOGAN: Well, she'd better believe me. I used to say that I gave up acting because everybody'd say, "You're a good actor." And I'd say, "No, no, no, I'm not. I've had complaints." It's an old joke, but I used to use it and get the laughs, but what really did happen, Audrey, my very first professional experience was in Baltimore with the University Players, and I played a southerner, and I put on the southern accent very, very thick, because I was a legitimate one, and the next morning Mr. Kirkley said in the paper, "Mr. Logan, who started out very well, soon allowed his enthusiasm to get the better of his self-control." I think that's the history of my life, actually.

MRS. LOGAN: When you directed "Charlie, Dance," you were a wonderful actor when you were directing.

LOGAN: I know, but that's different. That's not acting, that's demonstrating. I don't demonstrate very much to actors, but sometimes when I can't find words, I sort of act the part, or act the scene, and try to describe the emotion that I want the actor to get.

MRS. LOGAN: You looked good to me.

LOGAN: Well, I know, but that's all right, you needn't complain about it, but I can do that, but that's something different. That's demonstrating.

MEADOWS: Josh?

MR. LOGAN: Yes?

good actor." And I'd say, "No, no, no, I'm not. I've had complaints." It's an old joke, but I used to use it and get the laughs, but what really did happen, Audrey, my very first professional experience was in Baltimore with the University Players, and I played a southerner, and I put on the southern accent very, very thick, because I was a legitimate one, and the next morning Mr. Kirkley said in the paper, "Mr. Logan, who started out very well, soon allowed his enthusiasm to get the better of his self-control." I think that's the history of my life, actually.

MRS. LOGAN: When you directed "Charlie, Dance," you were a wonderful actor when you were directing.

LOGAN: I know, but that's different. That's not acting, that's demonstrating. I don't demonstrate very much to actors, but sometimes when I can't find words, I sort of act the part, or act the scene, and try to describe the emotion that I want the actor to get.

MRS. LOGAN: You looked good to me.

LOGAN: Well, I know, but that's all right, you needn't complain about it, but I can do that, but that's something different. That's demonstrating.

MEADOWS: Joan?

MR. LOGAN: Yes?

MEADOWS: We're running out of time, and I'm so sorry because I've enjoyed visiting with you so much. It was awfully kind of you to let me come and visit with you.

LOGAN: We were delighted to have had you, Audrey.

MEADOWS: Good night to both of you.

MRS. LOGAN: Good night, Audrey.

LOGAN: Good night.

MEADOWS: I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright.

(Commercial)

MEADOWS: This has been a most pleasant and interesting experience for me, and a great deal of fun.

Next week Mr. Murrow will be back in this chair and once again I'll be sitting on the other side of the picture window when he visits with Milton Berle and his wife in California, and with tennis champion Althea Gibson here in New York.

Both Milton and Althea have started out on new and, we hope, highly successful careers. Milton Berle is trying his hand for the first time as a novelist. Althea Gibson is trying to make a mark for herself in show business.

There, as Mr. Murrow would say, are some of the MEADOWS: We're running out of time, and I'm so sorry because I've enjoyed visiting with you so much. It was awfully kind of you to let me come and visit with you.

LOGAN: We were delighted to have had you, Audrey.

MEADOWS: Good night to both of you.

MRS. LOGAN: Good night, Audrey.

LOGAN: Good night.

MEADOWS: I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright.

(Commercial)

MEADOWS: This has been a most pleasant and interesting experience for me, and a great deal of fun.

Next week Mr. Murrow will be back in this chair and once again I'll be sitting on the other side of the picture window when he visits with Milton Berle and his wife in California, and with tennis champion Althea Gibson here in New York.

Both Milton and Althea have started out on new and, we hope, highly successful careers. Milton Berle is trying his hand for the first time as a novelist. Althea Gibson is trying to make a mark for herself in show business.

There, as Mr. Murrow would say, are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MEADOWS: And I'm indebted to all of these people and to Mr. Murrow, who never forgets to say, "From PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck."

---

people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aston, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MEADOWS: And I'm indebted to all of these people and to Mr. Murrow, who never forgets to say, "From PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck."

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Mr. and Mrs. Milton Berle, and

Althea Gibson

April 3, 1959 - 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. I'm Ed Murrow. Tonight we'll be visiting with Mr. and Mrs. Milton Berle in California, and with tennis champion Althea Gibson here in New York, but before we do, I'd like to say my thanks to Audrey Meadows, who so graciously sat in for me last week.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Mr. and Mrs. Milton Berle, and

Althea Gibson

April 3, 1959 - 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. I'm Ed Murrow. Tonight we'll be visiting with Mr. and Mrs. Milton Berle in California, and with tennis champion Althea Gibson here in New York, but before we do, I'd like to say my thanks to Audrey Meadows, who so graciously sat in for me last week.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: This still very young television industry has seen many star performers, but only one "Mr. Television," Milton Berle. Since the day when he first won an amateur talent contest at the age of 5, Milton Berle has whirled his way with great success into every branch of the entertainment world except one, burlesque, and now after 45 years of doing just about everything before and behind the microphone, a camera, a stage, and a night club spotlight, Milton Berle has completed an altogether new venture. He has coauthored a dramatic novel called "Earthquake."

Milton Berle and his wife, Ruth, who was a Hollywood and New York press agent before their marriage, live in that ranch-style home on a hill above Sunset Boulevard. That's about mid-way between Beverly Hills and Santa Monica, California. They rented it about three months ago from television producer Cy Howard.

Good evening, Milton.

BERLE: Hi, Ed. How are you? (Car drives up. Horn blowing.)

LORENZO: Thank you, Mr. Berle.

BERLE: You're welcome, Lorenzo.

(Lorenzo and Mr. Berle get out of car and Mr. Berle

(Commercial)

MURROW: This still very young television industry has seen many star performers, but only one "Mr. Television," Milton Berle. Since the day when he first won an amateur talent contest at the age of 5, Milton Berle has whirled his way with great success into every branch of the entertainment world except one, burlesque, and now after 45 years of doing just about everything before and behind the microphone, a camera, a stage, and a night club spotlight, Milton Berle has completed an altogether new venture. He has coauthored a dramatic novel called "Earthquake."

Milton Berle and his wife, Ruth, who was a Holly-wood and New York press agent before their marriage, live in that ranch-style home on a hill above Sunset Boulevard. That's about mid-way between Beverly Hills and Santa Monica, California. They rented it about three months ago from tele-vision producer Cy Howard.

Good evening, Milton.

BERLE: Hi, Ed. How are you? (Car drives up. Horn blowing.)

LORENZO: Thank you, Mr. Berle.

BERLE: You're welcome, Lorenzo.

(Lorenzo and Mr. Berle get out of car and Mr. Berle returns chauffeur's cap to Lorenzo.)

BERLE: Hi, Ed.

MURROW: Good evening, Milton.

BERLE: Lorenzo, say hello to Mr. Murrow.

LORENZO: Hello, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Lorenzo.

BERLE: Wonderful. I couldn't even get it apart. Thank you, Lorenzo. Pardon me, Ed, I gotta get inside. Ruth gets mad when I get late. Will you take the hat, please? Thank you. (Goes inside.) Hello, darling. Sorry I was late. Ed, you know Ruth.

MURROW: Good evening, Ruth.

MRS. BERLE: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Ruth, I'm told that that little "scooter" Milton drives is a gift from you. Is that right?

MRS. BERLE: Well, he likes to think it is, Ed.

MURROW: Ruth?

MRS. BERLE: Yes?

MURROW: Every time I've met Milton off-stage, he's been, I would say, rather subdued in contrast to his public appearances. What's his general demeanor at home?

MRS. BERLE: Do you want the truth, Ed?

BERLE: No. We're on the air, Ruth.

returns chauffeur's cap to Lorenzo.)

BERLE: Hi, Ed.

MURROW: Good evening, Milton.

BERLE: Lorenzo, say hello to Mr. Murrow.

LORENZO: Hello, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Lorenzo.

BERLE: Wonderful. I couldn't even get it apart. Thank you, Lorenzo. Pardon me, Ed, I gotta get inside. Ruth gets mad when I get late. Will you take the hat, please? Thank you. (Goes inside.) Hello, darling. Sorry I was late. Ed, you know Ruth.

MURROW: Good evening, Ruth.

MRS. BERLE: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Ruth, I'm told that that little "scooter" Milton drives is a gift from you. Is that right?

MRS. BERLE: Well, he likes to think it is, Ed.

MURROW: Ruth?

MRS. BERLE: Yes?

MURROW: Every time I've met Milton off-stage, he's been, I would say, rather subdued in contrast to his public appearances. What's his general demeanor at home?

MRS. BERLE: Do you want the truth, Ed?

BERLE: No. We're on the air, Ruth.

MURROW: Ruth?

MRS. BERLE: Yes?

BERLE: I can't hear you very well here, Ed.

MURROW: Ruth, with your background as a press agent and your general knowledge of the entertainment world, do you help Milton with his work?

MRS. BERLE: As a matter of fact, Ed, I'd rather stay completely away from it. I never go to rehearsals. I'm just simply a fan who watches the show on Wednesday nights and enjoys it very much.

BERLE: Very well said, my dear.

MURROW: Ruth?

MRS. BERLE: Yes?

BERLE: Would you ask me a question, Ed? I'm sitting here like a statue.

MURROW: Wait a minute. Ruth---

MRS. BERLE: Yes, Ed.

MURROW: Then you never have a yearning to go back to work?

MRS. BERLE: Oh, absolutely not, Ed. I married very well.

BERLE: Alice, you're the greatest! You've married very well. What do you say, we get married.

MURROW: Ruth?

MRS. BERLE: Yes?

BERLE: I can't hear you very well here, Ed.

MURROW: Ruth, with your background as a press agent and your general knowledge of the entertainment world, do you help Milton with his work?

MRS. BERLE: As a matter of fact, Ed, I'd rather stay completely away from it. I never go to rehearsals. I'm just simply a fan who watches the show on Wednesday nights and enjoys it very much.

BERLE: Very well said, my dear.

MURROW: Ruth?

MRS. BERLE: Yes?

BERLE: Would you ask me a question, Ed? I'm sitting here like a statue.

MURROW: Wait a minute. Ruth---

MRS. BERLE: Yes, Ed.

MURROW: Then you never have a yearning to go back to work?

MRS. BERLE: Oh, absolutely not, Ed. I married very well.

BERLE: Alice, you're the greatest! You've married very well. What do you say, we get married.

MRS. BERLE: Don't be silly, darling, who'd have us?

BERLE: She's ad libbing. These jokes, you know.

MURROW: Milton?

BERLE: Yes.

MURROW: I've often wondered about your composure and your complete command when you're working. At what stage in your career did you lose your stage fright, that nervous pre-show feeling?

BERLE: Lose it, did you say? I don't think I've ever lost it. Whatever appearance I do, whether it be a benefit, or a radio, television, or personal appearance, I still have the feathers in my stomach like I guess the rest of us do. I guess you could chalk -- right now I'm kind of nervous -- you can chalk that up to nervousness. That's what you can chalk it up to, but I'll chalk it up to nervousness.

MURROW: All right.

MRS. BERLE: I called him one night just before one of his television shows and I said, "Hello, this is Ruth," and he said, "Ruth who?"

BERLE: I thought it was Babe Ruth. I don't know, but I was very sorry.

MURROW: Milton?

MRS. BERLE: Don't be silly, darling, who'd have us?

BERLE: She's ad libbing. These jokes, you know.

MURROW: Milton?

BERLE: Yes.

MURROW: I've often wondered about your composure and your complete command when you're working. At what stage in your career did you lose your stage fright, that nervous pre-show feeling?

BERLE: Lose it, did you say? I don't think I've ever lost it. Whatever appearance I do, whether it be a benefit, or a radio, television, or personal appearance, I still have the feathers in my stomach like I guess the rest of us do. I guess you could chalk -- right now I'm kind of nervous -- you can chalk that up to nervousness. That's what you can chalk it up to, but I'll chalk it up to nervousness.

MURROW: All right.

MRS. BERLE: I called him one night just before one of his television shows and I said, "Hello, this is Ruth," and he said, "Ruth who?"

BERLE: I thought it was Babe Ruth. I don't know, but I was very sorry.

MURROW: Milton?

BERLE: Yes?

MURROW: Do you have that same feeling with the approaching publication date of your new novel?

BERLE: I'm afraid so, Ed. It's going to be out April 23rd and I'm not exactly nervous, but I'm a little on edge. Here is the -- here's the novel, Ed -- that is, the book, right there.

MURROW: "Earthquake."

BERLE: "Earthquake."

MURROW: Milton, in reading your book, I found it rather difficult to reconcile Berle, the comedian, writing a serious novel about a group of very different people suffering from the pressures of our time. How did you come to write it anyway?

BERLE: Well, Ed, I -- let's get something straight, first. I didn't write it alone. I collaborated with John Robert. I've had this notion for about nine or ten years, but I never got it down on paper. A few summers ago back in 1957 to be exact, I met this John Robert at Fire Island, and we sat down, and we spoke about the idea, and I explained the plot and the characters that I had in mind, such as the Madison Avenue advertising executive, the senator who absconded with a lot of money---

BERLE: Yes?

MURROW: Do you have that same feeling with the approaching publication date of your new novel?

BERLE: I'm afraid so, Ed. It's going to be out April 23rd and I'm not exactly nervous, but I'm a little on edge. Here is the -- here's the novel, Ed -- that is, the book, right there.

MURROW: "Earthquake."

BERLE: "Earthquake."

MURROW: Milton, in reading your book, I found it rather difficult to reconcile Berle, the comedian, writing a serious novel about a group of very different people suffering from the pressures of our time. How did you come to write it anyway?

BERLE: Well, Ed, I -- let's get something straight, first. I didn't write it alone. I collaborated with John Robert. I've had this notion for about nine or ten years, but I never got it down on paper. A few summers ago back in 1957 to be exact, I met this John Robert at Fire Island, and we sat down, and we spoke about the idea, and I explained the plot and the characters that I had in mind, such as the Madison Avenue advertising executive, the senator who absconded with a lot of money---

MURROW: Yes?

BERLE: ---from his state, the high-ranking Russian bureaucrat, who is a refugee from behind the Iron Curtain, and an ex-Hollywood writer, who can't pick up his Oscar unless he gives his real name. But getting back to your question, how did I write it, well, I feel there's always a serious side to every person, Ed, and this is my way of expressing it.

MURROW: I imagine a lot of readers will be somewhat surprised that you resisted the temptation to put jokes into the mouths of your characters.

BERLE: I think they will, too, Ed, but as you know -- you read it -- it's not that kind of a book. I like to think that there is some humor in the book, perhaps a little more brittle and a little more sophisticated than the Berle type of humor, but as you know, this book is kind of a provocative book. In fact, it's so provocative that my publisher has taken out a half-a-million-dollar libel insurance policy on this "Earthquake" book.

MURROW: Milton, I've been wondering, with all the outlets you have for your very considerable energy and talent, what made you turn to the novel as against a movie script or a television show?

MURROW: Yes?

BERLE: ---from his state, the high-ranking Russian bureaucrat, who is a refugee from behind the Iron Curtain, and an ex-Hollywood writer, who can't pick up his Oscar unless he gives his real name. But getting back to your question, how did I write it, well, I feel there's always a serious side to every person, Ed, and this is my way of expressing it.

MURROW: I imagine a lot of readers will be somewhat surprised that you resisted the temptation to put jokes into the mouths of your characters.

BERLE: I think they will, too, Ed, but as you know -- you read it -- it's not that kind of a book. I like to think that there is some humor in the book, perhaps a little more brittle and a little more sophisticated than the Berle type of humor, but as you know, this book is kind of a provocative book. In fact, it's so provocative that my publisher has taken out a half-a-million-dollar libel insurance policy on this "Earthquake" book.

MURROW: Milton, I've been wondering, with all the outlets you have for your very considerable energy and talent, what made you turn to the novel as against a movie script or a television show?

BERLE: You mean of the novel, you mean?

MURROW: Yes.

BERLE: Well, Ed, what I wanted to express in this book, I couldn't tell it in a half-hour television script, or even in an hour TV script, and as for the movies, we hope that the book will be appealing enough to many people that there'll be enough substance, enough appeal, that we'll eventually hear from Hollywood.

MURROW: Well, I'm sure by the way that you're fondling that book, that you're pleased with the way it turned out.

BERLE: I'm fondling the book because it's been work.

MURROW: You're pleased with the way it's turned out then, are you?

BERLE: Well, I'm kind of proud of it, Ed. It's a little difficult for me to do any rave about it---

MRS. BERLE: Let me do it, Ed.

MURROW: All right.

MRS. BERLE: I'm a proud wife. I know, really, how hard Johnny and Milton worked these past two years on this book, and I loved it, and I just hope that the people who read it will feel the same way.

BERLE: You mean of the novel, you mean?

MURROW: Yes.

BERLE: Well, Ed, what I wanted to express in this book, I couldn't tell it in a half-hour television script, or even in an hour TV script, and as for the movies, we hope that the book will be appealing enough to many people that there'll be enough substance, enough appeal, that we'll eventually hear from Hollywood.

MURROW: Well, I'm sure by the way that you're fondling that book, that you're pleased with the way it turned out.

BERLE: I'm fondling the book because it's been work.

MURROW: You're pleased with the way it's turned out then, are you?

BERLE: Well, I'm kind of proud of it, Ed. It's a little difficult for me to do any rave about it---

MRS. BERLE: Let me do it, Ed.

MURROW: All right.

MRS. BERLE: I'm a proud wife. I know, really, how hard Johnny and Milton worked these past two years on this book, and I loved it, and I just hope that the people who read it will feel the same way.

BERLE: It's really a fulfillment. Thank you very much, darling.

MURROW: Milton, tell me, did you get that sort of satisfaction when, oh, say you were writing, trying your hand at writing songs?

BERLE: Somebody put you on to ask me that question. Well, I have been a song writer for 30 years, if you can call it that. I belong to ASCAP. I think I owe them three points. But I never made the double-A rating, Ed. I've written thousands of songs, or hundreds of songs, and I have a new way. I tear them up right away. Then thereby it eliminates the middle man.

MURROW: Oh, yeah. What were some of your bigger song hits?

BERLE: You're kidding! You don't know the songs? Will you please tell him?

MRS. BERLE: They're in the ASCAP book over there. Will you read them---

BERLE: He must be dreaming. He's been away too long. You've been away too long, Ed.

MURROW: I'm afraid so.

BERLE: I'm glad you're back. You really want to know the songs I've written?

BERLE: It's really a fulfillment. Thank you very much, darling.

MURROW: Milton, tell me, did you get that sort of satisfaction when, oh, say you were writing, trying your hand at writing songs?

BERLE: Somebody put you on to ask me that question. Well, I have been a song writer for 30 years, if you can call it that. I belong to ASCAP. I think I owe them three points. But I never made the double-A rating, Ed. I've written thousands of songs, or hundreds of songs, and I have a new way. I tear them up right away. Then thereby it eliminates the middle man.

MURROW: Oh, yeah. What were some of your bigger song hits?

BERLE: You're kidding! You don't know the songs? Will you please tell him?

MRS. BERLE: They're in the ASCAP book over there. Will you read them---

BERLE: He must be dreaming. He's been away too long. You've been away too long, Ed.

MURROW: I'm afraid so.

BERLE: I'm glad you're back. You really want to know the songs I've written?

MURROW: Yes.

BERLE: Fine. Oh, goodness! Well, here in the ASCAP book it says, "Milton Berle, composer..." Ready for some titles?

MURROW: Yes.

BERLE: "I Wuv A Rabbit".

MURROW: I never heard that one.

BERLE: You never did?

MURROW: No.

BERLE: I don't think anybody else did. And here's another one: "My Hot Tamale Went Chilly on Me." Is that a thrill? Oh, goodness! But the biggest hit I had was "Leave The Dishes in The Sink, Ma." You never heard of that, did you?

MURROW: No.

BERLE: Well, this -- you may kid, but this song sold over a million records, really. Of course, I forgot to tell you that on the other side of that record was Spike Jones' rendition of "Cocktails for Two." That's why it sold the record.

MURROW: Milton?

BERLE: Yes?

MURROW: In all of your years in show business, you

MURROW: Yes.

BERLE: Fine. Oh, goodness! Well, here in the ASCAP book it says, "Milton Berle, composer..." Ready for some titles?

MURROW: Yes.

BERLE: "I Wuv A Rabbit".

MURROW: I never heard that one.

BERLE: You never did?

MURROW: No.

BERLE: I don't think anybody else did. And here's another one: "My Hot Tamale Went Chilly on Me." Is that a thrill? Oh, goodness! But the biggest hit I had was "Leave The Dishes in The Sink, Ma." You never heard of that, did you?

MURROW: No.

BERLE: Well, this -- you may kid, but this song sold over a million records, really. Of course, I forgot to tell you that on the other side of that record was Spike Jones' rendition of "Cocktails for Two." That's why it sold the record.

MURROW: Milton?

BERLE: Yes?

MURROW: In all of your years in show business, you must have had some very memorable moments. What was your biggest thrill?

BERLE: Oh, boy! Well, I'd say, Ed, the biggest thrill that I ever had in my career was when I used to pass -- on a Tuesday night, pass a restaurant or a theater, and I'd see a sign in the window, "We're closed tonight. We're all home watching Milton Berle on television." That was about the biggest thrill I ever had.

MURROW: I don't think anyone else in television can ever claim that either.

BERLE: Thank you.

MURROW: Milton, how do you feel about the television rating systems?

BERLE: The what?

MURROW: The rating systems.

BERLE: You had to ask that question, hah?

MURROW: Yes.

BERLE: Well, the television ratings -- I don't believe in the television ratings unless I'm No. 1. Now, would you? -- are you going to serve anything at this bar? If not, I'll move back to Ruth. It's more comfortable back there.

MURROW: From this distance I can't do it somehow, must have had some very memorable moments. What was your biggest thrill?

BERLE: Oh, boy! Well, I'd say, Ed, the biggest thrill that I ever had in my career was when I used to pass -- on a Tuesday night, pass a restaurant or a theater, and I'd see a sign in the window, "We're closed tonight. We're all home watching Milton Berle on television." That was about the biggest thrill I ever had.

MURROW: I don't think anyone else in television can ever claim that either.

BERLE: Thank you.

MURROW: Milton, how do you feel about the tele-vision rating systems?

BERLE: The what?

MURROW: The rating systems.

BERLE: You had to ask that question, huh?

MURROW: Yes.

BERLE: Well, the television ratings -- I don't believe in the television ratings unless I'm No. 1. Now, would you? -- are you going to serve anything at this bar? If not, I'll move back to Ruth. It's more comfortable back there.

MURROW: From this distance I can't do it somehow,

you know. I'm sorry.

BERLE: Oh, sure, you can. If I know Murrow, you can. After all, we're only getting $1.80 minimum for the whole show, so I'll sit.

MURROW: Milton, you've been very good to television and helped to create it, and I imagine television has been good to you. Do you have any major regrets so far?

BERLE: Well, my only regret, Ed, is that, seriously, that after I get through doing the show, and they've all been live -- a few of them have been dead -- after it's all over, I feel as though I could have done the show much better. I feel, after it's over, that it wasn't perfect. And another thing that I regret is the critical objection that some people seem to have to a comedian repeating a comedy skit, or a segment from a former show.

MURROW: Why is that?

BERLE: Well, I don't know, Ed, but I've thought about it a great deal, and the thing that really confuses me is that I've appeared in hundreds of night clubs in this great country of ours. I've seen the same faces three, four, five times, coming in to see me, and they've seen the same Berle---

MURROW: Yes?

BERLE: ---doing the same act, telling the same

you know. I'm sorry.

BERLE: Oh, sure, you can. If I know Murrow, you can. After all, we're only getting $1.80 minimum for the whole show, so I'll sit.

MURROW: Milton, you've been very good to television and helped to create it, and I imagine television has been good to you. Do you have any major regrets so far?

BERLE: Well, my only regret, Ed, is that, seriously, that after I get through doing the show, and they've all been live -- a few of them have been dead -- after it's all over, I feel as though I could have done the show much better. I feel, after it's over, that it wasn't perfect. And another thing that I regret is the critical objection that some people seem to have to a comedian repeating a comedy skit, or a segment from a former show.

MURROW: Why is that?

BERLE: Well, I don't know, Ed, but I've thought about it a great deal, and the thing that really confuses me is that I've appeared in hundreds of night clubs in this great country of ours. I've seen the same faces three, four, five times, coming in to see me, and they've seen the same Berle---

MURROW: Yes?

BERLE: ---doing the same act, telling the same jokes, but on television, let me, or any other comedian, repeat a routine once, and you get a critical blast.

MURROW: Yes. Whose fault is that, do you think?

BERLE: I guess it's my own fault. I have to take the blame, because in the 11 years that I've been on television, Ed, I used up almost a lifetime of material. That's why maybe it was my fault. Of course, I can assure you, and the public, that all the shows that I did weren't perfect. Some of them were very good, some of them were fair, and some of them were pretty bad, but evidently the public was attracted by the pattern, the format that I did, and they expected me to go on forever and change -- change with each broadcast. So maybe Berle, and many other comedians, made it tough to follow themselves. I guess that's the way to put it.

MURROW: Milton?

BERLE: Yes?

MURROW: Aside from your Wednesday night Kraft television shows on NBC, what other projects are you working on?

BERLE: Well, I've just formed a partnership with George Burns. We're going to do a television series on film next season. We're going to do the Milton Berle Comedy Theater. It's going to be on for 39 weeks, and I'm going to jokes, but on television, let me, or any other comedian, repeat a routine once, and you get a critical blast.

MURROW: Yes. Whose fault is that, do you think?

BERLE: I guess it's my own fault. I have to take the blame, because in the 11 years that I've been on television, Ed, I used up almost a lifetime of material. That's why maybe it was my fault. Of course, I can assure you, and the public, that all the shows that I did weren't perfect. Some of them were very good, some of them were fair, and some of them were pretty bad, but evidently the public was attracted by the pattern, the format that I did, and they expected me to go on forever and change -- change with each broadcast. So maybe Berle, and many other comedians, made it tough to follow themselves. I guess that's the way to put it.

MURROW: Milton?

BERLE: Yes?

MURROW: Aside from your Wednesday night Kraft television shows on NBC, what other projects are you working on?

BERLE: Well, I've just formed a partnership with George Burns. We're going to do a television series on film next season. We're going to do the Milton Berle Comedy Theater. It's going to be on for 39 weeks, and I'm going to star in 13 of them, and most of the other 26, and then Ruth and myself will be in New York. May 16th I'm going to do the City of Hope Telethon, Ed, for the City of Hope. We're going to try to raise a lot of money and I hope that everybody will send their contributions, and, incidentally, while we're talking about that telethon, I would like to invite you, Ed, to be on the show. Could you be on the show with me?

MURROW: If I'm in the country I will.

BERLE: Oh, you'll be in the country, and if you're in the country, I'll do straight for you, because you're very hilarious. You say some of the funniest one-line bits I've ever heard.

MURROW: Mr. Berle?

BERLE: Yes, sir?

MURROW: I've been wondering, how did your "Uncle Miltie" title come into being?

BERLE: Well, where did that happen? It was in Boston. Yes, Boston. One night -- I have to tell the whole story, I think it's kind of entertaining. One night back in 1949 I did a broadcast, and I didn't know what to say to the kids at the end of the program, so I said, "Good night, children, don't stay up too late, this is Uncle Miltie." And it sort of caught on right after that. Everybody kept calling star in 13 of them, and most of the other 26, and then Ruth and myself will be in New York. May 16th I'm going to do the City of Hope Telethon, Ed, for the City of Hope. We're going to try to raise a lot of money and I hope that everybody will send their contributions, and, incidentally, while we're talking about that telethon, I would like to invite you, Ed, to be on the show. Could you be on the show with me?

MURROW: If I'm in the country I will.

BERLE: Oh, you'll be in the country, and if you're in the country, I'll do straight for you, because you're very hilarious. You say some of the funniest one-line bits I've ever heard.

MURROW: Mr. Berle?

BERLE: Yes, sir?

MURROW: I've been wondering, how did your "Uncle Millie" title come into being?

BERLE: Well, where did that happen? It was in Boston. Yes, Boston. One night -- I have to tell the whole story, I think it's kind of entertaining. One night back in 1949 I did a broadcast, and I didn't know what to say to the kids at the end of the program, so I said, "Good night, children, don't stay up too late, this is Uncle Millie." And it sort of caught on right after that. Everybody kept calling me Uncle Miltie, and that's how it began, and I stuck with that nickname.

MURROW: Well, Uncle Miltie---

BERLE: Yes, sir.

MURROW: ---and Auntie Ruthie, thank you for letting us come. Good night. It's been very pleasant.

BERLE: Thank you very much, Ed.

MRS. BERLE: Thank you.

MURROW: See you when you come to New York.

BERLE: All right. Good night. Keep smoking. Keep smoking.

MURROW: Good night. Thanks again.

In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with tennis champion Althea Gibson right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Althea Gibson is the outstanding woman tennis player in the world today, although at the moment she has temporarily retired from championship competition to pursue other interests. Her skill on the court is evidenced by the fact that for two years in a row she has won both the British and American singles title, quite an achievement for someone who started learning the game on the play streets of New York.

me Uncle Millie, and that's how it began, and I stuck with that nickname.

MURROW: Well, Uncle Millie---

BERLE: Yes, sir.

MURROW: ---and Auntie Ruthie, thank you for letting us come. Good night. It's been very pleasant.

BERLE: Thank you very much, Ed.

MRS. BERLE: Thank you.

MURROW: See you when you come to New York.

BERLE: All right. Good night. Keep smoking. Keep smoking.

MURROW: Good night. Thanks again.

In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with tennis champion Althea Gibson right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Althea Gibson is the outstanding woman tennis player in the world today, although at the moment she has temporarily retired from championship competition to pursue other interests. Her skill on the court is evidenced by the fact that for two years in a row she has won both the British and American singles title, quite an achievement for someone who started learning the game on the play streets of New York.

Miss Gibson is originally from South Carolina. Her family brought her to New York when she was two years old, and she grew up, and went to school in what has been described as the most densely populated area in America. She went on to college at Florida A&M; taught physical education for a while, and then decided to devote almost all of her time and energy to the sport she loved best.

Recently Althea Gibson moved into a small apartment in this building overlooking Central Park in New York City, only a few blocks and several years away from the crowded streets where she grew up.

Good evening, Althea.

GIBSON: Good evening, Mr. Murrow. How are you?

MURROW: Fine. Tell me, how much tennis do you get to play these days?

GIBSON: Well, I've been playing quite a bit. I've just returned from a South American tour for the State Department, and I was playing yesterday with my sparring partner, so I get in as much tennis as I possibly can.

MURROW: Is this simply a means of keeping in shape, or have you had a change of heart since last fall when you announced a year's retirement?

GIBSON: Well, it's a means of keeping in shape,

Miss Gibson is originally from South Carolina. Her family brought her to New York when she was two years old, and she grew up, and went to school-in what has been described as the most densely populated area in America. She went on to college at Florida A&M; taught physical education for a while, and then decided to devote almost all of her time and energy to the sport she loved best.

Recently Althea Gibson moved into a small apartment in this building overlooking Central Park in New York city, only a few blocks and several years away from the crowded streets where she grew up.

Good evening, Althea.

GIBSON: Good evening, Mr. Murrow. How are you?

MURROW: Fine. Tell me, how much tennis do you get to play these days?

GIBSON: Well, I've been playing quite a bit. I've just returned from a South American tour for the State Department, and I was playing yesterday with my sparring partner, so I get in as much tennis as I possibly can.

MURROW: Is this simply a means of keeping in shape, or have you had a change of heart since last fall when you announced a year's retirement?

GIBSON: Well, it's a means of keeping in shape,

Ed. I love the sport very much, and I don't think that I will ever give it up, or devote too much time away from it because it's been a part of my life.

MURROW: Well, actually, there isn't very much left in the world of tennis for Althea Gibson to conquer, is there?

GIBSON: Well, I feel that I have about four or five more years of tennis in me, Ed.

MURROW: Well, with all the matches you've won, you could probably use a second apartment just to display the trophies, couldn't you?

GIBSON: My goodness, yes. I have some over here that I would like to show you, Ed, if I may. Ed, this trophy was presented to me by the 100% Wrong Club. They got the name -- the 100% Wrong Club -- because they guessed all the football games, and they were always wrong. That's how it got this name. And this trophy here is also an Athlete of the Year Award given to me by the Frederick C. Miller people in Milwaukee. This one, and this one, are the Forest Hills singles championship trophies I won two years in a row. These three, Ed, are the doubles championship trophies I won at Wimbledon with three different partners. And, of course, here is the 1957 Wimbledon singles trophy, and here is the 1958 Wimbledon

Ed. I love the sport very much, and I don't think that I will ever give it up, or devote too much time away from it because it's been a part of my life.

MURROW: Well, actually, there isn't very much left in the world of tennis for Althea Gibson to conquer, is there?

GIBSON: Well, I feel that I have about four or five more years of tennis in me, Ed.

MURROW: Well, with all the matches you've won, you could probably use a second apartment just to display the trophies, couldn't you?

GIBSON: My goodness, yes. I have some over here that I would like to show you, Ed, if I may. Ed, this trophy was presented to me by the 100% Wrong Club. They got the name -- the 100% Wrong Club -- because they guessed all the football games, and they were always wrong. That's how it got this name. And this trophy here is also an Athlete of the Year Award given to me by the Frederick C. Miller people in Milwaukee. This one, and this one, are the Forest Hills singles championship trophies I won two years in a row. These three, Ed, are the doubles championship trophies I won at Wimbledon with three different partners. And, of course, here is the 1957 Wimbledon singles trophy, and here is the 1958 Wimbledon singles trophy. They're my pride and joy, Ed.

MURROW: Well, playing at Wimbledon must have been a great thrill, and I suppose probably a dream you've had ever since you were a little girl.

GIBSON: Yes, it was, Ed. I, of course, started playing paddle tennis in the play streets of New York City sponsored by the Police Athletic League, but my great thrill came when I went to see Alice Marble play an exhibition match at the Cosmopolitan Tennis Club in New York City when I was a junior member, and that was my greatest thrill, and I think it led me on to want to become and play like Miss Marble.

MURROW: Well, school and tennis must have taken up most of your time, and someone has just taken up our picture. No, there it's back again now.

GIBSON: Well, yes, it has. I've had many opportunities to do a lot of things. I've worked in machine shops. I've worked in chicken factories. I've worked as a mail clerk. I've worked in a restaurant, and I've worked -- oh, I've done so many jobs.

MURROW: Althea, after all the rough spots, when did the going get a little bit easier?

GIBSON: Well, it was a little rough at first, Ed. I became very discouraged when I was teaching school at singles trophy. They're my pride and joy, Ed.

MURROW: Well, playing at Wimbledon must have been a great thrill, and I suppose probably a dream you've had ever since you were a little girl.

GIBSON: Yes, it was, Ed. I, of course, started playing paddle tennis in the play streets of New York City sponsored by the Police Athletic League, but my great thrill came when I went to see Alice Marble play an exhibition match at the Cosmopolitan Tennis Club in New York City when I was a junior member, and that was my greatest thrill, and I think it led me on to want to become and play like Miss Marble.

MURROW: Well, school and tennis must have taken up most of your time, and someone has just taken up our picture. No, there it's back again now.

GIBSON: Well, yes, it has. I've had many opportunities to do a lot of things. I've worked in machine shops. I've worked in chicken factories. I've worked as a mail clerk. I've worked in a restaurant, and I've worked -- oh, I've done so many jobs.

MURROW: Althea, after all the rough spots, when did the going get a little bit easier?

GIBSON: Well, it was a little rough at first, Ed. I became very discouraged when I was teaching school at Lincoln University. I wanted to quit tennis and go into something else, and I had decided to go into the WAC's. All I had to do was raise my hand, and I would have been in the WAC's, believe me, but then the State Department came and offered me a chance to visit Southeast Asia on a good will tour, and that led to my many victories in 1955-'56. As a matter of fact, that led to my winning my first major championship. There's the French trophy over here that I won in Paris, France for winning the French championship in Paris. Isn't it a beautiful little thing?

MURROW: Lovely!

GIBSON: It's very dainty.

MURROW: Very nice. Is that a hi fi set there?

GIBSON: Yes, it is, Ed. This is one of my great pleasures and joy when I'm around the house and listening to the wonderful music. It gives really good sound.

MURROW: Well, Althea, not too long ago you started branching out into show business. How's the new career coming?

GIBSON: Well, I think it's coming along all right, Ed. I've done a few things. I've written a book, "I Always Wanted to Be Somebody," published by Harper and Brothers, and I think it's a great story. And also, Ed, this is my first album done for Dot. I did it with Dot, rather.

Lincoln University. I wanted to quit tennis and go into something else, and I had decided to go into the WAC's. All I had to do was raise my hand, and I would have been in the WAC's, believe me, but then the State Department came and offered me a chance to visit Southeast Asia on a good will tour, and that led to my many victories in 1955-'56. As a matter of fact, that led to my winning my first major championship. There's the French trophy over here that I won in Paris, France for winning the French championship in Paris. Isn't it a beautiful little thing?

MURROW: Lovely!

GIBSON: It's very dainty.

MURROW: Very nice. Is that's it set there?

GIBSON: Yes, it is, Ed. This is one of my great pleasures and joy when I'm around the house and listening to the wonderful music. It gives really good sound.

MURROW: Well, Althea, not too long ago you started branching out into show business. How's the new career coming?

GIBSON: Well, I think it's coming along all right, Ed. I've done a few things. I've written a book, "I Always Wanted to Be Somebody," published by Harper and Brothers, and I think it's a great story. And also, Ed, this is my first album done for Dot. I did it with Dot, rather.

MURROW: Yes.

GIBSON: And, as a matter of fact, would you like to hear one of the selections?

MURROW: Very much.

GIBSON: Wonderful. I think you will like it. It's "Around The World." (Plays record and sings.) I think that's enough, don't you?

MURROW: Very good, indeed. Thank you.

GIBSON: Thank you, Ed.

MURROW: How long have you had this interest in music?

GIBSON: Ever since I was a child, even when I became -- when I had begun to play paddle tennis, Ed. As a matter of fact, I have a tenor saxophone here that Mr. Sugar Ray Robinson gave me when I was a little girl. Would you like to see that?

MURROW: Very much.

GIBSON: Wonderful.

MURROW: How did you happen to get to know Sugar Ray?

GIBSON: Well, I'll tell you, I was about 13 or 14 years old when I saw Sugar in the bowling alley. I used to bowl quite a bit, and I came up to him, and I said, "You must

MURROW: Yes.

GIBSON: And, as a matter of fact, would you like to hear one of the selections?

MURROW: Very much.

GIBSON: Wonderful. I think you will like it. It's "Around The World." (Plays record and sings.) I think that's enough, don't you?

MURROW: Very good, indeed. Thank you.

GIBSON: Thank you, Ed.

MURROW: How long have you had this interest in music?

GIBSON: Ever since I was a child, even when I became -- when I had begun to play paddle tennis, Ed. As a matter of fact, I have a tenor saxophone here that Mr. Sugar Ray Robinson gave me when I was a little girl. Would you like to see that?

MURROW: Very much.

GIBSON: Wonderful.

MURROW: How did you happen to get to know Sugar Ray?

GIBSON: Well, I'll tell you, I was about 13 or 14 years old when I saw Sugar in the bowling alley. I used to bowl quite a bit, and I came up to him, and I said, "You must be Sugar Ray Robinson." He said, "Yes." I said, "Well, I could beat you bowling." And from that moment, he, Mrs. Robinson and I have became very fast friends.

MURROW: Well, did you beat him?

GIBSON: Well, Ed, I don't think I better say that. He may be listening.

MURROW: Tell me, did you ever get to learn to play the sax?

GIBSON: Well, yes, I played the sax in high school, and I played it in college. I was in the concert band in high school, in the marching band, and, boy, did we march. My feet were tired.

MURROW: Althea, that large glass bowl. Is that another trophy?

GIBSON: This one?

MURROW: Yes.

GIBSON: Oh, my goodness, this belongs in the living room. Excuse me.

MURROW: Althea?

GIBSON: I got this--- Yes?

MURROW: The area near which you grew up was once described as an elevated jungle. It must have been fairly rough for you, wasn't it?

be Sugar Ray Robinson." He said, "Yes." I said, "Well, I could beat you bowling." And from that moment, he, Mrs. Robinson and I have became very fast friends.

MURROW: Well, did you beat him?

GIBSON: Well, Ed, I don't think I better say that. He may be listening.

MURROW: Tell me, did you ever get to learn to play the sax?

GIBSON: Well, yes, I played the sax in high school, and I played it in college. I was in the concert band in high school, in the marching band, and, boy, did we march. My feet were tired.

MURROW: Althea, that large glass bowl. Is that another trophy?

GIBSON: This one?

MURROW: Yes.

GIBSON: Oh, my goodness, this belongs in the living room. Excuse me.

MURROW: Althea?

GIBSON: I got this--- Yes?

MURROW: The area near which you grew up was once described as an elevated jungle. It must have been fairly rough for you, wasn't it?

GIBSON: It was. Well, I didn't know about it at that time, Ed. When we came up as youngsters, we didn't know any poverty at that time. Perhaps later on I heard it was quite rough, but I could go to the store in those days and get a large soda for five cents -- a quart bottle of soda for five cents -- and ice cream, a dish of ice cream, or a cup of ice cream for two cents, and get fish and chips. I loved fish and chips in those days.

MURROW: Yes?

GIBSON: We used to get fish and chips and go to the rooftop and eat them for 25 cents. I didn't know any poverty in those days because I had a lot of fun and I enjoyed myself as a child. I may have been a little mischievous, but I had fun.

MURROW: What about the street gangs? Were they as prevalent then as they seem to be now?

GIBSON: Well, I read about them quite often, Ed, and sometimes it disturbs me. In the days when I was coming up, of course they had street gangs, but they weren't as brutal and as cruel as they are today. In those days the worst you could expect from a bunch of kids who became a group, was a good beating, but now-a-days, the gangs seem to go in for injuring the human being, killing people. That I

GIBSON: It was. Well, I didn't know about it at that time, Ed. When we came up as youngsters, we didn't know any poverty at that time. Perhaps later on I heard it was quite rough, but I could go to the store in those days and get a large soda for five cents -- a quart bottle of soda for five cents -- and ice cream, a dish of ice cream, or a cup of ice cream for two cents, and get fish and chips. I loved fish and chips in those days.

MURROW: Yes?

GIBSON: We used to get fish and chips and go to the rooftop and eat them for 25 cents. I didn't know any poverty in those days because I had a lot of fun and I enjoyed myself as a child. I may have been a little mischievous, but I had fun.

MURROW: What about the street gangs? Were they as prevalent then as they seem to be now?

GIBSON: Well, I read about them quite often, Ed, and sometimes it disturbs me. In the days when I was coming up, of course they had street gangs, but they weren't as brutal and as cruel as they are today. In those days the worst you could expect from a bunch of kids who became a group, was a good beating, but now-a-days, the gangs seem to go in for injuring the human being, killing people. That I cannot understand.

MURROW: Well, what do you think is the answer? What do you think can be done to improve this situation?

GIBSON: Well, I have thought of several things, but I think the first thing that could be done is the PAL. Now, they have contributed a lot to the youngsters today. They have provided facilities and sporting areas for the children to play, and above all, I think, good parental care, guidance, love, understanding, and, of course, discipline. That I feel is very important to lead a youngster into a correct or good life.

MURROW: Althea, back to tennis for a moment. What do you think should be done to make the game more popular?

GIBSON: Well, I personally think, Ed, that there should be at least another touring group. I think it's because the youngsters today do not have an opportunity to go into tennis. If they want to play tennis, and want to make a career out of it, they can't do it because there is no opportunity, and I think with the touring group I would like to see this come about, and I certainly would like to be a part of a touring group.

MURROW: Althea, I'm sorry, we have got to go touring because the clock has run us down. Thank you very cannot understand.

MURROW: Well, what do you think is the answer? What do you think can be done to improve this situation?

GIBSON: Well, I have thought of several things, but I think the first thing that could be done is the PAL. Now, they have contributed a lot to the youngsters today. They have provided facilities and sporting areas for the children to play, and above all, I think, good parental care, guidance, love, understanding, and, of course, discipline. That I feel is very important to lead a youngster into a correct or good life.

MURROW: Althea, back to tennis for a moment. What do you think should be done to make the game more popular?

GIBSON: Well, I personally think, Ed, that there should be at least another touring group. I think it's because the youngsters today do not have an opportunity to go into tennis. If they want to play tennis, and want to make a career out of it, they can't do it because there is no opportunity, and I think with the touring group I would like to see this come about, and I certainly would like to be a part of a touring group.

MURROW: Althea, I'm sorry, we have got to go touring because the clock has run us down. Thank you very much for letting us come tonight.

GIBSON: Well, thank you for visiting me, Ed.

MURROW: Good night.

GIBSON: Good night.

MURROW: I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Barbara Britton speaking for Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to Kansas City, Missouri for a visit with artist Thomas Hart Benton and his wife. We'll also be calling on actress Joan Blondell in her apartment here in New York.

And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

---

much for letting us come tonight.

GIBSON: Well, thank you for visiting me, Ed.

MURROW: Good night.

GIBSON: Good night.

MURROW: I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Barbara Britton speaking for Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to Kansas City, Missouri for a visit with artist Thomas Hart Benton and his wife. We'll also be calling on actress Joan Blondell in her apartment here in New York.

And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Joan Blondell, and

Thomas Hart Benton & Family

April 10, 1959 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting first with actress Joan Blondell here in New York, and then on to Kansas City, Missouri where artist Thomas Hart Benton and his family will be waiting for us.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Revlon.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Joan Blondell, and

Thomas Hart Benton & Family

April 10, 1959 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting first with actress Joan Blondell here in New York, and then on to Kansas City, Missouri where artist Thomas Hart Benton and his family will be waiting for us.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Revlon.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545

LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

MURROW: Actress Joan Blondell, reviewing her long Hollywood career, insists she has played the role of a chorus girl in just about every way but standing on her head. For a period of some 20 years, Joan has been a familiar figure to movie audiences mostly in wisecracking roles in a long succession of pictures. Morerecently Miss Blondell has taken on more varied roles in films such as "Desk Set" and "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter."

Joan Blondell was born in New York City, and by the time she was four months old, was on the road touring with the comedy act of her parents, Ed and Katherine Blondell. She's been active in some phase of show business ever since.

Joan Blondell lives in an apartment in this building on Manhattan's East Side overlooking the East River. She also has a home on the West Coast.

Evening, Joan.

BLONDELL: Hi, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

BLONDELL: Fine, thank you.

MURROW: How do you like this California-type weather we've had this week?

BLONDELL: You haven't been out tonight. It's raining on my terrace.

MURROW: Actress Joan Blondell, reviewing her long Hollywood career, insists she has played the role of a chorus girl in just about every way but standing on her head. For a period of some 20 years, Joan has been a familiar figure to movie audiences mostly in wisecracking roles in a long succession of pictures. Morerecently Miss Blondell has taken on more varied roles in films such as "Desk Set" and "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter."

Joan Blondell was born in New York City, and by the time she was four months old, was on the road touring with the comedy act of her parents, Ed and Katherine Blondell. She's been active in some phase of show business ever since.

Joan Blondell lives in an apartment in this building on Manhattan's East Side overlooking the East River. She also has a home on the West Coast.

Evening, Joan.

BLONDELL: Hi, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

BLONDELL: Fine, thank you.

MURROW: How do you like this California-type weather we've had this week?

BLONDELL: You haven't been out tonight. It's raining on my terrace.

MURROW: Joan, you spend about an equal amount of time in New York and in California.

BLONDELL: That's right.

MURROW: Which of the two, would you say, offers the greater opportunity for an actress today?

BLONDELL: Oh, Ed, I think opportunity is -- oh, everywhere -- you know -- east coast as well as west coast, or in the middle. It just seems to me it's, as far as my profession, a theatrical one, that the youngsters today make their success like that (snaps fingers)---

MURROW: Yes.

BLONDELL: ---on television fast, or on the screen. They don't have -- they don't have flops, and I think you need an awful lot of flops to have the joy of success, and today it's too fast.

MURROW: Too fast, and then frequently forgotten right away, aren't they?

BLONDELL: Well, maybe. I hope not.

MURROW: Joan, you've had one of the longest Hollywood careers on record. How many pictures would you guess you've made?

BLONDELL: I guess 97. And in the first 27 months I was in Hollywood, I made 32 pictures. They kind of panned me

MURROW: Joan, you spend about an equal amount of time in New York and in California.

BLONDELL: That's right.

MURROW: Which of the two, would you say, offers the greater opportunity for an actress today?

BLONDELL: Oh, Ed, I think opportunity is -- oh, everywhere -- you know -- east coast as well as west coast, or in the middle. It just seems to me it's, as far as my profession, a theatrical one, that the youngsters today make their success like that (snaps fingers)---

MURROW: Yes.

BLONDELL: ---on television fast, or on the screen. They don't have -- they don't have flops, and I think you need an awful lot of flops to have the joy of success, and today it's too fast.

MURROW: Too fast, and then frequently forgotten right away, aren't they?

BLONDELL: Well, maybe. I hope not.

MURROW: Joan, you've had one of the longest Holly-wood careers on record. How many pictures would you guess you've made?

BLONDELL: I guess 97. And in the first 27 months I was in Hollywood, I made 32 pictures. They kind of panned me on the way to the restaurant and back. Of course, they were not 32 different stories. It's the same story. I just changed clothes and talked fast.

MURROW: Well, Joan, with all the movies you've made, a certain number of them have found their way on to television, haven't they?

BLONDELL: Oh, yes, the late, late, late business. Because I worked so hard when I first got out there, I didn't have a chance to see many of the pictures I appeared in. I saw about 20 out of the 97, but now and again when I turn on the thing for the news, I hear a voice that sounds familiar and I look, and I catch up with my career.

MURROW: Never had time to see the picture originally, huh?

BLONDELL: Never really had time.

MURROW: Well, those old ones must bring back a few memories, don't they?

BLONDELL: Oh, sure, and lovely ones, but I carry my memories with me, if you please. Here's one of them, my daughter when she was five years old. My daughter is Ellen Powell, and she did that drawing, and she called it "A Girl Skating." I wish it were in color.

MURROW: Oh, very nice.

on the way to the restaurant and back. Of course, they were not 32 different stories. It's the same story. I just changed clothes and talked fast.

MURROW: Well, Joan, with all the movies you've made, a certain number of them have found their way on to television, haven't they?

BLONDELL: Oh, yes, the late, late, late business. Because I worked so hard when I first got out there, I didn't have a chance to see many of the pictures I appeared in. I saw about 20 out of the 97, but now and again when I turn on the thing for the news, I hear a voice that sounds familiar and I look, and I catch up with my career.

MURROW: Never had time to see the picture originally, huh?

BLONDELL: Never really had time.

MURROW: Well, those old ones must bring back a few memories, don't they?

BLONDELL: Oh, sure, and lovely ones, but I carry my memories with me, if you please. Here's one of them, my daughter when she was five years old. My daughter is Ellen Powell, and she did that drawing, and she called it "A Girl Skating." I wish it were in color.

MURROW: Oh, very nice.

BLONDELL: Because there's nice black hairs on that pink leg up there.

MURROW: Yes.

BLONDELL: And then once in a while I do some art work, not very often after this little job I finished. I planned on making a man leaning on a table, but I snarled up his face, so I wound up putting a horse's head there, and I signed it "Go Van Go."

MURROW: Go Van Go!

BLONDELL: And this is a painting that Paul Clemmens did of my father with his red wig and his stage makeup and all. Ed Blondell and Company in "The Long Voyage."

MURROW: Well, Joan you started on the stage at a very early age. I don't suppose you ever wanted to be anything but an actress, did you?

BLONDELL: Oh, well, I just didn't know there was anything else to do. I know when I was a very little kid, when I turned into an alley and into the stage door, I thought everybody else on the street did the same thing. So there was just nothing else for me to do.

MURROW: Do you have any other portraits around?

BLONDELL: Yes, I have. I've got a section of portraits over here that I'm very proud of, Ed. This is a BLONDELL: Because there's nice black hairs on that pink leg up there.

MURROW: Yes.

BLONDELL: And then once in a while I do some art work, not very often after this little job I finished. I planned on making a man leaning on a table, but I snarled up his face, so I wound up putting a horse's head there, and I signed it "Go Van Go."

MURROW: Go Van Go!

BLONDELL: And this is a painting that Paul Clemmens did of my father with his red wig and his stage makeup and all. Ed Blondell and Company in "The Long Voyage."

MURROW: Well, Joan you started on the stage at a very early age. I don't suppose you ever wanted to be anything but an actress, did you?

BLONDELL: Oh, well, I just didn't know there was anything else to do. I know when I was a very little kid, when I turned into an alley and into the stage door, I thought everybody else on the street did the same thing. So there was just nothing else for me to do.

MURROW: Do you have any other portraits around?

BLONDELL: Yes, I have. I've got a section of portraits over here that I'm very proud of, Ed. This is a painting my sister did of me in the rope dances that I did on Broadway last year, and this is of Ellen as she looks now, done by my sister, Gloria, and here are a couple of her abstracts. She had a showing and a one-woman show in San Francisco last year, and this year she has been invited to show her paintings at the Ellie County Museum. Isn't that great?

MURROW: Very nice.

BLONDELL: And she is here now. There she is, Gloria Blondell Hunter.

MRS. HUNTER: Hi, Ed. How are you?

MURROW: Good evening, Gloria. Gloria, are you an actress too?

MRS. HUNTER: Yes, I'm an actress too. I've done some radio, and, oh, quite a few "Life of Riley's" on television.

BLONDELL: She's Honeybee.

MURROW: Oh, I remember. I remember, of course. Well, I take it, that like your sister, you're also a cross-country commuter, right?

MRS. HUNTER: Well, we commute quite a bit but we see each other all the time, so there doesn't seem to be much country in between the two of us.

painting my sister did of me in the rope dances that I did on Broadway last year, and this is of Ellen as she looks now, done by my sister, Gloria, and here are a couple of her abstracts. She had a showing and a one-woman show in San Francisco last year, and this year she has been invited to show her paintings at the Ellie County Museum. Isn't that great?

MURROW: Very nice.

BLONDELL: And she is here now. There she is, Gloria Blondell Hunter.

MRS. HUNTER: Hi, Ed. How are you?

MURROW: Good evening, Gloria. Gloria, are you an actress too?

MRS. HUNTER: Yes, I'm an actress too. I've done some radio, and, oh, quite a few "Life of Riley's" on television.

BLONDELL: She's Honeybee.

MURROW: Oh, I remember. I remember, of course. Well, I take it, that like your sister, you're also a cross-country commuter, right?

MRS. HUNTER: Well, we commute quite a bit but we see each other all the time, so there doesn't seem to be much country in between the two of us.

BLONDELL: But she's here, and I go back and forth every few minutes, it seems like. I stayed -- I came here originally about eight years ago to live because my children went to eastern schools. My son to Cornell, and my daughter to a great veterinarian school here, and they're not here this minute, but if you will step with me, please, I will show you their pictures.

MURROW: Yes. Where are they living now, Joan?

BLONDELL: They're living in California, Ed. And here is my Ellen. There she is with her quarter-horse.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

BLONDELL: And, of course, as usual, winning a first prize. And here is my son, Norman. When he graduated from Cornell, he got that and the baby at the same time. His diploma. Can you see it?

MURROW: Yes.

BLONDELL: And there's his dear little wife, Ann MacDowell Powell, and my grandbaby that I could cut and chew into pieces. I say they've been living on the coast. They've been living there for a year now because my son is assistant director on "Rifleman." That's one of the best television westerns on the whole works. And here is -- this little grandbaby is here. That's Sandra MacDowell Powell, and this is the BLONDELL: But she's here, and I go back and forth every few minutes, it seems like. I stayed -- I came here originally about eight years ago to live because my children went to eastern schools. My son to Cornell, and my daughter to a great veterinarian school here, and they're not here this minute, but if you will step with me, please, I will show you their pictures.

MURROW: Yes. Where are they living now, Joan?

BLONDELL: They're living in California, Ed. And here is my Rifleman. There she is with her quarter-horse.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

BLONDELL: And, of course, as usual, winning a first prize. And here is my son, Norman. When he graduated from Cornell, he got that and the baby at the same time. His diploma. Can you see it?

MURROW: Yes.

BLONDELL: And there's his dear little wife, Ann MacDowell Powell, and my grandbaby that I could cut and chew into pieces. I say they've been living on the coast. They've been living there for a year now because my son is assistant director on "Rifleman." That's one of the best television westerns on the whole works. And here is -- this little grand-baby is here. That's Sandra MacDowell Powell, and this is the new one. Oh, look at that face! That's Scott Blondell Powell.

MRS. HUNTER: That's not all the grandchildren, by the way, Ed. If you'll look down here, you'll see the seven new arrivals. We help feed them, so if you'll stop over here, you can see all of them -- all the seven arrivals.

BLONDELL: Come on, Bridie. My Bridie Murphy gave birth to these little angels. Come on. Wake up a minute. Bless your heart! Aren't they too much? Come on, get yourselves up and look. You're the best.

MURROW: They're wonderful.

BLONDELL: Aren't they darling.

MURROW: Wonderful. How old are they, Joan?

BLONDELL: They're 16 days old now. And, of course, this was quite a family for Bridie to have, so we have to give a little bit of groceries this way.

MRS. HUNTER: One of them is talking to me, too, because I'm a grandma. My Rock is their pa, so wave to your pa. Joan phoned me in California. She was just hysterical about having to feed these seven marvelous puppies, so I hung up and looked at my husband, and he said, "Why not?" So when I got downstairs, I called her and said, "How is everything going with the puppies?" She said, "Oh, I'm so busy new one. Oh, look at that face! That's Scott Blondell Powell.

MRS. HUNTER: That's not all the grandchildren, by the way, Ed. If you'll look down here, you'll see the seven new arrivals. We help feed them, so if you'll stop over here, you can see all of them -- all the seven arrivals.

BLONDELL: Come on, Bridie. My Bridie Murphy gave birth to these little angels. Come on. Wake up a minute. Bless your heart! Aren't they too much? Come on, get yourselves up and look. You're the best.

MURROW: They're wonderful.

BLONDELL: Aren't they darling.

MURROW: Wonderful. How old are they, Joan?

BLONDELL: They're 16 days old now. And, of course, this was quite a family for Bridie to have, so we have to give a little bit of groceries this way.

MRS. HUNTER: One of them is talking to me, too, because I'm a grandma. My Rock is their pa, so wave to your pa. Joan phoned me in California. She was just hysterical about having to feed these seven marvelous puppies, so I hung up and looked at my husband, and he said, "Why not?" So when I got downstairs, I called her and said, "How is everything going with the puppies?" She said, "Oh, I'm so busy feeding them." I said, "Put on the coffee, I'll be right up. I'm downstairs."

BLONDELL: It's a 24-hour trick, believe me, with these seven little babies.

MURROW: Well, with a litter like that, Joan, you couldbuild yourself quite a dog act, couldn't you?

BLONDELL: Oh, I could, and if I'm in a dog act, that will be the first form of show business I haven't tried before -- that and the circus.

MURROW: Well, Joan, you strike me as the sort of person who always has to have some sort of project going to keep you busy. What was it before the puppies took up all your time?

BLONDELL: Well, of course, I've been trying out shows, et cetera, but most of all I've been writing, and this is it. Looks worse than "Gone With The Wind" and "Anthony Adverse" combined. I mean size-wise. This is -- I've got 600 typewritten pages so far, and it's two-thirds through. It's a book I'm writing, Ed.

MURROW: Is it your autobiography?

BLONDELL: Oh, no, it's just about some people that I understand, I hope, and it's got some little love, and a little murder, and a chase, and I think it's box officey. I feeding them." I said, "put on the coffee, I'll be right up. I'm downstairs."

BLONDELL: It's a 24-hour trick, believe me, with these seven little babies.

MURROW: Well, with a litter like that, Joan, you couldbuild yourself quite a dog act, couldn't you?

BLONDELL: Oh, I could, and if I'm in a dog act, that will be the first form of show business I haven't tried before -- that and the circus.

MURROW: Well, Joan, you strike me as the sort of person who always has to have some sort of project going to keep you busy. What was it before the puppies took up all your time?

BLONDELL: Well, of course, I've been trying out shows, et cetera, but most of all I've been writing, and this is it. Looks worse than "Gone With The Wind" and "Anthony Adverse" combined. I mean size-wise. This is -- I've got 600 typewritten pages so far, and it's two-thirds through. It's a book I'm writing, Ed.

MURROW: Is it your autobiography?

BLONDELL: Oh, no, it's just about some people that I understand, I hope, and it's got some little love, and a little murder, and a chase, and I think it's box office. I hope it is anyway.

MURROW: Are you going to publish it under your own name?

BLONDELL: Oh, no, sir, I am not! I'm not going to do that. I'm going to take a different name and just sort of let it -- you know -- rise. I'm going to go for broke on that.

MURROW: Well, this is sort of a new career for Joan Blondell, isn't it?

BLONDELL: Well, yes, I hope it will be because I'd love to be able to just write. It'd be just great. A little while ago I did a pilot film called "The Jacksons" and if that turns out -- if somebody buys it like Kent, why, I will be living in California and be near all my children and grandchildren again. Of course, not too near. I don't believe in that. I'll live quite a distance away because I think that's as it should be. I'd like to consider myself a grandma on the lam, if you know what I mean.

MURROW: Is your daughter still determined to be a veterinarian?

BLONDELL: Yes, she is. She studied for three years. She has a couple of years to go, and, well, she's just marvelous in fields and jumping and riding. I'm scared of a hope it is anyway.

MURROW: Are you going to publish it under your own name?

BLONDELL: Oh, no, sir, I am not! I'm not going to do that. I'm going to take a different name and just sort of let it -- you know -- rise. I'm going to go for broke on that.

MURROW: Well, this is sort of a new career for Joan Blondell, isn't it?

BLONDELL: Well, yes, I hope it will be because I'd love to be able to just write. It'd be just great. A little while ago I did a pilot film called "The Jackons" and if that turns out -- if somebody buys it like Kent, why, I will be living in California and be near all my children and grandchildren again. Of course, not too near. I don't believe in that. I'll live quite a distance away because I think that's as it should be. I'd like to consider myself a grandma on the lam, if you know what I mean.

MURROW: Is your daughter still determined to be a veterinarian?

BLONDELL: Yes, she is. She studied for three years. She has a couple of years to go, and, well, she's just marvelous in fields and jumping and riding. I'm scared of a merry-go-round and she's go great at it, and I'm so proud of her, and my son, too.

MURROW: Well, Joan, other than working on the novel, and baby-sitting for the pups, and doing a TV pilot, what else is keeping you busy?

BLONDELL: I cook. I don't know.

MURROW: Joan?

BLONDELL: What?

MURROW: Looking back, are you ever sorry that you allowed yourself to be type-cast in all those chorus girl roles? Would you have preferred a dramatic part?

BLONDELL: Ed, I had no choice about the typing business. I was under contract at the time, and, of course, it upset me because I considered myself, at a very young age, to be dramatic, but I have come to the conclusion that comedy is a very important contribution to the theater, and that if you can make people laugh, you can make them cry, and I'm always grateful for a good part, be it comedy or drama.

MURROW: Well, about your children.

BLONDELL: Yes.

MURROW: Did you ever regret that they didn't follow the family tradition and go into the theater as you and your parents did?

merry-go-round and she's so great at it, and I'm so proud of her, and my son, too.

MURROW: Well, Joan, other than working on the novel, and baby-sitting for the pups, and doing a TV pilot, what else is keeping you busy?

BLONDELL: I cook. I don't know.

MURROW: Joan?

BLONDELL: What?

MURROW: Looking back, are you ever sorry that you allowed yourself to be type-cast in all those chorus girl roles? Would you have preferred a dramatic part?

BLONDELL: Ed, I had no choice about the typing business. I was under contract at the time, and, of course, it upset me because I considered myself, at a very young age, to be dramatic, but I have come to the conclusion that comedy is a very important contribution to the theater, and that if you can make people laugh, you can make them cry, and I'm always grateful for a good part, be it comedy or drama.

MURROW: Well, about your children.

BLONDELL: Yes.

MURROW: Did you ever regret that they didn't follow the family tradition and go into the theater as you and your parents did?

BLONDELL: Oh, indeed not. Actually, I'm quite happy my son's on the other side of the camera or stage, and my daughter is interested in the horses, as I told you, and I'm grateful it turned out that way. Of course, if my son had wanted to be a carpenter, I would have bought him a hammer, but it turned out just the way I wanted it.

MURROW: Joan Blondell, thank you very much for letting us come. Good night.

BLONDELL: Thank you, Ed.

MURROW: And will you say good night to Gloria?

BLONDELL: I certainly will.

MURROW: And also to Bridie over in the corner there.

BLONDELL: Oh, my Purple Heart mother!

MURROW: Thanks again, Joan.

BLONDELL: Thank you.

MURROW: Good night.

BLONDELL: Good night.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with artist Thomas Hart Benton and his family right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Thomas Hart Benton, who will be 70 next

BLONDELL: Oh, indeed not. Actually, I'm quite happy my son's on the other side of the camera or stage, and my daughter is interested in the horses, as I told you, and I'm grateful it turned out that way. Of course, if my son had wanted to be a carpenter, I would have bought him a hammer, but it turned out just the way I wanted it.

MURROW: Joan Blondell, thank you very much for letting us come. Good night.

BLONDELL: Thank you, Ed.

MURROW: And will you say good night to Gloria?

BLONDELL: I certainly will.

MURROW: And also to Bridie over in the corner there.

BLONDELL: Oh, my Purple Heart mother!

MURROW: Thanks again, Joan.

BLONDELL: Thank you.

MURROW: Good night.

BLONDELL: Good night.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with artist Thomas Hart Benton and his family right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Thomas Hart Benton, who will be 70 next

Wednesday, has been described as America's best known contemporary painter who views his subject through the eyes of a social historian. He's also been referred to as rugged, outspoken, and unconventional.

Tom Benton was born in Neosho, Missouri. He studied at Chicago's Art Institute and in Paris. Then he painted and taught art in New York for about 25 years. Then in the middle 30's, he moved his family back to Missouri where he's been living ever since.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hart Benton live in this large native stone house in the southwest section of Kansas City.

Good evening, Tom.

BENTON: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

BENTON: Pretty good.

MURROW: Tell me, do you have any plans to celebrate your birthday next Wednesday?

BENTON: Well, plans are being made. We're not only going to celebrate my birthday, but that of four others -- kind of a quintet of birthdays. Cocktails and supper it'll be. Some of my friends they are, who were born at the same time about that I was. Cocktails and supper, and I imagine

Wednesday, has been described as America's best known contemporary painter who views his subject through the eyes of a social historian. He's also been referred to as rugged, outspoken, and unconventional.

Tom Benton was born in Neosho, Missouri. He studied at Chicago's Art Institute and in Paris. Then he painted and taught art in New York for about 25 years. Then in the middle 30's, he moved his family back to Missouri where he's been living ever since.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hart Benton live in this large native stone house in the southwest section of Kansas City.

Good evening, Tom.

BENTON: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

BENTON: Pretty good.

MURROW: Tell me, do you have any plans to celebrate your birthday next Wednesday?

BENTON: Well, plans are being made. We're not only going to celebrate my birthday, but that of four others -- kind of a quintet of birthdays. Cocktails and supper it'll be. Some of my friends they are, who were born at the same time about that I was. Cocktails and supper, and I imagine supper will be rather late.

MURROW: Well, I have no doubt it will be quite a party. Tom, just what is it that took you back to Kansas City after spending so much time here in New York?

BENTON: Well, Ed, the first thing was that the State of Missouri raised enough money for me to paint a mural in the state capitol, and I thought that would take me a couple of years, so we just moved out here to do it. There are other reasons, however. I was a little bit fed up with the constant quarreling and bickering and the aesthetic atmosphere of New York in which as an artist I was forced to live. So practically the return was a flight from the various idiocies of that.

MURROW: Tell me, what do you remember most about your boyhood in Neosho, Missouri?

BENTON: Well, Neosho was in my days a kind of a horse and buggy town, completely horse and buggy. I lived kind of a country-jake life while I was there. Shows in the barns, swimming in the creeks, riding horses and so forth. Well, that kind of a country-jake life was extremely entertaining. You always remember it with some regrets. Maybe the progress that we've had has wiped all that out and other people won't have a chance to regret it, but I remember it anyhow with a supper will be rather late.

MURROW: Well, I have no doubt it will be quite a party. Tom, just what is it that took you back to Kansas city after spending so much time here in New York?

BENTON: Well, Ed, the first thing was that the State of Missouri raised enough money for me to paint a mural in the state capitol, and I thought that would take me a couple of years, so we just moved out here to do it. There are other reasons, however. I was a little bit fed up with the constant quarreling and bickering and the aesthetic atmosphere of New York in which as an artist I was forced to live. So practically the return was a flight from the various idiocies of that.

MURROW: Tell me, what do you remember most about your boyhood in Neosho, Missouri?

BENTON: Well, Neosho was in my days a kind of a horse and buggy town, completely horse and buggy. I lived kind of a country-jake life while I was there. Shows in the barns, swimming in the creeks, riding horses and so forth. Well, that kind of a country-jake life was extremely entertaining. You always remember it with some regrets. Maybe the progress that we've had has wiped all that out and other people won't have a chance to regret it, but I remember it anyhow with a pleasurable regret.

MURROW: I seem to recognize an old friend hanging there behind you.

BENTON: Yes, that's our mutual friend, Carl Sandburg. Carl was out here two or three years ago. He said he'd like to have a little quiet. He was composing a piece for something or other, an essay, I believe, and I said, "Well, come over to my studio and while you work, I'll paint your portrait." So he came over but he never stopped talking all the time he was there and I had an awful time keeping him still. I don't think Carl has ever seen that portrait because I finished it after he left.

MURROW: Well, I hope he's looking at it tonight. You painted it---

BENTON: I hope he is, too, and if he is, God bless him.

MURROW: You painted it a couple of years ago, you say, Tom?

BENTON: Two or three years ago. I've forgotten just when.

MURROW: It's a very fine picture. Tom, the two of us have been doing a fair amount of talking. Are there any other talking Bentons at home tonight?

pleasurable regret.

MURROW: I seem to recognize an old friend hanging there behind you.

BENTON: Yes, that's our mutual friend, Carl Sandburg. Carl was out here two or three years ago. He said he'd like to have a little quiet. He was composing a piece for something or other, an essay, I believe, and I said, "Well, come over to my studio and while you work, I'll paint your portrait." So he came over but he never stopped talking all the time he was there and I had an awful time keeping him still. I don't think Carl has ever seen that portrait because I finished it after he left.

MURROW: Well, I hope he's looking at it tonight. You painted it---

BENTON: I hope he is, too, and if he is, God bless him.

MURROW: You painted it a couple of years ago, you say, Tom?

BENTON: Two or three years ago. I've forgotten just when.

MURROW: It's a very fine picture. Tom, the two of us have been doing a fair amount of talking. Are there any other talking Bentons at home tonight?

BENTON: Oh, yes, we have others. If you'll just follow me, Ed, we'll get down there and find them.

MURROW: It's a very unusual stairway, isn't it?

BENTON: Yes, it is, Ed, for an old-fashioned house, this chimney coming up in the middle of it. That's one of the things that attracted us to it 20 years ago. It's an old-fashioned house, and most of us, possibly except my daughter, are old-fashioned too. Now I'm going to introduce you to Mrs. Benton, Rita, and Jessie, our daughter.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Benton.

MRS. BENTON: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Jessie.

JESSIE: Good evening.

MURROW: Mrs. Benton, are you often called on to assist Tom in his work?

MRS. BENTON: No, I'm never -- I never assist him in his work.

MURROW: You just handle the business end of affairs. Is that right?

MRS. BENTON: That's right. Occasionally I make frames.

MURROW: Jessie?

JESSIE: Yes?

BENTON: Oh, yes, we have others. If you'll just follow me, Ed, we'll get down there and find them.

MURROW: It's a very unusual stairway, isn't it?

BENTON: Yes, it is, Ed, for an old-fashioned house, this chimney coming up in the middle of it. That's one of the things that attracted us to it 20 years ago. It's an old-fashioned house, and most of us, possibly, except my daughter, are old-fashioned too. Now I'm going to introduce you to Mrs. Benton, Rita, and Jessie, our daughter.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Benton.

MRS. BENTON: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Jessie.

JESSIE: Good evening.

MURROW: Mrs. Benton, are you often called on to assist Tom in his work?

MRS. BENTON: No, I'm never -- I never assist him in his work.

MURROW: You just handle the business end of affairs. Is that right?

MRS. BENTON: That's right. Occasionally I make frames.

MURROW: Jessie?

JESSIE: Yes?

MURROW: I've been told that you're now an established professional folk singer. Is that right?

JESSIE: Well, that's -- to a certain extent. I worked this summer professionally, but that's just about all. I sing here and there.

MURROW: Do you think we could hear a little authentic Missouri folk music?

JESSIE: Yes. Just a moment.

BENTON: My wife -- I want to say that Mrs. Benton does all the business here, Ed.

MURROW: I was sure she did, Tom.

JESSIE: (Singing and playing guitar) "Poor little turtledove, settin' in a pine. Morning forges on, true love, as I did once for mine -- for mine. As I did once for mine. I didn't love in the fall. I loved in the spring. But I'm gonna marry a pretty little boy who wears a silver ring -- a ring -- who wears a silver ring."

MURROW: Thank you very much, Jessie. I'm sure everyone at Radcliff is proud of you and recording companies will be knocking on your door tomorrow. Thank youvery much.

Mrs. Benton, where's the rest of your family?

MRS. BENTON: We have a son, Teepee. He now lives on Martha's Vineyard. He's writinga novel. He's been there MURROW: I've been told that you're now an established professional folk singer. Is that right?

JESSIE: Well, that's -- to a certain extent. I worked this summer professionally, but that's just about all.
I sing here and there.

MURROW: Do you think we could hear a little authentic Missouri folk music?

JESSIE: Yes. Just a moment.

BENTON: My wife -- I want to say that Mrs. Benton does all the business here, Ed.

MURROW: I was sure she did, Tom.

JESSIE: (singing and playing guitar) "Poor little turtledove, settin' in a pine. Mourning forges on, true love, as I did once for mine -- for mine. As I did once for mine.
I didn't love in the fall. I loved in the spring. But I'm gonna marry a pretty little boy who wears a silver ring -- a ring -- who wears a silver ring."

MURROW: Thank you very much, Jessie. I'm sure everyone at Radcliff is proud of you and recording companies will be knocking on your door tomorrow. Thank you very much.
Mrs. Benton, where's the rest of your family?

MRS. BENTON: We have a son, Teepee. He now lives on Martha's Vineyard. He's writing a novel. He's been there all winter.

BENTON: He was a professional musician for four years. First flute in the Florida Symphony. He decided to take a little time off and write.

MRS. BENTON: That's right.

MURROW: Good for him. Tom, what paintings do you have hanging in your home?

BENTON: Well, it's mostly family paintings, paintings that people rarely see because they're never set out on exhibition. Over here we have one of the son we were just talking about when he was 11 years old with his dog. Over here we have the same son with his mommy when he was a year-and-a-half old. Then over here we have our singer, Jessie, when she was 9 years old, and above it myself when I was younger than I am now.

MURROW: You looked kind of fierce then, didn't you?

BENTON: Well, in 1925 I had no money. I had a right to be fierce.

MURROW: Tell me, what Thomas Hart Benton creation is in the works now?

BENTON: Well, there's plenty in the works. If you want to see it, you'll follow me.

all winter.

BENTON: He was a professional musician for four years. First flute in the Florida Symphony. He decided to take a little time off and write.

MRS. BENTON: That's right.

MURROW: Good for him. Tom, what paintings do you have hanging in your home?

BENTON: Well, it's mostly family paintings, paintings that people rarely see because they're never set out on exhibition. Over here we have one of the son we were just talking about when he was 11 years old with his dog. Over here we have the same son with his mommy when he was a year-and-a-half old. Then over here we have our singer, Jessie, when she was 9 years old, and above it myself when I was younger than I am now.

MURROW: You looked kind of fierce then, didn't you?

BENTON: Well, in 1925 I had no money. I had a right to be fierce.

MURROW: Tell me, what Thomas Hart Benton creation is in the works now?

BENTON: Well, there's plenty in the works. If you want to see it, you'll follow me.

MURROW: Good.

BENTON: Jessie and Rita, we'll see you later.

MRS. BENTON: Okay.

BENTON: We're off to the studio.

JESSIE: Come here, Jones.

BENTON: Look out, Jones.

MURROW: How much time do you spend in your studio?

BENTON: Well, I spend all the daylight hours there, Ed, every day, seven days a week. I have to to get the stuff done.

MURROW: Do you ever have any young apprentice artists to help you out these days?

BENTON: I have no young apprentice artists. The young artists these days have been taught in schools and their own individual souls are so important that they might damage them if they come and help an old fellow like me, an old-fashioned painter. That's the great trouble with modern teaching. Everybody has too much of a soul.

MURROW: Well, this studio really looks worked in.

BENTON: It is worked in. Two projects -- big projects -- going on here at once. Here is one, a cartoon rather, for the New York State Power Authority. This picture

MURROW: Good.

BENTON: Jessie and Rita, we'll see you later.

MRS. BENTON: Okay.

BENTON: We're off to the studio.

JESSIE: Come here, Jones.

BENTON: Look out, Jones.

MURROW: How much time do you spend in your studio?

BENTON: Well, I spend all the daylight hours there, M, every day, seven days a week. I have to to get the stuff done.

MURROW: Do you ever have any young apprentice artists to help you out these days?

BENTON: I have no young apprentice artists. The young artists these days have been taught in schools and their own individual souls are so important that they might damage them if they come and help an old fellow like me, an old-fashioned painter. That's the great trouble with modern teaching. Everybody has too much of a soul.

MURROW: Well, this studio really looks worked in.

BENTON: It is worked in. Two projects -- big projects -- going on here at once. Here is one, a cartoon rather, for the New York State Power Authority. This picture finished will be seven feet high and 20 feet long. Over here you see one also in process for the Truman Memorial Library. This is 20 feet high and 32 feet long when it's finished. So these are things that cost you a little work.

MURROW: Very interesting. Tom, it looks pretty complicated from here. Just how do you go about doing a mural or does every artist have a different technique?

BENTON: Well, very few today have my techniques. The beginning is like this: Sheets of paper. Not just this that I've got in my hands. These are just a few that came out of hundreds that looked like they were workable after I get a general idea. Mind you, these are subject pictures. They're not just arbitrary expressions. They have to express something very specific and represent something very specific.

MURROW: Yes.

BENTON: And also because I want to make them very realistic and projected in deep space like the real world is, I make a sculptured model of it. Here is an example of these sculptured models. This is for the Truman mural. The square you see in the center of it represents the door, which enters into another room, over which the general design climbs.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

BENTON: The purpose of such a thing as that is to finished will be seven feet high and 20 feet long. Over here you see one also in process for the Truman Memorial Library. This is 20 feet high and 32 feet long when it's finished. So these are things that cost you a little work.

MURROW: Very interesting. Tom, it looks pretty complicated from here. Just how do you go about doing a mural or does every artist have a different technique?

BENTON: Well, very few today have my techniques. The beginning is like this: Sheets of paper. Not just this that I've got in my hands. These are just a few that came out of hundreds that looked like they were workable after I get a general idea. Mind you, these are subject pictures. They're not just arbitrary expressions. They have to express something very specific and represent something very specific.

MURROW: Yes.

BENTON: And also because I want to make them very realistic and projected in deep space like the real world is, I make a sculptured model of it. Here is an example of these sculptured models. This is for the Truman mural. The square you see in the center of it represents the door, which enters into another room, over which the general design climbs.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

BENTON: The purpose of such a thing as that is to increase the three-dimensionality of the finished job.

MURROW: Now, after you have done that, what happens next?

BENTON: Next step -- and this is the next step you see right here on the floor -- is an attempt to get that general three-dimensional idea on a flat area and in a moderate scale. That's the first rough step in the mural, after the clay model is made. That means, of course, the third step in designing the whole thing. Now, the piece that we have just seen up here in passing, is an elaboration of that other sketch in which now I am using live models---

MURROW: Yes?

BENTON: ---as the final models, but to find out what's possible in action for human beings under certain kind of perspectives; also to determine the exact sizes of the figures and the exact perspectives in which all objects will occur. After this, then there is one more step which will be similar to the one which you saw before that I made for the Power Authority, a sketch which is four inches to the square foot. I will make one for this which will be about five inches to the square foot, which will permit me to put all of the detailed drawing in it. After that step, there will be the transfers of the drawing to the wall, and then getting on the increase the three-dimensionality of the finished job.

MURROW: Now, after you have done that, what happens next?

BENTON: Next step -- and this is the next step you see right here on the floor -- is an attempt to get that general three-dimensional idea on a flat area and in a moderate scale. That's the first rough step in the mural, after the clay model is made. That means, of course, the third step in designing the whole thing. Now, the piece that we have just seen up here in passing, is an elaboration of that other sketch in which now I am using live models---

MURROW: Yes?

BENTON: ---as the final models, but to find out what's possible in action for human beings under certain kind of perspectives; also to determine the exact sizes of the figures and the exact perspectives in which all objects will occur. After this, then there is one more step which will be similar to the one which you saw before that I made for the Power Authority, a sketch which is four inches to the square foot. I will make one for this which will be about five inches to the square foot, which will permit me to put all of the detailed drawing in it. After that step, there will be the transfers of the drawing to the wall, and then getting on the scaffolding and painting the picture.

MURROW: Out in the library, and I predict that President Truman will be up on that scaffold with you.

BENTON: I have no doubt that he will. He may be able to climb it better than I am. If you have ever been out in the library with him, I think you would agree with me that he can probably outdistance you in climbing.

MURROW: That is probably quite true. Do you see much of him?

BENTON: Well, I don't. He's busy with his own projects, and I'm busy with -- not with mine, I'm busy with his projects too. I don't have time.

MURROW: Tom, frequently in the past you've criticized the American art scene. How does it look to you now?

BENTON: Well now, Ed, in so far as I, personally, am concerned, the art scene is good, but coming out here, you know I told you I couldn't get any assistance.

MURROW: Yes?

BENTON: It's very hard to get people -- trained draftsmen -- to help you with this kind of thing. From that point of view the world looks bad. I really think the artist has all this century tended to run away from any kind of meanings, and along with that, he's also running away from the scaffolding and painting the picture.

MURROW: Out in the library, and I predict that President Truman will be up on that scaffold with you.

BENTON: I have no doubt that he will. He may be able to climb it better than I am. If you have ever been out in the library with him, I think you would agree with me that he can probably outdistance you in climbing.

MURROW: That is probably quite true. Do you see much of him?

BENTON: Well, I don't. He's busy with his own projects, and I'm busy with -- not with mine, I'm busy with his projects too. I don't have time.

MURROW: Tom, frequently in the past you've criticized the American art scene. How does it look to you now?

BENTON: Well now, Ed, in so far as I, personally, am concerned, the art scene is good, but coming out here, you know I told you I couldn't get any assistance.

MURROW: Yes?

BENTON: It's very hard to get people -- trained draftsmen -- to help you with this kind of thing. From that point of view the world looks bad. I really think the artist has all this century tended to run away from any kind of meanings, and along with that, he's also running away from the training which would have made it possible for him to communicate meanings. Now, all of these things are abstractions, but they're not abstractions without meaning.

MURROW: Tom, in your opinion, where does the trouble lie? The art schools? The museums?

BENTON: No, sir, you know I think it's the concept of art that's just entertainment -- invention and entertainment. The great artists -- i.e., the highly publicized artists of this day, and I mean all of them, all of them practically, are entertainers rather than creative artists. They're inventors of various kinds of entertaining gadgets. That's quite a different thing from creating a form in which people can find meanings to make life a little bit more valuable. It's all right to be entertained. I like vaudeville stuff myself. But I can't take modern art very seriously.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Tom Benton, for letting us come tonight. It's been very pleasant, indeed. Thank you, sir, and will you say good night to Mrs. Benton and to Jessie? Good night.

BENTON: I will.

MURROW: Good night. Thank you again, sir.

BENTON: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: I'll be back in a moment to tell you

training which would have made it possible for him to communicate meanings. Now, all of these things are abstractions, but they're not abstractions without meaning.

MURROW: Tom, in your opinion, where does the trouble lie? The art schools? The museums?

BENTON: No, sir, you know I think it's the concept of art that's just entertainment -- invention and entertainment. The great artists -- i.e., the highly publicized artists of this day, and I mean all of them, all of them practically, are entertainers rather than creative artists. They're inventors of various kinds of entertaining gadgets. That's quite a different thing from creating a form in which people can find meanings to make life a little bit more valuable. It's all right to be entertained. I like vaudeville stuff myself. But I can't take modern art very seriously.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Tom Benton, for letting us come tonight. It's been very pleasant, indeed. Thank you, sir, and will you say good night to Mrs. Benton and to Jessie? Good night.

BENTON: I will.

MURROW: Good night. Thank you again, sir.

BENTON: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week in the spirit of a new season of baseball, we'll be calling on Mrs. Babe Ruth, widow of one of the game's greatest players. Mrs. Ruth, who still lives in the same New York apartment she shared for so many years with her husband, has lost none of her interest or enthusiasm for baseball, and just about every room in her home reflects this.

Next week we'll also be calling on writer Cleveland Emery and his wife. Mr. Emery has devoted much of his efforts to a serious study of high society, having written such best selling books as "The Proper Bostonian" and "The Last Resort."

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

---

about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week in the spirit of a new season of baseball, we'll be calling on Mrs. Babe Ruth, widow of one of the game's greatest players. Mrs. Ruth, who still lives in the same New York apartment she shared for so many years with her husband, has lost none of her interest or enthusiasm for baseball, and just about every room in her home reflects this.

Next week we'll also be calling on writer Cleveland Amory and his wife. Mr. Amory has devoted much of his efforts to a serious study of high society, having written such best selling books as "The Proper Bostonian" and "The Last Resort."

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Mrs. Babe Ruth, and

Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland Amory

April 17, 1959 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with Mrs. Babe Ruth and her family. Then we'll be calling on author Cleveland Amory and his wife here in New York.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Mrs. Babe Ruth, and

Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland Amory

April 17, 1959 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with Mrs. Babe Ruth and her family. Then we'll be calling on author Cleveland Amory and his wife here in New York.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545

LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

(Commercial)

MURROW: Mrs. Babe Ruth was married to baseball's greatest hero exactly 30 years ago today. They'd been married almost 20 years when the Babe died in August of 1948.

Claire Hudson Ruth came to New York from Georgia in the early 1920's where she worked as a model and actress on Broadway. She became interested in baseball because of a friend and fellow Georgian by the name of Ty Cobb. One day while attending a baseball game, she met Babe Ruth, and as she puts it, "The girl from the South married the biggest Yankee of them all."

There are two daughters in the Ruth family, now married with families of their own. Mrs. Babe Ruth still lives in the same apartment where she and Babe lived the last five years of his life. It's on the upper West Side of Manhattan on Riverside Drive.

Good evening, Mrs. Ruth.

MRS. RUTH: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: I remember the first sentence in your book says -- the book called "The Babe And I" -- it reads: "I am a lady in love with a legend." Would you say the legend is still growing?

MRS. RUTH: Yes, Mr. Murrow, the legend is still growing, but the reason I wrote the book was to separate the

(Commercial)

MURROW: Mrs. Babe Ruth was married to baseball's greatest hero exactly 30 years ago today. They'd been married almost 20 years when the Babe died in August of 1948.

Claire Hudson Ruth came to New York from Georgia in the early 1920's where she worked as a model and actress on Broadway. She became interested in baseball because of a friend and fellow Georgian by the name of Ty Cobb. One day while attending a baseball game, she met Babe Ruth, and as she puts it, "The girl from the South married the biggest Yankee of them all."

There are two daughters in the Ruth family, now married with families of their own. Mrs. Babe Ruth still lives in the same apartment where she and Babe lived the last five years of his life. It's on the upper West Side of Manhattan on Riverside Drive.

Good evening, Mrs. Ruth.

MRS. RUTH: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: I remember the first sentence in your book says -- the book called "The Babe And I" -- it reads: "I am a lady in love with a legend." Would you say the legend is still growing?

MRS. RUTH: Yes, Mr. Murrow, the legend is still growing, but the reason I wrote the book was to separate the facts from the legend.

MURROW: By the way, Mrs. Ruth, you and Bill Slocum certainly did an excellent job on that book. How is it going?

MRS. RUTH: Well, it's going fine. It's now in its second edition and in 180 newspapers.

MURROW: You mentioned in the book, legend and facts about Babe. It's been said that he was quite extravagant. Fact or fiction?

MRS. RUTH: Well, that was a fact. Babe was very extravagant. I only know what I read in the papers, but I think that after he met me, and we talked it over, he realized the value of a dollar and quite easily settled down.

MURROW: Also that he had a constant battle with the calories. Fact or legend?

MRS. RUTH: That's a fact. Babe had to fight his weight all of his life to keep in shape to play baseball.

MURROW: And also that he was a bit temperamental. Right or wrong?

MRS. RUTH: Well, that's right. After all, what baseball player isn't temperamental. He would blow his top from time to time, but it was all over in five or ten minutes. He was just a happy-go-lucky fellow, and he never did carry a facts from the legend.

MURROW: By the way, Mrs. Ruth, you and Bill Slocum certainly did an excellent job on that book. How is it going?

MRS. RUTH: Well, it's going fine. It's now in its second edition and in 180 newspapers.

MURROW: You mentioned in the book, legend and facts about Babe. It's been said that he was quite extravagant. Fact or fiction?

MRS. RUTH: Well, that was a fact. Babe was very extravagant. I only know what I read in the papers, but I think that after he met me, and we talked it over, he realized the value of a dollar and quite easily settled down.

MURROW: Also that he had a constant battle with the calories. Fact or legend?

MRS. RUTH: That's a fact. Babe had to fight his weight all of his life to keep in shape to play baseball.

MURROW: And also that he was a bit temperamental. Right or wrong?

MRS. RUTH: Well, that's right. After all, what baseball player isn't temperamental. He would blow his top from time to time, but it was all over in five or ten minutes. He was just a happy-go-lucky fellow, and he never did carry a grudge.

MURROW: Well, I know the Babe was especially fond of youngsters. Were there any grandchildren in the family while he was still alive?

MRS. RUTH: Yes. Dorothy had a son and a daughter while Babe was living, and now, Mr. Murrow, I want you to know my daughter, Mrs. Vince Stevens, and little Tammy, down visiting me from New Hampshire.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Stevens.

MRS. STEVENS: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Tammy.

TAMMY: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How was the winter up in New Hampshire, Mrs. Stevens?

MRS. STEVENS: Oh, it was a rugged winter. Bitterly cold for long, long periods and all I can say is I'm glad it's over.

MURROW: Tammy?

TAMMY: Yes?

MURROW: Are you a baseball fan?

TAMMY: Yes.

MURROW: You like it, do you?

TAMMY: Yes.

MURROW: Well, I know the Babe was especially fond of youngsters. Were there any grandchildren in the family while he was still alive?

MRS. RUTH: Yes. Dorothy had a son and a daughter while Babe was living, and now, Mr. Murrow, I want you to know my daughter, Mrs. Vince Stevens, and little Tammy, down visiting me from New Hampshire.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Stevens.

MRS. STEVENS: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Tammy.

TAMMY: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How was the winter up in New Hampshire, Mrs. Stevens?

MRS. STEVENS: Oh, it was a rugged winter. Bitterly cold for long, long periods and all I can say is I'm glad it's over.

MURROW: Tammy?

TAMMY: Yes?

MURROW: Are you a baseball fan?

TAMMY: Yes.

MURROW: You like it, do you?

TAMMY: Yes.

MURROW: Now, tell me, which do you like better, New York or New Hampshire?

TAMMY: New York.

MURROW: Why?

TAMMY: Because---

MRS. STEVENS: Because there's lots of neighbors.

TAMMY: Because there's lots of neighbors in the same block and it saves all the bother of going -- of driving off to another---

MRS. STEVENS: Place.

TAMMY: ---place.

MRS. STEVENS: And not only that, Mr. Murrow, but his girlfriend lives right across the hall, little Marcia, and he had dinner with her this evening, too.

MURROW: Oh, wonderful. Did you have any spinach?

TAMMY: Yes.

MURROW: Do you like it?

TAMMY: No.

MURROW: Well, that explains everything. Mrs. Ruth, as I understand it, you contributed the furnishings for a Babe Ruth Home in the museum up at Cooperstown, but you must have kept some of the Babe's personal effects in your own home, didn't you?

MURROW: Now, tell me, which do you like better, New York or New Hampshire?

TAMMY: New York.

MURROW: Why?

TAMMY: Because---

MRS. STEVENS: Because there's lots of neighbors.

TAMMY: Because there's lots of neighbors in the same block and it saves all the bother of going -- of driving off to another---

MRS. STEVENS: Place.

TAMMY: ---place.

MRS. STEVENS: And not only that, Mr. Murrow, but his girlfriend lives right across the hall, little Marcia, and he had dinner with her this evening, too.

MURROW: Oh, wonderful. Did you have any spinach?

TAMMY: Yes.

MURROW: Do you like it?

TAMMY: No.

MURROW: Well, that explains everything. Mrs. Ruth, as I understand it, you contributed the furnishings for a Babe Ruth Home in the museum up at Cooperstown, but you must have kept some of the Babe's personal effects in your own home, didn't you?

MRS. RUTH: Yes, I did, Mr. Murrow. I kept some things that, really, I could not part with, and this is a portrait of Babe done in needlepoint. It is an excellent likeness, and he was very proud of it and so am I. There were four vases given as top prizes on our trip to Japan, and this, of course, the picture, was done in ? . This vase here was for the most home runs. This one was for the most extra base hits, and this one over here was presented to Babe for the highest batting average. And these two dolls, the Japanese bride and the Japanese bridesmaid, were presented to Babe by the royal family, and, of course, he felt that was very nice.

MURROW: Mrs. Ruth, getting back to legend and fact, I had heard that Babe was superstitious so far as baseball was concerned. Was that right?

MRS. RUTH: Well, it certainly is correct because did you ever meet a baseball player that wasn't superstitious? At least I know that I never have. Now, here is -- I think the Babe called it a totem pole.

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. RUTH: I really do not know what it was, but anyway, it's hand-carved, and it was always on top of Babe's locker, and he thought that it brought him luck. Anyway, he

MRS. RUTH: Yes, I did, Mr. Murrow. I kept some things that, really, I could not part with, and this is a portrait of Babe done in needlepoint. It is an excellent likeness, and he was very proud of it and so am I. There were four vases given as top-prizes on our trip to Japan, and this, of course, the picture, was done in . This vase here was for the most home runs. This one was for the most extra base hits, and this one over here was presented to Babe for the highest-batting average. And these two dolls, the Japanese bride and the Japanese bridegroom, were presented to Babe by the royal family, and, of course, he felt that was very nice.

MURROW: Mrs. Ruth, getting back to legend and fact, I had heard that Babe was superstitious so far as base-ball was concerned. Was that right?

MRS. RUTH: Well, it certainly is correct because did you ever meet a baseball player that wasn't superstitious? At least I know that I never have. Now, here is -- I think the Babe called it a totem pole.

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. RUTH: I really do not know what it was, but anyway, it's hand-carved, and it was always on top of Babe's locker, and he thought that it brought him luck. Anyway, he hit quite a large number of home runs with the Yankess and he thought that that was the reason. Anyway, it makes him silly, but that's the truth. And over here is a picture of Babe at the age of 3 when he wore little skirts, and, of course, that's the way they dressed in those days. This picture here is a picture of Babe's last visit to the Yankee Stadium. And over here is a picture of Babe in 1927 when he hit 60 home runs. This is the ball from the first home run, and the last home run, the 60th, and in here is the two home runs he hit in the 1927 World Series with Pittsburgh which we won in four straight games.

MURROW: Do you think anybody in baseball today will break his record?

MRS. RUTH: Well, Mr. Murrow, the man that I would think that could break it would be Mickey Mantle on account of his youth and his switch-hitting. After all, Babe's record has stood for 32 years, and that is almost a record within itself.

MURROW: Mrs. Ruth, do you still hear from Babe's old fans?

MRS. RUTH: Yes, I hear from quite a number of Babe's old fans that saw him play in his highlights, but most of my mail comes from children; children that were born long hit quite a large number of home runs with the Yankees and he thought that that was the reason. Anyway, it makes him silly, but that's the truth. And over here is a picture of Babe at the age of 3 when he wore little skirts, and, of course, that's the way they dressed in those days. This picture here is a picture of Babe's last visit to the Yankee Stadium. And over here is a picture of Babe in 1927 when he hit 60 home runs. This is the ball from the first home run, and the last home run, the 60th, and in here is the two home runs he hit in the 1927 World Series with Pittsburgh which we won in four straight games.

MURROW: Do you think anybody in baseball today will break his record?

MRS. RUTH: Well, Mr. Murrow, the man that I would think that could break it would be Mickey Mantle on account of his youth and his switch-hitting. After all, Babe's record has stood for 32 years, and that is almost a record within itself.

MURROW: Mrs. Ruth, do you still hear from Babe's old fans?

MRS. RUTH: Yes, I hear from quite a number of Babe's old fans that saw him play in his highlights, but most of my mail comes from children; children that were born long after Babe's death, and, of course, the only way that I can give them autographs was, I had a number of checks, and, in fact, it went into the thousands, and I'm sorry that my supply is now running low, but I have only a few left and it makes me very happy that I can make some little child happy with Babe's signature.

MURROW: Well, it must be a real satisfaction to correspond with so many people who care. Mrs. Ruth, what else keeps you occupied these days?

MRS. RUTH: Well, Mr. Murrow, I do a great deal of work on the Cancer Crusade, and also with the Babe Ruth League, and if you will come in here, I will show to you Babe's bedroom. It is just exactly the same as it was when he occupied it. Nothing at all has been changed. The same big, old-fashioned bed, the old-fashioned furniture as you see here, and I just kept it for sentimental reasons and can see no reason for making any change.

MURROW: How did your husband like to spend his quiet hours away from the sports world?

MRS. RUTH: Well, Babe was a great radio fan, and we didn't go out very much, and when we had company and entertained, it was usually in our home, and he was, well, it just reminds me of a story. Once when Mr. Walsh was up here -- after Babe's death, and, of course, the only way that I can give them autographs was, I had a number of checks, and, in fact, it went into the thousands, and I'm sorry that my supply is now running low, but I have only a few left and it makes me very happy that I can make some little child happy with Babe's signature.

MURROW: Well, it must be a real satisfaction to correspond with so many people who care. Mrs. Ruth, what else keeps you occupied these days?

MRS. RUTH: Well, Mr. Murrow, I do a great deal of work on the Cancer Crusade, and also with the Babe Ruth League, and if you will come in here, I will show to you Babe's bedroom. It is just exactly the same as it was when he occupied it. Nothing at all has been changed. The same big, old-fashioned bed, the old-fashioned furniture as you see here, and I just kept it for sentimental reasons and can see no reason for making any change.

MURROW: How did your husband like to spend his quiet hours away from the sports world?

MRS. RUTH: Well, Babe was a great radio fan, and we didn't go out very much, and when we had company and entertained, it was usually in our home, and he was, well, it just reminds me of a story. Once when Mr. Walsh was up here --

Christy Walsh, Babe's syndicate manager -- and he had a terrific contract for Babe to sign, and so Babe said, "Well," he said, "You talk it over with Claire. I've got to go in and look at the Lone Ranger." So it was a contract involving $100,000, but it was to endorse whisky, which Babe refused to do on account of it being a bad influence for the youth of our country.

MURROW: Mrs. Ruth, you are also interested in cancer research, I believe, aren't you?

MRS. RUTH: I do a great deal of work for cancer, yes, and, of course, the Babe Ruth League, which was 1953. We now have some 200,000 boys wearing the Babe Ruth uniform, over 2200 leagues, and, of course, their inspiration was Babe, and this is the way that he spent the last years of his life.

MURROW: That's a wonderful composite picture. Well, Mrs. Ruth, television has certainly had an impact on baseball in the past few years. Do you suppose Babe would be a living room coach if he were here today watching the games on television?

MRS. RUTH: Well, I hardly think so, Mr. Murrow. In the first place, Babe could hardly see himself out of baseball because when he was no longer able to play, he thought he had so much to give to the game, and, of course, when he quit

Christy Walsh, Babe's syndicate manager -- and he had a terrific contract for Babe to sign, and so Babe said, "Well," he said, "You talk it over with Claire. I've got to go in and look at the Lone Ranger." So it was a contract involving $100,000, but it was to endorse whisky, which Babe refused to do on account of it being a bad influence for the youth of our country.

MURROW: Mrs. Ruth, you are also interested in cancer research, I believe, aren't you?

MRS. RUTH: I do a great deal of work for cancer, yes, and, of course, the Babe Ruth League, which was 1953. We now have some 200,000 boys wearing the Babe Ruth uniform, over 2200 leagues, and, of course, their inspiration was Babe, and this is the way that he spent the last years of his life.

MURROW: That's a wonderful composite picture. Well, Mrs. Ruth, television has certainly had an impact on baseball in the past few years. Do you suppose Babe would be a living room coach if he were here today watching the games on television?

MRS. RUTH: Well, I hardly think so, Mr. Murrow. In the first place, Babe could hardly see himself out of base-ball because when he was no longer able to play, he thought he had so much to give to the game, and, of course, when he quit baseball, he turned to golf and he shot in the low 70's. He got to where he rarely even turned on the radio; only asked about the scores when he came in from his golf match.

MURROW: Mrs. Ruth, I finished reading your book, "The Babe And I" last night. I wonder if you would read that last paragraph from the book.

MRS. RUTH: I would be most happy to. "I thought I was the only one who loved him. Now I know I wasn't. A nation loved him, not just because he hit 714 home runs, and did all sorts of wonderful things on a baseball field, but because the people sensed that he was one of them. He had their faith and their weaknesses. They loved him because he was, above all else, a great human being." And they were so very right.

MURROW: Well, Mrs. Ruth, as the wife of such a public idol as Babe, the lack of anonymity must have been a problem at times, wasn't it?

MRS. RUTH: Well, it certainly was, and we lived a very plain life. Of course, Babe kind of loved the country, but I thought that the protection of a home and an apartment in New York City would suit him very much better than living in the country where he wouldn't have very much privacy at all.

baseball, he turned to golf and he shot in the low 70's. He got to where he rarely even turned on the radio; only asked about the scores when he came in from his golf match.

MURROW: Mrs. Ruth, I finished reading your book, "The Babe And I" last night. I wonder, if you would read that last paragraph from the book.

MRS. RUTH: I would be most happy to. "I thought I was the only one who loved him. Now I know I wasn't. A nation loved him, not just because he hit 714 home runs, and did all sorts of wonderful things on a baseball field, but because the people sensed that he was one of them. He had their faith and their weaknesses. They loved him because he was, above all else, a great human being." And they were so very right.

MURROW: Well, Mrs. Ruth, as the wife of such a public idol as Babe, the lack of anonymity must have been a problem at times, wasn't it?

MRS. RUTH: Well, it certainly was, and we lived a very plain life. Of course, Babe kind of loved the country, but I thought that the protection of a home and an apartment in New York City would suit him very much better than living in the country where he wouldn't have very much privacy at all.

MURROW: Well, I'm sure that a lot of people wanted to be able to boast that they actually shook hands with Babe Ruth, didn't they?

MRS. RUTH: Yes, that's true, Mr. Murrow, and Babe always laughed and told about playing in the Yankee Stadium to a jammed packed house, and an old man walked up to him and beckoned him over to his box, and he said, "Babe," he says, "do you remember me?" He said, "I shook hands with you 20 years ago in Chicago." And Babe said, "Well, I certainly do. It's nice to see you again."

MURROW: Well, Mrs. Babe Ruth, thank you very much for letting us come tonight and will you say good night to Julie and also to Tammy for us?

MRS. RUTH: I certainly will.

MURROW: Good night. Thank you again.

MRS. RUTH: Good night, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good night. In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with author Cleveland Amory and his wife right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Author Cleveland Amory is a social historian who has been called "The chronicler of high society," a humorist, and sometimes satirical observer of the false

MURROW: Well, I'm sure that a lot of people wanted to be able to boast that they actually shook hands with Babe Ruth, didn't they?

MRS. RUTH: Yes, that's true, Mr. Murrow, and Babe always laughed and told about playing in the Yankee Stadium to a jammed packed house, and an old man walked up to him and beckoned him over to his box, and he said, "Babe," he says, "do you remember me?" He said, "I shook hands with you 20 years ago in Chicago." And Babe said, "Well, I certainly do. It's nice to see you again."

MURROW: Well, Mrs. Babe Ruth, thank you very much for letting us come tonight and will you say good night to Julie and also to Tammy for us?

MRS. RUTH: I certainly will.

MURROW: Good night. Thank you again.

MRS. RUTH: Good night, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good night. In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with author Cleveland Amory and his wife right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Author Cleveland Amory is a social historian who has been called "The chronicler of high society, a humorist, and sometimes satirical observer of the false fashions and foibles of the very rich. Cleveland Amory was born 41 years ago into a prominent Boston society family, textile manufacturers, but he turned to writing. His books, "The Proper Bostonians" and "The Last Resort" have been described by THE NEW YORK TIMES as classics in their field. Of his first book, "The Proper Bostonians", one critic said, "He writes with enough impudence, accuracy and affection to make the first families anxious lest there should be a second volume."

Although Cleveland Amory's assignments take him all over the world, for the past six years he has lived in an apartment in this building on the East Side of Manhattan with his wife, Martha, and their 14-year-old daughter.

Evening, Martha.

MRS. AMORY: Good evening, Ed. Welcome.

MURROW: Thank you. Evening, Cleveland.

AMORY: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Martha, Cleveland has sometimes been called the most controversial reporter of the social scene. Now, tell me, is that by accident or design?

MRS. AMORY: Well, Ed, I don't know. I think that society is pretty controversial anyway, and I think society themselves think it's controversial, so I think it's pretty fashions and foibles of the very rich. Cleveland Amory was born 41 years ago into a prominent Boston society family, textile manufacturers, but he turned to writing. His books, "The Proper Bostonians" and "The Last Resort" have been described by THE NEW YORK TIMES as classics in their field. Of his first book, "The Proper Bostonians", one critic said, "He writes with enough impudence, accuracy and affection to make the first families anxious lest there should be a second volume."

Although Cleveland Amory's assignments take him all over the world, for the past six years he has lived in an apartment in this building on the East Side of Manhattan with his wife, Martha, and their 14-year-old daughter.

Evening, Martha.

MRS. AMORY: Good evening, Ed. Welcome.

MURROW: Thank you. Evening, Cleveland.

AMORY: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Martha, Cleveland has sometimes been called the most controversial reporter of the social scene. Now, tell me, is that by accident or design?

MRS. AMORY: Well, Ed, I don't know. I think that society is pretty controversial anyway, and I think society themselves think it's controversial, so I think it's pretty safe.

AMORY: I developed rebellious tendencies kind of early, Ed. I went to Milton Academy, and in the spring of my senior year at Milton, I wrote for catalogs to other colleges. When these began to pour in, there was one from Stanford. It was located in the West. Now, I was familiar with the West. I had an aunt in Denham and a cousin in Needham, but this particular catalog occupied my attention. It showed boys and girls together, and it was -- I was just engaged in rapt attention at this thing, when my father chanced to see it over my shoulder. "Bah!" he said, so I went to Harvard.

MURROW: Cleveland, just what directed your interests to society?

AMORY: Well, I think, Ed, that I was brought up in this resort of Nahan outside of Boston. If you were not born there, you are mispronouncing it. It was a kind of a nice simple Boston way of life. It had such street picnics and croquet in the early evening. Everything was very simple, but across the way we used to hear tales of a simply terrible place aptly enough called Newport. It was really frightful what we heard about it. I don't think on this program it would be any place to repeat those tales. Ed, they spent their money.

AMORY: I developed rebellious tendencies kind of early, Ed. I went to Milton Academy, and in the spring of my senior year at Milton, I wrote for catalogs to other colleges. When these began to pour in, there was one from Stanford. It was located in the West. Now, I was familiar with the West. I had an aunt in Denham and a cousin in Needham, but this particular catalog occupied my attention. It showed boys and girls together, and it was -- I was just engaged in rapt attention at this thing, when my father chanced to see it over my shoulder. "Bah!" he said, so I went to Harvard.

MURROW: Cleveland, just what directed your interests to society?

AMORY: Well, I think, Ed, that I was brought up in this resort of Nahan outside of Boston. If you were not born there, you are mispronouncing it. It was a kind of a nice simple Boston way of life. It had such street picnics and croquet in the early evening. Everything was very simple, but across the way we used to hear tales of a simply terrible place aptly enough called Newport. It was really frightful what we heard about it. I don't think on this program it would be any place to repeat those tales. Ed, they spent their money.

MURROW: They spent their money? So you went to look. Is that right?

AMORY: I wanted to see it.

MURROW: Martha, are you a Bostonian too?

MRS. AMORY: No, I'm not a Bostonian, Ed. I was born in New York, and raised in Greenwich, Connecticut, and my father was William Hodge, the actor, who wrote his plays, produced them, starred in them. He wrote 27 plays and never had a failure. And my mother was also a star. And when I first went into the theater, the very first thing that ever was said to me was: "You'll never be as beautiful as your mother, and I doubt if you'll be as good an actress as your father." But to get back to whether I was born in Boston, don't you know Bostonians never marry Bostonians?

AMORY: We can't, Ed. We have to spread the culture.

MRS. AMORY: You see, you can't win.

MURROW: Martha, would you say Cleveland has just been guilty of the snobbery he complains about so often?

MRS. AMORY: Well, can we call it reverse snobbery?

MURROW: Cleveland, just what is historian Amory's definition of a snob anyway?

MURROW: They spent their money? So you went to look. Is that right?

AMORY: I wanted to see it.

MURROW: Martha, are you a Bostonian too?

MRS. AMORY: No, I'm not a Bostonian, Ed. I was born in New York, and raised in Greenwich, Connecticut, and my father was William Hodge, the actor, who wrote his plays, produced them, starred in them. He wrote 27 plays and never had a failure. And my mother was also a star. And when I first went into the theater, the very first thing that ever was said to me was: "You'll never be as beautiful as your mother, and I doubt if you'll be as good an actress as your father." But to get back to whether I was born in Boston, don't you know Bostonians never marry Bostonians?

AMORY: We can't, Ed. We have to spread the culture.

MRS. AMORY: You see, you can't win.

MURROW: Martha, would you say Cleveland has just been guilty of the snobbery he complains about so often?

MRS. AMORY: Well, can we recall it reverse snobbery?

MURROW: Cleveland, just what is historian Amory's definition of a snob anyway?

AMORY: Well, I have an old book here, Ed, that has a rather interesting definition in it. The word originally meant a cobbler's helper, and then it came to mean anyone ashamed of that lowly position. But only very recently did it become a word meaning anybody ashamed of anybody else. So you can see that -- well, I don't know whether there are more or less snobs, actually, in the world today. I think I see a lot of encouraging signs. I could find a good family, Ed, as a good family is one that used to be better.

MURROW: Well, I know on occasion you have been asked to ghostwrite a few books. Is that right?

AMORY: Yes, I have. These have come to me from time to time. I think what you are referring to specifically might be her late Majesty, the Duchess of Windsor.

MURROW: Might be.

AMORY: I want to give the line here to the person who coined it. My wife, Martha, coined the line, "You can't make the Duchess of Windsor into a Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

MRS. AMORY: Yes, but you said something that had a great deal of integrity about it, too, and I laud you for saying that you would omit facts but you wouldn't distort.

AMORY: Well, there were a lot of other ones, actually, Ed, that came along that I've had at least conver-

AMORY: Well, I have an old book here, Ed, that has a rather interesting definition in it. The word originally meant a cobbler's helper, and then it came to mean anyone ashamed of that lowly position. But only very recently did it become a word meaning anybody ashamed of anybody else. So you can see that -- well, I don't know whether there are more or less snobs, actually, in the world today. I think I see a lot of encouraging signs. I could find a good family, Ed, as a good family is one that used to be better.

MURROW: Well, I know on occasion you have been asked to ghostwrite a few books. Is that right?

AMORY: Yes, I have. These have come to me from time to time. I think what you are referring to specifically might be her late Majesty, the Duchess of Windsor.

MURROW: Might be.

AMORY: I want to give the line here to the person who coined it. My wife, Martha, coined the line, "You can't make the Duchess of Windsor into a Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

MRS. AMORY: Yes, but you said something that had a great deal of integrity about it, too, and I lead you for saying that you would omit facts but you wouldn't distort.

AMORY: Well, there were a lot of other ones, actually, Ed, that came along that I've had at least conversations about doing autobiographies. The late Aga Khan, for instance, Ross Bigliosi, Helena Rubenstein, Mike Romanoff, Billy Rose, Sherman Billingsley, Marlene Dietrich, Zsa Zsa Gabor. It's quite a list.

MURROW: It is indeed.

AMORY: And the trouble with them, those kinds of books, to me is that I sometimes wonder what ever happened to plain old biography with no "auto" at all.

MURROW: Tell me, does writing occupy most of your time, or do you occasionally take time off for other things?

MRS. AMORY: Oh, Cleveland's a great Red Sox fan. He loves baseball, and, of course, he'svery happy tonight that the Red Sox won.

AMORY: But I think I used to be on the safe side, Ed. I'm bringing up my daughter to be a Yankee fan. It's a happier life.

MURROW: You're quite a chess player, too, aren't you?

AMORY: I have a real hobby, I think, to show you. I'd very much like to show you this one.

MRS. AMORY: Oh, they're beautiful. They really are.

AMORY: I love chess and I have a sort of idea of sations about doing autobiographies. The late Aga Khan, for instance, Ross Bigelow, Helena Rubenstein, Mike Romanoff, Billy Rose, Sherman Billingsley, Marlene Dietrich, Zsa Zsa Gabor. It's quite a list.

MURROW: It is indeed.

AMORY: And the trouble with them, those kinds of books, to me is that I sometimes wonder what ever happened to plain old biography with no "auto" at all.

MURROW: Tell me, does writing occupy most of your time, or do you occasionally take time off for other things?

MRS. AMORY: Oh, Cleveland's a great Red Sox fan. He loves baseball, and, of course, he'avery happy tonight that the Red Sox won.

AMORY: But I think I used to be on the safe side, Ed. I'm bringing up my daughter to be a Yankee fan. It's a happier life.

MURROW: You're quite a chess player, too, aren't you?

AMORY: I have a real hobby, I think, to show you. I'd very much like to show you this one.

MRS. AMORY: Oh, they're beautiful. They really are.

AMORY: I love chess and I have a sort of idea of trying to get one chess set from every country in the world. I don't know whether I'm going to ever achieve that goal, but I would like to show you here some rather interesting sets. This one comes from the collection of Mr. J. Leff in Uniontown, Pennsylvania. It was carved in 1918, and it is a white Russian vs. Red Russian propaganda set. I don't know if you can see here, but the knights on the white Russian side have ass' ears, whereas, of course, the red Russians are so noble you just can't bear it. This set here is an Eskimo set and the queen has a papoose. This set is from the Cameroons in Africa, and it is another very attractive set. This set came from Ruth Chatterton, and it is a very handsome little French set. This set was brought to me from India by Arnold Weissberger and it is one of my very favorites. This set came from Mr. Max Hess in Allentown, Pennsylvania, and it is a rather remarkable Chinese set with the interior ball carvings. This final set from the Karlbach Galleries is probably the finest example of an Indian set. The game originated in India, as you know.

MURROW: Martha, are you a chess player, too?

MRS. AMORY: I'm a very good chess kibitzer, but I do love playing chess. I haven't the concentration to get through the entire game. I like the openings and I like the trying to get one chess set from every country in the world. I don't know whether I'm going to ever achieve that goal, but I would like to show you here some rather interesting sets. This one comes from the collection of Mr. J. Leff in Uniontown, Pennsylvania. It was carved in 1918, and it is a white Russian vs. Red Russian propaganda set. I don't know if you can see here, but the knights on the white Russian side have ass' ears, whereas, of course, the red Russians are so noble you just can't bear it. This set here is an Eskimo set and the queen has a pappoose. This set is from the Cameroons in Africa, and it is another very attractive set. This set came from Ruth Chatterton, and it is a very handsome little French set. This set was brought to me from India by Arnold Weissberger and it is one of my very favorites. This set came from Mr. Max Hess in Allentown, Pennsylvania, and it is a rather remarkable Chinese set with the interior ball carvings. This final set from the Karlbach Galleries is probably the finest example of an Indian set. The game originated in India, as you know.

MURROW: Martha, are you a chess player, too?

MRS. AMORY: I'm a very good chess kibitzer, but I do love playing chess. I haven't the concentration to get through the entire game. I like the openings and I like the end games, and I love to have Cleveland come back and show me where he got in a tight spot and look on and say, "Why didn't you do this? That might have been better."

AMORY: For this last set, though, Ed, this is -- I would like to mention -- a three dimensional set, but to do that I think we should bring in the new generation because this is part of their world. My daughter, Gail.

MURROW: Good evening, Gail.

GAIL: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MRS. AMORY: Isn't this an exciting set? We adore it. We think it's very dramatic and fun and wonderful and our (Name mentioned) ~~grand Abigail~~ made it and it's the only set of its kind. There are three three dimensional sets in the world, but this is the first that has been made as a piece of furniture, and it's heaven. It's wonderful even if you don't play. You can look down into it and you think you're doing deep sea fishing or something. Try and tell Ed a little bit about it if you can, about the moves. Gail does understand it and can play this.

MURROW: That's more than I do. Go ahead, Gail.

GAIL: Well, there are eight boards instead of one--

MURROW: Yes?

GAIL: And a man can move up and down as well as and games, and I love to have Cleveland come back and show me where he got in a tight spot and look on and say, "Why didn't you do this? That might have been better."

AMORY: For this last set, though, Ed, this is -- I would like to mention -- a three dimensional set, but to do that I think we should bring in the new generation because this is part of their world. My daughter, Gail.

MURROW: Good evening, Gail.

GAIL: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MRS. AMORY: Isn't this an exciting set? We adore it. We think it's very dramatic and fun and wonderful and our ~~grand Abigail~~ made it and it's the only set of its kind. There are three three dimensional sets in the world, but this is the first that has been made as a piece of furniture, and it's heaven. It's wonderful even if you don't play. You can look down into it and you think you're doing deep sea fishing or something. Try and tell Ed a little bit about it if you can, about the moves. Gail does understand it and can play this.

MURROW: That's more than I do. Go ahead, Gail.

GAIL: Well, there are eight boards instead of one--

MURROW: Yes?

GAIL: And a man can move up and down as well as straight ahead, and there's 64 men on a side, and one of the difficulties that's presented by this is that after the white's second move, there's a possibility of over one million moves.

AMORY: And I also would like to point out, Ed, herethat these cases that you may be able to see, in three dimensional chess there are four brand new pieces. That is a favorite, a fool, a hypogriffe, and an archbishop, and all of these can move, well, in a great many different directions.

MURROW: How long does it take to finish a game?

AMORY: We've never finished one yet.

MRS. AMORY: You come back in a year. We'll have completed the game.

MURROW: All right.

AMORY: It is actually the only one in the world, this particular---

MRS. AMORY: Don't you think it's pretty? I just love it.

MURROW: Beautiful.

MRS. AMORY: It's a wonderful one, and it's all sort of aquamarine and blue inside too.

MURROW: Well, aside from playing chess, you work at home, don't you?

straight ahead, and there's 64 men on a side, and one of the difficulties that's presented by this is that after the white's second move, there's a possibility of over one million moves. AMORY: And I also would like to point out, Ed, here that these cases that you may be able to see, in three dimensional chess there are four brand new pieces. That is a favorite, a fool, a hypogriffe, and an archbishop, and all of these can move, well, in a great many different directions.

MURROW: How long does it take to finish a game?

AMORY: We've never finished one yet.

MRS. AMORY: You come back in a year. We'll have completed the game.

MURROW: All right.

AMORY: It is actually the only one in the world, this particular---

MRS. AMORY: Don't you think it's pretty? I just love it.

MURROW: Beautiful.

MRS. AMORY: It's a wonderful one, and it's all sort of aquamarine and blue inside too.

MURROW: Well, aside from playing chess, you work at home, don't you?

MRS. AMORY: Oh, yes. Would you like to see where Cleveland works?

MURROW: Um, hm.

MRS. AMORY: All right, let's go. We'll see you, Gail. You concentrate on those.

MURROW: Good night, Gail.

GAIL: Good night.

MRS. AMORY: And, Ed, this is our lovely carousel horse. I love it anyway, and when I get too much of chess, I escape. This is my little carousel horse that we got on the Riviera. And here is where Cleveland works, and I think it's a wonderful, big, lovely study, and he has a stand-up desk, mainly, I think, because he can move around, and a target is more difficult to get at if it's moving.

MURROW: Cleveland, is that your research material behind you there?

AMORY: Well, my work actually, Ed, is a sort of a combination of personal and book research. It's a link of the past. I like to be in this room tonight particularly because, as you know, It's National Library Week---

MURROW: Yes.

AMORY: ---and I think that while we all want to support the public libraries, part of this program is also to

MRS. AMORY: Oh, yes. Would you like to see where Cleveland works?

MURROW: Um, hm.

MRS. AMORY: All right, let's go. We'll see you, Gail. You concentrate on those.

MURROW: Good night, Gail.

GAIL: Good night.

MRS. AMORY: And, Ed, this is our lovely carousel horse. I love it anyway, and when I get too much of chess, I escape. This is my little carousel horse that we got on the Riviera. And here is where Cleveland works, and I think it's a wonderful, big, lovely study, and he has a stand-up desk, mainly, I think, because he can move around, and a target is more difficult to get at if it's moving.

MURROW: Cleveland, is that your research material behind you there?

AMORY: Well, my work actually, Ed, is a sort of a combination of personal and book research. It's a link of the past. I like to be in this room tonight particularly because, as you know, It's National Library Week---

MURROW: Yes.

AMORY: ---and I think that while we all want to support the public libraries, part of this program is also to build private libraries. I know that I feel my biggest honor that has ever come my way was when the New York Public Library called me and asked if they thought they should proceed with a collection in my field, and I felt in that way responsible for future generations, which I think is the feeling books give you. I love books and I would perhaps like to point out a couple of them to you. This room was actually modeled on the library of Mr. E. ~~Degelie~~ De Golyer in Texas, who is known as "The Texan who could read." He had about 11,000 books in one room, and I asked him once what was the best book he ever read, and he said, "This book here," which is a "History of Warfare of Science with Theology in Christendom."

MRS. AMORY: It's really a beautiful book. It's not as stuffy as it sounds.

AMORY: It's by Andrew Dickson White, who made it with Ezra Cornell, who started Cornell University, and it took 29 years to write. Up there is a book by Mr. Powell, the librarian in the University of California, and up beside it is a little book called, "Comfort Found In Good Old Books" by a man who literally in his whole life had found no solace when his only son died and he finally turned to books. Books are the most lasting thing. While I like writing for magazines, and do a good deal for THE SATURDAY REVIEW and THE NEW build private libraries. I know that I feel my biggest honor that has ever come my way was when the New York Public Library called me and asked if they thought they should proceed with a collection in my field, and I felt in that way responsible for future generations, which I think is the feeling books give you. I love books and I would perhaps like to point out a couple of them to you. This room was actually modeled on the library of Mr. E. Degolyer in Texas, who is known as "The Texan who could read." He had about 11,000 books in one room, and I asked him once what was the best book he ever read, and he said, "This book here," which is a "History of Warfare of Science with Theology in Christendom."

MRS. AMORY: It's really a beautiful book. It's not as stuffy as it sounds.

AMORY: It's by Andrew Dickson White, who made it with Ezra Cornell, who started Cornell University, and it took 29 years to write. Up there is a book by Mr. Powell, the librarian in the University of California, and up beside it is a little book called, "Comfort Found In Good Old Books" by a man who literally in his whole life had found no solace when his only son died and he finally turned to books. Books are the most lasting thing. While I like writing for magazines, and do a good deal for THE SATURDAY REVIEW and THE NEW YORK TIMES and others, I think books are my first love.

MURROW: Do you feel that today people take society as seriously as they once did, Cleveland?

AMORY: No, I don't, Ed. I think that the whole caliber of it has changed, and the whole word itself has changed. I am working now on a project with Mr. Earl Blackwell and Mr. Bennett Cerf and some others with Mr. Sidney Cohen as editor, and what we are trying to do is an international celebrity register. It's the first sort of frontal assault on the social register, and I think society and the word has changed from what they used to call the 400 to what might be now called the 4,000.

MRS. AMORY: Darling, don't forget my very favorite project that you're on, "The Dancing Master." I love it.

AMORY: Well, that's a musical comedy that we're doing for Kenneth Blumgarten and Morton DeGarfter and we're looking forward to that very much.

MURROW: Well, much luck with it. Thank you very much, Martha. Thank you, Cleveland.

MRS. AMORY: Good night and thank you.

MURROW: Good night and thank you for letting us come.

AMORY: Good night.

YORK TIMES and others, I think books are my first love.

MURROW: Do you feel that today people take society as seriously as they once did, Cleveland?

AMORY: No, I don't, Ed. I think that the whole caliber of it has changed, and the whole word itself has changed. I am working now on a project with Mr. Earl Blackwell and Mr. Bennett Cerf and some others with Mr. Sidney Cohen as editor, and what we are trying to do is an international celebrity register. It's the first sort of frontal assault on the social register, and I think society and the word has changed from what they used to call the $400 to what might be now called the $4,000.

MRS. AMORY: Darling, don't forget my very favorite project that you're on, "The Dancing Master." I love it.

AMORY: Well, that's a musical comedy that we're doing for Kenneth Blumgarten and Morton DeGarfter and we're looking forward to that very much.

MURROW: Well, much luck with it. Thank you very much, Martha. Thank you, Cleveland.

MRS. AMORY: Good night and thank you.

MURROW: Good night and thank you for letting us come.

AMORY: Good night.

MURROW: Good night. I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests, right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be visiting with the President-elect of the American Bar Association, attorney Whitney North Seymour and his wife. We'll also be calling on one of the world's great violinists, Isaac Stern and his wife, here in New York.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

MURROW: Good night. I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests, right after a word from Revlon.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be visiting with the President-elect of the American Bar Association, attorney Whitney North Seymour and his wife. We'll also be calling on one of the world's great violinists, Isaac Stern and his wife, here in New York.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Stern, and

Mr. and Mrs. Whitney North Seymour

April 24, 1959 - 10:30 PM EDT

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting at the home of violinist Isaac Stern and his wife, but first we'll be going to visit with Mr. and Mrs. Whitney North Seymour. He's one of the country's foremost attorneys and the president-elect of the American Bar Association.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Stern, and

Mr. and Mrs. Whitney North Seymour

April 24, 1959 - 10:30 PM EDT

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting at the home of violinist Isaac Stern and his wife, but first we'll be going to visit with Mr. and Mrs. Whitney North Seymour. He's one of the country's foremost attorneys and the president-elect of the American Bar Association.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545
LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

MURROW: Whitney North Seymour is the president-elect of the American Bar Association. He takes office as president in August of 1960. That will be another step in the 35 years he has devoted to the law and its problems.

Mr. Seymour has served as a law teacher and as an Assistant Solicitor-General of the United States. That was in the Hoover Administration. He's been a senior partner in one of New York's leading law firms, and specialized in anti-trust cases for something like the last 20 years.

Whitney North Seymour was born in Chicago 58 years ago; graduated from the University of Wisconsin; received his law degree at Columbia, and served in such diverse groups as The Society of American Magicians, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, and New York's Municipal Art Society. All this from a man who lists among his early jobs carrying a spear for Sarah Bernhard, and services arranger at Yellowstone Park where he insists he was a grizzly bear guard at Old Faithful.

For the past 35 years, Mr. and Mrs. Seymour have lived in that dark colored house in Greenwich Village here in New York. According to their best estimates, the house is over 150 years old.

Good evening, Mr. Seymour.

MURROW: Whitney North Seymour is the president-elect of the American Bar Association. He takes office as president in August of 1960. That will be another step in the 35 years he has devoted to the law and its problems.

Mr. Seymour has served as a law teacher and as an Assistant Solicitor-General of the United States. That was in the Hoover Administration. He's been a senior partner in one of New York's leading law firms, and specialized in anti-trust cases for something like the last 20 years.

Whitney North Seymour was born in Chicago 58 years ago; graduated from the University of Wisconsin; received his law degree at Columbia, and served in such diverse groups as The Society of American Magicians, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, and New York's Municipal Art Society. All this from a man who lists among his early jobs carrying a spear for Sarah Bernhard, and services arranger at Yellowstone Park where he insists he was a grizzly bear guard at Old Faithful.

For the past 35 years, Mr. and Mrs. Seymour have lived in that dark colored house in Greenwich Village here in New York. According to their best estimates, the house is over 150 years old.

Good evening, Mr. Seymour.

SEYMOUR: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: You know, sir, I can't help wondering whether your early experience as a spear carrier and a grizzly bear guard has been of any real help to you in the legal profession.

SEYMOUR: Well, fortunately, most of my professional brethren don't use spears, and very few of them behave like bears.

MURROW: It sounds to me like an evasive answer.

SEYMOUR: It is.

MURROW: Well, in checking the long list of legal groups you've served on, or headed in the past, I was struck with the absence of any reference to an elected public office. Is that correct?

SEYMOUR: Well, I only ran for one. When I was at Wisconsin I ran for president of the senior class, and my opponent was a very attractive young man, whose name was Frederic Fickle. He's since become a very famous actor under the name of Frederic March.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

SEYMOUR: And when we campaigned for the sorority vote, I campaigned on careers for women, and he campaigned on things that women seemed to be much more interested in,

SEYMOUR: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: You know, sir, I can't help wondering whether your early experience as a spear carrier and a grizzly bear guard has been of any real help to you in the legal profession.

SEYMOUR: Well, fortunately, most of my professional brethren don't use spears, and very few of them behave like bears.

MURROW: It sounds to me like an evasive answer.

SEYMOUR: It is.

MURROW: Well, in checking the long list of legal groups you've served on, or headed in the past, I was struck with the absence of any reference to an elected public office. Is that correct?

SEYMOUR: Well, I only ran for one. When I was at Wisconsin I ran for president of the senior class, and my opponent was a very attractive young man, whose name was Frederic Fickle. He's since become a very famous actor under the name of Frederic March.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

SEYMOUR: And when we campaigned for the sorority vote, I campaigned on careers for women, and he campaigned on things that women seemed to be much more interested in.

and he naturally won.

MURROW: Tell me, did Mrs. Seymour participate in that election?

SEYMOUR: No, she came to Wisconsin for summer school after the election from Huntington, West Virginia. Darling?

MRS. SEYMOUR: Yes?

SEYMOUR: Are you through primping?

MRS. SEYMOUR: Yes, dear.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Seymour.

MRS. SEYMOUR: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: I know your husband is constantly traveling on his law firm's business, and the Bar Association business. Do you generally go with him?

MRS. SEYMOUR: Oh, always. I've become the greatest ~~boss~~ of the American Bar Association.

SEYMOUR: She's got more friends of men over 70 than any other woman I know.

MRS. SEYMOUR: Well, unfortunately, a lot of them are dying off.

MURROW: I think you went to England with Mr. Seymour, didn't you?

MRS. SEYMOUR: Yes, I did. We had a wonderful

and he naturally won.

MURROW: Tell me, did Mrs. Seymour participate in that election?

SEYMOUR: No, she came to Wisconsin for summer school after the election from Huntington, West Virginia. Darling?

MRS. SEYMOUR: Yes?

SEYMOUR: Are you through primping?

MRS. SEYMOUR: Yes, dear.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Seymour.

MRS. SEYMOUR: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: I know your husband is constantly traveling on his law firm's business, and the Bar Association business. Do you generally go with him?

MRS. SEYMOUR: Oh, always. I've become the greatest boss of the American Bar Association.

SEYMOUR: She's got more friends of men over 70 than any other woman I know.

MRS. SEYMOUR: Well, unfortunately, a lot of them are dying off.

MURROW: I think you went to England with Mr. Seymour, didn't you?

MRS. SEYMOUR: Yes, I did. We had a wonderful trip. It was an experience that we'll never forget as long as we live.

SEYMOUR: As you know, Ed, the English lawyers are invited to come over here in 1960.

MURROW: Yes, I do. Mr. Seymour, your father was a lawyer. Was that your boyhood ambition?

SEYMOUR: Well, I started in as an archeologist when I was a boy. I collected Indian arrowheads -- this was in Wisconsin -- and I wrote a very learned article when I was 15, which was entitled, "The scientific and correct method of opening Indian mounds," which had a very small circulation.

MURROW: And then did you give up collecting arrowheads?

SEYMOUR: I did.

MRS. SEYMOUR: He gave up collecting arrowheads, but didn't stop collecting. We've been through old guns, shaving mugs, mechanical banks. The house just burst at the seams. I had to stop him.

SEYMOUR: There's still some of the banks around, and here are a couple that I thought you might like to see work. This is the kicking mule bank, and this is the Tammany bank, which has a little action when money is put in it.

trip. It was an experience that we'll never forget as long as we live. MURROW: Tell me, did you ever. Seymour particularly that sleep after school. Wisconsin for summer travelling or do you generally go with him?

SEYMOUR: As you know, Ed, the English lawyers are invited to come over here in 1960. We're always. I'm sorry. I know your husband is constantly

MURROW: Yes, I do. Mr. Seymour, your father was a lawyer. Was that your boyhood ambition?

SEYMOUR: Well, I started in as an archeologist when I was a boy. I collected Indian arrowheads -- this was in Wisconsin -- and I wrote a very learned article when I was 15, which was entitled, "The scientific and correct method of opening Indian mounds," which had a very small circulation. MURROW: I know your husband is constantly

MURROW: And then did you give up collecting arrowheads?

SEYMOUR: I did.

MRS. SEYMOUR: He gave up collecting arrowheads, but didn't stop collecting. We've been through old guns, shaving mugs, mechanical banks. The house just burst at the seams. I had to stop him.

SEYMOUR: There's still some of the banks around, and here are a couple that I thought you might like to see work. This is the kicking mule bank, and this is the Tammany bank, which has a little action when money is put in it.

MURROW: Tell me, is that the sort of thing that qualified you for the Society of Magicians?

SEYMOUR: Well, I was qualified by being a very poor amateur magician as a boy. I never sawed a woman in half, but my youngest son became a very good amateur magician.

MRS. SEYMOUR: He---

MURROW: Mrs.---

MRS. SEYMOUR: Excuse me.

MURROW: Excuse me. I was just going to ask, Mrs. Seymour, where are the boys now?

MRS. SEYMOUR: Well, one of them, the elder one, Whitney, Jr., commonly known as Mike, is practicing law in New York. The younger one, Thadeus, is dean-elect at Dartmouth College and lives in Hanover with his four children. I might add that we have two grandchildren in New York, too.

MURROW: Mr. Seymour, most of your non-legal interests seem to have been sort of indoor activities: reading, I can see, and collecting things. Are you interested in any outdoor sports at all?

SEYMOUR: Well, I've never done anything in athletics. I'm a very, very poor golfer, and my outside sports are chiefly walking and conversation.

MURROW: Well, just how extensive is your con-

MURROW: Tell me, is that the sort of thing that qualified you for the Society of Magicians?

SEYMOUR: Well, I was qualified by being a very poor amateur magician as a boy. I never sawed a woman in half, but my youngest son became a very good amateur magician.

MRS. SEYMOUR: He---

MURROW: Mrs.---

MRS. SEYMOUR: Excuse me.

MURROW: Excuse me. I was just going to ask, Mrs. Seymour, where are the boys now?

MRS. SEYMOUR: Well, one of them, the elder one, Whitney, Jr., commonly known as Mike, is practicing law in New York. The younger one, Thadeus, is deen-elect at Dartmouth College and lives in Hanover with his four children. I might add that we have two grandchildren in New York, too.

MURROW: Mr. Seymour, most of your non-legal interests seem to have been sort of indoor activities: reading, I can see, and collecting things. Are you interested in any outdoor sports at all?

SEYMOUR: Well, I've never done anything in athletics. I'm a very, very poor golfer, and my outside sports are chiefly walking and conversation.

MURROW: Well, just how extensive is your con-versatinnal exercise?

MRS. SEYMOUR: I just thought of something. Could you go downstairs with us, Mr. Murrow? I'd like to find something to show you.

MURROW: Sure.

SEYMOUR: Well, you know, when you talk with somebody like Judge Leonard Hand, the conversational exercise is like climbing a high mountain peak.

MURROW: It is indeed. And is your walking generally aimless, or do you always---

SEYMOUR: Well, we walk around New York. We try to see the beautiful old things in New York. Lately, as you probably know, the Municipal Art Society---

MRS. SEYMOUR: Pardon me, darling. You go on in. I want to go and look for this. I'll be in in a minute.

SEYMOUR: The Municipal Art Society has been organizing walks around New York to see some of the fine old things. Things like City Hall, one of the most beautiful buildings in America. Grace Church and St. Paul's, two of the landmarks in New York, and on one of our walks we looked at that Seward statue in Madison Square where the head is the head of Seward and the body was a spare body of Lincoln.

MURROW: Well, it's interesting that a Midwesterner--- versational exercise?

MRS. SEYMOUR: I just thought of something. Could you go downstairs with us, Mr. Murrow? I'd like to find something to show you.

MURROW: Sure.

SEYMOUR: Well, you know, when you talk with somebody like Judge Leonard Hand, the conversational exercise is like climbing a high mountain peak.

MURROW: It is indeed. And is your walking generally aimless, or do you always---

SEYMOUR: Well, we walk around New York. We try to see the beautiful old things in New York. Lately, as you probably know, the Municipal Art Society---

MRS. SEYMOUR: Pardon me, darling. You go on in. I went to go and look for this. I'll be in in a minute.

SEYMOUR: The Municipal Art Society has been organizing walks around New York to see some of the fine old things. Things like City Hall, one of the most beautiful buildings in America. Grace Church and St. Paul's, two of the landmarks in New York, and on one of our walks we looked at that Seward statue in Madison Square where the head is the head of Seward and the body was a spare body of Lincoln.

MURROW: Well, it's interesting that a Midwesterner---

SEYMOUR: This picture is a picture of a great-great-great-uncle of mine named Thadeus Seymour, for whom our youngest son is named. He came to New York City in 1801 from upstate New York where he had moved from New Canaan, Connecticut. He was born in 1776 and he was on the reception committee for Lafayette when he was received in City Hall in 1825.

MURROW: Well, then it would be fair to say that the Seymour family has witnessed the growth of the nation since 1776. Right?

SEYMOUR: Yes, and before that. Of course, all Americans, whenever they came here, are very much interested in the celebration which we're going to have a week from today of Law Day, U.S.A., which was celebrated for the first time last year.

MURROW: Well, Mr. Seymour, the fact that Law Day falls also on May 1, the same day the Communist countries celebrate May Day, that isn't by accident, is it?

SEYMOUR: No, of course not. It seemed to those who established Law Day that the contrast between the May Day celebrated by the Communists, and the celebration of a rule of law would make a point for our people and for the world, and so Law Day U.S.A. was devised and proclaimed by the

SEYMOUR: This picture is a picture of a great-great-great-uncle of mine named Thadeus Seymour, for whom our youngest son is named. He came to New York City in 1801 from upstate New York where he had moved from New Canaan, Connecticut. He was born in 1776 and he was on the reception committee for Lafayette when he was received in City Hall in 1825.

MURROW: Well, then it would be fair to say that the Seymour family has witnessed the growth of the nation since 1776. Right?

SEYMOUR: Yes, and before that. Of course, all Americans, whenever they came here, are very much interested in the celebration which we're going to have a week from today of Law Day, U.S.A., which was celebrated for the first time last year.

MURROW: Well, Mr. Seymour, the fact that Law Day falls also on May 1, the same day the Communist countries celebrate May Day, that isn't by accident, is it?

SEYMOUR: No, of course not. It seemed to those who established Law Day that the contrast between the May Day celebrated by the Communists, and the celebration of a rule of law would make a point for our people and for the world, and so Law Day U.S.A. was devised and proclaimed by the President. It emphasizes some things about our system and the contrast with the Communist system. First, that ours is a government of laws and not of men, which means there's no room for the exercise of arbitrary power under our system. Then it's our belief in the doctrine of equal justice under law, the motto which is on the Supreme Court Building in Washington, meaning, of course, that the poor and the rich get equal justice in our courts, the thing which the lawyers are trying to see to by their encouragement of legal aid, and all these things relate also the Bill of Rights and the great freedoms which it guarantees. Freedom of speech, and press, and of religion, and their correlative rights: the right to hear, and the right to read. And when we think of what's happened in Hungary, and what has just happened in Tibet, the contrast between the Communist May Day and our Law Day becomes entirely clear.

MURROW: Well, Mr. Seymour, just how does the American Bar Association remind the nation of this each year?

SEYMOUR: Well, last year there were 20,000 celebrations over the country. This year we hope there will be many more. They are conducted in courthouses and in schools and in public buildings. We hope all citizens will partici-

President. It emphasizes some things about our system and the contrast with the Communist system. First, that ours is a government of laws and not of men, which means there's no room for the exercise of arbitrary power under our system. Then it's our belief in the doctrine of equal justice under law, the motto which is on the Supreme Court Building in Washington, meaning, of course, that the poor and the rich get equal justice in our courts, the thing which the lawyers are trying to see to by their encouragement of legal aid, and all these things relate also the Bill of Rights and the great freedoms which it guarantees. Freedom of speech, and press, and of religion, and their correlative rights: the right to hear, and the right to read. And when we think of what's happened in Hungary, and what has just happened in Tibet, the contrast between the Communist May Day and our law Day becomes entirely clear.

MURROW: Well, Mr. Seymour, just how does the American Bar Association remind the nation of this each year?

SEYMOUR: Well, last year there were 20,000 celebrations over the country. This year we hope there will be many more. They are conducted in courthouses and in schools and in public buildings. We hope all citizens will participatpate in some of those ceremonies. They help to remind people not only of what I've said, but also the fact that the citizens have duties as well as rights, andthat they owe an obligation to defend our country and our institutions and to participate in the community effort, jury service, and everything of that sort.

MURROW: Well, sir, with your interest in explaining the importance of law to the nation, I wonder what your feelings are on the suggestion that this might be done through yet another means: by permitting television cameras in courtrooms during trials.

SEYMOUR: Well, Ed, as you know, there is a little difference of opinion between the lawyers and the broadcasters on this subject.

MURROW: I do.

SEYMOUR: Canon 35 of the Canons of Judicial Ethics forbids the use of television, broadcasting, and photography in courtrooms, and we are now engaged through a committee of the American Bar Association, and I hope in cooperation with the media, in exploring what the real facts are as to the effect of the use of such media on trials. All of us are interested in preserving fair trials.

MURROW: I wonder if Mrs. Seymour has found what pate in some of those ceremonies. They help to remind people not only of what I've said, but also the fact that the citizens have duties as well as rights, and that they owe an obligation to defend our country and our institutions and to participate in the community effort, jury service, and everything of that sort.

MURROW: Well, sir, with your interest in explaining the importance of law to the nation, I wonder what your feelings are on the suggestion that this might be done through yet another means: by permitting television cameras in courtrooms during trials.

SEYMOUR: Well, Ed, as you know, there is a little difference of opinion between the lawyers and the broadcasters on this subject.

MURROW: I do.

SEYMOUR: Canon 35 of the Canons of Judicial Ethics forbids the use of television, broadcasting, and photography in courtrooms, and we are now engaged through a committee of the American Bar Association, and I hope in cooperation with the media, in exploring what the real facts are as to the effect of the use of such media on trials. All of us are interested in preserving fair trials.

MURROW: I wonder if Mrs. Seymour has found what she went looking for.

MRS. SEYMOUR: It took some doing but I found it.

MURROW: What is it?

MRS. SEYMOUR: It is the cup he won for pitching horseshoes in Bermuda when he defeated the island champion, who was also a policeman, and he claims he's never gone in for organized sports.

MURROW: Is that his sole athletic trophy?

MRS. SEYMOUR: That is his sole athletic trophy. I'm very proud of it. He tucked it away.

SEYMOUR: I think I must add that it wasn't real athletic prowess even then. Our boys, who were then 11 and 6, heckled my opponent so severely that his nerves became frayed and he lost the contest.

MURROW: Hardly judicial procedure, was it?

SEYMOUR: No, it wasn't.

MURROW: Mr. Seymour, in your long and varied experience, with the law, was there any one case, any one task, that gave you special satisfaction?

SEYMOUR: Well, I think that the most exciting thing I ever did was to spend two years in the Solicitor-General's office arguing cases in the Supreme Court for the government in 1931 to 1933, and in those years we got to know

she went looking for.

MRS. SEYMOUR: It took some doing but I found it.

MURROW: What is it?

MRS. SEYMOUR: It is the cup he won for pitching horseshoes in Bermuda when he defeated the island champion, who was also a policeman, and he claims he's never gone in for organized sports.

MURROW: Is that his sole athletic trophy?

MRS. SEYMOUR: That is his sole athletic trophy. I'm very proud of it. He tucked it away.

SEYMOUR: I think I must add that it wasn't real athletic prowess even then. Our boys, who were then 11 and 6, heckled my opponent so severely that his nerves became frayed and he lost the contest.

MURROW: Hardly judicial procedure, was it?

SEYMOUR: No, it wasn't.

MURROW: Mr. Seymour, in your long and varied experience, with the law, was there any one case, any one task, that gave you special satisfaction?

SEYMOUR: Well, I think that the most exciting thing I ever did was to spend two years in the Solicitor-General's office arguing cases in the Supreme Court for the government in 1931 to 1933, and in those years we got to know

Holmes, and Brandeis, and Cardozo, Stone, and Hughes and Roberts among other judges, and they were among the greatest judges that ever sat on the court. And in those days in Washington, life was rather informal, and on Monday afternoons most of the justices would entertain at tea, and it was very simple to get to know them very well, and when we went to see them, we spared them a discussion of judicial philosophy, which I am afraid a lot of people wanted to talk to them about, and we just gossiped with them, and we found that fun and we rather thought they did.

MURROW: Well, those must have been very enjoyable years for you, too, Mrs. Seymour.

MRS. SEYMOUR: They were wonderful, but my greatest thrill came when I had tea for the first time with Mr. Justice Holmes. Mrs. Holmes had died so that there was no regular tea day for them, and the men were all going all the time, but no women. One day I said to Justice Stone that I really regretted it. I had talked to Mr. Justice Holmes a great many times, but always outside the court. The next day his secretary called and invited me to tea, and it was terrific. He was all dressed up. And this continued until we left Washington twice a year, and each time, even after he had retired, he would be in full cutaway, very dapper, but Holmes, and Brandeis, and Cardozo, Stone, and Hughes and Roberts among other judges, and they were among the greatest judges that ever sat on the court. And in those days in Washington, life was rather informal, and on Monday afternoons most of the justices would entertain at tea, and it was very simple to get to know them very well, and when we went to see them, we spared them a discussion of judicial philosophy, which I am afraid a lot of people wanted to talk to them about, and we just gossiped with them, and we found that fun and we rather thought they did.

MURROW: Well, those must have been very enjoyable years for you, too, Mrs. Seymour.

MRS. SEYMOUR: They were wonderful, but my greatest thrill came when I had tea for the first time with Mr. Justice Holmes. Mrs. Holmes had died so that there was no regular tea day for them, and the men were all going all the time, but no women. One day I said to Justice Stone that I really regretted it. I had talked to Mr. Justice Holmes a great many times, but always outside the court. The next day his secretary called and invited me to tea, and it was terrific. He was all dressed up. And this continued until we left Washington twice a year, and each time, even after he had retired, he would be in full cutaway, very dapper, but with a bright red tie. It's a sight, until you've seen it, you just can't believe.

MURROW: What a wonderful experience.

MRS. SEYMOUR: Oh, it was.

MURROW: Mr. Seymour, in reference to today's Supreme Court, many people seem to feel that the American Bar Association has in some measure attacked the Supreme Court recently.

SEYMOUR: Well, I think that's a misinterpretation of the action. The parliamentary situation was complicated, and I don't blame anybody for misunderstanding it, but the American Bar Association did not attack the Supreme Court. It made it clear that, on the contrary, it had a very high regard for the position of the court as a defender of the Bill of Rights, and that it recognized the obligation of the bar to support and defend the independence of the judiciary, so that I think that is a misinterpretation of the American Bar Association action.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Mr. Seymour. Thank you, Mrs. Seymour, for letting us come tonight.

MRS. SEYMOUR: Thank you.

MURROW: Good night.

MRS. SEYMOUR: Good night, Mr. Murrow.

with a bright red tie. It's a sight, until you've seen it, you just can't believe.

MURROW: What a wonderful experience.

MRS. SEYMOUR: Oh, it was.

MURROW: Mr. Seymour, in reference to today's Supreme Court, many people seem to feel that the American Bar Association has in some measure attacked the Supreme Court recently.

SEYMOUR: Well, I think that's a misinterpretation of the action. The parliamentary situation was complicated, and I don't blame anybody for misunderstanding it, but the American Bar Association did not attack the Supreme Court. It made it clear that, on the contrary, it had a very high regard for the position of the court as a defender of the Bill of Rights, and that it recognized the obligation of the bar to support and defend the independence of the judiciary, so that I think that is a misinterpretation of the American Bar Association action.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Mr. Seymour. Thank you, Mrs. Seymour, for letting us come tonight.

MRS. SEYMOUR: Thank you.

MURROW: Good night.

MRS. SEYMOUR: Good night, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

SEYMOUR: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: Good night. In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with violinist Isaac Stern and his wife right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Isaac Stern, who has been described by music critics as one of the world's master fiddle players, was born 38 years ago in Kriminyetz, Russia, where, as he puts it, he soaked up Russian culture for something like 10 months. That was before his parents came to this country and settled in San Francisco. He started piano lessons at six; gave that up for the violin at eight; entered the San Francisco Conservatory at 10, and made his professional debut at 15. He never studied abroad, a rarity among concert violinists. But he has performed with all the major symphony orchestras on every continent except Africa.

Isaac Stern and his wife met in Israel, and were married there eight years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Stern and their daughter, Sheila, live in this apartment house on the west side of Central Park here in New York. While this is home base for Isaac, I think he actually spent about five weeks there last year.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

SKYMOUR: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: Good night. In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with violinist Isaac Stern and his wife right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Isaac Stern, who has been described by music critics as one of the world's master fiddle players, was born 38 years ago in Krimlnyetz, Russia, where, as he puts it, he soaked up Russian culture for something like 10 months. That was before his parents came to this country and settled in San Francisco. He started piano lessons at six; gave that up for the violin at eight; entered the San Francisco Conservatory at 10, and made his professional debut at 15. He never studied abroad, a rarity among concert violinists. But he has performed with all the major symphony orchestras on every continent except Africa.

Isaac Stern and his wife met in Israel, and were married there eight years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Stern and their daughter, Sheila, live in this apartment house on the west side of Central Park here in New York. While this is home base for Isaac, I think he actually spent about five weeks there last year.

Good evening, Mr. Stern.

STERN: Good evening, and most welcome to our home, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you very much. It must seem a little strange to you being home, doesn't it?

STERN: Strange, but very good -- though not so bad this year. Tomorrow I leave for a concert in the Pittsburgh area. Next week to the Cathal Festival in Puerto Rico, a happy return, and then to Paris, Brussels, and Israel for a short four-week tour, and then the middle of June, back home, and that will be the end of some 23 months without any break.

MURROW: Sort of a case of "Have violin, will travel," huh?

STERN: Very true.

MURROW: Don't you get weary being so constantly on the move?

STERN: Well, traveling becomes a way of life. It's something that you learn to accustom yourself to. It's as easy for me to go to Paris as to take a car downtown in the midst of traffic, and besides, we have so many very good friends throughout the world, seeing them again is always a gala occasion, and may I say it's a very good way to keep friends, seeing them not too often. And then we also like

Good evening, Mr. Stern.

STERN: Good evening, and most welcome to our home, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you very much. It must seem a little strange to you being home, doesn't it?

STERN: Strange, but very good -- though not so bad this year. Tomorrow I leave for a concert in the Pittsburgh area. Next week to the Cathal Festival in Puerto Rico, a happy return, and then to Paris, Brussels, and Israel for a short four-week tour, and then the middle of June, back home, and that will be the end of some 23 months without any break.

MURROW: Sort of a case of "Have violin, will travel," huh?

STERN: Very true.

MURROW: Don't you get weary being so constantly on the move?

STERN: Well, travelling becomes a way of life. It's something that you learn to accustom yourself to. It's as easy for me to go to Paris as to take a car downtown in the midst of traffic, and besides, we have so many very good friends throughout the world, seeing them again is always a gala occasion, and may I say it's a very good way to keep friends, seeing them not too often. And then we also like countries, and you know, you build up a set of balances and checks by which you recognize the differences in countries in various small ways, and that's always interesting to us.

MURROW: Well, on your rare periods at home, you must feel a little bit lost for something to do.

STERN: Lost? We're never lost. We always have more to do than we can do, Mr. Murrow. There's always our friends to see, the musical life in New York to catch up with, the latest developments in our recording work, theater, all these things, and then there must always come a time, too, for at least a moment of respite, of thinking, sort of re-charging one's own batteries, and this room where we find our-selves, which is my studio, is where I do it. This is my place, my own little area where I can be alone, or with friends, and have everything that I need around me.

MURROW: I think every man likes at least one spot at home where he can keep his personal treasures.

STERN: That's true. There are many in this room. Of course, here is my music, right here, all filed away. Here are my violins. There are more in there. These will contentedly remain in their case tonight because we want to have the pleasure of speaking with you more than playing, I think, because my playing has been established by now.

countries, and you know, you build up a set of balances and checks by which you recognize the differences in countries in various small ways, and that's always interesting to us.

MURROW: Well, on your rare periods at home, you must feel a little bit lost for something to do.

STERN: Lost? We're never lost. We always have more to do than we can do, Mr. Murrow. There's always our friends to see, the musical life in New York to catch up with, the latest developments in our recording work, theater, all these things, and then there must always come a time, too, for at least a moment of respite, of thinking, sort of re-charging one's own batteries, and this room where we find ourselves, which is my studio, is where I do it. This is my place, my own little area where I can be alone, or with friends, and have everything that I need around me.

MURROW: I think every man likes at least one spot at home where he can keep his personal treasures.

STERN: That's true. There are many in this room. Of course, here is my music, right here, all filed away. Here are my violins. There are more in there. These will contentedly remain in their case tonight because we want to have the pleasure of speaking with you more than playing, I think, because my playing has been established by now.

Over here on this wall there are pictures of many colleagues and friends and people we've met throughout our travels. Many colleagues with whom I've had the pleasure of making music over the years. Friends like Eugene Olmley, Leonard Bernstein, with whom I've made many discs for Columbia Records, some just very recently. Other people we've met in our travels: Mr. Nehru, Mrs. Roosevelt, and others, and many musicians, whom I've had the privilege of knowing who have given something to the dignity and the history of music, in meeting with them and discussing -- not always in agreement perhaps -- that we learn more and more the traditions of music that we can pass on to others. You can't always do it by yourself.

MURROW: Well, it's been quite a while since Isaac Stern graduated from practicing the scale, but there must still be a certain amount of preliminary work you have to do before a concert, isn't there?

STERN: Oh, there is a great deal of it, but before we go into that, Mr. Murrow, I'd like to have you see this painting I have on the wall here. I don't think you'd recognize the artist, would you?

MURROW: I am afraid I don't.

STERN: Well, I didn't think you would because

Over here on this wall there are pictures of many colleagues and friends and people we've met throughout our travels. Many colleagues with whom I've had the pleasure of making music over the years. Friends like Eugene Ormandy, Leonard Bernstein, with whom I've made many discs for Columbia Records, some just very recently. Other people we've met in our travels: Mr. Nehru, Mrs. Roosevelt, and others, and many musicians, whom I've had the privilege of knowing who have given something to the dignity and the history of music, in meeting with them and discussing -- not always in agreement perhaps -- that we learn more and more the traditions of music that we can pass on to others. You can't always do it by yourself.

MURROW: Well, it's been quite a while since Isaac Stern graduated from practicing the scale, but there must still be a certain amount of preliminary work you have to do before a concert, isn't there?

STERN: Oh, there is a great deal of it, but before we go into that, Mr. Murrow, I'd like to have you see this painting I have on the wall here. I don't think you'd recognize the artist, would you?

MURROW: I am afraid I don't.

STERN: Well, I didn't think you would because it's not by an artist, it's by a physicist, and he happens to be my brother-in-law. He never studied painting, but he does this for a hobby, and it was so apt and gay and fitted so well that I felt it had a place here where I work all the time.

MURROW: I think it's very nice.

STERN: Speaking of work, Mr. Murrow, you never cease working. You know, work is only a part of an approach toward your art, and the more you learn, the more you learn how much more there is you can do no matter how far you've gone. The more perceptive you are, the more you learn that there is much more to be learned, and here in this room very often I've sat with my colleague, Alexander Zoggin. He's been my associate for over 20 years, and we sit here and we talk and try and discuss and argue -- argue forcibly -- and sometimes to settle an argument, we come to the tape machine and we try it out this way. (Puts tape recorder on.) That, Mr. Murrow, is a special version of the Beethoven Sonata for Person to Person with our compliments.

MURROW: Thank you very much. Tell me, is this room off limits for Mrs. Stern and your daughter?

STERN: Well, when there's serious work to be done, I can be in this room sometimes from one to ten hours

it's not by an artist, it's by a physicist, and he happens to be my brother-in-law. He never studied painting, but he does this for a hobby, and it was so apt and gay and fitted so well that I felt it had a place here where I work all the time.

MURROW: I think it's very nice.

STERN: Speaking of work, Mr. Murrow, you never cease working. You know, work is only a part of an approach toward your art, and the more you learn, the more you learn how much more there is you can do no matter how far you've gone. The more perceptive you are, the more you learn that there is much more to be learned, and here in this room very often I've sat with my colleague, Alexander Zoggin. He's been my associate for over 20 years, and we sit here and we talk and try and discuss and argue -- argue forcibly -- and sometimes to settle an argument, we come to the tape machine and we try it out this way. (Puts tape recorder on.) That, Mr. Murrow, is a special version of the Beethoven Sonata for Person to Person with our compliments.

MURROW: Thank you very much. Tell me, is this room off limits for Mrs. Stern and your daughter?

STERN: Well, when there's serious work to be done, I can be in this room sometimes from one to ten hours without any interruption. The phones are off, and I'm accused of using the phone sometimes as much as I do the violin, but when the room is closed, that's it, unless the daughter really wants to come in, in which case nothing stops her.

MURROW: I'm sure of that.

STERN: And after the work is over, Mr. Murrow, I'd like you to see this, a most important section here where one can get a slight respite after work hours, from milk to Old Forrester, Cognac, anything that the heart pleases, and it's very important, and very helpful at times. Now would you join me downstairs---

MURROW: Thank you very much.

STERN: ---to meet the rest of the family.

MURROW: Mr. Stern, if you picked up your violin now and started playing your repertoire straight through, how long would it take you?

STERN: Mr. Murrow, that's a question I've never thought about, really. One works, and learning new things and refurbishing the old ones, and I really can't say. There is so much that has been done. And here is our family sitting right here and waiting for us, my wife and my daughter. Hello, darling.

without any interruption. The phones are off, and I'm accused of using the phone sometimes as much as I do the violin, but when the room is closed, that's it, unless the daughter really wants to come in, in which case nothing stops her.

MURROW: I'm sure of that.

STERN: And after the work is over, Mr. Murrow, I'd like you to see this, a most important section here where one can get a slight respite after work hours, from milk to old Forrester, Cognac, anything that the heart pleases, and it's very important, and very helpful at times. Now would you join me downstairs---

MURROW: Thank you very much.

STERN: ---to meet the rest of the family.

MURROW: Mr. Stern, if you picked up your violin now and started playing your repertoire straight through, how long would it take you?

STERN: Mr. Murrow, that's a question I've never thought about, really. One works, and learning new things and refurbishing the old ones, and I really can't say. There is so much that has been done. And here is our family sitting right here and waiting for us, my wife and my daughter. Hello, darling.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Stern.

MRS. STERN: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Shalom, shalom.

MRS. STERN: Shalom. Sheila and I were just looking at the book we have been reading this week to celebrate Passover. It is a beautiful Haggada illustrated by Arthur Shick.

MURROW: Mrs. Stern, I get the impression your husband is one of the busiest men in the music business. Do you have any trouble keeping up with him?

MRS. STERN: Not really. I enjoy everything he is doing, and although I sometimes think that he is much too busy, I still like whatever he does, and I like to join in it whatever he does.

MURROW: Well, when do you get time to devote to your own personal interests?

MRS. STERN: Well, I try to fit them in between concerts. I stay in New York from time to time and then I have time to devote to my own personal activities such as---

STERN: I think Mrs. Stern is sometimes a little bit shy about this. She happens to have a prime interest in Israel bonds. She is co-chairman of the women's division in New York, and I must say that this is something in which I

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Stern.

MRS. STERN: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Shalom, shalom.

MRS. STERN: Shalom. Sheila and I were just looking at the book we have been reading this week to celebrate Passover. It is a beautiful Haggada illustrated by Arthur Shick.

MURROW: Mrs. Stern, I get the impression your husband is one of the busiest men in the music business. Do you have any trouble keeping up with him?

MRS. STERN: Not really. I enjoy everything he is doing, and although I sometimes think that he is much too busy, I still like whatever he does, and I like to join in it whatever he does.

MURROW: Well, when do you get time to devote to your own personal interests?

MRS. STERN: Well, I try to fit them in between concerts. I stay in New York from time to time and then I have time to devote to my own personal activities such as---

STERN: I think Mrs. Stern is sometimes a little bit shy about this. She happens to have a prime interest in Israel bonds. She is co-chairman of the women's division in New York, and I must say that this is something in which I heartily concur. We both have an ardent interest in Israel. We met there. We have many friends, and as Americans, we feel very strongly about our part in supporting a vital, a young and worthwhile democracy.

MURROW: I have a hunch that you're an excellent saleswoman, too.

STERN: She does very well.

MRS. STERN: Well, I try to.

MURROW: Were you an Isaac Stern fan before you met?

MRS. STERN: I think so. I went to many concerts before going to Israel. I lived in this city, and, as a matter of fact, when I met my husband, I showed him some of the programs I had kept which were of his performances prior to our meeting. One is '47, '48, and one even from a Paris debut recital which he gave in Paris at that time. So he was quite surprised when I showed him all these programs.

MURROW: Mrs. Stern, in the course of your travels I'm sure you collected many interesting things besides programs, haven't you?

MRS. STERN: Oh, yes, we did, and if you want to come into the living room we will be glad to show them to you.

STERN: Follow me right in here, Mr. Murrow. And heartily concur. We both have an ardent interest in Israel. We met there. We have many friends, and as Americans, we feel very strongly about our part in supporting a vital, a young and worthwhile democracy.

MURROW: I have a hunch that you're an excellent saleswoman, too.

STERN: She does very well.

MRS. STERN: Well, I try to.

MURROW: Were you an Isaac Stern fan before you met? have any trouble keeping up with him?

MRS. STERN: I think so. I went to many concerts before going to Israel. I lived in this city, and, as a matter of fact, when I met my husband, I showed him some of the programs I had kept which were of his performances prior to our meeting. One is '47, '48, and one even from a Paris debut recital which he gave in Paris at that time. So he was quite surprised when I showed him all these programs.

MURROW: Mrs. Stern, in the course of your travels I'm sure you collected many interesting things besides programs, haven't you?

MRS. STERN: Oh, yes, we did, and if you want to come into the living room we will be glad to show them to you.

STERN: Follow me right in here, Mr. Murrow. And in this case here, for example, here is a small copy, Stradivarius model violin made by a friend of mine in Genoa. Exquisitely made even to the knot of the bow, which works very well. Here is a piece of Venetian glass dug up in Israel and given to us by a friend there. Here's a set of miniature instruments from India given to us by a friend in Bombay. There are other things here from Japan and Hong Kong, and so on, and we try to keep up with little things which remind us of the warm experiences we've had throughout the world.

MURROW: Tell me this. Have you found in your travels around this country that Americans are becoming more appreciative of good music?

STERN: I think that's absolutely true. I don't think that Americans quite realize to what extent music has become a really important part of our life. You know, we have today in this country over 1200 cities where there is music and an organized series of concerts in one way or another. We have perhaps 800 orchestras. Admittedly, many of them are little community orchestras, amateur orchestras, but that's very important because then the people have a personal feeling of belonging to music. And again the increase in recordings, in television, which I don't think has done quite in this case here, for example, here is a small copy, Stradivarius model violin made by a friend of mine in Genoa. Exquisitely made even to the knot of the bow, which works very well. Here is a piece of Venetian glass dug up in Israel and given to us by a friend there. Here's a set of miniature instruments from India given to us by a friend in Bombay. There are other things here from Japan and Hong Kong, and so on, and we try to keep up with little things which remind us of the warm experiences we've had throughout the world.

MURROW: Tell me this. Have you found in your travels around this country that Americans are becoming more appreciative of good music?

STERN: I think that's absolutely true. I don't think that Americans quite realize to what extent music has become a really important part of our life. You know, we have today in this country over 1200 cities where there is music and an organized series of concerts in one way or another. We have perhaps 800 orchestras. Admittedly, many of them are little community orchestras, amateur orchestras, but that's very important because then the people have a personal feeling of belonging to music. And again the increase in recordings, in television, which I don't think has done quite enough yet -- I think its potential is far greater -- and in radio, and, of course, the impact of the war which has brought many, many great artists and teachers and performers who have become residents in this country, part of our orchestras, part of our teaching system, and we've learned a great deal and accepted them in our own culture, as we have so much of our own culture.

MURROW: Well, you played in Russia many times. What was your reaction to the audiences there?

STERN: Well, they are extraordinary. They are very, very perceptive, but they've always been that. For centuries they have been born to dance and sing, and they feel music is a necessary part of their lives, a very important part, and that is one of the reasons why I feel particularly strongly about the exchange program. You know, the exchange program officially is only about two years old, but my manager, Sol Hurod, for example; now the Bolshoi Ballet is here -- other things have been going on. He has been doing this for many years. We have all been doing it as artists in our travels around the world, and there is nothing I can say that can emphasize the importance, as far as I am concerned. I should think that many people might not realize a symphony orchestra, a ballet, or an artist playing the violin, or sing-enough yet -- I think its potential is far greater -- and in radio, and, of course, the impact of the war which has brought many, many great artists and teachers and performers who have become residents in this country, part of our orchestras, part of our teaching system, and we've learned a great deal and accepted them in our own culture, as we have so much of our own culture.

MURROW: Well, you played in Russia many times. What was your reaction to the audiences there?

STERN: Well, they are extraordinary. They are very, very perceptive, but they've always been that. For centuries they have been born to dance and sing, and they feel music is a necessary part of their lives, a very important part, and that is one of the reasons why I feel particularly strongly about the exchange program. You know, the exchange program officially is only about two years old, but my manager, Sol Hurok, for example; now the Bolshoi Ballet is here -- other things have been going on. He has been doing this for many years. We have all been doing it as artists in our travels around the world, and there is nothing I can say that can emphasize the importance, as far as I am concerned. I should think that many people might not realize a symphony orchestra, a ballet, or an artist playing the violin, or singing, can be of such importance in what is a very powerful and dangerous field of politics, and so on, and yet there is a communication, a willingness to listen on both sides, and we can speak in ways, obviously, that cannot be subverted by words, and even more important, I think, the very essence of the idea of exchange is the ability of artists from one side and the other to visit each other in great groups to see what life is like, and perhaps to get over some of the perhaps sometimes deliberate misconceptions which we are perhaps both accustomed to a bit.

MURROW: How does the Russian musical education compare to ours?

STERN: I wish we had time, Mr. Murrow, to go into this more deeply than we have, but, you know, recently there has been a great deal of outcry about scientific education since the Sputniks and the satellites and so on. I wish there were more realization of what the dignity of the country means historically, and how important our whole viewpoint is, not only in science and technique, but in the way we live and the way we think. We have done wonders in musical education on a higher level. There has been a great deal of advance in the schools -- in colleges and universities, but on the basic level, the grade school education, we are

ing, can be of such importance in what is a very powerful and dangerous field of politics, and so on, and yet there is a communication, a willingness to listen on both sides, and we can speak in ways, obviously, that cannot be subverted by words, and even more important, I think, the very essence of the idea of exchange is the ability of artists from one side and the other to visit each other in great groups to see what life is like, and perhaps to get over some of the perhaps sometimes deliberate misconceptions which we are perhaps both accustomed to a bit.

MURROW: How does the Russian musical education compare to ours?

STERN: I wish we had time, Mr. Murrow, to go into this more deeply than we have, but, you know, recently there has been a great deal of outcry about scientific education since the Sputniks and the satellites and so on. I wish there were more realization of what the dignity of the country means historically, and how important our whole viewpoint is, not only in science and technique, but in the way we live and the way we think. We have done wonders in musical education on a higher level. There has been a great deal of advance in the schools -- in colleges and universities, but on the basic level, the grade school education, we are sadly lacking. It is in a pitiful state. We need more understanding of this. We have to get more qualified people and paid and trained well for the job, to begin the idea that music is not an acquired culture, not something that you learn instead of anything else, and not a sissy part of living, but an active part of our natural life, that which we love and we cherish, and I would like to see more understanding of that in this country.

MURROW: Mrs. Stern, some people think long-hair musicians are inclined to be stuffy. Your husband certainly gives the opposite impression.

MRS. STERN: I agree with you.

STERN: Well, she better say that.

MURROW: Thank you very much for letting us come tonight.

STERN: It was nice to be with you, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: It was very pleasant, indeed.

MRS. STERN: Good night, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you very much and I hope you have a wonderful time in Israel.

STERN: Thank you.

MRS. STERN: Thank you very much.

MURROW: Good night.

sadly lacking. It is in a pitiful state. We need more understanding of this. We have to get more qualified people and paid and trained well for the job, to begin the idea that music is not an acquired culture, not something that you learn instead of anything else, and not a sissy part of living, but an active part of our natural life, that which we love and we cherish, and I would like to see more understanding of that in this country.

MURROW: Mrs. Stern, some people think long-hair musicians are inclined to be stuffy. Your husband certainly gives the opposite impression.

MRS. STERN: I agree with you.

STERN: Well, she better say that.

MURROW: Thank you very much for letting us come tonight.

STERN: It was nice to be with you, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: It was very pleasant, indeed.

MRS. STERN: Good night, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you very much and I hope you have a wonderful time in Israel.

STERN: Thank you.

MRS. STERN: Thank you very much.

MURROW: Good night.

Next week we'll be going to California for a visit with actress Gale Storm and her family. We'll also be visiting the military academy at West Point with Captain of Cadets and President of this year's graduating class, Peter Dawkins.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

Next week we'll be going to California for a visit with actress Gale Storm and her family. We'll also be visiting the military academy at West Point with Captain of Cadets and President of this year's graduating class, Peter Dawkins.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Gale Storm and Family, and

Peter Dawkins

May 1, 1959 - 10:30 PM EDT

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be going to California for a visit with actress Gale Storm and her family. Then we'll be moving on to West Point, New York, where Army's football captain and president of this year's graduating class at the military academy, Peter Dawkins, will be waiting for us.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Gale Storm and family, and
Peter Dawkins

May 1, 1959 - 10:30 PM EDT

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be going to California for a visit with actress Gale Storm and her family. Then we'll be moving on to West Point, New York, where Army's football captain and president of this year's graduating class at the military academy, Peter Dawkins, will be waiting for us.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545

LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

(Commercial)

MURROW: Actress Gale Storm, who has become familiar to millions of television viewers as the star of "My Little Margie" and "Oh, Susanna," is one Texan who freely admits that she's always been afraid of horses, although her early motion picture career frequently found her dabbing at her eyes as the cowboy rode off into the sunset.

Gale was born in Bloomington, Texas; was raised in Houston, and came to Hollywood at the age of 16 after winning a talent contest. In 1941 she married Lee Bonnell, a former actor from South Bend, Indiana, who is now an insurance executive in Hollywood, with the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company. The Bonnells have four children -- three boys and a girl -- ranging in ages from 16 to 3.

A little over four years ago, Gale and her husband built this Chinese modern home in Encino, California in the San Fernando Valley. It's about 40 minutes away from her studio.

Good evening out there. How about introducing yourselves?

PHIL BONNELL: How do you do, Mr. Murrow. I'm Phil, the oldest of the boys, and this is Susie, my little sister,

(Commercial)

MURROW: Actress Gale Storm, who has become familiar to millions of television viewers as the star of "My Little Margie" and "Oh, Susanna," is one Texan who freely admits that she's always been afraid of horses, although her early motion picture career frequently found her dabbing at her eyes as the cowboy rode off into the sunset.

Gale was born in Bloomington, Texas; was raised in Houston, and came to Hollywood at the age of 16 after winning a talent contest. In 1941 she married Lee Bonnell, a former actor from South Bend, Indiana, who is now an insurance executive in Hollywood, with the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company. The Bonnells have four children -- three boys and a girl -- ranging in ages from 16 to 3.

A little over four years ago, Gale and her husband built this Chinese modern home in Encino, California in the San Fernando Valley. It's about 40 minutes away from her studio.

Good evening out there. How about introducing yourselves?

PHIL BONNELL: How do you do, Mr. Murrow. I'm Phil, the oldest of the boys, and this is Susie, my little sister, who is the youngest in our family.

MURROW: Evening, Susie.

PHIL: Say hello to Mr. Murrow.

SUSIE: Hi, ya, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How are you?

SUSIE: I'm pretty fine.

MURROW: Good. Is this Susie's playhouse?

PHIL: No, Mr. Murrow, this is a tea house. My parents originally built it so they could have parties, but now we've kind of taken it over. We have our Hi-Y Club groups up here, and we spend the night up here, and that type of thing.

MURROW: Well, now that we have met two of the junior members of the Bonnell family, I think this would be a good time to say hello to your mother and father. Could that be arranged?

PHIL: Yes, sir. They're right down there, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Evening, Gale.

STORM: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Evening, Lee.

BONNELL: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Gale, this is something I've been curi-

who is the youngest in our family.

MURROW: Evening, Susie.

PHIL: Say hello to Mr. Murrow.

SUSIE: Hi, ya, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How are you?

SUSIE: I'm pretty fine.

MURROW: Good. Is this Susie's playhouse?

PHIL: No, Mr. Murrow, this is a tea house. My parents originally built it so they could have parties, but now we've kind of taken it over. We have our Hi-Y Club groups up here, and we spend the night up here, and that type of thing.

MURROW: Well, now that we have met two of the junior members of the Bonnell family, I think this would be a good time to say hello to your mother and father. Could that be arranged?

PHIL: Yes, sir. They're right down there, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Evening, Gale.

STORM: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Evening, Lee.

BONNELL: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Gale, this is something I've been curious about for a long while. How much of the real you is there in Little Margie and Susanna?

STORM: Well, Ed, I'm asked that question often. I like to think that there's very little of it. I like to think that I'm an actress, you know, and that these two characters are entirely separate from Mrs. Bonnell.

BONNELL: She's the mother of four children, Ed. It would be kind of tough at home to pull some of the antics that she pulls in "Oh, Susanna" and---

STORM: I'm not that clever.

MURROW: Well, we've already talked with the oldest and the youngest of the Bonnell brood. Where are the other two?

STORM: Well, I think they're in the house. Shall we go look for them? Phil, would you bring Susie down, honey, whether she wants to come down here or not? Just force her.

MURROW: Lee, it must be a source of satisfaction for you to come home from work or a business trip and know that you have such a fine family waiting for you.

BONNELL: Well, it certainly is, Ed. I very rarely get away on business trips. I did get home last night from one back in Springfield, however.

one about for a long while. How much of the real you is there in Little Margie and Susanna?

STORM: Well, Ed, I'm asked that question often. I like to think that there's very little of it. I like to think that I'm an actress, you know, and that these two characters are entirely separate from Mrs. Bonnell.

BONNELL: She's the mother of four children, Ed. It would be kind of tough at home to pull some of the antics that she pulls in "Oh, Susanna" and---

STORM: I'm not that clever.

MURROW: Well, we've already talked with the oldest and the youngest of the Bonnell brood. Where are the other two?

STORM: Well, I think they're in the house. Shall we go look for them? Phil, would you bring Susie down, honey, whether she wants to come down here or not? Just force her.

MURROW: Lee, it must be a source of satisfaction for you to come home from work or a business trip and know that you have such a fine family waiting for you.

BONNELL: Well, it certainly is, Ed. I very rarely get away on business trips. I did get home last night from one back in Springfield, however.

STORM: We were awfully glad to see him. Of course, there was a very special reason to get home, not only for our show tonight -- I'm including us and saying ours for your show, I should say -- because this is a special day. This is the day that Lee becomes general agent for the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company, and he has worked a long time for that, and I'm real proud of him.

MURROW: Congratulations, Lee.

BONNELL: Thank you, Ed. Well, as you can see, we built this house for the children, and I'd like to explain a little of it to you. Over here is our badminton court, and our basketball court, and here is the pool, and we have a pool cover here that we use---

STORM: It works.

BONNELL: It works real good, and we feel that with all the children in the neighborhood, we should make sure that we have the safety precautions. So this just lifts back and folds up against the wall back there when we want it, and it's called Safematic Pool. It's very good.

STORM: And it is nice -- and the yard is all enclosed with fence, but you have to have gates, and they leave them open.

MURROW: Gale?

STORM: We were awfully glad to see him. Of course, there was a very special reason to get home, not only for our show tonight -- I'm including us and saying ours for your show, I should say -- because this is a special day. This is the day that Lee becomes general agent for the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company, and he has worked a long time for that, and I'm real proud of him.

MURROW: Congratulations, Lee.

BONNELL: Thank you, Ed. Well, as you can see, we built this house for the children, and I'd like to explain a little of it to you. Over here is our badminton court, and our basketball court, and here is the pool, and we have a pool cover here that we use---

STORM: It works.

BONNELL: It works real good, and we feel that with all the children in the neighborhood, we should make sure that we have the safety precautions. So this just lifts back and folds up against the wall back there when we want it, and it's called Safematic Pool. It's very good.

STORM: And it is nice -- and the yard is all enclosed with fence, but you have to have gates, and they leave them open.

MURROW: Gale?

STORM: Yes.

MURROW: Shooting a weekly film series, and raising four youngsters, must keep you on a fairly exhausting schedule, doesn't it?

STORM: Oh, there's nothing to it! Yes, it certainly does, Ed. I have long hours, and in spite of that I feel I am very fortunate to be able to do -- well, to do the work I love, and to have nice children, and a husband I like, too. And here are the two missing boys. This is Peter.

MURROW: Good evening, Peter.

PETER: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

BONNELL: This is Paul.

MURROW: Hi, Paul.

PAUL: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: You know, you fellows look as though you're fairly close in age. Am I right?

PETER: Well, we're about 14 months apart, I'd say.

STORM: Exactly.

MURROW: Lee, do you think they're going to follow you into the business of insurance, or do they have any designs on an acting career?

STORM: Yes.

MURROW: Shooting a weekly film series, and raising four youngsters, must keep you on a fairly exhausting schedule, doesn't it?

STORM: Oh, there's nothing to it! Yes, it certainly does, Ed. I have long hours, and in spite of that I feel I am very fortunate to be able to do -- well, to do the work I love, and to have nice children, and a husband I like, too. And here are the two missing boys. This is Peter.

MURROW: Good evening, Peter.

PETER: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

BONNELL: This is Paul.

MURROW: Hi, Paul.

PAUL: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: You know, you fellows look as though you're fairly close in age. Am I right?

PETER: Well, we're about 14 months apart, I'd say.

STORM: Exactly.

MURROW: Lee, do you think they're going to follow you into the business of insurance, or do they have any designs on an acting career?

BONNELL: Well, I don't know. I think Phil has seen the light. He's the oldest boy, and I think he may go into the life insurance business. However, Pete here is quite a yachtsman, and Paul is a real fine horseman.

MURROW: Paul?

BONNELL: I don't know what they're going to do.

MURROW: Paul, I take it you don't share your mother's fear of horses.

STORM: You told.

PAUL: No, I don't. As a matter of fact, when I first wanted a horse, my mother influenced me by telling me if I brought my grades up, that I might be able to get one. So I worked very hard, and I brought my grades up, and now I keep my horse at a boarding stable, and I ride at the reservoir and I enjoy it very much.

MURROW: Oh, wonderful.

BONNELL: There's no water in the reservoir, however.

STORM: I don't think that's bribery, do you?

MURROW: No. And he said it was empty, too, Lee. And you, Pete, you're the boat man, right?

PETER: Yes, I've enjoyed boats about all my life, and we have a little boat out back that we have a lot BONNELL: Well, I don't know. I think Phil has seen the light. He's the oldest boy, and I think he may go into the life insurance business. However, Pete here is quite a yachtsman, and Paul is a real fine horseman.

MURROW: Paul?

BONNELL: I don't know what they're going to do.

MURROW: Paul, I take it you don't share your mother's fear of horses.

STORM: You told.

PAUL: No, I don't. As a matter of fact, when I first wanted a horse, my mother influenced me by telling me if I brought my grades up, that I might be able to get one. So I worked very hard, and I brought my grades up, and now I keep my horse at a boarding stable, and I ride at the reservoir and I enjoy it very much.

MURROW: Oh, wonderful.

BONNELL: There's no water in the reservoir, however.

STORM: I don't think that's bribery, do you?

MURROW: No. And he said it was empty, too, Lee. And you, Pete, you're the boat man, right?

PETER: Yes, I've enjoyed boats about all my life, and we have a little boat out back that we have a lot of fun with. We go fishing and also do a lot of skiing, but I think we might have to sell it this summer, though.

MURROW: Oh, I hope you don't.

PETER: Well, I hope we don't either.

STORM: He's trying to influence us to buy another boat. Aren't you?

PETER: Yes.

STORM: He taught me some things also. He taught me what a purse seine is. Now, I thought he was saying the wrong word. I thought it was perch. Oh, here they are. Perch seine. He thought that's what he wanted to do when he grew up at first. Now he's decided -- of course that was five minutes ago -- that he wants to be a charter boat captain, whatever that is.

MURROW: Oh, that should be a very fine life. You know, I think Susie is a very lucky little girl to have three big brothers around.

STORM: Well, you shouldn't tell her because I believe she thinks she has four fathers, and she likes it that way. Of course, the boys are so crazy about her. I thought at first that the "new" would wear off, you know, and they wouldn't pay so much attention to her, but it never has, and I should have had triplets at least.

of fun with. We go fishing and also do a lot of skiing, but I think we might have to sell it this summer, though.

MURROW: Oh, I hope you don't.

PETER: Well, I hope we don't either.

STORM: He's trying to influence us to buy another boat. Aren't you?

PETER: Yes.

STORM: He taught me some things also. He taught me what a purse seine is. Now, I thought he was saying the wrong word. I thought it was perch. Oh, here they are. Perch seine. He thought that's what he wanted to do when he grew up at first. Now he's decided -- of course that was five minutes ago -- that he wants to be a charter boat captain, whatever that is.

MURROW: Oh, that should be a very fine life. You know, I think Susie is a very lucky little girl to have three big brothers around.

STORM: Well, you shouldn't tell her because I believe she thinks she has four fathers, and she likes it that way. Of course, the boys are so crazy about her. I thought at first that the "new" would wear off, you know, and they wouldn't pay so much attention to her, but it never has, and I should have had triplets at least.

MURROW: Gale?

STORM: Yes?

MURROW: Which holds the greater attraction for your family? Television or movies?

STORM: Well, they love television. You know, they have to be dragged away to do their homework, and, well, they love to watch movies at home, for one thing. We feel very fortunate that we can show them here. We have a projection room.

BONNELL: We'd like to tell you about that projection room, Ed. In our own house, we had a much smaller house, and it was very simple to set up our camera equipment. We would just put the screen up on one end of the room, and the projection machine up on the other, and we got our pictures, but here---

STORM: It's different.

BONNELL: Let Gale show you how it works.

STORM: Well, you see, it's -- pardon me, Susie love. You see, all we have to do if you want to show a picture here, when you have your very own projection room, and a Hollywood-type house, is this. I'll just sort of demonstrate quickly.

MURROW: Yes?

MURROW: Gale?

STORM: Yes?

MURROW: Which holds the greater attraction for your family? Television or movies?

STORM: Well, they love television. You know, they have to be dragged away to do their homework, and, well, they love to watch movies at home, for one thing. We feel very fortunate that we can show them here. We have a projection room. What a pure seeing is. Now, I thought he was saying the BONNELL: We'd like to tell you about that projection room, Ed. In our own house, we had a much smaller house, and it was very simple to set up our camera equipment. We would just put the screen up on one end of the room, and the projection machine up on the other, and we got our pictures, but here---

STORM: It's different.

BONNELL: Let Gale show you how it works.

STORM: Well, you see, it's -- pardon me, Susie love. You see, all we have to do if you want to show a picture here, when you have your very own projection room, and a Hollywood-type house, is this. I'll just sort of demonstrate quickly.

MURROW: Yes?

STORM: You take this picture off the wall. You put it down here on the floor. Then you climb up on the piano bench here, and the screen is right up there, and you pull it down. Then you have to take that lamp off because it's in the way of the projection, you know.

MURROW: Yes?

STORM: And you have to put the music away, and put this down, and then you've got to put the flowers down underneath the piano. You've got to take that lampshade and put it down somewhere. Push the lamp back without breaking it. Get that bric-a-brac off there, and then this table you've got to put all the way back against the wall, and this lady has to go with it,and bat her little shade against there, and then you've got the opening -- the window -- the projection room window right there. Now you're almost ready. Now -- are you still with me?

MURROW: Yes. So is Susie.

STORM: Oh, I bet she is, that girl. I hear her. Now, you're in here, so all you have to do is take these two -- well, they're very heavy pieces of furniture -- I've learned to move them. Push them all the way to the other end so that you can get this door open. That's the projection room, and now, before you do that, of course you

STORM: You take this picture off the wall. You put it down here on the floor. Then you climb up on the piano bench here, and the screen is right up there, and you pull it down. Then you have to take that lamp off because it's in the way of the protection, you know.

MURROW: Yes?

STORM: And you have to put the music away, and put this down, and then you've got to put the flowers down underneath the piano. You've got to take that lampshade and put it down somewhere. Push the lamp back without breaking it. Get that bric-a-brac off there, and then this table you've got to put all the way back against the wall, and this lady has to go with it, and put her little shade against there, and then you've got the opening -- the window -- the protection room window right there. Now you're almost ready. Now -- are you still with me?

MURROW: Yes. So is Susie.

STORM: Oh, I bet she is, that girl. I hear her. Now, you're in here, so all you have to do is take these two -- well, they're very heavy pieces of furniture -- I've learned to move them. Push them all the way to the other end so that you can get this door open. That's the protection room, and now, before you do that, of course you have to take my gold record off, and put it down where nobody will step on it.

MURROW: All very simple.

STORM: Oh, there's nothing to it! Nothing to it!

MURROW: Gale, as I recall, you took up singing several years ago.

STORM: Yes, I did.

MURROW: Do you have any strong feelings about the current rock and roll craze?

STORM: Well, as a matter of fact, when I started, I---

SUSIE: It's a rock and roll.

STORM: It's a rock and roll. Mother's on. You'll have your turn later. I studied classical singing for 7½ years, and I loved that, and I think I just like to sing anything, but then I started with the rock and roll, and I find it very stimulating and exciting, and I can understand why the children -- children? They'll hit me -- why the kids like it, because I think it's not unhealthy. I think it's lots of fun, and it makes you feel good.

MURROW: Gale, you've been identified for some years with light comedy roles. Do you ever have a yearning have to take my gold record off, and put it down where nobody will step on it.

MURROW: All very simple.

STORM: Oh, there's nothing to it! Nothing to it! In the way of the projection, you know.

MURROW: Dale, as I recall, you took up singing several years ago.

STORM: Yes, I did.

MURROW: Do you have any strong feelings about the current rock and roll craze?

STORM: Well, as a matter of fact, when I started,
I---

SUSIE: It's a rock and roll.

STORM: It's a rock and roll. Mother's on. You'll have your turn later. I studied classical singing for 7½ years, and I loved that, and I think I just like to sing anything, but then I started with the rock and roll, and I find it very stimulating and exciting, and I can understand why the children -- children? They'll hit me -- why the kids like it, because I think it's not unhealthy. I think it's lots of fun, and it makes you feel good.

MURROW: Dale, you've been identified for some years with light comedy roles. Do you ever have a yearning for more solid dramatic parts?

STORM: I don't have much time to yearn, and I usually kind of like what I've got, you know, but I would like to. I feel that, you know, inside, basically I could, and I have from time to time. Well, I did at Monogram but they're on TV now, and that may not help me get the part of a dramatic role.

MURROW: Do you think Susie might become a singer one day?

STORM: I'm afraid she will, yes. She says -- well, as a matter of fact, she was going to sing "Jesus Loves Me," and, well, her entire repertoire is "Jesus Loves Me" and "Little Feet Be Careful," and "Happy Birthday" every now and then. Susie? Where'd she go?

BONNELL: We lost her, honey.

STORM: Wouldn't you know it. Well, she'll be back.

BONNELL: We'll find her.

MURROW: Lee, I think you came to Hollywood as an actor. What made you give it up for the insurance business?

BONNELL: Well, Ed, I think it gave me up. I was under contract for seven years, and had 3½ years in the

for more solid dramatic parts?

STORM: I don't have much time to years, and I usually kind of like what I've got, you know, but I would like to. I feel that, you know, inside, basically I could, and I have from time to time. Well, I did at Monogram but they're on TV now, and that may not help me get the part of a dramatic role.

MURROW: Do you think Susie might become a singer one day?

STORM: I'm afraid she will, yes. She says -- well, as a matter of fact, she was going to sing "Jesus Loves Me," and, well, her entire repertoire is "Jesus Loves Me" and "Little Feet Be Careful," and "Happy Birthday" every now and then. Susie? Where'd she go?

BONNELL: We lost her, honey.

STORM: Wouldn't you know it. Well, she'll be back.

BONNELL: We'll find her.

MURROW: Lee, I think you came to Hollywood as an actor. What made you give it up for the insurance business?

BONNELL: Well, Ed, I think it gave me up. I was under contract for seven years, and had 3½ years in the service, so then when I got out of the service, there was nothing much doing, and so I went into the life insurance business, and, actually, I've done some terrific acting in the living rooms of prospective clients, so I really haven't given it up.

MURROW: Well, you and Gale have combined two careers in addition to keeping what appears to be a closely knit family, even though we've lost Susie for the moment. What's the formula?

BONNELL: Well, we have a five-point plan in our lives, Ed. We don't live up to them as much as we'd like to, but they consist of five points, and we put spiritual first, and then mental, physical, social, and financial. Thank you, honey.

STORM: Mental, physical, financial and social. Social goes last. Sorry. I'm glad I'm here.

BONNELL: You see, I'm not used to this television, Ed.

MURROW: That's right.

BONNELL: This is the pro here.

MURROW: Blew up in his lines, didn't he.

STORM: Well, the reason we do this, or attempt to, is to keep sort of on the track, and also it's to help service, so then when I got out of the service, there was nothing much doing, and so I went into the life insurance business, and, actually, I've done some terrific acting in the living rooms of prospective clients, so I really haven't given it up.

MURROW: Well, you and Gale have combined two careers in addition to keeping what appears to be a closely knit family, even though we've lost Susie for the moment. What's the formula?

BONNELL: Well, we have a five-point plan in our lives, Ed. We don't live up to them as much as we'd like to, but they consist of five points, and we put spiritual first, and then mental, physical, social, and financial. Then you, honey.

STORM: Mental, physical, financial and social. Social goes last. Sorry. I'm glad I'm here.

BONNELL: You see, I'm not used to this television, Ed.

MURROW: That's right.

BONNELL: This is the pro here.

MURROW: Blew up in his lines, didn't he.

STORM: Well, the reason we do this, or attempt to, is to keep sort of on the track, and also it's to help keep first things first, you see.

MURROW: Tell me this. With a large family, do you have much trouble settling family disputes?

STORM: Never have a cross word.

BONNELL: Well, that's not quite true. With three boys and a little girl, I'll tell you what we do. We try to put the other person in the other person's place, if you follow this. In other words, if Peter gets upset with Paul, we have Paul be Peter, and Peter be Paul, and they mete out the punishment to one another, and they kind of see the other person's viewpoint then.

STORM: That's at the dinner table, usually. We play out all those things at the dinner table, don't we?

BONNELL: Yes. Sometimes it gives you indigestion, but---

STORM: But it certainly brings about understanding. It has many times.

MURROW: Sounds like a wonderful device.

STORM: I don't like it, of course, when they do it to me.

MURROW: Thank you very much for letting us come. Good night, Lee. Good night, Gale.

STORM: Thank you.

keep first things first, you see.

MURROW: Tell me this. With a large family, do you have much trouble settling family disputes?

STORM: Never have a cross word.

BONNELL: Well, that's not quite true. With three boys and a little girl, I'll tell you what we do. We try to put the other person in the other person's place, if you follow this. In other words, if Peter gets upset with Paul, we have Paul be Peter, and Peter be Paul, and they mete out the punishment to one another, and they kind of see the other person's viewpoint then.

STORM: That's at the dinner table, usually. We play out all those things at the dinner table, don't we?

BONNELL: Yes. Sometimes it gives you indigestion, but---

STORM: But it certainly brings about understanding. It has many times.

MURROW: Sounds like a wonderful device.

STORM: I don't like it, of course, when they do it to me.

MURROW: Thank you very much for letting us come. Good night, Lee. Good night, Gale.

STORM: Thank you.

BONNELL: Good night, Ed.

STORM: Good night.

MURROW: Good night, Phil, Paul, Pete---

STORM: And Susie, wherever you are.

MURROW: And, of course, Susie, wherever you are. Thank you very much.

BONNELL: Thank you.

MURROW: Good night.

STORM: Good night.

BONNELL: Good night.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with West Point's first capatin of cadets, Peter Dawkins, but first a word from Bob Wright speakingfor Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Cadet Peter Dawkins has established one of the most unusual records in the 156-year history of the United States Military Academy at West Point. I suppose millions of Americans know him only as the All-American half-back who captained Army's football team, but he also happens to hold the most important job a cadet can get at West Point, first captain of cadets, leader of almost 2500 others. He's also president of the class that will graduate next month, and he has found the time to keep in the top five per cent of BONNELL: Good night, Ed.

STORM: Good night.

MURROW: Good night, Phil, Paul, Pete---

STORM: And Susie, wherever you are.

MURROW: And, of course, Susie, wherever you are. Thank you very much.

BONNELL: Thank you.

MURROW: Good night.

STORM: Good night.

BONNELL: Good night.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with West Point's first captain of cadets, Peter Dawkins, but first a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Cadet Peter Dawkins has established one of the most unusual records in the 156-year history of the United States Military Academy at West Point. I suppose millions of Americans know him only as the All-American half-back who captained Army's football team, but he also happens to hold the most important job a cadet can get at West Point, first captain of cadets, leader of almost 2500 others. He's also president of the class that will graduate next month, and he has found the time to keep in the top five per cent of his class academically. He's a star on the hockey team and sings with the Glee Club.

Peter Dawkins, 21 years old, was born in Royal Oak, Michigan, the second in a family of three boys and one girl. Before he came to West Point, his only connection with the military was through his father who served as a reserve dental officer in World War II. Today, as he nears the end of his four years at the military academy, Cadet Dawkins lives in this barracks, the one with the octagonal tower, built some 90 years before he was born.

(Cadet blowing Taps.)

MURROW: Evening, Mr. Dawkins.

DAWKINS: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Isn't it a little late for Taps?

DAWKINS: Yes, sir, it actually is. We thought we'd hold it back a little bit so we could have it on your show. We thought you might like to hear it.

MURROW: Always a very impressive scene. Thank you very much. Did you arrange the delay through your influence as first captain or president of the class of '59?

DAWKINS: Neither, I'm afraid, sir. Something like this has to be run through General Davidson, I'm afraid.

MURROW: Well, would you say our thanks to him?

his class academically. He's a star on the hockey team and sings with the Glee Club.

Peter Dawkins, 21 years old, was born in Royal Oak, Michigan, the second in a family of three boys and one girl. Before he came to West Point, his only connection with the military was through his father who served as a reserve dental officer in World War II. Today, as he nears the end of his four years at the military academy, Cadet Dawkins lives in this barracks, the one with the octagonal tower, built some 90 years before he was born.

(Cadet blowing Taps.)

MURROW: Evening, Mr. Dawkins.

DAWKINS: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Isn't it a little late for Taps?

DAWKINS: Yes, sir, it actually is. We thought we'd hold it back a little bit so we could have it on your show. We thought you might like to hear it.

MURROW: Always a very impressive scene. Thank you very much. Did you arrange the delay through your influence as first captain or president of the class of '59?

DAWKINS: Neither, I'm afraid, sir. Something like this has to be run through General Davidson, I'm afraid.

MURROW: Well, would you say our thanks to him?

DAWKINS: Yes, sir.

MURROW: Pete, this is the area known as the quadrangle, isn't it?

DAWKINS: Well, actually, Mr. Murrow, this is known just as the area. Actually, this is where we have quite a few of our academic formations. We also have just normal class formations out here, and, in fact, this is the area where the people walk off their punishment tours. It's covered on all four sides by barracks, as you can see.

MURROW: Yes. I noticed some of the lights are still on in the barracks. I'm sure there are no late card games going on up there, at least not tonight.

DAWKINS: Well, sir, I think you'll find that those are the cadets that are authorized to keep their lights on just a little bit later so they can get some extra studying done. Some of them who have a little more difficulty with academic study are authorized to do that.

MURROW: Pete, how do you manage to keep up with your studies despite your time out for athletics, class and academy jobs?

DAWKINS: Well, actually, I think I'm doing a great part to the fine job that my staff did during the fall and the winter, especially when I think that I had to spend a

DAWKINS: Yes, sir.

MURROW: Pete, this is the area known as the quadrangle, isn't it?

DAWKINS: Well, actually, Mr. Murrow, this is known just as the area. Actually, this is where we have quite a few of our academic formations. We also have just normal class formations out here, and, in fact, this is the area where the people walk off their punishment tours. It's covered on all four sides by barracks, as you can see.

MURROW: Yes. I noticed some of the lights are still on in the barracks. I'm sure there are no late card games going on up there, at least not tonight.

DAWKINS: Well, sir, I think you'll find that those are the cadets that are authorized to keep their lights on just a little bit later so they can get some extra studying done. Some of them who have a little more difficulty with academic study are authorized to do that.

MURROW: Pete, how do you manage to keep up with your studies despite your time out for athletics, class and academy jobs?

DAWKINS: Well, actually, I think I'm doing a great part to the fine job that my staff did during the fall and the winter, especially when I think that I had to spend a great deal of time on my athletic time. They really took the whole burden of it, and, in fact, they did all the work. All they did was put the pieces of paper in front of me for me to sign. We're right here at their room. Why don't we drop in and say hello to them.

MURROW: Good.

DAWKINS: Hi, Marv.

MARV: Hi, Pete.

DAWKINS: Here we have Marvin Thomas, who is from Wilmington, Delaware, who is brigade training officer.

MURROW: Good evening, Mr. Thomas.

MARV: How do you do, Mr. Murrow.

DAWKINS: And over here is Emmett McCracken from Brockton, South Carolina. He's the brigade supply officer.

McCRACKEN: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Mr. McCracken.

DAWKINS: And on my far right is Lee Nunn from Glasgow, Kentucky, who is my roommate and brigade adjutant.

MURROW: Good evening, Mr. Nunn.

NUNN: How do you do, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Mr. Nunn, it seems to me you men are keeping rather late hours tonight. What are you working on?

great deal of time on my athletic time. They really took the whole burden of it, and, in fact, they did all the work. All they did was put the pieces of paper in front of me for me to sign. We're right here at their room. Why don't we drop in and say hello to them.

MURROW: Good.

DAWKINS: Hi, Mary.

MARY: Hi, Pete.

DAWKINS: Here we have Marvin Thomas, who is from Wilmington, Delaware, who is brigade training officer.

MURROW: Good evening, Mr. Thomas.

MARY: How do you do, Mr. Murrow.

DAWKINS: And over here is Emmett McCracken from Brockton, South Carolina. He's the brigade supply officer.

McCRACKEN: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Mr. McCracken.

DAWKINS: And on my far right is Lee Nunn from Glasgow, Kentucky, who is my roommate and brigade adjutant.

MURROW: Good evening, Mr. Nunn.

NUNN: How do you do, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Mr. Nunn, it seems to me you men are keeping rather late hours tonight. What are you working on?

NUNN: Well, sir, with graduation drawing near, this time of the year, we have the job that's somewhat similar to student council in any civilian college, and as you know, there are many ceremonies that go with the graduation, and hops and so forth, and we have much the same duties, only ours are somewhat more military in nature since we have parades and inspections and formations of that type to go along with the hops and things and so forth.

MURROW: Pete, what do you call this room?

DAWKINS: Well, Mr. Murrow, this is the room where Thomas and McCracken work. It has their desks, their books, and they also sleep in here. It has their beds in the room also.

MURROW: Where is the Dawkins suite, or is that the correct word?

DAWKINS: Well, I wouldn't go that far, sir, but if you will follow me right through the hallway here, we'll walk into my room.

MURROW: Right. Good night, gentlemen.

CADETS: Good night, Mr. Murrow.

DAWKINS: Right through the hallway here, you come into the quite plush department of what can be said, perhaps, the Dawkins suite here.

NUNN: Well, sir, with graduation drawing near, this time of the year, we have the job that's somewhat similar to student council in any civilian college, and as you know, there are many ceremonies that go with the graduation, and hope and so forth, and we have much the same duties, only ours are somewhat more military in nature since we have parades and inspections and formations of that type to go along with the hops and things and so forth.

MURROW: Pete, what do you call this room?

DAWKINS: Well, Mr. Murrow, this is the room where Thomas and McCracken work. It has their desks, their books, and they also sleep in here. It has their beds in the room also.

MURROW: Where is the Dawkins suite, or is that the correct word?

DAWKINS: Well, I wouldn't go that far, sir, but if you will follow me right through the hallway here, we'll walk into my room.

MURROW: Right. Good night, gentlemen.

CADETS: Good night, Mr. Murrow.

DAWKINS: Right through the hallway here, you come into the quite plush department of what can be said, perhaps, the Dawkins suite here.

MURROW: Well, the military academy certainly favors the neat but not gaudy school of decorating, doesn't it?

DAWKINS: Yes, sir. I think you can very well say that. We have one practical aspect of it, though, that it's easy to keep clean anyway. We have everything we need, though, really. We have our bunks here, and we keep quite a good deal of our clothing right on the wall here where we can get to it very easily. It's real convenient.

MURROW: West Point cadets don't decorate with pinup pictures, do they?

DAWKINS: Well, not ordinarily, sir. We can put things up on the wall. In fact, right here in the closet I have a couple of posters which we thought we might get framed to put up on the wall here and kind of break it up, like that. Actually, what these are -- these are two of the articles in the Code of Conduct.

MURROW: That's the new code, isn't it, Pete?

DAWKINS: Yes, sir, it is. It was established in about 1955 by President Eisenhower, and it resulted out of a study that he made from our experience in Korea. What it is, it establishes the responsibility and whatnot for our fighting men in battle, and, as I say, it was established in MURROW: Well, the military academy certainly favors the neat but not gaudy school of decorating, doesn't it?

DAWKINS: Yes, sir. I think you can very well say that. We have one practical aspect of it, though, that it's easy to keep clean anyway. We have everything we need, though, really. We have our bunks here, and we keep quite a good deal of our clothing right on the wall here where we can get to it very easily. It's real convenient.

MURROW: West Point cadets don't decorate with pinup pictures, do they?

DAWKINS: Well, not ordinarily, sir. We can put things up on the wall. In fact, right here in the closet I have a couple of posters which we thought we might get framed to put up on the wall here and kind of break it up, like that. Actually, what these are -- these are two of the articles in the Code of Conduct.

MURROW: That's the new code, isn't it, Pete?

DAWKINS: Yes, sir, it is. It was established in about 1955 by President Eisenhower, and it resulted out of a study that he made from our experience in Korea. What it is, it establishes the responsibility and whatnot for our fighting men in battle, and, as I say, it was established in 1955 by a presidential decree.

MURROW: Pete, are your quarters the best available to a cadet?

DAWKINS: Well, I don't believe they're the best, perhaps, but they're the largest type. In other words, we have more than one room. We have this room here, which has our bed facilities, and then in the next room here, we have a room where we have our desks, our books, and whatnot, that we can do our studying in. It's a little bit larger and it does give us a lot more freedom. We have our desks, as I said, hi fi set here, and tables and whatnot along. One thing I might bring comment upon here is the fact that we have a telephone, which certainly comes in very handy, and probably we couldn't get along very much without it.

MURROW: Well, Pete, the office and the telephone are rewards for the first captain of cadets. What were the rewards from your football captaincy?

DAWKINS: Well, Mr. Murrow, I think it is pretty difficult to say anything material that you get out of being football captain because there isn't anything in that way of a reward, but to me it certainly was a very great reward just to have the opportunity to associate with the members of my team, and the coaching staff, and also with the great number 1955 by a presidential decree.

MURROW: Pete, are your quarters the best available to a cadet?

DAWKINS: Well, I don't believe they're the best, perhaps, but they're the largest type. In other words, we have more than one room. We have this room here, which has our bed facilities, and then in the next room here, we have a room where we have our desks, our books, and whatnot, that we can do our studying in. It's a little bit larger and it does give us a lot more freedom. We have our desks, as I said, hi fi set here, and tables and whatnot along. One thing I might bring comment upon here is the fact that we have a telephone, which certainly comes in very handy, and probably we couldn't get along very much without it.

MURROW: Well, Pete, the office and the telephone are rewards for the first captain of cadets. What were the rewards from your football captaincy?

DAWKINS: Well, Mr. Murrow, I think it is pretty difficult to say anything material that you get out of being football captain because there isn't anything in that way of a reward, but to me it certainly was a very great reward just to have the opportunity to associate with the members of my team, and the coaching staff, and also with the great number of people from the other teams and coaching staffs that I ran into, and as I say, I think these were probably my rewards along that line.

MURROW: You certainly ran into some of them, as I remember, too.

DAWKINS: Yes, I did.

MURROW: Pete, who is the young lady in the picture there on the mantle?

DAWKINS: That's my gal, Mr. Murrow. She's from College Park. She goes to the University of Maryland down there. She's a Phi Del.

MURROW: Pete, a few years ago when we visited General Davidson, the academy superintendent, he described West Point's curriculum as being equal to a civilian university plus military studies plus a rigorous physical training program. As a cadet nearing graduation, what kind of young man do you think it takes to handle all these things?

DAWKINS: Well, we certainly stress the whole man concept, as they say here at West Point. They try to develop the cadets along all aspects of life: mental, moral and physical. But I think we have to emphasize the point that any normal teenage high school student with just average facility in intellectual matters and physical matters certain-of people from the other teams and coaching staffs that I ran into, and as I say, I think these were probably my re-wards along that line.

MURROW: You certainly ran into some of them, as I remember, too.

DAWKINS: Yes, I did.

MURROW: Pete, who is the young lady in the picture there on the mantle?

DAWKINS: That's my gal, Mr. Murrow. She's from College Park. She goes to the University of Maryland down there. She's a Pht Del.

MURROW: Pete, a few years ago when we visited General Davidson, the academy superintendent, he described West Point's curriculum as being equal to a civilian university plus military studies plus a rigorous physical training program. As a cadet nearing graduation, what kind of young man do you think it takes to handle all these things?

DAWKINS: Well, we certainly stress the whole man concept, as they say here at West Point. They try to develop the cadets along all aspects of life: mental, moral and physical. But I think we have to emphasize the point that any normal teenage high school student with just average facility in intellectual matters and physical matters certainly can make a very, very good cadet, and by no means do you have to be a superman to get in here.

MURROW: What do you recall as your toughest academic problem?

DAWKINS: Well, I think a lot of them are tough. It's difficult for me, I think, to point out any single one that particularly was a lot tougher. I think perennially the plebe math is one that a lot of fellows get caught up on, and it was definitely one of the tougher ones for me also.

MURROW: That's first year math.

DAWKINS: Yes, sir.

MURROW: Pete, have you found life at the academy to be pretty much as you expected it to be?

DAWKINS: Well, actually, I didn't know a whole lot about what life here was going to be like before I got here, and what little I did know about it -- what I did expect -- I was completely wrong about it. Actually, I don't think that it was any kind of a detriment to me not knowing what it was going to be like because you learn each new thing as you come to it, but as I said, the little I did know about it was kind of off-base.

MURROW: The little bit you knew was wrong, huh?

DAWKINS: Yes, sir.

ly can make a very, very good cadet, and by no means do you have to be a superman to get in here.

MURROW: What do you recall as your toughest academic problem?

DAWKINS: Well, I think a lot of them are tough. It's difficult for me, I think, to point out any single one that particularly was a lot tougher. I think perennially the plebe math is one that a lot of fellows get caught up on, and it was definitely one of the tougher ones for me also.

MURROW: That's first year math.

DAWKINS: Yes, sir.

MURROW: Pete, have you found life at the academy to be pretty much as you expected it to be?

DAWKINS: Well, actually, I didn't know a whole lot about what life here was going to be like before I got here, and what little I did know about it -- what I did expect -- I was completely wrong about it. Actually, I don't think that it was any kind of a detriment to me not knowing what it was going to be like because you learn each new thing as you come to it, but as I said, the little I did know about it was kind of off-base.

MURROW: The little bit you knew was wrong, huh?

DAWKINS: Yes, sir.

MURROW: Tell me, what's the social life been like?

DAWKINS: Well, Mr. Murrow, we have a little bit different arrangement here, of course, than the normal college, but I can say that it's certainly enthusiastic between 2:30 Saturday afternoon and six o'clock Sunday evening.

MURROW: A little relaxation for hard-working cadets, huh?

DAWKINS: Yes, sir.

MURROW: Pete, I know you've been awarded a Rhodes Scholarship. You must be anticipating quite a different sort of life at Oxford -- right?

DAWKINS: Yes, sir, I certainly am. In fact, there are five of my classmates, or five of us together, who are going over to Oxford this year, and we certainly do expect to come up, and I am sure will, against something entirely different from West Point. Of course, it isn't at all the rigorous curriculum. It's much more freedom of expression and freedom of thought. And also I might point out one difference we are looking forward to is I understand Harris tweeds fit a little differently than cadet grey.

MURROW: They do that. Pete, what about an athletic career in England?

MURROW: Tell me, what's the social life been like?

DAWKINS: Well, Mr. Murrow, we have a little bit different arrangement here, of course, than the normal college, but I can say that it's certainly enthusiastic between 2:30 Saturday afternoon and six o'clock Sunday evening.

MURROW: A little relaxation for hard-working cadets, huh?

DAWKINS: Yes, sir.

MURROW: Pete, I know you've been awarded a Rhodes Scholarship. You must be anticipating quite a different sort of life at Oxford -- right?

DAWKINS: Yes, sir, I certainly am. In fact, there are five of my classmates, or five of us together, who are going over to Oxford this year, and we certainly do expect to come up, and I am sure will, against something entirely different from West Point. Of course, it isn't at all the rigorous curriculum. It's much more freedom of expression and freedom of thought. And also I might point out one difference we are looking forward to is I understand Harris tweeds fit a little differently than cadet grey.

MURROW: They do that. Pete, what about an athletic career in England?

DAWKINS: Well, I don't think they have too many football teams over there, but I'm very, very enthusiastic about the game of rugby hoping I can get maybe a little bit worked into that.

MURROW: That's a pretty rough game too, but that will be no new experience for you.

DAWKINS: That's what I understand.

MURROW: No cricket in your plans?

DAWKINS: Well, not at present right now, sir.

MURROW: Pete, are many of your graduates going on to graduate study of some kind or other?

DAWKINS: Yes, sir, they certainly are. In fact, Mr. Murrow, the Army's had a very enthusiastic campaign on now to try to get a lot more Army officers to go to further schooling. In fact, it's anticipated at this time that probably, I'd say, 80% of my class will go on to further schooling. I think 60% of all regular Army officers at present have had at least a master's degree at a civilian college in means of advanced training. I'd say the great majority of these people probably go into the physical sciences, but there are considerable numbers that go into political sciences. In fact, the five of us that are going over to Oxford are all reading in the area of philosophy, politics, and economics,

DAWKINS: Well, I don't think they have too many football teams over there, but I'm very, very enthusiastic about the game of rugby hoping I can get maybe a little bit worked into that.

MURROW: That's a pretty rough game too, but that will be no new experience for you.

DAWKINS: That's what I understand.

MURROW: No cricket in your plans?

DAWKINS: Well, not at present right now, sir.

MURROW: Pete, are many of your graduates going on to graduate study of some kind or other?

DAWKINS: Yes, sir, they certainly are. In fact, Mr. Murrow, the Army's had a very enthusiastic campaign on now to try to get a lot more Army officers to go to further schooling. In fact, it's anticipated at this time that probably, I'd say, 80% of my class will go on to further schooling. I think 60% of all regular Army officers at present have had at least a master's degree at a civilian college in means of advanced training. I'd say the great majority of these people probably go into the physical sciences, but there are considerable numbers that go into political sciences. In fact, the five of us that are going over to Oxford are all reading in the area of philosophy, politics, and economics.

which, of course, is very much the political science field.

MURROW: Well, much luck to all of you. Pete Dawkins, as you prepare to leave West Point, which of your many experiences and honors stick out in your mind as high and low points? I mean, for example, what do you consider your most difficult or unpleasant moment at the academy?

DAWKINS: Well, I can't say I don't have a certain field to choose from because I think there were quite a few that were difficult. Probably the one that sticks out the most dramatically in my mind anyway -- I will have to go back to my athletic experiences on it and pick the opening kickoff of last year's Navy game, which, if you will recall, I fumbled quite magnificently on our 30-yard line and gave over to the Navy and tried to see if they couldn't get a score right off.

MURROW: Well, you'll forget that in time. What about your most rewarding experience?

DAWKINS: Well, I think that I certainly have been fortunate enough to have quite a few rewarding ones so far, but probably the one most of all to me will be that that's yet to come, and when I walk up the ramp and get my diploma at graduation.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Pete Dawkins.

which, of course, is very much the political science field.

MURROW: Well, much luck to all of you. Pete Dawkins, as you prepare to leave West Point, which of your many experiences and honors stick out in your mind as high and low points? I mean, for example, what do you consider your most difficult or unpleasant moment at the academy?

DAWKINS: Well, I can't say I don't have a certain field to choose from because I think there were quite a few that were difficult. Probably the one that sticks out the most dramatically in my mind anyway -- I will have to go back to my athletic experiences on it and pick the opening kickoff of last year's Navy game, which, if you will recall, I fumbled quite magnificently on our 30-yard line and gave over to the Navy and tried to see if they couldn't get a score right off.

MURROW: Well, you'll forget that in time. What about your most rewarding experience?

DAWKINS: Well, I think that I certainly have been fortunate enough to have quite a few rewarding ones so far, but probably the one most of all to me will be that that's yet to come, and when I walk up the ramp and get my diploma at graduation.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Pete Dawkins.

DAWKINS: Thank you, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: And will you say good night to the other lads, and the best of luck to you and to the brigade officers.

DAWKINS: Thank you, sir.

MURROW: Thank you very much and good night.

DAWKINS: Good night.

MURROW: Next week we'll be visiting with producer and playwright Moss Hart and his wife, actress Kitty Carlisle, in their New York apartment. Miss Carlisle is no stranger to television viewers, and Mr. Hart will be remembered for his association with such Broadway successes as "My Fair Lady," "The Man Who Came To Dinner, " and "You Can't Take It With You." Next week we'll also be going to Larchmont, New York for a visit with golfer Tommy Armour and his wife. Mr. Armour, who has won every major golf title, is still active in the pro ranks as a player, writer and instructor.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

DAWKINS: Thank you, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: And will you say good night to the other lads, and the best of luck to you and to the brigade officers.

DAWKINS: Thank you, sir.

MURROW: Thank you very much and good night.

DAWKINS: Good night.

MURROW: Next week we'll be visiting with producer and playwright Moss Hart and his wife, actress Kitty Carlisle, in their New York apartment. Miss Carlisle is no stranger to television viewers, and Mr. Hart will be remembered for his association with such Broadway successes as "My Fair Lady," "The Man Who Came To Dinner," and "You Can't Take It With You." Next week we'll also be going to Larchmont, New York for a visit with golfer Tommy Armour and his wife. Mr. Armour, who has won every major golf title, is still active in the pro ranks as a player, writer and instructor.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Mr. and Mrs. Tommy Armour, and

Moss Hart, Kitty Carlisle, and Family

May 8, 1959 - 10:30 PM EDT

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be going out to Larchmont, New York for a visit with a gentleman who knows much about what there is to know about golf, Tommy Armour and his wife, and then we'll be calling on a gentleman wise in the ways of the theater, Moss Hart and his wife, actress Kitty Carlisle.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

CBS Television Network.

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Mr. and Mrs. Tommy Armour, and Moss Hart, Kitty Carlisle, and family

May 8, 1959 - 10:30 PM EDT

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be going out to Larchmont, New York for a visit with a gentleman who knows much about what there is to know about golf, Tommy Armour and his wife, and then we'll be calling on a gentleman wise in the ways of the theater, Moss Hart and his wife, actress Kitty Carlisle.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545
LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

(Commercial)

MURROW: Tommy Armour is regarded as one of golf's all-time greats. He won his first tournament as an amateur golfer in his native Scotland. That was about 45 years ago. And as a professional golfer, he's gone on to win every major tournament and more prize money than he can remember.

Besides playing and teaching the game, Tommy Armour has written numerous magazine articles and two books on golf. His newest one is called, "A Round of Golf with Tommy Armour," recommended reading for most of us rough-riders.

Mr. and Mrs. Armour live in Chatsworth Gardens, Larchmont, New York. They also spend part of the year at their home at Delray Beach in Florida.

Good evening, Tommy.

ARMOUR: Good evening, Edward.

MURROW: How are you?

ARMOUR: Pretty good.

MURROW: What kind of game did you shoot today?

ARMOUR: Oh, what a farce! What a farce! I played golf bad. I played bridge a little worse, and played gin rummy which was a calamity. So that was my day's enjoyment.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Tommy Armour is regarded as one of golf's all-time greats. He won his first tournament as an amateur golfer in his native Scotland. That was about 45 years ago. And as a professional golfer, he's gone on to win every major tournament and more prize money than he can remember.

Besides playing and teaching the game, Tommy Armour has written numerous magazine articles and two books on golf. His newest one is called, "A Round of Golf with Tommy Armour," recommended reading for most of us rough-riders.

Mr. and Mrs. Armour live in Chatsworth Gardens, Larchmont, New York. They also spend part of the year at their home at Delray Beach in Florida.

Good evening, Tommy.

ARMOUR: Good evening, Edward.

MURROW: How are you?

ARMOUR: Pretty good.

MURROW: What kind of game did you shoot today?

ARMOUR: Oh, what a farce! What a farce! I played golf bad. I played bridge a little worse, and played gin rummy which was a calamity. So that was my day's enjoyment.

MURROW: Tommy, you gained a reputation as one of the country's most successful teaching professionals, but didn't it ever strain your patience just a little trying to teach dubbers the fundamentals?

ARMOUR: Well, Edward, I have never had that opportunity to teach dubbers. I didn't know enough about the game. The ones I taught were fellows who had quite a little ability, or potentially were good, and then I thought I might be able to help them. But beginners, I'm afraid -- I don't know -- I couldn't stand it. I couldn't handle it.

MURROW: Well, you've done a fine job instructing with your new book. You made what seemed to me, as a dubber, some very basic points. Would you go over one or two of them for us?

ARMOUR: You mean the points I tried to bring out?

MURROW: Yes.

ARMOUR: Well, the average player goes around the golf course every day, and makes so many stupid mistakes, that Simon and Schuster -- I know you've heard of them --

MURROW: Yes.

ARMOUR: ---suggested I write a book, and I said, "No, I can't write. I don't know any more about the game. I

MURROW: Tommy, you gained a reputation as one of the country's most successful teaching professionals, but didn't it ever strain your patience just a little trying to teach dubbers the fundamentals?

ARMOUR: Well, Edward, I have never had that opportunity to teach dubbers. I didn't know enough about the game. The ones I taught were fellows who had quite a little ability, or potentially were good, and then I thought I might be able to help them. But beginners, I'm afraid -- I don't know -- I couldn't stand it. I couldn't handle it.

MURROW: Well, you've done a fine job instructing with your new book. You made what seemed to me, as a dubber, some very basic points. Would you go over one or two of them for us?

ARMOUR: You mean the points I tried to bring out?

MURROW: Yes.

ARMOUR: Well, the average player goes around the golf course every day, and makes so many stupid mistakes, that Simon and Schuster -- I know you've heard of them --

MURROW: Yes.

ARMOUR: ---suggested I write a book, and I said, "No, I can't write. I don't know any more about the game. I wrote one book, and that's all I know." Then I suddenly found I might write a book in trying to help a fellow go around the golf course using his brains; i.e., not playing too dumb shots, and the funny thing about it is, that the reception has been -- oh, better than my first book.

MURROW: Well, let's see, you taught us something about the grip, and the stance, footwork---

ARMOUR: That's right.

MURROW: ---and the application of power.

ARMOUR: Well, I'll tell you, Edward, to play a decent game of golf, you've got to grip right, and you've got to stand right. Let me try and explain it to you this way very simply. A fellow could have a wonderful grip, a fine swing, and a bad stance -- no good. A fellow could have wonderful stance, nice swing, bad grip -- he can't do it. But you give a fellow a good grip, and a good stance, with an indifferent swing -- he can do all right. Now, after he's told, and try to show him how to use his hands, the fellow will play all right. Does that answer it, Edward?

MURROW: Yes, it does. Tommy, I happen to be a heft-handed golfer and the most awkward ever to appear on a golf course. Any special advice for me?

ARMOUR: No. There's one piece of advice. You're wrote one book, and that's all I know." Then I suddenly found I might write a book in trying to help a fellow go around the golf course using his brains; i.e., not playing too dumb shots, and the funny thing about it is, that the reception has been -- oh, better than my first book.

MURROW: Well, let's see, you taught us something about the grip, and the stance, footwork---

ARMOUR: That's right.

MURROW: ---and the application of power.

ARMOUR: Well, I'll tell you, Edward, to play a decent game of golf, you've got to grip right, and you've got to stand right. Let me try and explain it to you this way very simply. A fellow could have a wonderful grip, a fine swing, and a bad stance -- no good. A fellow could have wonderful stance, nice swing, bad grip -- he can't do it. But you give a fellow a good grip, and a good stance, with an indifferent swing -- he can do all right. Now, after he's told, and try to show him how to use his hands, the fellow will play all right. Does that answer it, Edward?

MURROW: Yes, it does. Tommy, I happen to be a left-handed golfer and the most awkward ever to appear on a golf course. Any special advice for me?

ARMOUR: No. There's one piece of advice. You're a nice fellow. You live a nice life. You work very hard. You've only got two ways you can work it out. You either just play left-handed, or give it up. The only reason there's not as many good left-handed players as there are right-handed players is because there are not as many left-handed players, that's all.

MURROW: Tommy, there are a number of men who refused to teach their wives to drive a car anticipating family arguments. What about you and Mrs. Armour when it came to golf?

ARMOUR: Well, before I signed that piece of paper -- you know, that piece of paper you sign when you get married?

MURROW: Yes.

ARMOUR: I said, "Listen, little girl, before I sign my life away, I will never play golf with you. Never." She said, "Never?" I said, "Never, unless I ask you." So we spent a very fine life, a very happy life -- no golf.

MURROW: Where is Mrs. Armour tonight?

ARMOUR: She's right around there. Will I get her for you?

MURROW: Please do.

ARMOUR: Right. All right, dear.

a nice fellow. You live a nice life. You work very hard. You've only got two ways you can work it out. You either just play left-handed, or give it up. The only reason there's not as many good left-handed players as there are right-handed players is because there are not as many left-handed players, that's all.

MURROW: Tommy, there are a number of men who refused to teach their wives to drive a car anticipating family arguments. What about you and Mrs. Armour when it came to golf?

ARMOUR: Well, before I signed that piece of paper -- you know, that piece of paper you sign when you get married?

MURROW: Yes.

ARMOUR: I said, "Listen, little girl, before I sign my life away, I will never play golf with you. Never." She said, "Never?" I said, "Never, unless I ask you." So we spent a very fine life, a very happy life -- no golf.

MURROW: Where is Mrs. Armour tonight?

ARMOUR: She's right around there. Will I get her for you?

MURROW: Please do.

ARMOUR: Right. All right, dear.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Armour.

MRS. ARMOUR: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Is that a grandchild you have there?

MRS. ARMOUR: Yes. We hoped you might be able to see him, but he collapsed. A little dead soldier.

MURROW: Oh, good for him. How many grandchildren do you have?

MRS. ARMOUR: Well, I only have one. My children's children should have given me great-grandchildren by now. They just weren't working at it.

MURROW: Mrs. Armour, has little Tommy shown any indication yet as to where his talents lie?

MRS. ARMOUR: Yes, the same as his grandfather, he doesn't like to do anything at all.

MURROW: Well, I wonder if we shouldn't leave lest we wake him up. I think he might be very unhappy about that.

MRS. ARMOUR: Well, I think probably he might be. He's so cute, I like to look at him.

MURROW: So do I. Mrs. Armour, did you and Tommy meet on the golf course?

MRS. ARMOUR: No, we met in an elevator. It is better than it sounds.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Armour.

MRS. ARMOUR: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Is that a grandchild you have there?

MRS. ARMOUR: Yes. We hoped you might be able to see him, but he collapsed. A little dead soldier.

MURROW: Oh, good for him. How many grandchildren do you have?

MRS. ARMOUR: Well, I only have one. My children's children should have given me great-grandchildren by now. They just weren't working at it.

MURROW: Mrs. Armour, has Little Tommy shown any indication yet as to where his talents lie?

MRS. ARMOUR: Yes, the same as his grandfather, he doesn't like to do anything at all.

MURROW: Well, I wonder if we shouldn't leave lest we wake him up. I think he might be very unhappy about that.

MRS. ARMOUR: Well, I think probably he might be. He's so cute, I like to look at him.

MURROW: So do I. Mrs. Armour, did you and Tommy meet on the golf course?

MRS. ARMOUR: No, we met in an elevator. It is better than it sounds.

MURROW: Tell me about it. You met in an elevator?

MRS. ARMOUR: That's right. It sounds as if he picked me up, but he didn't. I had a letter of introduction to him, and I was stupid enough not to present it, but when I saw how good-looking he was, I decided I'd made a big mistake.

MURROW: Tommy, how did you happen to become a professional golfer?

ARMOUR: Well, Edward, that would take too long. It would take all the time from now until you retire. I came over to this country in the rubber business.

MURROW: Yes?

ARMOUR: Was quite successful; had a lot of money; loved the country; went back to England; came back again, and decided that I would conquer America single-handed. Well, they taught me a very quick lesson, and in a few months they owned me entirely. And then when I became absolutely destitute, down to my last $14, I decided that I would have to have some way of living, so I took up professional golf and was very fortunate, was lucky to start off with, and kept being lucky.

MURROW: Lucky and able. Mrs. Armour, did Tommy suffer very much from tension and gallery fright during tournaments?

MURROW: Tell me about it. You met in an elevator?

MRS. ARMOUR: That's right. It sounds as if he picked me up, but he didn't. I had a letter of introduction to him, and I was stupid enough not to present it, but when I saw how good-looking he was, I decided I'd made a big mistake.

MURROW: Tommy, how did you happen to become a professional golfer?

ARMOUR: Well, Edward, that would take too long. It would take all the time from now until you retire. I came over to this country in the rubber business.

MURROW: Yes?

ARMOUR: Was quite successful; had a lot of money; loved the country; went back to England; came back again, and decided that I would conquer America single-handed. Well, they taught me a very quick lesson, and in a few months they owned me entirely. And then when I became absolutely destitute, down to my last $14, I decided that I would have to have some way of living, so I took up professional golf and was very fortunate, was lucky to start off with, and kept being lucky.

MURROW: Lucky and able. Mrs. Armour, did Tommy suffer very much from tension and gallery fright during tournaments?

MRS. ARMOUR: No, I never saw him lose a wink of sleep. I was the one that walked the floor nights.

MURROW: Tommy, we hear a lot about tournament nerve. Though apparently you have never experienced this, I'm sure you've witnessed some of the agonies, haven't you?

ARMOUR: Oh, yes, it has happened, too. You know, no matter what you've heard -- well, no matter how relaxed one may be, you always have that tremendous tension on you. Some fellows that you've read about, and you know, like Bobby Jones---

MURROW: Yes?

ARMOUR: ---Byron Nelson -- let me think of somebody else -- it was---

MRS. ARMOUR: Middlecoff.

ARMOUR: Middlecoff. These fellows are very, very nervous. Bobby Jones used to regurgitate, and Byron Nelson used to heave up -- that's the same thing, but they used to heave up. It was better for Nelson than regurgitation.

MURROW: Well, having won all the major trophies there are to be won in golf, how come I don't see any around the house?

ARMOUR: Well, the funny thing about that, Edward, I was never a collector of trophies. Of course, in

MRS. ARMOUR: No, I never saw him lose a wink of sleep. I was the one that walked the floor nights.

MURROW: Tommy, we hear a lot about tournament nerve. Though apparently you have never experienced this, I'm sure you've witnessed some of the agonies, haven't you?

ARMOUR: Oh, yes, it has happened, too. You know, no matter what you've heard -- well, no matter how relaxed one may be, you always have that tremendous tension on you. Some fellows that you've read about, and you know, like Bobby Jones---

MURROW: Yes?

ARMOUR: ---Byron Nelson -- let me think of somebody else -- it was---

MRS. ARMOUR: Middlecoff.

ARMOUR: Middlecoff. These fellows are very, very nervous. Bobby Jones used to regurgitate, and Byron Nelson used to heave up -- that's the same thing, but they used to heave up. It was better for Nelson than regurgitation.

MURROW: Well, having won all the major trophies there are to be won in golf, how come I don't see any around the house?

ARMOUR: Well, the funny thing about that, Edward, I was never a collector of trophies. Of course, in professional championship play, you don't get many cups---

MURROW: Yes?

ARMOUR: ---but many years ago, I once won the French championship, and this little cup here is the French championship.

MURROW: Yes?

ARMOUR: I kept it as one of the few cups I have, or didn't lose, or didn't give away -- I kept it -- my wife took care of that -- but the one I was really proud of -- that's a French championship cup -- is this one here which I won in 1920 just after the war. That's called the silver tass. I won it at Glen Eagles in Scotland. It's what they call a Scotch drinking cup.

MURROW: Yes?

ARMOUR: And the way you handle this is one fellow gets on one side, one fellow gets on the other, you hold these handles, you fill the basin with ambrosial nectar---

MURROW: Yes?

ARMOUR: ---and you've got to drink it down, and the fellow who stands up after you finish the bottle won the cup, and I have the cup. But it's a beautiful cup.

MURROW: It certainly is. Tommy, I imagine you started playing golf in Scotland when you were quite young, professional championship play, you don't get many cups---

MURROW: Yes?

ARMOUR: ---but many years ago, I once won the French championship, and this little cup here is the French championship.

MURROW: Yes?

ARMOUR: I kept it as one of the few cups I have, or didn't lose, or didn't give away -- I kept it -- my wife took care of that -- but the one I was really proud of -- that's a French championship cup -- is this one here which I won in 1920 just after the war. That's called the silver tass. I won it at Glen Eagles in Scotland. It's what they call a Scotch drinking cup.

MURROW: Yes?

ARMOUR: And the way you handle this is one fellow gets on one side, one fellow gets on the other, you hold these handles, you fill the basin with ambrosial nectar---

MURROW: Yes?

ARMOUR: ---and you've got to drink it down, and the fellow who stands up after you finish the bottle won the cup, and I have the cup. But it's a beautiful cup.

MURROW: It certainly is. Tommy, I imagine you started playing golf in Scotland when you were quite young, didn't you?

ARMOUR: Yes, just a young boy. I was just a young boy. It's sort of a natural game there. My father was very much interested in golf. All my family were, and I lived very near the golf course, and though I really, like all boys, did not like the game -- it's too slow a game for children.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

ARMOUR: You know, when you're young you want something with a little action. You want a little football, a little boxing, a little something, and golf is a tough game even when you get our miserable age. Not yours, mine, I'm talking about.

MURROW: Ours. I heard you.

ARMOUR: Ours? You get the first deal. And it's a monotonous -- it's such a scientific game---

MURROW: Yes.

ARMOUR: ---that to become really good, it takes a tremendous amount of work. That's why there are so many of these psychopathic hospitals filled with broken-down golfers that want to shoot 75 and finish up 95. They leave their home, break up everything, and there they are, right in the ward trying to play that wedge shot out of a bunker downhill didn't you?

ARMOUR: Yes, just a young boy. I was just a young boy. It's sort of a natural game there. My father was very much interested in golf. All my family were, and I lived very near the golf course, and though I really, like all boys, did not like the game -- it's too slow a game for children.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

ARMOUR: You know, when you're young you want something with a little action. You want a little football, a little boxing, a little something, and golf is a tough game even when you get our miserable age. Not yours, mine, I'm talking about.

MURROW: Ours. I heard you.

ARMOUR: Ours? You get the first deal. And it's a monotonous -- it's such a scientific game---

MURROW: Yes.

ARMOUR: ---that to become really good, it takes a tremendous amount of work. That's why there are so many of these psychopathic hospitals filled with broken-down golfers that want to shoot 75 and finish up 95. They leave their home, break up everything, and there they are, right in the ward trying to play that wedge shot out of a bunker downhill with a bad lie.

MURROW: How did the Scots happen to invent the game?

ARMOUR: Well, that's mythical. It's mythical. It was supposed to start in Holland, really, on the ice there. Then up in Scotland the shepherds on the moor with the sheep, and then these crooked handles. They called them -- I forget what they called them -- the name they really called them -- and stones -- started to hit that around for fun, and then they got a little better and made better implements to play with, and went on, and got better, and made round stones instead of any kind of stone. Then they made gutta-percha balls, and they started to play holes. Did you ever happen to know how they happened to play 18 holes?

MURROW: No, I do not.

ARMOUR: Well, that's quite a deal. Nobody's ever been able to figure out how a golf course was 18 holes.

MURROW: Yes?

ARMOUR: Well, they found the solution. They went away into the archives of all the golf researchers and found out that two Scotsman started in St. Andrews with a bottle of Scotch, and they decided to play until the bottle was finished. When they played 18 holes they were finished, with a bad lie.

MURROW: How did the Scots happen to invent the game?

ARMOUR: Well, that's mythical. It's mythical. It was supposed to start in Holland, really, on the ice there. Then up in Scotland the shepherds on the moor with the sheep, and then these crooked handles. They called them -- I forget what they called them -- the name they really called them -- and stones -- started to hit that around for fun, and then they got a little better and made better implements to play with, and went on, and got better, and made round stones instead of any kind of stone. Then they made gutta-percha balls, and they started to play holes. Did you ever happen to know how they happened to play 18 holes?

MURROW: No, I do not.

ARMOUR: Well, that's quite a deal. Nobody's ever been able to figure out how a golf course was 18 holes.

MURROW: Yes?

ARMOUR: Well, they found the solution. They went away into the archives of all the golf researchers and found out that two Scotsman started in St. Andrews with a bottle of Scotch, and they decided to play until the bottle was finished. When they played 18 holes they were finished, and that's how it became 18 holes.

MURROW: And so that's why the 19th hole is now called the place where you can find another bottle. Is that right?

ARMOUR: That's the deal. You've got the right idea.

MURROW: Thank you very much, indeed, Tommy. Thank you, Mrs. Armour, for letting us come tonight. It's been very pleasant, indeed.

ARMOUR: It's been very pleasant, too, Edward.

MURROW: Good night.

ARMOUR: Good night.

MRS. ARMOUR: Good night.

MURROW: Good night. In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Moss Hart and his wife, Kitty Carlisle, right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Playwright-director Moss Hart, who has been described as a sort of Byron from Brooklyn, and a man for whom the curtain never comes down, started writing plays at the age of 18. Five years later he had his first major success called, "Once in A Lifetime."

and that's how it became 18 holes.

MURROW: And so that's why the 19th hole is now called the place where you can find another bottle. Is that right?

ARMOUR: That's the deal. You've got the right idea.

MURROW: Thank you very much, indeed, Tommy. Thank you, Mrs. Armour, for letting us come tonight. It's been very pleasant, indeed.

ARMOUR: It's been very pleasant, too, Edward.

MURROW: Good night.

ARMOUR: Good night.

MRS. ARMOUR: Good night.

MURROW: Good night. In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Moss Hart and his wife, Kitty Carlisle, right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Playwright-director Moss Hart, who has been described as a sort of Byron from Brooklyn, and a man for whom the curtain never comes down, started writing plays at the age of 18. Five years later he had his first major success called, "Once in A Lifetime."

Moss Hart was born in New York City; became a stockroom helper in the cloak and suit business, and an office boy for a theatrical producer. Then with George Kaufman, he collaborated on such shows as "You Can't Take It With You," and "The Man Who Came To Dinner," and on his own, wrote and staged "Lady In The Dark" and "Winged Victory." Recently he directed that seemingly endless hit, "My Fair Lady."

In 1946 Moss Hart married actress-singer Kitty Carlisle. Kitty was born in New Orleans and educated in Europe before her stage and screen careers in this country. She's now a regular panelist on television's "To Tell The Truth."

For the past nine years, Moss Hart, Kitty Carlisle and their two children have lived in a duplex apartment in this building on New York City's upper East Side.

Good evening, Moss.

HART: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Tell me this. In spite of the years that have passed, do you still have a warm spot for Brooklyn?

HART: Now, Ed, that's a very dangerous question. You know what happened to Noel Coward when he wrote about Brooklyn. But I do have a warm spot for Brooklyn in my

Moss Hart was born in New York City; became a stockroom helper in the cloak and suit business, and an office boy for a theatrical producer. Then with George Kaufman, he collaborated on such shows as "You Can't Take It With You," and "The Man Who Came To Dinner," and on his own, wrote and staged "Lady In The Dark" and "Winged Victory." Recently he directed that seemingly endless hit, "My Fair Lady."

In 1946 Moss Hart married actress-singer Kitty Carlisle. Kitty was born in New Orleans and educated in Europe before her stage and screen careers in this country. She's now a regular panelist on television's "To Tell The Truth."

For the past nine years, Moss Hart, Kitty Carlisle and their two children have lived in a duplex apartment in this building on New York City's upper East Side.

Good evening, Moss.

HART: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Tell me this. In spite of the years that have passed, do you still have a warm spot for Brooklyn?

HART: Now, Ed, that's a very dangerous question. You know what happened to Noel Coward when he wrote about Brooklyn. But I do have a warm spot for Brooklyn in my heart, particularly now that I'm out of Brooklyn. Actually, I lived most of my young life in The Bronx. In those days Brooklyn was the Riviera. You went to Brooklyn to get out of the Bronx. Nowadays you meet in both boroughs.

MURROW: Moss, I think someone once described you as a mixture of New York, Hollywood, insomnia, nervous indigestion, and a passion for the theater. Is that all true?

HART: Partly true. It was largely true in my bachelor days. The only thing that remains now is my passion for the theater.

MURROW: I imagine Kitty and the children are also part of your passion, aren't they? Are they somewhere in the wings?

HART: They've been waiting in the wings since 10 o'clock this morning. They're right in here, Ed.

MURROW: Thank you.

HART: Now, here is, unmistakably, Kitty Carlisle.

MURROW: Good evening, Kitty.

CARLISLE: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

CARLISLE: Fine.

HART: And Kathy Hart.

KATHY: How do you do, Mr. Murrow.

heart, particularly now that I'm out of Brooklyn. Actually, I lived most of my young life in The Bronx. In those days Brooklyn was the Riviera. You went to Brooklyn to get out of the Bronx. Nowadays you meet in both boroughs.

MURROW: Moss, I think someone once described you as a mixture of New York, Hollywood, insomnia, nervous indigestion, and a passion for the theater. Is that all true?

HART: Partly true. It was largely true in my bachelor days. The only thing that remains now is my passion for the theater.

MURROW: I imagine Kitty and the children are also part of your passion, aren't they? Are they somewhere in the wings?

HART: They've been waiting in the wings since 10 o'clock this morning. They're right in here, Ed.

MURROW: Thank you.

HART: Now, here is, unmistakably, Kitty Carlisle.

MURROW: Good evening, Kitty.

CARLISLE: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

CARLISLE: Fine.

HART: And Kathy Hart.

KATHY: How do you do, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How are you, Kathy?

HART: And Christopher Hart.

CHRISTOPHER: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Christopher.

HART: Now, unlike most children, they don't have to be coaxed to play, and the reason they're there is for a very simple reason. Play.

(Children play duet.)

HART: That does it. That does it. That does it!

MURROW: Very good.

HART: Ed, what you've just heard represents roughly about $3,500 worth of piano lessons.

MURROW: And well worth every cent of it.

HART: If you like boogy-woogy.

MURROW: Very good, Chris. Are you going to become a pianist?

CHRISTOPHER: No, I don't really want to. I'd like to become either a singer or an actor. My big adventure for this summer will be that I am going to Europe for the first time.

MURROW: Oh, wonderful! Are you going by ship or flying?

MURROW: How are you, Kathy?

HART: And Christopher Hart.

CHRISTOPHER: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Christopher.

HART: Now, unlike most children, they don't have to be coaxed to play, and the reason they're there is for a very simple reason. Play.

(Children play duet.)

HART: That does it. That does it. That does it!

MURROW: Very good.

HART: Ed, what you've just heard represents roughly about $3,500 worth of piano lessons.

MURROW: And well worth every cent of it.

HART: If you like boogy-woogy.

MURROW: Very good, Chris. Are you going to become a pianist?

CHRISTOPHER: No, I don't really want to. I'd like to become either a singer or an actor. My big adventure for this summer will be that I am going to Europe for the first time.

MURROW: Oh, wonderful! Are you going by ship or flying?

CHRISTOPHER: I'm going to fly.

MURROW: Kathy, how about you? What are you going to do this summer?

KATHY: Well, I enjoy playing, too, but my excitement is I am going to camp for the first time. I'm going with a friend from school, and that helps a lot. The name of the camp is Chunuawha. It's up in the mountains.

MURROW: Oh, I hope you have a wonderful summer.

HART: Ed?

MURROW: Yes.

HART: I'd like Chris to play some Brahms and Kitty sing it. Would you mind?

MURROW: Oh, wonderful! Thank you.

(Christopher plays piano and Miss Carlisle sings.)

MURROW: Ah, thank you, Kitty. Thank you very much.

CARLISLE: Thank you, Chris.

HART: As long as I pay for the lessons, I might as well hear what I like.

MURROW: Too true. Kitty, do you confine your singing pretty much to home musicals now?

CARLISLE: Yes, I do, Ed. You know, singing is like dancing. It requires daily practice, and I don't have

CHRISTOPHER: I'm going to fly.

MURROW: Kathy, how about you? What are you going to do this summer?

KATHY: Well, I enjoy playing, too, but my excitement is I am going to camp for the first time. I'm going with a friend from school, and that helps a lot. The name of the camp is Chumuswha. It's up in the mountains.

MURROW: Oh, I hope you have a wonderful summer.

HART: Ed?

MURROW: Yes.

HART: I'd like Chris to play some Brahms and Kitty sing it. Would you mind?

MURROW: Oh, wonderful! Thank you.

(Christopher plays piano and Miss Carlisle sings.)

MURROW: Ah, thank you, Kitty. Thank you very much.

CARLISLE: Thank you, Chris.

HART: As long as I pay for the lessons, I might as well hear what I like.

MURROW: Too true. Kitty, do you confine your singing pretty much to home musicals now?

CARLISLE: Yes, I do, Ed. You know, singing is like dancing. It requires daily practice, and I don't have time with you know who. Ed, come and see the house. I'd like to show it to you.

MURROW: Well, thank you.

CARLISLE: Good night, children.

MURROW: Good night.

HART: Good night, Chris. Good night, Kathy.

MURROW: Good night, Chris. Good night, Kathy.

CHILDREN: Good night, Mr. Murrow.

CARLISLE: I came to this house -- actually, this apartment -- about four months before Kathy was born, on a stretcher, and there wasn't a stick of furniture in the house. We moved in just like that. There wasn't even a headboard, and by the time the baby was born, and I came downstairs, the whole house was furnished, and I had never seen it before completely done, by my favorite decorator, the best man in the business.

HART: By the name of---

CARLISLE: Moss Hart.

HART: That's right. I want the commercial.

CARLISLE: Moss, why don't you take Ed into your study?

HART: All right. You know---

MURROW: Moss, is your study off-limits for Kitty?

time with you know who. Ed, come and see the house. I'd like to show it to you.

MURROW: Well, thank you.

CARLISLE: Good night, children.

MURROW: Good night.

HART: Good night, Chris. Good night, Kathy.

MURROW: Good night, Chris. Good night, Kathy.

CHILDREN: Good night, Mr. Murrow.

CARLISLE: I came to this house -- actually, this apartment -- about four months before Kathy was born, on a stretcher, and there wasn't a stick of furniture in the house. We moved in just like that. There wasn't even a headboard, and by the time the baby was born, and I came downstairs, the whole house was furnished, and I had never seen it before completely done, by my favorite decorator, the best man in the business.

HART: By the name of---

CARLISLE: Moss Hart.

HART: That's right. I want the commercial.

CARLISLE: Moss, why don't you take Ed into your study?

HART: All right. You know---

MURROW: Moss, is your study off-limits for Kitty?

CARLISLE: Well, it's off-limits in the sense that he really loves interruptions, but I'm only allowed in to interrupt.

HART: Well, you come in and interrupt me, Ed.

MURROW: All right.

CARLISLE: I'll see you in the morning room in a little while.

MURROW: Very good.

HART: It's down this way. As you know, I wrote a great many of the plays at the farm I had in Bucks County---

MURROW: Yes, I know.

HART: ---and when I came to New York, I wanted kind of an indoor-outdoor room. I had been spoiled, I guess. So you see this is rather an indoor-outdoor room. At the moment I'm turning off the fountain. I don't know whether you can see the water.

MURROW: Yes, I could.

HART: Now it's off.

MURROW: Moss, I rather expected to find you in a typical book-lined workroom.

HART: Well, I got sick of that traditional office study with the books, the shelves, and the pipes scattered around -- well, there are some here, but there are no books

CARLISLE: Well, it's off-limits in the sense that he really loves interruptions, but I'm only allowed in to interrupt.

HART: Well, you come in and interrupt me, Ed.

MURROW: All right.

CARLISLE: I'll see you in the morning room in a little while.

MURROW: Very good.

HART: It's down this way. As you know, I wrote a great many of the plays at the farm I had in Bucks County---

MURROW: Yes, I know.

HART: ---and when I came to New York, I wanted kind of an indoor-outdoor room. I had been spoiled, I guess. So you see this is rather an indoor-outdoor room. At the moment I'm turning off the fountain. I don't know whether you can see the water.

MURROW: Yes, I could.

HART: Now it's off.

MURROW: Moss, I rather expected to find you in a typical book-lined workroom.

HART: Well, I got sick of that traditional office study with the books, the shelves, and the pipes scattered around -- well, there are some here, but there are no books anyway. This is exactly what I want, and since I have to be here all day, this is what I want, and this is what I got for myself.

MURROW: Moss, was play writing something you just happened to fall into, or was it a long-held ambition?

HART: Actually, a life-long ambition. I was taken to the theater when I was 7 by an aunt of mine, my Aunt Kate, who had a great influence on my life, and I knew then, the first time I saw the magic and wonder of the theater, that this was the world I wanted to be part of. I wasn't sure how, but I never swerved. I knew this was my world.

MURROW: Well, what, exactly, was the attraction to a boy of 7?

HART: Well, it's hard to be explicit. I suspect that the theater is the refuge for many unhappy children. Somehow they suddenly see their fantasies played out for applause and an audience,---

MURROW: Yes?

HART: ---you know, and although I am not an unhappy child any longer, my passion still remains the theater.

MURROW: And none of that initial excitement has worn off, huh?

anyway. This is exactly what I want, and since I have to be here all day, this is what I want, and this is what I got for myself.

MURROW: Moss, was play writing something you just happened to fall into, or was it a long-held ambition?

HART: Actually, a life-long ambition. I was taken to the theater when I was 7 by an aunt of mine, my Aunt Kate, who had a great influence on my life, and I knew then, the first time I saw the magic and wonder of the theater, that this was the world I wanted to be part of. I wasn't sure how, but I never swerved. I knew this was my world.

MURROW: Well, what, exactly, was the attraction to a boy of 7?

HART: Well, it's hard to be explicit. I suspect that the theater is the refuge for many unhappy children. Somehow they suddenly see their fantasies played out for applause and an audience,---

MURROW: Yes?

HART: ---you know, and although I am not an unhappy child any longer, my passion still remains the theater.

MURROW: And none of that initial excitement has worn off, huh?

HART: I am still hopelessly and relentlessly stagestruck.

MURROW: Moss, of all the plays and musicals you have since been associated with, which has given you the deepest, the most personal satisfaction?

HART: Well, there are a few different kinds of satisfaction. There was the Pulitzer Prize which I won with George Kaufman for writing, "You Can't Take It With You."

MURROW: Yes?

HART: There was the adventure of "Lady In The Dark." There was "Winged Victory", which was a different kind of excitement, which was my contribution to the war effort, and for which I received a check made out to me. I have it here, or rather a framed copy of it, for $1,414,620, which I turned over to the Air Force Show, which wouldn't it have been wonderful to have kept. When I translate that into merchandise, wonderful. So "Winged Victory" had a different kind of adventurous sense for me. That was the most fun, in a way, and I guess "My Fair Lady" has been the most financially successful.

MURROW: Moss, am I right in thinking that all of your writing has been confined to plays?

HART: Yes, except for a few motion pictures like

HART: I am still hopelessly and relentlessly stagestruck.

MURROW: Moss, of all the plays and musicals you have since been associated with, which has given you the deepest, the most personal satisfaction?

HART: Well, there are a few different kinds of satisfaction. There was the Pulitzer Prize which I won with George Kaufman for writing, "You Can't Take It With You."

MURROW: Yes?

HART: There was the adventure of "Lady In The Dark." There was "Winged Victory", which was a different kind of excitement, which was my contribution to the war effort, and for which I received a check made out to me. I have it here, or rather a framed copy of it, for $1,414,620, which I turned over to the Air Force Show, which wouldn't it have been wonderful to have kept. When I translate that in-to merchandise, wonderful. So "Winged Victory" had a different kind of adventurous sense for me. That was the most fun, in a way, and I guess "My Fair Lady" has been the most financially successful.

MURROW: Moss, am I right in thinking that all of your writing has been confined to plays?

HART: Yes, except for a few motion pictures like

"Gentleman's Agreement" and "A Star Is Born," but for the last five years I've embarked on a different kind of writing adventure. I've been writing prose for five years. I've been writing my autobiography, and by some happy accident, purely by happy accident, I happen to have an advance copy of the book which will be published in September by Random House, and here it is, Ed.

MURROW: You're a very thoughtful host. I was just about to ask you about it. "Act One."

HART: Yes, it's called "Act One", Ed, because it ends with the opening night of my first play. I happen to think that the beginnings are the most interesting part of anyone's career. One can always read about success in "Who's Who" but how it all began is the part that interests me, and I've been on it for five years. This book represents five years of effort.

MURROW: Well, of course, your beginning was some time before you met Mrs. Hart, but certainly Kitty must have had some small contribution, to the five years of labor on "Act One."

HART: Oh, she had an enormous contribution. She made an enormous contribution. She is a great listener. At the end of each day I would read her what I had written, and

"Gentleman's Agreement" and "A Star Is Born," but for the last five years I've embarked on a different kind of writing adventure. I've been writing prose for five years. I've been writing my autobiography, and by some happy accident, purely by happy accident, I happen to have an advance copy of the book which will be published in September by Random House, and here it is, Ed.

MURROW: You're a very thoughtful host. I was just about to ask you about it. "Act One."

HART: Yes, it's called "Act One", Ed, because it ends with the opening night of my first play. I happen to think that the beginnings are the most interesting part of anyone's career. One can always read about success in "Who's Who" but how it all began is the part that interests me, and I've been on it for five years. This book represents five years of effort.

MURROW: Well, of course, your beginning was some time before you met Mrs. Hart, but certainly Kitty must have had some small contribution, to the five years of labor on "Act One."

HART: Oh, she had an enormous contribution. She made an enormous contribution. She is a great listener. At the end of each day I would read her what I had written, and she'd listen as though she were listening to some terrible radio serial, you know. She couldn't wait for the next episode, and she can tell you herself, I think, exactly what she felt about being the wife of an author. Of course, I consider myself an ideal husband. I do not have to be met at the train. I am home for every meal: lunch, breakfast, dinner, sometimes midnight suppers. So I consider myself an ideal husband. By the way, Kitty calls this the morning room because last winter we spent some time in London doing "My Fair Lady" at the Drury Lane---

MURROW: Yes?

HART: ---and I think you know, Ed, most English houses, due to their rather wretched climate, have what they call a winter garden or a morning room so there was one sunny and pleasant room in the house. It seemed like such a good idea, we turned this, which used to be my own study, into a morning room. This leads to the terrace, and in the day it's filled with sunlight.

MURROW: Kitty, it must be very pleasant to have Moss around the house all day all the time.

CARLISLE: Well, I just heard him say he's an ideal husband. He is, Ed.

MURROW: I heard him, too.

she'd listen as though she were listening to some terrible radio serial, you know. She couldn't wait for the next episode, and she can tell you herself, I think, exactly what she felt about being the wife of an author. Of course, I consider myself an ideal husband. I do not have to be met at the train. I am home for every meal: lunch, breakfast, dinner, sometimes midnight suppers. So I consider myself an ideal husband. By the way, Kitty calls this the morning room because last winter we spent some time in London doing "My Fair Lady" at the Drury Lane---

MURROW: Yes?

HART: ---and I think you know, Ed, most English houses, due to their rather wretched climate, have what they call a winter garden or a morning room so there was one sunny and pleasant room in the house. It seemed like such a good idea, we turned this, which used to be my own study, into a morning room. This leads to the terrace, and in the day it's filled with sunlight.

MURROW: Kitty, it must be very pleasant to have Moss around the house all day all the time.

CARLISLE: Well, I just heard him say he's an ideal husband. He is, Ed.

MURROW: I heard him, too.

CARLISLE: He is, Ed, but not because he stays around the house all day. That's absolutely ghastly because, you know, you never are able to finish anything. The minute you're doing something, he's saying, "Darling, would you? May I? Could you?" and nothing is ever finished. So I decided to take up a whole new career of my own.

MURROW: What's that?

CARLISLE: Well, I'm -- you see, before you a virgining lady lecturer, and I start my lecturing career on the 15th in White Plains of this month.

MURROW: Mainly on matters having to do with the theater?

CARLISLE: No, Ed, not at all. Well, you tell.

HART: Well, Kitty asked me what she should talk about. I suggested she should talk about a subject to which she has given the most flattering attention every day of her life, herself.

MURROW: I shall come to the opening lecture. Thank you.

CARLISLE: Oh, no one's allowed. No one's allowed, not even Moss.

MURROW: Thank you, Kitty. Thank you, Moss. I'm sorry we have got to go. Good night.

CARLISLE: He is, Ed, but not because he stays around the house all day. That's absolutely ghastly because, you know, you never are able to finish anything. The minute you're doing something, he's saying, "Darling, would you? May I? Could you?" and nothing is ever finished. So I decided to take up a whole new career of my own.

MURROW: What's that?

CARLISLE: Well, I'm -- you see, before you a virgining lady lecturer, and I start my lecturing career on the 15th in White Plains of this month.

MURROW: Mainly on matters having to do with the theater?

CARLISLE: No, Ed, not at all. Well, you tell.

HART: Well, Kitty asked me what she should talk about. I suggested she should talk about a subject to which she has given the most flattering attention every day of her life, herself.

MURROW: I shall come to the opening lecture. Thank you.

CARLISLE: Oh, no one's allowed. No one's allowed, not even Moss.

MURROW: Thank you, Kitty. Thank you, Moss. I'm sorry we have got to go. Good night.

HART: Thank you, Ed.

CARLISLE: Good night.

MURROW: Thank you again. Good night.

HART: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be calling on composer and producer Julie Stein here in New York. We'll also be visiting with that restaurant man, Vincent Sardi, Jr. and his family.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

HART: Thank you, Ed.

CARLISLE: Good night.

MURROW: Thank you again. Good night.

HART: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be calling on composer and producer Julie Stein here in New York. We'll also be visiting with that restaurant man, Vincent Sardi, Jr. and his family.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Jule Styne and

Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Sardi, Jr.

May 15, 1959 10:30 PM DST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with composer and producer Jule Styne in his New York apartment. Then we'll be dropping in on restaurant owner Vincent Sardi, Jr., and his family.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Jule Styne and
Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Sardi, Jr.
May 15, 1959 10:30 PM DST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with composer and producer Jule Styne in his New York apartment. Then we'll be dropping in on restaurant owner Vincent Sardi, Jr., and his family.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545
LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

[Commercial]

MURROW: Let me see: "Three Coins in the Fountain," "Mr. Wonderful," "The Party's Over," "I Don't Want to Walk Without You, Baby," "Just in Time"--these are just a few of the many successfully popular songs Jule Styne has turned out in his twenty-five years as a composer. In addition to song-writing--Jule's newest score is for "Gypsy," which opens here in New York next Thursday--he has produced a number of hit shows of his own on Broadway and he's worked on, I think, about thirty or more motion pictures in Hollywood.

Jule Styne was born in London, came to this country when he was eight years old, settled and grew up in Chicago where he was a piano soloist with the Chicago Symphony at the early age of nine. Eventually he drifted into popular music, first with a band of his own, then as a composer.

Jule Styne lives in a small apartment here in New York--that dark building with the bay window--on the East side of Manhattan.

'Evening, Jule.

STYNE: [playing music] Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: I suppose it would be safe to say that for you a piano, not a dog, is a man's best friend.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Let me see: "Three Coins in the Fountain," "Mr. Wonderful," "The Party's Over," "I Don't Want to Walk Without You, Baby," "Just in Time"--these are just a few of the many successfully popular songs Jule Styne has turned out in his twenty-five years as a composer. In addition to song-writing--Jule's newest score is for "Gypsy," which opens here in New York next Thursday--he has produced a number of hit shows of his own on Broadway and he's worked on, I think, about thirty or more motion pictures in Hollywood.

Jule Styne was born in London, came to this country when he was eight years old, settled and grew up in Chicago where he was a piano soloist with the Chicago Symphony at the early age of nine. Eventually he drifted into popular music, first with a band of his own, then as a composer.

Jule Styne lives in a small apartment here in New York--that dark building with the bay window--on the east side of Manhattan.

'Evening, Jule.

STYNE: [playing music] Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: I suppose it would be safe to say that for you a piano, not a dog, is a man's best friend.

STYNE: Can't resisting doing this [playing]--seeing if it's alive or in tune. I must have a piano in tune at all times.

MURROW: Well Jule, you obviously worked out your own formula for hit songs. You wouldn't care to let us in on the secret, would you?

STYNE: Well, there's no formula. I do try to keep them pure and simple and write the best one--always make the next one the best one--and I think simplicity's been the key to my success.

MURROW: Well, that alone---

STYNE: Pardon me, Ed.

MURROW: Go ahead.

STYNE: I want to just tell you that---so that even you can whistle it and sing it in your bathtub.

MURROW: Well, I found that frequently keeping things simple can be a pretty difficult undertaking.

STYNE: Yes. To write simple is not easy; to use the entire keyboard is much easier. But my early classical training took so much out of me that I found great relief in reciting the drum and bugle calls for some strange reason, Ed. It is true, but for some strange reason the---the intervals on the bugle kind of stayed with me and there's---there's STYNE: Can't resisting doing this [playing]--seeing if it's alive or in tune. I must have a piano in tune at all times.

MURROW: Well Jule, you obviously worked out your own formula for hit songs. You wouldn't care to let us in on the secret, would you?

STYNE: Well, there's no formula. I do try to keep them pure and simple and write the best one--always make the next one the best one--and I think simplicity's been the key to my success.

MURROW: Well, that alone---

STYNE: Pardon me, Ed.

MURROW: Go ahead.

STYNE: I want to just tell you that---so that even you can whistle it and sing it in your bathtub.

MURROW: Well, I found that frequently keeping things simple can be a pretty difficult undertaking.

STYNE: Yes. To write simple is not easy; to use the entire keyboard is much easier. But my early classical training took so much out of me that I found great relief in reviving the drum and bugle calls for some strange reason, Ed. It is true, but for some strange reason the---the inter-vals on the bugle kind of stayed with me and there's---there's a great influence. There is a trumpet sound in many, many of my songs--"The Party's Over" and I can't tell you how many songs have that interval. And so there---there lies in the key to---there's a clue to my writing.

MURROW: Have you ever had any regrets about not continuing with classical music?

STYNE: Well, I regret the glamor every time I go to see Lenny Bernstein or hear the orchestra. There's a certain glamor sitting at the piano being a soloist. But it's very gratifying to meet old Mr. Oscar here, which I won for "Three Coins in the Fountain," and most gratifying of all, Ed, is when I ride in a taxi the cab driver will be whistling one of my songs. I imagine many people--millions of people throughout the country--through the many years that I've written have brought them some emotional satisfaction and happiness and I think that's the most gratifying part of being---writing popular songs because it is our true American culture.

MURROW: Jule, a lot of hit tunes must have come out of that piano.

STYNE: Many of them. I wrote the score of "Bells Are Ringing," "Say, Darling," and the latest show "Gypsy" I wrote on this piano. In fact, I could do a biography of my

a great influence. There is a trumpet sound in many, many of my songs--"The Party's Over", and I can't tell you how many songs have that interval. And so there---there lies in the key to---there's a clue to my writing.

MURROW: Have you ever had any regrets about not continuing with classical music?

STYNE: Well, I regret the glamor every time I go to see Leonny Bernstein or hear the orchestra. There's a certain glamor sitting at the piano being a soloist. But it's very gratifying to meet old Mr. Oscar here, which I won for "Three Coins in the Fountain," and most gratifying of all, Ed, is when I ride in a taxi the cab driver will be whistling one of my songs. I imagine many people--millions of people throughout the country--through the many years that I've written have brought them some emotional satisfaction and happiness and I think that's the most gratifying part of being---writing popular songs because it is our true American culture.

MURROW: Jule, a lot of hit tunes must have come out of that piano.

STYNE: Many of them. I wrote the score of "Bells Are Ringing," "Say, Darling," and the latest show "Gypsy" I wrote on this piano. In fact, I could do a biography of my whole life in a minute and a half.

MURROW: Let's try.

STYNE: Well, to go back to the war era: the first song that ever started me writing songs I wrote with Frank Loesser. It went [plays, sings, "I don't want to walk without you, baby."]

MURROW: Oh, I remember hearing that during the war overseas.

STYNE: Here's a song that Sam Goldwyn hated. But it became a hit despite Sam Goldwyn--not in his picture, someone else's picture. It went [plays, sings, "Kiss me once, kiss me twice, kiss me once again. It's been a long, long time."]

MURROW: Why did Sam hate it?

STYNE: I don't know. He said it was too simple. You think you know simplicity. There's a song that brought Doris Day success in her first picture which gives me kind of a thrill. [Plays, sings, "It's magic."] And here's a two trumpet call song [plays, sings, "A kiss on the hand."]

MURROW: Oh, yes.

STYNE: [Singing: "Diamonds are a girl's best friend."] Well, and here's another song from "Bells Are Ringing" which sort of has a interval, a trumpet interval. [Plays, whole life in a minute and a half.

MURROW: Let's try.

STYNE: Well, to go back to the war era: the first song that ever started me writing songs I wrote with Frank Loesser. It went [plays, sings,"I don't want to walk without you, baby."]

MURROW: Oh, I remember hearing that during the war overseas.

STYNE: Here's a song that Sam Goldwyn hated. But it became a hit despite Sam Goldwyn--not in his picture, someone else's picture. It went [plays, sings, "Kiss me once, kiss me twice, kiss me once again. It's been a long, long time."]

MURROW: Why did Sam hate it?

STYNE: I don't know. He said it was too simple. You think you know simplicity. There's a song that brought Doris Day success in her first picture which gives me kind of a thrill. [plays, sings, "It's magic."] And here's a two trumpet call song [plays, sings, "A Kiss on the hand."]

MURROW: Oh, yes.

STYNE: [singing: "Diamonds are a girl's best friend."] Well, and here's another song from "Bells Are Ringing" which sort of has a interval, a trumpet interval. [plays, sings, "The party's over."]

MURROW: Jule, I said a moment ago you've been composing for twenty-five years. Do you remember anything from the prohibition era?

STYNE: Oh, I wrote my first, first song in prohibition, to wit: [plays, sings, "I'm blue every Monday, thinkin' over Sunday."] That was a saloon type of song.

Anyhow, getting back to reminiscing with you, Ed--this is so much fun--here's a song with a game. We used to play these games at Sinatra's house and we'd fool the people. Say have you heard Jerome Kern's latest song or Gershwin's latest song, and which one turned out the---only I couldn't remember it after I'd written it. It went something like [plays, sings, "Time after time."]

One of my favorite songs from "Bells Are Ringing" was written on this piano and it went [plays, sings.]

MURROW: Delightful. Thank you, Jule. I take it you do most of your work right in this room; right?

STYNE: Well, not all of it. I have another room down here. You see, I used to live in a much larger apartment but it wasn't too good for Jule Styne because Jule Styne must have pianos and something to remind him that he's a songwriter. Oh, while I'm here, this is what---you see I've frustration--- sings, "The party's over.")

MURROW: Jule, I said a moment ago you've been composing for twenty-five years. Do you remember anything from the prohibition era?

STYNE: Oh, I wrote my first, first song in prohibition, to wit: [plays, sings, "I'm blue every Monday, thinkin' over Sunday."] That was a saloon type of song.

Anyhow, getting back to reminiscing with you, Ed--this is so much fun--here's a song with a game. We used to play these games at Sinatra's house and we'd fool the people. Say have you heard Jerome Kern's latest song or Gershwin's latest song, and which one turned out the---only I couldn't remember it after I'd written it. It went something like [plays, sings, "Time after time."]

One of my favorite songs from "Bells Are Ringing" was written on this piano and it went [plays, sings.]

MURROW: Delightful. Thank you, Jule. I take it you do most of your work right in this room; right?

STYNE: Well, not all of it. I have another room down here. You see, I used to live in a much larger apartment but it wasn't too good for Jule Styne because Jule Styne must have pianos and something to remind him that he's a songwriter. Oh, while I'm here, this is what---you see I've frustration---

I once wanted to play the violin so badly and I couldn't make it, you see, then I--my folks told me to play the piano. But this is an old violin stand that's a very wonderful piece. It's 1700's, an English music violin stand; and this is where, of course, I sleep. And, oh here's a lovely piece, Ed. This is an old Gothic chest that was made into a desk. You see it would open normally this way and, of course, the desk part is on that side.

MURROW: Real collector's items. Is this a hobby of yours?

STYNE: No, Ed, it isn't. My real hobby, I'll tell you---If you'll follow me up here I'll tell you---show you a few things. My real hobby---I'm a frustrated baseball player. I was pretty bad. Here's a time we used to have out in Hollywood which Frank Sinatra got together. It was called the Sinatra Swooners. There's Frank, of course, and there's Anthony Quinn, and there's Barry Sullivan, and there's me. There's Sammy Cahn who used to write verse with me. And here's my oldest son, Stanley. And speaking that---I was pretty bad at that, Ed. This is what I'm better at. This is my Drama Critics Award for the producer, producer of the revival of Pal Joey. Of course here's my twenty-five year citation from the Friars as a songwriter. And, well, here's another little

I once wanted to play the violin so badly and I couldn't make it, you see, then I--my folks told me to play the piano. But this is an old violin stand that's a very wonderful piece. It's 1700's, an English music violin stand; and this is where, of course, I sleep. And, oh here's a lovely piece, Ed. This is an old Gothic chest that was made into a desk. You see it would open normally this way and, of course, the desk part is on that side.

MURROW: Real collector's items. Is this a hobby of yours?

STYNE: No, Ed, it isn't. My real hobby, I'll tell you---If you'll follow me up here I'll tell you---show you a few things. My real hobby---I'm a frustrated baseball player. I was pretty bad. Here's a time we used to have out in Hollywood which Frank Sinatra got together. It was called the Sinatra Swooners. There's Frank, of course, and there's Anthony Quinn, and there's Barry Sullivan, and there's me. There's Sammy Cahn who used to write verse with me. And here's my oldest son, Stanley. And speaking that---I was pretty bad at that, Ed. This is what I'm better at. This is my Drama Critics Award for the producer, producer of the revival of Pal Joey. Of course here's my twenty-five year citation from the Friars as a songwriter. And, well, here's another little thing also. This is my younger son, Norton, who goes to Syracuse now, who used to be a mascot of our baseball team.

MURROW: Oh yes. Jule, the Yankees seem to be having a little trouble these days. Is this keeping you up nights at all?

STYNE: Not at all. They're having trouble tonight, too. And---Not at all. My favorite team, of course, is the Cubs. I'm a good old Cub fan. And I wish the Yankees had Ernie Banks; they wouldn't have these nightmares.

MURROW: Now there's a friend of ours in the center, isn't it?

STYNE: Oh, the greatest. Ethel, star of "Gypsy." She's so wonderful that---finally got---finally got to write a score for Ethel Merman. And that's something. Speaking of Ethel Merman, Ed, here's our original cast album of "Gypsy" which comes out next week, and we're very happy about. Merman really sings up a storm on that.

MURROW: Well, we'll soon be hearing a whole new crop of Jule Styne tunes. Jule, what in your opinion is the most important single asset for a songwriter?

STYNE: A trunk.

MURROW: A what?

STYNE: A trunk.

thing also. This is my younger son, Norton, who goes to Syracuse now, who used to be a mascot of our baseball team.

MURROW: Oh yes. Julie, the Yankees seem to be having a little trouble these days. Is this keeping you up nights at all?

STYNE: Not at all. They're having trouble tonight, too. And---Not at all. My favorite team, of course, is the Cubs. I'm a good old Cub fan. And I wish the Yankees had Ernie Banks; they wouldn't have these nightmares.

MURROW: Now there's a friend of ours in the center, isn't it?

STYNE: Oh, the greatest. Ethel, star of "Gypsy." She's so wonderful that---finally got---finally got to write a score for Ethel Merman. And that's something. Speaking of Ethel Merman, Ed, here's our original cast album of "Gypsy" which comes out next week, and we're very happy about. Merman really sings up a storm on that.

MURROW: Well, we'll soon be hearing a whole new crop of Julie Styne tunes. Julie, what in your opinion is the most important single asset for a songwriter?

STYNE: A trunk.

MURROW: A what?

STYNE: A trunk.

MURROW: I'm afraid I don't understand just what you mean.

STYNE: Well, you see we write a lot of songs. One producer hates the songs, and when he hates the song this is it: a nice big trunk. We put 'em in the trunk. You've heard of a composer's trunk. And when we go to the next job and the guy--and the guy likes it, a producer likes it, you whip out and say well I have my little trunk. Everybody but the lyric writers hate trunks. They find it pretty frustrating to write trunk songs. And this thing is full of little gems.

MURROW: Jule, of all the songs you've written, is it possible your favorite is still hidden deep in that trunk?

STYNE: Well, we never know what's hidden in the trunk, Ed, because I write for people--such wonderful people as Hermione Gingold in "First Impressions," Judy Holliday in "Bells Are Ringing." Of course, here are the greatest. These two will eventually wind up with all the songs: my two grandchildren.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

STYNE: And my son Norton. And, oh Ed, speaking of "Bells Are Ringing" which reminds me--you know, I always wanted to write a song which would be the easiest for the MURROW: I'm afraid I don't understand just what you mean.

STYNE: Well, you see we write a lot of songs. One producer hates the songs, and when he hates the song this is it: a nice big trunk. We put 'em in the trunk. You've heard of a composer's trunk. And when we go to the next job and the guy--and the guy likes it, a producer likes it, you whip out and say well I have my little trunk. Everybody but the lyric writers hate trunks. They find it pretty frustrating to write trunk songs. And this thing is full of little gems.

MURROW: Jule, of all the songs you've written, is it possible your favorite is still hidden deep in that trunk?

STYNE: Well, we never know what's hidden in the trunk, Ed, because I write for people--such wonderful people as Hermione Gingold in "First Impressions," Judy Holliday in "Bells Are Ringing." Of course, here are the greatest. These two will eventually wind up with all the songs: my two grand-children.

MURROW: Oh, yes.

STYNE: And my son Norton. And, oh Ed, speaking of "Bells Are Ringing" which reminds me--you know, I always wanted to write a song which would be the easiest for the public to remember and would have some form and good taste to it, and it was such a song in "Bells Are Ringing." I just played it for you before. But it was based on two notes [playing]. Pretty easy. And then when you add a little harmony it goes [playing and humming]. Simple, isn't it, Ed?

MURROW: Oh very. Jule, which is more important for a successful song: words or music?

STYNE: Well, a tune is a tune and a lyric is just a group of words. You put them together, you have a song. That's very---Of course, I've been blessed with having wonderful lyric writers such as Sammy Cahn, Leo Robbins, Comden and Green, Frank Loesser, and now Stephen Sondheimer who's just written the lyrics to "Gypsy." And I think---So, I think---I would say the lyrics are most important.

You see, as a tune writer I---It's funny for me to say it but I tell you, the songwriter has everything going for him. He has a full orchestra that plays all the melody, and the lyric writer only has one little person to say the words against twenty-nine or thirty men, so I think---I think the most professional part about a popular song are the words. If the words are good you remember it. Now that's a strange thing but that's my personal opinion.

MURROW: Jule, tell me this: other than selling public to remember and would have some form and good taste to it, and it was such a song in "Bells Are Ringing." I just played it for you before. But it was based on two notes [playing]. Pretty easy. And then when you add a little harmony it goes [playing and humming]. Simple, isn't it, Ed?

MURROW: Oh very. Jule, which is more important for a successful song: words or music?

STYNE: Well, a tune is a tune and a lyric is just a group of words. You put them together, you have a song. That's very---of course, I've been blessed with having wonderful lyric writers such as Sammy Cahn, Leo Robbins, Comden and Green, Frank Loesser, and now Stephen Sondheimer who's just written the lyrics to "Gypsy." And I think---so, I think---I would say the lyrics are most important.

You see, as a tune writer I---It's funny for me to say it but I tell you, the songwriter has everything going for him. He has a full orchestra that plays all the melody, and the lyric writer only has one little person to say the words against twenty-nine or thirty men, so I think---I think the most professional part about a popular song are the words. If the words are good you remember it. Now that's a strange thing but that's my personal opinion.

MURROW: Jule, tell me this: other than selling all those songs in a trunk there, what do you most look forward to?

STYNE: Well, a farm, and I'd like to breed horses, and do a lot of cooking for my friends.

MURROW: Are you a pretty fair cook?

STYNE: Try me some time. I cook in several languages.

MURROW: Jule, thank you very much for letting us come tonight.

STYNE: Thank you for inviting me, Ed.

MURROW: It's very pleasant indeed. Good night.

STYNE: Good night. [Plays piano]

MURROW: Good night, Jule.

In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Vincent Sardi, Jr., and his family, right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Vincent Sardi, Jr., runs a restaurant here in New York. It's been described as the unofficial club, office, and nerve center of the legitimate stage in the Western Hemisphere. Vincent also owns a newer Sardi's on the East side, but it's the West side Sardi's, founded by his father, that's long been almost a second home for theater people from all those songs in a trunk there, what do you most look forward to?

STYNE: Well, a farm, and I'd like to breed horses, and do a lot of cooking for my friends.

MURROW: Are you a pretty fair cook?

STYNE: Try me some time. I cook in several languages.

MURROW: Jule, thank you very much for letting us come tonight.

STYNE: Thank you for inviting me, Ed.

MURROW: It's very pleasant indeed. Good night.

STYNE: Good night. [Plays piano]

MURROW: Good night, Jule.

In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Vincent Sardi, Jr., and his family, right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Vincent Sardi, Jr., runs a restaurant here in New York. It's been described as the unofficial club, office, and nerve center of the legitimate stage in the Western Hemisphere. Vincent also owns a newer Sardi's on the East side, but it's the West side Sardi's, founded by his father, that's long been almost a second home for theater people from the Shuberts to Sharkey the Seal.

When Vincent took over Sardi's some thirteen years ago he brought a varied training to the job. He started studying pre-medicine at Columbia, but he graduated in business administration. He started running an officers' mess for the Marines in World War II but pretty soon he found himself a captain in Okinawa and China. But through most of his forty-three years Vincent Sardi, Jr., was first observing and then practicing what comes naturally to a Sardi: the restaurant business.

Vincent Sardi, Jr., his wife Adele, a former actress and singer, and their four young children, live in that center brownstone house on the upper East side, just a short cab ride to his restaurants.

'Evening, Vincent.

SARDI: Good evening, Ed. Welcome to our home.

MURROW: Thank you. I know you have some, what is it, 800 caricatures of famous Broadway stars on the walls of your restaurant. Is Sharkey the Seal among those honored?

SARDI: Oh no. Some of them don't look human but so far we've just stuck to the human actors and actresses.

MURROW: Vincent, with your family background and your father's reputation, how did you ever get sidetracked

the Shuberts to Sharkey the Seal.

When Vincent took over Sardi's some thirteen years ago he brought a varied training to the job. He started studying pre-medicine at Columbia, but he graduated in business administration. He started running an officers' mess for the Marines in World War II but pretty soon he found himself a captain in Okinawa and China. But through most of his forty-three years Vincent Sardi, Jr., was first observing and then practicing what comes naturally to a Sardi: the restaurant business.

Vincent Sardi, Jr., his wife Adele, a former actress and singer, and their four young children, live in that center brownstone house on the upper East side, just a short cab ride to his restaurants.

'Evening, Vincent.

SARDI: Good evening, Ed. Welcome to our home.

MURROW: Thank you. I know you have some, what is it, 800 caricatures of famous Broadway stars on the walls of your restaurant. Is Sharkey the Seal among those honored?

SARDI: Oh no. Some of them don't look human but so far we've just stuck to the human actors and actresses.

MURROW: Vincent, with your family background and your father's reputation, how did you ever get sidetracked temporarily on a pre-med course in college?

SARDI: Well, Ed, I think that was mostly due to my mother. I think she thought that anyone not in the restaurant business only worked from eight to five, and therefore I was slated for a professional career. Unfortunately, I sold my chemistry books so that I could get some money to go to a junior prom, flunked chemistry, ended up in business administration, and here I am in the restaurant business.

MURROW: Weren't you ever tempted to try the stage?

SARDI: Oh yes. You know the---As a kid on 44th Street the theaters were my playground. I used to play backstage in the Broadhurst and Shubert. I had a dog that was in a play about a veterinarian. The play was called "Pigs." And then I finally was in a play called "The Master's Year" when I was about seven years old, another play called "Send No Money"--and they didn't--I never got paid for that one. And a walk-on in "Buckaroo." But I never really got---While I loved the theater I never really wanted to become an actor and stayed in the restaurant business.

MURROW: And I presume this pleases Mrs. Sardi, doesn't it?

SARDI: Oh, it certainly does. As a matter of temporarily on a pre-med course in college?

SARDI: Well, Ed, I think that was mostly due to my mother. I think she thought that anyone not in the restaurant business only worked from eight to five, and therefore I was slated for a professional career. Unfortunately, I sold my chemistry books so that I could get some money to go to a junior prom, flunked chemistry, ended up in business administration, and here I am in the restaurant business.

MURROW: Weren't you ever tempted to try the stage?

SARDI: Oh yes. You know the---As a kid on 44th street the theaters were my playground. I used to play backstage in the Broadhurst and Shubert. I had a dog that was in a play about a veterinarian. The play was called "Pigs." And then I finally was in a play called "The Master's Year" when I was about seven years old, another play called "Send No Money"--and they didn't--I never got paid for that one. And a walk-on in "Buckaroo." But I never really got---While I loved the theater I never really wanted to become an actor and stayed in the restaurant business.

MURROW: And I presume this pleases Mrs. Sardi, doesn't it?

SARDI: Oh, it certainly does. As a matter of fact she's upstairs getting the cast ready for our play. Adele, are the children ready?

MRS. SARDI: Yes, just about, Vincent.

MURROW: 'Evening, Adele.

MRS. SARDI: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Adele, this must be something of an event, on a Friday night, isn't it? Keeping the children up this late and having Vincent home at this time of night?

MRS. SARDI: Well, you're absolutely right. It's a rare Friday evening that we get Vincent home here. It's rather an important person that brings him here, Ed. As a matter of fact, we do have some moments together. Every breakfast we have together. But otherwise he works a restaurateur's hours--six days a week and ten to fourteen hours a day.

MURROW: Adele, before you met Vincent did you have occasion to dine at Sardi's?

MRS. SARDI: Why, yes I did. But well on the way to Sardi's, Ed, very briefly, I was born and brought up in Montana and then moved to California, to Hollywood, where I finished school and went through a couple of years of motion pictures there. And then came on to New York where I appeared in a musical which was a flop. But across the street was Vincent and Sardi's.

fact she's upstairs getting the cast ready for our play.

Adele, are the children ready?

MRS. SARDI: Yes, just about, Vincent.

MURROW: Evening, Adele.

MRS. SARDI: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Adele, this must be something of an event, on a Friday night, isn't it? Keeping the children up this late and having Vincent home at this time of night?

MRS. SARDI: Well, you're absolutely right. It's a rare Friday evening that we get Vincent home here. It's rather an important person that brings him here, Ed. As a matter of fact, we do have some moments together. Every breakfast we have together. But otherwise he works a restaurateur's hours--six days a week and ten to fourteen hours a day.

MURROW: Adele, before you met Vincent did you have occasion to dine at Sardi's?

MRS. SARDI: Why, yes I did. But well on the way to Sardi's, Ed, very briefly, I was born and brought up in Montana and then moved to California, to Hollywood, where I finished school and went through a couple of years of motion pictures there. And then came on to New York where I appeared in a musical which was a flop. But across the street was Vincent and Sardi's.

MURROW: And so now are you all through with acting and singing?

MRS. SARDI: Oh, pretty much, I would say. After all, Ed, the reasons are upstairs--the children. And may I say this, that there's nothing more satisfyding--satisfying or rewarding than being a mother. It's the best role I've ever played.

Kitty, would you send the children down, please. Here comes Tabitha. She's six years old.

MURROW: What an entrance. Hello, Tabitha.

SARDI: There we go.

MRS. SARDI: And here's Paul; he's four.

MURROW: Hi, Paul.

MRS. SARDI: And you David. This is David Racey? Sardi.

MURROW: Hello, David.

MRS. SARDI: And if you can hear me, Ed, while I'm coming around the bend---

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. SARDI: ---we have our other little prize package upstairs, little Jennifer, who's six months old.

MURROW: And sound asleep, no doubt.

MRS. SARDI: Sound asleep, I hope.

MURROW: And so now are you all through with eating and singing?

MRS. SARDI: Oh, pretty much, I would say. After all, Ed, the reasons are upstairs--the children. And may I say this, that there's nothing more satisfying--satisfying or rewarding than being a mother. It's the best role I've ever played.

Kitty, would you send the children down, please. Here comes Tabitha. She's six years old.

MURROW: What an entrance. Hello, Tabitha.

SARDI: There we go.

MRS. SARDI: And here's Paul; he's four.

MURROW: Hi, Paul.

MRS. SARDI: And you David. This is David Racey Sardi.

MURROW: Hello, David.

MRS. SARDI: And if you can hear me, Ed, while I'm coming around the band---

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. SARDI: ---we have our other little prize package upstairs, little Jennifer, who's six months old.

MURROW: And sound asleep, no doubt.

MRS. SARDI: Sound asleep, I hope.

MURROW: Well, if you ever have the urge to perform you have a good size audience right at home, don't you?

MRS. SARDI: Yes, you're so right. Actually, Ed, we've been sort of---sort of training our children, because they're all very musical, and Tabitha's playing the piano and we have our own little family musicales.

MURROW: Does that include Vincent?

MRS. SARDI: Oh I should say. He's getting very good on the clarinet, Ed.

MURROW: Is he?

MRS. SARDI: Yes.

SARDI: Oh yes, and you know we have some friends of ours, Don and Jean Selden and they have five children, formed an orchestra which they call the Selden Sizzlers. And they were very nice to us and invited us to join their group. I play second clarinet to Susie, who is fourteen years old--she plays first clarinet. And Adele plays the trumpet, second trumpet, and Chipper, who's ten years old, plays first trumpet. Now that Tabitha's been taking music lessons and we're going to do a spring festival. And our share of it is going to be to do Old MacDougald Had a Farm.

MRS. SARDI: Old MacDougald is Donald.

SARDI: Old MacDonald. And a neighbor of the MURROW: Well, if you ever have the urge to perform you have a good size audience right at home, don't you?

MRS. SARDI: Yes, you're so right. Actually, Ed, we've been sort of---sort of training our children, because they're all very musical, and Tabitha's playing the piano and we have our own little family musicales.

MURROW: Does that include Vincent?

MRS. SARDI: Oh I should say. He's getting very good on the clarinet, Ed.

MURROW: Is he?

MRS. SARDI: Yes.

SARDI: Oh yes, and you know we have some friends of ours, Don and Jean Seiden and they have five children, formed an orchestra which they call the Seiden Sizzlers. And they were very nice to us and invited us to join their group. I play second clarinet to Susie, who is fourteen years old--she plays first clarinet. And Adele plays the trumpet, second trumpet, and Chipper, who's ten years old, plays first trumpet. Now that Tabitha's been taking music lessons and we're going to do a spring festival. And our share of it is going to be to do Old MacDougald Had a Farm.

MRS. SARDI: Old MacDougald is Donald.

SARDI: Old MacDonald. And a neighbor of the Seldens, Andre Kostelanetz, has agreed to conduct the whole festival for us.

MURROW: Wonderful.

MRS. SARDI: Shall we go?

MURROW: Let's go.

MRS. SARDI: [Family playing] Carry on.

SARDI: I squeaked.

MRS. SARDI: We knew you would, daddy.

MURROW: David is a wonderful audience sitting there.

MRS. SARDI: Wasn't he good?

MURROW: That certainly ought to meet with the approval of Kostelanetz.

MRS. SARDI: Oh I hope so.

MURROW: Vincent, what inspired you to play the clarinet?

SARDI: Well, as you have heard, we have all these musical instruments in the house. Adele, incidentally, we just got a new organ for her, a pump organ, which we have downstairs in the basement, in the back room. And Adele thought that I should join into the family spirit of the thing and learn an instrument. And if you'd like to hear the organ we have it downstairs.

Seldens, Andre Kostelanetz, has agreed to conduct the whole festival for us.

MURROW: Wonderful.

MRS. SARDI: Shall we go?

MURROW: Let's go.

MRS. SARDI: [Family playing] Carry on.

SARDI: I squeaked.

MRS. SARDI: We knew you would, daddy.

MURROW: David is a wonderful audience sitting there.

MRS. SARDI: Wasn't he good?

MURROW: That certainly ought to meet with the approval of Kostelanetz.

MRS. SARDI: Oh I hope so.

MURROW: Vincent, what inspired you to play the clarinet?

SARDI: Well, as you have heard, we have all these musical instruments in the house. Adele, incidentally, we just got a new organ for her, a pump organ, which we have downstairs in the basement, in the back room. And Adele thought that I should join into the family spirit of the thing and learn an instrument. And if you'd like to hear the organ we have it downstairs.

MRS. SARDI: Yes, may we show it to you?

MURROW: Good.

SARDI: Actually---

MRS. SARDI: See you later, okay?

SARDI: Good night, children.

TABITHA SARDI: Good night.

MURROW: Good night.

SARDI: Actually I was---played the violin. I practiced it for ten years and I hate to admit it but never got out of first position. I gave up all sorts of musical instruments and then two years ago Adele greeted me for Christmas with this clarinet. By the way, I have an office in here and in this office we do a lot of public relations work for the Marine Corps Reserve unit I belong to, and some charity things and the restaurant---Oh, Adele's got the organ pumped up. Let's go in and listen to it.

MURROW: Good.

[Mrs. Sardi plays organ.]

MURROW: Thank you, Adele, Thank you.

SARDI: You don't know how she practiced for that. She's been rehearsing for days.

MURROW: That's very good. Vincent, you're a very fortunate man. After the frantic pace of the restaurant

MRS. SARDI: Yes, may we show it to you?

MURROW: Good.

SARDI: Actually---

MRS. SARDI: See you later, okay?

SARDI: Good night, children.

TABITHA SARDI: Good night.

MURROW: Good night.

SARDI: Actually I was---played the violin. I practiced it for ten years and I hate to admit it but never got out of first position. I gave up all sorts of musical instruments and then two years ago Adele greeted me for Christmas with this clarinet. By the way, I have an office in here and in this office we do a lot of public relations work for the Marine Corps Reserve unit I belong to, and some charity things and the restaurant---Oh, Adele's got the organ pumped up. Let's go in and listen to it.

MURROW: Good.

[Mrs. Sardi plays organ.]

MURROW: Thank you, Adele, Thank you.

SARDI: You don't know how she practiced for that. She's been rehearsing for days.

MURROW: That's very good. Vincent, you're a very fortunate man. After the frantic pace of the restaurant business you can come home to two floors of relaxation to music.

SARDI: Well, you're right, Ed. But I also have another way of relaxing: sports car racing. Amateur sports car racing has been my hobby for quite a while now and I have some pictures here.

This is a picture of a race up at Thompson, Connecticut, which was taken last year. This is just before the race. I was driving an Austin Heli in this event and had a mechanic and Adele there to cheer me on. And this is a picture taken just before the flag dropped. But the most surprising thing is that I actually won that race, and here's a picture of Adele presenting me with a pair of cuff links which have a checkered flag on. And she had bought these cuff links a year and a half before and it took her that long to get a chance to present it to me. She was my pit crew chief.

MURROW: Adele---

MRS. SARDI: Yes?

MURROW: Just what does a pit crew chief do?

MRS. SARDI: Well, generally speaking, Ed, they sort of let the driver know just where he is in the race and what he's doing. And we usually have two people in the pits and one of us times and the other brings out blackboards---a business you can come home to two floors of relaxation to music.

SARDI: Well, you're right, Ed. But I also have another way of relaxing: sports car racing. Amateur sports car racing has been my hobby for quite a while now and I have some pictures here.

This is a picture of a race up at Thompson, Connecticut, which was taken last year. This is just before the race. I was driving an Austin Healy in this event and had a mechanic and Adele there to cheer me on. And this is a picture taken just before the flag dropped. But the most surprising thing is that I actually won that race, and here's a picture of Adele presenting me with a pair of cuff links which have a checkered flag on. And she had bought these cuff links a year and a half before and it took her that long to get a chance to present it to me. She was my pit crew chief.

MURROW: Adele---

MRS. SARDI: Yes?

MURROW: Just what does a pit crew chief do?

MRS. SARDI: Well, generally speaking, Ed, they sort of let the driver know just where he is in the race and what he's doing. And we usually have two people in the pits and one of us times and the other brings out blackboards---a blackboard with their position, how many seconds they must have, before they overtake the next person. But just generally encourage them, I think.

MURROW: Vincent, agreed that racing relaxes you, but you must find the traditional meeting at Sardi's after the opening night of a Broadway show a bit of excitement, don't you?

SARDI: Oh well, Ed, the excitement is something like that. It doesn't compare to the automobile race either. The excitement of the theater is beyond anything like that. And on an opening night you get the cast of the play coming in, the backers, the producer: they're all excited, waiting for something to happen, waiting for the reviews. The New York Times and the Herald Tribune send us their first copies. As soon as they get off the press with the reviews they send them over by messenger. We distribute them out to all the customers and it's very exciting. There's nothing like it.

MURROW: Well, I suppose rave reviews must sometimes lead to rather roaring parties.

SARDI: Well I must admit that when the reviews are good the---You know, the champagne flows and we're all happy. I am and the producers. Of course occasionally, very often when the reviews are not good, it turns out to be rather blackboard with their position, how many seconds they must have, before they overtake the next person. But just generally encourage them, I think.

MURROW: Vincent, agreed that racing relaxes you, but you must find the traditional meeting at Sardi's after the opening night of a Broadway show a bit of excitement, don't you?

SARDI: Oh well, Ed, the excitement is something like that. It doesn't compare to the automobile race either. The excitement of the theater is beyond anything like that. And on an opening night you get the cast of the play coming in, the backers, the producer: they're all excited, waiting for something to happen, waiting for the reviews. The New York Times and the Herald Tribune send us their first copies. As soon as they get off the press with the reviews they send them over by messenger. We distribute them out to all the customers and it's very exciting. There's nothing like it.

MURROW: Well, I suppose rave reviews must sometimes lead to rather roaring parties.

SARDI: Well I must admit that when the reviews are good the---You know, the champagne flows and we're all happy. I am and the producers. Of course occasionally, very often when the reviews are not good, it turns out to be rather bad. As a matter of fact, a lot of the producers are afraid of these after-theater parties turning into a wake. And one producer, I remember, arranged to have the room held for him until the end of the show with all the waiters and the food all set up and everything like that, and then if the show was going to be a hit we would have the party; if not, it was going to be called off. I couldn't stand to wait and I went over at the end of the first act. It was just before the end of the first act, and I caught just two minutes of the show and that was enough. I went back, sent off the waiters, closed down the room, because I knew there wouldn't be a party that night.

MURROW: Adele.

MRS. SARDI: Yes?

MURROW: With all your friends in the theater, are you frequently advised to invest in shows that just can't miss?

MRS. SARDI: Well, as far as I know we just don't invest because, Ed, we have so many people, you know, who are producers I don't think we'd know where to start or to end.

SARDI: Well Actually, Ed, once I joined in with a group of fellows at the bar. Bernie Hart formed a club and bad. As a matter of fact, a lot of the producers are afraid of these after-theater parties turning into a wake. And one producer, I remember, arranged to have the room held for him until the end of the show with all the waiters and the food all set up and everything like that, and then if the show was going to be a hit we would have the party; if not, it was going to be called off. I couldn't stand to wait and I went over at the end of the first act. It was just before the end of the first act, and I caught just two minutes of the show and that was enough. I went back, sent off the waiters, closed down the room, because I knew there wouldn't be a party that night.

MURROW: Adele.

MRS. SARDI: Yes?

MURROW: With all your friends in the theater, are you frequently advised to invest in shows that just can't miss?

MRS. SARDI: Well, as far as I know we just don't invest because, Ed, we have so many people, you know, who are producers I don't think we'd know where to start or to end.

SARDI: Well Actually, Ed, once I joined in with a group of fellows at the bar. Bernie Hart formed a club and we put in $25 per person to back a show, and I think I got $5 back. That's the only time I did it.

MURROW: Well, I gather that producer didn't get your best table thereafter, did he?

SARDI: Well, actually you know successful people are not worried about where they sit. And people like Rodgers and Hammerstein and Alfred Drake and all the stars: they don't worry where they sit as long as they're comfortable. We---The sitting arrangement and sitting problems is more for people who want to look and gaze, for tourist-minded people.

I must admit that when a man's out of work, for example, we're a little more careful. We show him off when we can.

MURROW: You give them the best table so he can be seen by producers and that sort of thing. Is that right?

SARDI: That's right.

MURROW: Well, Vincent, by my watch you have just about time enough to grab a cab down to Sardi's and start the big part of your working day with the after-theater crowd. It was very good visiting with you.

SARDI: Well, thank you very much.

MRS. SARDI: Thank you.

we put in $25 per person to back a show, and I think I got $5 back. That's the only time I did it.

MURROW: Well, I gather that producer didn't get your best table thereafter, did he?

SARDI: Well, actually you know successful people are not worried about where they sit. And people like Rodgers and Hammerstein and Alfred Drake and all the stars: they don't worry where they sit as long as they're comfortable. We---The sitting arrangement and sitting problems is more for people who want to look and gaze, for tourist-minded people.

I must admit that when a man's out of work, for example, we're a little more careful. We show him off when we can.

MURROW: You give them the best table so he can be seen by producers and that sort of thing. Is that right?

SARDI: That's right.

MURROW: Well, Vincent, by my watch you have just about time enough to grab a cab down to Sardi's and start the big part of your working day with the after-theater crowd. It was very good visiting with you.

SARDI: Well, thank you very much.

MRS. SARDI: Thank you.

MURROW: Good night, Adele.

MRS. SARDI: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: And will you say good night to the children, please.

MRS. SARDI: We will.

SARDI: Yes.

MURROW: Good night.

MRS. SARDI: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to Chicago for a visit with the colorful new president of the White Sox baseball team, Bill Veeck, Jr., and his family. We'll also be calling on one of the country's most distinguished civic leaders, Mrs. Albert B. Lasker, here in New York.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

[Credits]

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A Aaron, Jesse Zousmer, and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now, from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and---

MURROW: Good night, Adele.

MRS. SARDI: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: And will you say good night to the children, please.

MRS. SARDI: We will.

SARDI: Yes.

MURROW: Good night.

MRS. SARDI: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to Chicago for a visit with the colorful new president of the White Sox baseball team, Bill Veeck, Jr., and his family. We'll also be calling on one of the country's most distinguished civic leaders, Mrs. Albert B. Lasker, here in New York.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

[Credits]

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A Aaron, Jesse Zousmer, and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now, from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and---

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Mr. and Mrs. Bill Veeck, Jr.,

and Mrs. Albert D. Lasker

May 22, 1959 - 10:30 PM EDT

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be going to Chicago for a visit with the president of the White Sox baseball team, Bill Veeck, Jr., and his wife. We will also be calling on one of the country's most distinguished civic leaders, Mrs. Albert D. Lasker, here in New York.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Mr. and Mrs. Bill Veeck, Jr.,

and Mrs. Albert D. Lasker

May 22, 1959 - 10:30 PM EDT

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be going to Chicago for a visit with the president of the White Sox baseball team, Bill Veeck, Jr., and his wife. We will also be calling on one of the country's most distinguished civic leaders, Mrs. Albert D. Lasker, here in New York.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: In baseball, Bill Veeck has become synonymous with excitement, action, color and nonconformity -- ranging all the way from midgets in the lineup to post-game fireworks. Bill, who was born 45 years ago in Chicago, learned the tricks of the trade from his father, a former baseball writer who later became president of the Chicago Cubs and started his son on a baseball career at about the age of 11 helping out in the ticket office. Years later, after serving with the Marines in World War II, Bill Veeck became a major league owner and operator, first with the Cleveland Indians, later the St. Louis Browns. Now, after an absence of some six years from the baseball scene, he heads a syndicate that controls the Chicago White Sox, much to the delight of the fans, and, of course, also of the fireworks manufacturers.

Bill Veeck, his wife, Mary Frances, and their four young children live in an apartment in this building on the lake shore of South Side Chicago, just about 15 minutes from the ball park.

Good evening, Mary Frances.

MRS. VEECK: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Good evening, Bill.

(Commercial)

MURROW: In baseball, Bill Veeck has become synonymous with excitement, action, color and nonconformity -- ranging all the way from midgets in the lineup to post-game fireworks. Bill, who was born 45 years ago in Chicago, learned the tricks of the trade from his father, a former baseball writer who later became president of the Chicago Cubs and started his son on a baseball career at about the age of 11 helping out in the ticket office. Years later, after serving with the Marines in World War II, Bill Veeck became a major league owner and operator, first with the Cleveland Indians, later the St. Louis Browns. Now, after an absence of some six years from the baseball scene, he heads a syndicate that controls the Chicago White Sox, much to the delight of the fans, and, of course, also of the fireworks manufacturers.

Bill Veeck, his wife, Mary Frances, and their four young children live in an apartment in this building on the lake shore of South Side Chicago, just about 15 minutes from the ball park.

Good evening, Mary Frances.

MRS. VEECK: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Good evening, Bill.

VEECK: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: With your club a half game out of first place you must be pretty happy people tonight.

VEECK: Well, as a matter of fact, one is very happy, except since the ballgame is on now, I'm suffering.

MRS. VEECK: Yes, it's 1-0 in favor of us, but this means nothing to Bill, you see. You just wait.

MURROW: Well, the Yankees are certainly having their troubles at the moment. How do you figure it, Bill?

VEECK: Isn't that a pity! Ed, as a matter of fact, you know I'm not a Yankee lover, and whatever happens to them, I hope it's nothing trivial. But I do feel that their ball club is a little better than that, and they won't be down there too long, even though they're fortunately getting their brains knocked out again tonight by Baltimore.

MURROW: Well, they lost to Baltimore 5 to 0 tonight.

VEECK: Oh, that's wonderful! You know, things are getting so that probably the Yankees will take desperate steps. They may even make a deal with Kansas City.

MURROW: Mary Frances, do you ever lend a hand in running the White Sox?

MRS. VEECK: Definitely not, Ed. I think I'm

VEECK: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: With your club a half game out of first place you must be pretty happy people tonight.

VEECK: Well, as a matter of fact, one is very happy, except since the ballgame is on now, I'm suffering.

MRS. VEECK: Yes, it's 1-0 in favor of us, but this means nothing to Bill, you see. You just wait.

MURROW: Well, the Yankees are certainly having their troubles at the moment. How do you figure it, Bill?

VEECK: Isn't that a pity! Ed, as a matter of fact, you know I'm not a Yankee lover, and whatever happens to them, I hope it's nothing trivial. But I do feel that their ball club is a little better than that, and they won't be down there too long, even though they're fortunately getting their brains knocked out again tonight by Baltimore.

MURROW: Well, they lost to Baltimore 5 to 0 tonight.

VEECK: Oh, that's wonderful! You know, things are getting so that probably the Yankees will take desperate steps. They may even make a deal with Kansas City.

MURROW: Mary Frances, do you ever lend a hand in running the White Sox?

MRS. VEECK: Definitely not, Ed. I think I'm

like all wives, you know, if you're interested in your husband's work, and I certainly am. This man handles me very well. You see, he's very flattering to me and always let's on that he's asking my advice about promotional things or discussing it with me. He is really using me as a sounding board, but "we also serve." I'm not proud.

We do do a television show. We started a couple of weeks ago, and it is really Bill's show, which is the way it should be. I am there just a little bit to break it up, you know, because I think that women on sports shows -- you almost have no middle course; you either sound like an idiot, or you sound like the little expert, and I don't want to sound like either, so I don't -- really, this is the most I have ever talked on television.

MURROW: Well, tell me -- talk a little more, it's wonderful -- is Bill's mode of living really as casual as it is reported to be?

MRS. VEECK: This man -- I think so. There are a few things that he cares terribly about, and gets on a soap-box -- outside of baseball -- and he's very tense and intense about. He's very casual. We have our children on a pretty good routine. I have no theories one way or the other about it. It is more convenient for us, and they seem to have like all wives, you know, if you're interested in your husband's work, and I certainly am. This man handles me very well. You see, he's very flattering to me and always let's on that he's asking my advice about promotional things or discussing it with me. He is really using me as a sounding board, but "we also serve." I'm not proud.

We do do a television show. We started a couple of weeks ago, and it is really Bill's show, which is the way it should be. I am there just a little bit to break it up, you know, because I think that women on sports shows -- you almost have no middle course; you either sound like an idiot, or you sound like the little expert, and I don't want to sound like either, so I don't -- really, this is the most I have ever talked on television.

MURROW: Well, tell me -- talk a little more, it's wonderful -- is Bill's mode of living really as casual as it is reported to be?

MRS. VERCK: This man -- I think so. There are a few things that he cares terribly about, and gets on a soap-box -- outside of baseball -- and he's very tense and intense about. He's very casual. We have our children on a pretty good routine. I have no theories one way or the other about it. It is more convenient for us, and they seem to have thrived on it. But Bill wants to eat when he's hungry, and he thinks that his friends that are with him should eat when they're hungry, and that's the reason we live the way we do. It's a little crazy, but he likes it that way. I do -- I find -- You see, I believe in the basic beautiful order of the universe.

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. VEECK: I'm not on a routine. I'm not routine-happy myself, but I do feel that there are some things that have to be done. I have to keep from Bill, for instance, the fact that on Mondays we usually do send the laundry out, no matter where we are.

MURROW: Well, keeping up with Bill Veeck and taking care of your small children is probably pretty exhausting, but good for the waistline, huh?

MRS. VEECK: I could think of other things that would be more interesting than good for the waistline, but you're right. I should make apology, I think, to all of my friends whose children I sent toys to before I was a wife and mother. You know, I was always great for sending them the things with the little pieces. Oh, I do apologize. This, for instance. I picked it up once today. And this is my board. I thought a wonderful opening to greet you would be thrived on it. But Bill wants to eat when he's hungry, and he thinks that his friendsthat are with him should eat when they're hungry, and that's the reason we live the way we do. It's a little crazy, but he likes it that way. I do -- I find -- You see, I believe in the basic beautiful order of the universe.

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. VEECK: I'm not on a routine. I'm not routine-happy myself, but I do feel that there are some things that have to be done. I have to keep from Bill, for instance, the fact that on Mondays we usually do send the laundry out, no matter where we are.

MURROW: Well, keeping up with Bill Veeck and taking care of your small children is probably pretty exhausting, but good for the waistline, huh?

MRS. VEECK: I could think of other things that would be more interesting than good for the waistline, but you're right. I should make apology, I think, to all of my friends whose children I sent toys to before I was a wife and mother. You know, I was always great for sending them the things with the little pieces. Oh, I do apologize. This, for instance. I picked it up once today. And this is my board. I thought a wonderful opening to greet you would be to have me on there resting.

MURROW: Why not?

MRS. VEECK: Well, I bought it five years ago and I have only been on it once for 15 minutes, but I'm keeping it there. I keep hoping.

MURROW: Bill?

VEECK: Yes, Ed.

MURROW: You always seem to manage to look good and trim. How do you keep in shape?

VEECK: Well, Ed, why don't you wander in here with me and I'll try to give you an example. Actually, you know, since we've had the White Sox, we haven't had a great deal of opportunity to get any, really, physical exercise. Most of my exercise has been chasing the long-ball hits, and I can't say that I have been really successful. But during the summer I do play some tennis -- not as well as I would like, and certainly not well enough to beat Hank Greenberg yet. As a matter of fact, I built a tennis court on a ranch one time out in Arizona. At the time it seemed I had everything going for me, and I suddenly became a gentleman and gave him his choice of courts, and he walloped me. And during the winter I play a little paddle ball. I used to play quite a bit of handball, but I must admit that I'm getting a little ancient to have me on there resting.

MURROW: Why not?

MRS. VERECK: Well, I bought it five years ago and I have only been on it once for 15 minutes, but I'm keeping it there. I keep hoping.

MURROW: Bill?

VERECK: Yes, Ed.

MURROW: You always seem to manage to look good and trim. How do you keep in shape?

VERECK: Well, Ed, why don't you wander in here with me and I'll try to give you an example. Actually, you know, since we've had the White Sox, we haven't had a great deal of opportunity to get any really physical exercise. Most of my exercise has been chasing the long-ball hits, and I can't say that I have been really successful. But during the summer I do play some tennis -- not as well as I would like, and certainly not well enough to beat Hank Greenberg yet. As a matter of fact, I built a tennis court on a ranch one time out in Arizona. At the time it seemed I had everything going for me, and I suddenly became a gentleman and gave him his choice of courts, and he walloped me. And during the winter I play a little paddle ball. I used to play quite a bit of handball, but I must admit that I'm getting a little ancient maybe. My hands are getting soft and so I find this paddle ball game much more fun for me.

MURROW: Well, it happens to all of us, I think. Bill, since we're in your bedroom, I want to ask you something. How many neckties do you own?

VEECK: Of course, none, except the day after Christmas. Everybody thinks that it is a very unique gag to send you the most atrocious tie that they can. As a matter of fact, you can see my whole wardrobe in here. I have a couple of other suits, and, oh, I don't know, maybe 50-60 white shirts, and that's the wardrobe.

MURROW: Well, that open-necked sport shirt has become sort of a trademark for you. I suppose you have often been asked why you never wear a tie.

VEECK: Well, it started out, really, because I had some problems on my neck -- some ingrownhairs -- and the barber told me that if I didn't wear a tie and collar, it would get well quicker, and I found this most enjoyable, and then I guess it became a kind of crusade. It seems kind of strange that wearing a tie would make one dressed. You can roll in the gutter, but you put a tie on and you're perfectly acceptable. On the other hand, if you're clean and reasonably neat, this doesn't mean anything if you don't have a tie maybe. My hands are getting soft and so I find this paddle ball game much more fun for me.

MURROW: Well, it happens to all of us, I think. Bill, since we're in your bedroom, I want to ask you something. How many neckties do you own?

VERCK: Of course, none, except the day after Christmas. Everybody thinks that it is a very unique gag to send you the most atrocious tie that they can. As a matter of fact, you can see my whole wardrobe in here. I have a couple of other suits, and, oh, I don't know, maybe 50-60 white shirts, and that's the wardrobe.

MURROW: Well, that open-necked sport shirt has become sort of a trademark for you. I suppose you have often been asked why you never wear a tie.

VERCK: Well, it started out, really, because I had some problems on my neck -- some ingrownhairs -- and the barber told me that if I didn't wear a tie and collar, it would get well quicker, and I found this most enjoyable, and then I guess it became a kind of crusade. It seems kind of strange that wearing a tie would make one dressed. You can roll in the gutter, but you put a tie on and you're perfectly acceptable. On the other hand, if you're clean and reasonably neat, this doesn't mean anything if you don't have a tie on, and so as I say, it became a crusade, and I guess for the last, oh, 25 years, with the exception of a couple of times in the service when I didn't want to cause an international incident, I've never worn a tie.

MURROW: Well, I suppose, Bill, in your job you have to do a certain amount of speech making. Do you find this much of a chore?

VEECK: Oh, gee, quite the contrary. I find it most enjoyable. I make probably, oh, 300-350 speeches a year, and I enjoy every one of them. It gives you a chance to get out and meet the people, and you'd be amazed, Ed, at how much information you pick up about running the ball club. You know, the average fellow in a ball park is a great deal brighter than anyone gives him credit for being. He's not only an expert on your playing personnel, but he's an expert on what he wants in the ball park.

MURROW: Bill, after these speeches, what kind of questions do the women ask you?

VEECK: Well, as a matter of fact, they usually ask the most difficult ones, and one of the things, of course, is that they're much more tenacious. They don't let you off with the casual answer, and they, of course, are much more interested in personalities and the people involved. A good on, and so as I say, it became a crusade, and I guess for the last, oh, 25 years, with the exception of a couple of times in the service when I didn't want to cause an international incident, I've never worn a tie.

MURROW: Well, I suppose, Bill, in your job you have to do a certain amount of speech making. Do you find this much of a chore?

VEECK: Oh, gee, quite the contrary. I find it most enjoyable. I make probably, oh, 300-350 speeches a year, and I enjoy every one of them. It gives you a chance to get out and meet the people, and you'd be amazed, Ed, at how much information you pick up about running the ball club. You know, the average fellow in a ball park is a great deal brighter than anyone gives him credit for being. He's not only an expert on your playing personnel, but he's an expert on what he wants in the ball park.

MURROW: Bill, after these speeches, what kind of questions do the women ask you?

VEECK: Well, as a matter of fact, they usually ask the most difficult ones, and one of the things, of course, is that they're much more tenacious. They don't let you off with the casual answer, and they, of course, are much more interested in personalities and the people involved. A good female fan is probably better than the average fan by considerable, and I find that they know a great deal more about baseball than anyone will give them credit for.

MURROW: Well, Mary Frances ought to be of considerable help in preparing some of those speeches, isn't she?

VEECK: Well, in reality, Ed, there isn't really any way you can prepare a speech because, you see, you meet so many different groups. One day you'll have fathers and sons, mothers and daughters; the next time you speak to the concessionaire's association, and then the next day to some college group, and so there isn't any way that I know that you can prepare a speech. I know -- I kind of figure that I've been knockin' around this business in every department, oh gee, for 30 years, and if I'm not prepared to answer questions and to deliver an oration, such as it is, there's nothin' I can do about it.

MURROW: Mary Frances, with a traveling man for a husband, how many homes have you had to establish since becoming Mrs. Bill Veeck?

MRS. VEECK: I think we figured up the other day that since our arrival here at the Sherry in Chicago, this is the eighth home we've had. That's pretty good. We've only female fan is probably better than the average fan by considerable, and I find that they know a great deal more about baseball than anyone will give them credit for.

MURROW: Well, Mary Frances ought to be of considerable help in preparing some of those speeches, isn't she?

VEECK: Well, in reality, Ed, there isn't really any way you can prepare a speech because, you see, you meet so many different groups. One day you'll have fathers and sons, mothers and daughters; the next time you speak to the concessionaire's association, and then the next day to some college group, and so there isn't any way that I know that you can prepare a speech. I know -- I kind of figure that I've been knockin' around this business in every department, oh gee, for 30 years, and if I'm not prepared to answer questions and to deliver an oration, such as it is, there's nothin' I can do about it.

MURROW: Mary Frances, with a traveling man for a husband, how many homes have you had to establish since becoming Mrs. Bill Veeck?

MRS. VEECK: I think we figured up the other day that since our arrival here at the Sherry in Chicago, this is the eighth home we've had. That's pretty good.

We've only been married nine years. We've had our children in -- each one in a different state. That's what makes each move a little bit different, you see -- it's more difficult. As a matter of fact, we left the ranch two years ago to go to the World Series. We haven't been back.

MURROW: Bill---

VEECK: Yes, Ed.

MURROW: ---what's behind your theory of showmanship in baseball?

VEECK: Well, I happen to have a very ridiculous theory, according to very many ball club operators, that it should be fun. You know, I don't think baseball is such a grim, serious thing. Sure, I don't want to interfere with the game, but I do want everyone who comes out to the ball park to have fun. And, look, let's face it -- often the ballgame is not the most exciting thing that ever has happened. That's why we use fireworks. Well, in St. Louis they were often the only interesting thing that happened, and they woke everybody up and got 'em home at a nice hour.

MURROW: Well, the fans certainly seem to get a kick out of your stunts, even if some baseball people seem to frown on them.

VEECK: Well, we hope they do, and they seem to.

We've only been married nine years. We've had our children in -- each one in a different state. That's what makes each move a little bit different, you see -- it's more difficult. As a matter of fact, we left the ranch two years ago to go to the World Series. We haven't been back.

MURROW: Bill---

VEECK: Yes, Ed.

MURROW: ---what's behind your theory of showmanship in baseball?

VEECK: Well, I happen to have a very ridiculous theory, according to very many ball club operators, that it should be fun. You know, I don't think baseball is such a grim, serious thing. Sure, I don't want to interfere with the game, but I do want everyone who comes out to the ball park to have fun. And, look, let's face it -- often the ball-game is not the most exciting thing that ever has happened. That's why we use fireworks. Well, in St. Louis they were often the only interesting thing that happened, and they woke everybody up and got 'em home at a nice hour.

MURROW: Well, the fans certainly seem to get a kick out of your stunts, even if some baseball people seem to frown on them.

VEECK: Well, we hope they do, and they seem to.

I know this: that there is no stunt like the winning ball club.

MURROW: You know, Bill, there don't seem to be as many colorful personalities in baseball as there used to be, or is that just my imagination?

VEECK: Oh, no, Ed, that's a very sage observation. That's one of the greatest difficulties that baseball faces. It used to be that every ball club had an exciting player or two, sometimes even more, and today after you go to see Williams, and Casey Stengel, and maybe Yogi Berra, and Nellie Fox, you've had it in the American League. We don't have those same exciting fellows.

MURROW: Well, then, Bill, it's safe to say that you're not an advocate of conformity, be it baseball or anything else. Right?

VEECK: No, I'm not, and you know, I think this is one of the things that is hurting us as a nation. It used to be that -- in every business -- let's take our courts of law. They had their Bill Fallons and their Clarence Darrows, and their Sam Leibowitzes, and so on. They're all gone today. We try to make everybody fit into a mold. If they're too long, why you lop them off, and if they're too short, stretch 'em, but make them fit.

MURROW: Well, how do you account for this strong

I know this: that there is no stunt like the winning ball club.

MURROW: You know, Bill, there don't seem to be as many colorful personalities in baseball as there used to be, or is that just my imagination?

VEECK: Oh, no, Ed, that's a very sage observation. That's one of the greatest difficulties that baseball faces. It used to be that every ball club had an exciting player or two, sometimes even more, and today after you go to see Williams, and Casey Stengel, and maybe Yogi Berra, and Nellie Fox, you've had it in the American League. We don't have those same exciting fellows.

MURROW: Well, then, Bill, it's safe to say that you're not an advocate of conformity, be it baseball or anything else. Right?

VEECK: No, I'm not, and you know, I think this is one of the things that is hurting us as a nation. It used to be that -- in every business -- let's take our courts of law. They had their Bill Fallons and their Clarence Darrows, and their Sam Leibowitzes, and so on. They're all gone today. We try to make everybody fit into a mold. If they're too long, why you lop them off, and if they're too short, stretch 'em, but make them fit.

MURROW: Well, how do you account for this strong trend toward conformity in this country?

VEECK: Ed, I think probably the most important thing is the exact identical education that is given to everyone throughout the country, and, of course, then you add to that military service in which conformation is almost a prerequisite, and you get then involved, after they get out, they're more interested, instead of doing extremely well in their own particular way, they're very interested in, oh, pension plans, and that sort of thing, and these are fine except when they interfere with the development of an individual.

MRS. VEECK: Yes, a pat rich nation.

VEECK: Right.

MURROW: Mary Frances, how about you? Has Bill turned you into a nonconformist, too?

MRS. VEECK: I never thought of myself as one way or the other. I think he probably married me because I came closer to being a nonconformist.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Mary Frances. Thank you, Bill Veeck, and good luck in the ball game tonight.

VEECK: Thanks, Ed, that's what we need most of.

MRS. VEECK: Thank you very much.

MURROW: Thank you very much. Good night.

trend toward conformity in this country?

VERCK: Ed, I think probably the most important thing is the exact identical education that is given to everyone throughout the country, and, of course, then you add to that military service in which conformation is almost a prerequisite, and you get them involved, after they get out, they're more interested, instead of doing extremely well in their own particular way, they're very interested in, oh, pension plans, and that sort of thing, and these are fine except when they interfere with the development of an individual.

MRS. VERCK: Yes, a pat rich nation.

VERCK: Right.

MURROW: Mary Frances, how about you? Has Bill turned you into a nonconformist, too?

MRS. VERCK: I never thought of myself as one way or the other. I think he probably married me because I came closer to being a nonconformist.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Mary Frances. Thank you, Bill Veeck, and good luck in the ball game tonight.

VERCK: Thanks, Ed, that's what we need most of.

MRS. VERCK: Thank you very much.

MURROW: Thank you very much. Good night.

VEECK: Good night.

MRS. VEECK: Good night.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Mrs. Albert D. Lasker, but first a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Mrs. Albert D. Lasker is a woman of many and varied interests: flowers and philanthropy, cancer and research, and community welfare, art and the ailments of the heart. Mrs. Lasker has long been identified with her work for medical research through the Lasker Foundation, which she founded with her late husband, the advertising pioneer, Albert Lasker, and while New Yorkers are well acquainted with her efforts on behalf of the more beautiful city through huge plantings of shrubs and trees in our midst, there are many in Washington who know her best for her constant activity on behalf of an expanded health program. And there are still others who know her as the owner of one of the world's finest private art collections.

Mrs. Lasker, who has a country home in Dutchess County, New York, lives in this six-floor town house -- that dark building in the center. It's over on Manhattan's East Side overlooking the East River.

VERCK: Good night.

MRS. VERCK: Good night.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Mrs. Albert D. Lasker, but first a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Mrs. Albert D. Lasker is a woman of many and varied interests: flowers and philanthropy, cancer research, and community welfare, art and the ailments of the heart. Mrs. Lasker has long been identified with her work for medical research through the Lasker Foundation, which she founded with her late husband, the advertising pioneer, Albert Lasker, and while New Yorkers are well acquainted with her efforts on behalf of the more beautiful city through huge plantings of shrubs and trees in our midst, there are many in Washington who know her best for her constant activity on behalf of an expanded health program. And there are still others who know her as the owner of one of the world's finest private art collections.

Mrs. Lasker, who has a country home in Dutchess County, New York, lives in this six-floor town house -- that dark building in the center. It's over on Manhattan's East Side overlooking the East River.

Good evening, Mrs. Lasker.

LASKER: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How are you?

LASKER: I'm fine.

MURROW: I know your busy schedule and I'm delighted that we're able to call on you on a Friday night.

LASKER: Well, I'm delighted to have you. Paul Hoffman asked me to dine with Dag Hammarskjold and the Henry Cabot Lodges tonight, but I decided that I would stay home and talk with you instead.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Mary. Mary, I've heard you described as one of the busiest unemployed women in America. What with a dozen or so public service organizations you devote so much time to, what's your secret?

LASKER: No secret. I don't know how to stop.

MURROW: Well, are you still searching for that secret?

LASKER: Yes. I need advice.

MURROW: Tell me, whatever the cause of your day's occupation, I know it must be pleasant to return to your beautiful home in the evening, isn't it?

LASKER: Well, it is, and as you know, you know I love the pictures and I love flowers.

Good evening, Mrs. Lasker.

LASKER: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: How are you?

LASKER: I'm fine.

MURROW: I know your busy schedule and I'm delighted that we're able to call on you on a Friday night.

LASKER: Well, I'm delighted to have you. Paul Hoffman asked me to dine with Dag Hammarskjold and the Henry Cabotlodges tonight, but I decided that I would stay home and talk with you instead.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Mary. Mary, I've heard you described as one of the busiest unemployed women in America. What with a dozen or so public service organizations you devote so much time to, what's your secret?

LASKER: No secret. I don't know how to stop.

MURROW: Well, are you still searching for that secret?

LASKER: Yes. I need advice.

MURROW: Tell me, whatever the cause of your day's occupation, I know it must be pleasant to return to your beautiful home in the evening, isn't it?

LASKER: Well, it is, and as you know, you know I love the pictures and I love flowers.

MURROW: And no music?

LASKER: And -- oh, yes, music. I listen to music. Sometimes to opera scores, and sometimes to Modivanni or Bing Crosby.

MURROW: Mary Lasker, no visitor to your home has failed to be impressed by your paintings. Would you mind showing us something of your collection?

LASKER: I'd love to, Ed. This is one of the Matisse's that belongs to me. It was painted by him in the 20's, and I have some more in the dining room that I'd like to show you.

MURROW: Thank you.

LASKER: I think this is one of the most exciting still lifes that Matisse ever did. It's full of color and warmth, and it gives me great pleasure. It seems to me like -- oh, warm-like fire in a room. And here's another. An interior with almost everything in it, called Tobaque Royale. It was painted about the same time as the still life in the early 40's, and it represents his interest in design inspired by many Oriental ideas of design.

MURROW: But, Mary, you have a good deal more than Matisse on your walls, haven't you?

LASKER: Oh, yes.

MURROW: And no music?

LASKER: And -- oh, yes, music. I listen to music. Sometimes to opera scores, and sometimes to Modivanni or Bing Crosby.

MURROW: Mary Lasker, no visitor to your home has failed to be impressed by your paintings. Would you mind showing us something of your collection?

LASKER: I'd love to, Ed. This is one of the Matisse's that belongs to me. It was painted by him in the 20's, and I have some more in the dining room that I'd like to show you.

MURROW: Thank you.

LASKER: I think this is one of the most exciting still lifes that Matisse ever did. It's full of color and warmth, and it gives me great pleasure. It seems to me like -- oh, warm-like fire in a room. And here's another. An interior with almost everything in it, called Tobagne Royale. It was painted about the same time as the still life in the early 40's, and it represents his interest in design inspired by many Oriental ideas of design.

MURROW: But, Mary, you have a good deal more than Matisse on your walls, haven't you?

LASKER: Oh, yes.

MURROW: I remember.

LASKER: Yes, I want to show you some other pictures.

MURROW: Tell me, Mary, did you or Mr. Lasker start the collection?

LASKER: Well, it was really my husband who started it. I think I interested him in pictures first, though. I have some pictures here by Seyzon and Monet and Renoir, van Gogh, but I want to show you one of my favorite Utrillo's. It's Afriker---

MURROW: Oh, yes, I remember that one.

LASKER: ---in Paris. Don't you think it's one of the loveliest sights in Paris?

MURROW: It certainly is. It's a beautiful painting.

LASKER: And here's the "White Roses" by van Gogh, one of his last pictures painted, really, literally in about the last month of his life -- that tragic life. This painting looks happy, and he was really so sad.

MURROW: That van Gogh was one of Mr. Lasker's last acquisitions---

LASKER: Yes, it was. He bought it in 1951.

MURROW: Mary, by any chance did the van Gogh in-

MURROW: I remember.

LASKER: Yes, I want to show you some other pictures.

MURROW: Tell me, Mary, did you or Mr. Lasker start the collection?

LASKER: Well, it was really my husband who started it. I think I interested him in pictures first, though. I have some pictures here by Seyron and Monet and Renoir, van Gogh, but I want to show you one of my favorite Utrillo's. It's Artiker---

MURROW: Oh, yes, I remember that one.

LASKER: ---in Paris. Don't you think it's one of the loveliest sights in Paris?

MURROW: It certainly is. It's a beautiful painting.

LASKER: And here's the "White Roses" by van Gogh, one of his last pictures painted, really, literally in about the last month of his life -- that tragic life. This painting looks happy, and he was really so sad.

MURROW: That van Gogh was one of Mr. Lasker's last acquisitions---

LASKER: Yes, it was. He bought it in 1931.

MURROW: Mary, by any chance did the van Gogh inspire your interest in beautifying New York starting with your planting flowers on Park Avenue?

LASKER: Oh, I'm afraid that was started long ago really by my mother who loved flowers and parks, and who did a great deal in the town we come from in Wisconsin. I've always felt very sad about cities that were cold and steely, and full of glass and brick in the center; never pretty except on their outskirts. And so it makes me a great joy that the City of New York has planted through the Salute to Seasons Committee so many bulbs on Park Avenue like this---

MURROW: Oh, yes.

LASKER: ---and I'm hoping that this will spread to other cities throughout the country. It already has in some measure.

MURROW: Well, now, Mary, certainly you aren't planning to beautify all of the cities single-handedly, are you?

LASKER: Oh, no. I wish I could, but all I want to do is to spark some interest throughout the country to plant more in the cities, and their centers, more flowering trees, more flowers, more shrubs and also on highways. I find many of the state highways have very little or no planting, and why shouldn't we have flowering native trees and spire your interest in beautifying New York starting with your planting flowers on Park Avenue?

LASKER: Oh, I'm afraid that was started long ago really by my mother who loved flowers and parks, and who did a great deal in the town we come from in Wisconsin. I've always felt very sad about cities that were cold and steely, and full of glass and brick in the center; never pretty except on their outskirts. And so it makes me a great joy that the City of New York has planted through the Salute to Seasons Committee so many bulbs on Park Avenue like this---

MURROW: Oh, yes.

LASKER: ---and I'm hoping that this will spread to other cities throughout the country. It already has in some measure.

MURROW: Well, now, Mary, certainly you aren't planning to beautify all of the cities single-handedly, are you?

LASKER: Oh, no. I wish I could, but all I want to do is to spark some interest throughout the country to plant more in the cities, and their centers, more flowering trees, more flowers, more shrubs and also on highways. I find many of the state highways have very little or no planting, and why shouldn't we have flowering native trees and shrubs on our highways? You know, beauty pays, and Washington, D.C. attracts 500,000 visitors to their cherry trees blooming every year. I think that more people should take advantage of this way of getting visitors.

MURROW: Mary, was it this interest in nature -- this desire to be surrounded by things of beauty -- that led the Laskers to become art collectors?

LASKER: Well, I don't think it was really this; rather just because we were very visual-minded and we liked visual excitement, and originality in art. Here is a picture by Picasso, who was one of the greatest originators in the history of painting, actually. This was done when he was only 19 years old, just when he came to Paris from Barcelona. You see, she's wearing a mantilla---

MURROW: Yes.

LASKER: ---and he was just at the beginning of his career, and this is the beginning of the Blue Period. He's now 79 years old and still an originator, as you know---

MURROW: Yes.

LASKER: ---and one of the great, great originators of our times, and has influenced architecture and all forms of design.

MURROW: Mary, it rather strikes me that your re-

shrubs on our highways? You know, beauty pays, and Washington, D.C. attracts 500,000 visitors to their cherry trees blooming every year. I think that more people should take advantage of this way of getting visitors.

MURROW: Mary, was it this interest in nature -- this desire to be surrounded by things of beauty -- that led the Laskers to become art collectors?

LASKER: Well, I don't think it was really this; rather just because we were very visual-minded and we liked visual excitement, and originality in art. Here is a picture by Picasso, who was one of the greatest originators in the history of painting, actually. This was done when he was only 19 years old, just when he came to Paris from Barcelona. You see, she's wearing a mantilla---

MURROW: Yes.

LASKER: ---and he was just at the beginning of his career, and this is the beginning of the Blue Period. He's now 79 years old and still an originator, as you know---

MURROW: Yes.

LASKER: ---and one of the great, great originators of our times, and has influenced architecture and all forms of design.

MURROW: Mary, it rather strikes me that your respect for originators in art also extends to originators in the sciences -- right?

LASKER: Yes, it does, you're right. I'm very excited about great contributions in medicine especially, and I want to show you a symbol of what the Lasker Foundation gives to honor people who make great contributions in medicine. Here it is. It's a reproduction of the Victory of Samothrace, and we use it to mean victory over death and disease. We give it to outstanding medical researchers, and to people who report medical research and public health administration, outstanding newspaper, magazine writers, and to outstanding television programs that report medical research and public health administration.

MURROW: Mary, the painting above the mantle there?

LASKER: Oh, that's a Renoir -- an early Renoir -- painted in 1878, "The Scene on the Seine." I like it -- don't you?

MURROW: Very much, indeed. Very much. Mary, the Foundation does more than present awards to outstanding scientists, I know.

LASKER: Yes, it does. We give some grants in the field of medical research, but we never have enough money.

spect for originators in art also extends to originators in the sciences -- right?

LASKER: Yes, it does, you're right. I'm very excited about great contributions in medicine especially, and I want to show you a symbol of what the Lasker Foundation gives to honor people who make great contributions in medicine. Here it is. It's a reproduction of the Victory of Samothrace, and we use it to mean victory over death and disease. We give it to outstanding medical researchers, and to people who report medical research and public health administration, outstanding newspaper, magazine writers, and to outstanding television programs that report medical research and public health administration.

MURROW: Mary, the painting above the mantle there?

LASKER: Oh, that's a Renoir -- an early Renoir -- painted in 1878, "The Scene on the Seine." I like it -- don't you?

MURROW: Very much, indeed. Very much. Mary, the Foundation does more than present awards to outstanding scientists, I know.

LASKER: Yes, it does. We give some grants in the field of medical research, but we never have enough money.

We're always overcommitted, and that's one of the things I want to talk to you about. You know, the amount of money that's available for research is totally inadequate in the United States. But first let me tell you about some of the outstanding scientists that have won the awards, in the past. Ten of our winners -- Lasker award winners -- have later won the Nobel Prize, so you see how good our juries have been. One of them is Dr. Waxman, who discovered streptomycin, the first good drug for tuberculosis. Some others were Dr. Kendall and Hench, who discovered the usefulness of cortisone; Dr. Tyler, who made the yellow fever vaccines and changed the health in the tropical countries completely; and, of course, the great Dr. Salk, who discovered the polio vaccine.

Have you been vaccinated, Ed?

MURROW: No, I confess I haven't.

LASKER: Oh, my, you must be vaccinated.

MURROW: I will do that immediately, Mary. Immediately.

LASKER: Please.

MURROW: Mary, are you happy with what is being done in the whole area of financing medical research in this country?

LASKER: Oh, I'm not a bit happy about it. I want

We're always overcommitted, and that's one of the things I want to talk to you about. You know, the amount of money that's available for research is totally inadequate in the United States. But first let me tell you about some of the outstanding scientists that have won the awards, in the past. Ten of our winners -- Lasker award winners -- have later won the Nobel Prize, so you see how good our juries have been. One of them is Dr. Waxman, who discovered streptomycin, the first good drug for tuberculosis. Some others were Dr. Kendall and Hench, who discovered the usefulness of cortisone; Dr. Tyler, who made the yellow fever vaccines and changed the health in the tropical countries completely; and, of course, the great Dr. Salk, who discovered the polio vaccine.

Have you been vaccinated, Ed?

MURROW: No, I confess I haven't.

LASKER: Oh, my, you must be vaccinated.

MURROW: I will do that immediately, Mary. Immediately.

LASKER: Please.

MURROW: Mary, are you happy with what is being done in the whole area of financing medical research in this country?

LASKER: Oh, I'm not a bit happy about it. I want to talk to you about it. It's very inadequate, and most people don't realize it. In fact, you know, most people reject the thought that there's anything that's necessary to be done about finding new cures for major diseases because it's unpleasant to think about it, but, actually, we could do a great, great deal more.

MURROW: I've heard you say several times, Mary, that private funds can never do the job.

LASKER: Well, private funds can help, and they can sparkplug it, but, actually, you have to have substantial funds that come from the Treasury that represent everybody's money, and believe it or not, the amount of money that's being spent for medical research is -- well, it's just piddling. The Department of Defense spends 185 times more on defending us against dying from military attack than the Federal Government spends on research against the sure killers and cripplers of our people like cancer and heart disease, and arthritis and mental illnesses, and a variety of other things. And you won't believe this: less is spent on cancer research than we spend on chewing gum, and the Department of Agriculture alone in the United States spends more in plant and animal diseases than we spend on research in cancer and heart from all major sources. Isn't that terrible?

to talk to you about it. It's very inadequate, and most people don't realize it. In fact, you know, most people reject the thought that there's anything that's necessary to be done about finding new cures for major diseases because it's unpleasant to think about it, but, actually, we could do a great, great deal more.

MURROW: I've heard you say several times, Mary, that private funds can never do the job.

LASKER: Well, private funds can help, and they can sparkplug it, but, actually, you have to have substantial funds that come from the Treasury that represent everybody's money, and believe it or not, the amount of money that's being spent for medical research is -- well, it's just piddling. The Department of Defense spends 185 times more on defending us against dying from military attack than the Federal Government spends on research against the sure killers and crippler of our people like cancer and heart disease, and arthritis and mental illnesses, and a variety of other things. And you won't believe this: less is spent on cancer research than we spend on chewing gum, and the Department of Agriculture alone in the United States spends more in plant and animal diseases than we spend on research in cancer and heart from all major sources. Isn't that terrible?

MURROW: That's a shocking statistic. It really is. Of course, this battle of the budget is one thing that limits medical research funds, isn't it?

LASKER: It certainly is, but medical research is an economy because it makes people well and able to work, prolongs the prime of life. You know that our lives have been prolonged six years in the last twelve? Can you estimate what that means to us? There is no way to estimate it in money.

MURROW: Mary Lasker, as a person of some means and great interest, you can devote much of your time to medical research. How do you go about enlisting support for your views?

LASKER: Well, I'm very vocal about them, and I urge everybody to give more to the voluntary agencies like the American Cancer Society and others, and I urge them to petition their congressmen and senators to help the leaders in Congress like Senator Hill in the Senate, and other leaders in the Senate, and Congressman Fogarty, and others in the House, to get more money this year for medical research against cancer and heart and mental illnesses, and all the other things that kill and cripple us. When you think of the beloved public figures that have been suffering with cancer and MURROW: That's a shocking statistic. It really is. Of course, this battle of the budget is one thing that limits medical research funds, isn't it?

LASKER: It certainly is, but medical research is an economy because it makes people well and able to work, prolongs the prime of life. You know that our lives have been prolonged six years in the last twelve? Can you estimate what that means to us? There is no way to estimate it in money.

MURROW: Mary Lasker, as a person of some means and great interest, you can devote much of your time to medical research. How do you go about enlisting support for your views?

LASKER: Well, I'm very vocal about them, and I urge everybody to give more to the voluntary agencies like the American Cancer Society and others, and I urge them to petition their congressmen and senators to help the leaders in Congress like Senator Hill in the Senate, and other leaders in the Senate, and Congressman Fogarty, and others in the House, to get more money this year for medical research against cancer and heart and mental illnesses, and all the other things that kill and cripple us. When you think of the beloved public figures that have been suffering with cancer and heart disease, I just can't understand why there's any problem about it, but there still is.

MURROW: Mary Lasker, thank you very much for letting us come and visit your lovely home tonight, and thank you for talking so eloquently about the need for preventive medicine. Thank you very much. Good night, Mary.

LASKER: Good night.

MURROW: Good night. I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to Fort Myer, Virginia for a visit with the Sergeant of the Guard at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, M/Sgt. William E. Daniel and his family. We'll also be calling on actor Tom Poston and his wife, Jean Sullivan, here in New York.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

---

heart disease, I just can't understand why there's any problem about it, but there still is.

MURROW: Mary Lasker, thank you very much for letting us come and visit your lovely home tonight, and thank you for talking so eloquently about the need for preventive medicine. Thank you very much. Good night, Mary.

LASKER: Good night.

MURROW: Good night. I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to Fort Myer, Virginia for a visit with the Sergeant of the Guard at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, M\Sgt. William K. Daniel and his family. We'll also be calling on actor Tom Poston and his wife, Jean Sullivan, here in New York.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Tom Poston and Jean Sullivan,

and M/Sgt. William Daniel

May 29, 1959 - 10:30 PM EDT

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with actor Tom Poston and his wife here in New York. Then we'll move on to Fort Myer, Virginia, where the Sergeant of the Guard at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier will be waiting for us at home.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Tom Poston and Jean Sullivan,

and M/Sgt. William Daniel

May 29, 1959 - 10:30 PM EDT

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with actor Tom Poston and his wife here in New York. Then we'll move on to Fort Myer, Virginia, where the Sergeant of the Guard at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier will be waiting for us at home.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545
LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

(Commercial)

MURROW: Mr. and Mrs. Tom Poston -- she's rather better known as Jean Sullivan -- are no strangers to television. Chances are that at one time or another you have seen them on your screen doing either straight acting, comedy, singing, dancing, panel shows or commercials.

Jean Sullivan comes from Logan, Utah; is a graduate of U.C.L.A.; did some acting in the movies before coming to New York for the stage and television where she is now one of TV's more attractive salesladies.

Tom Poston comes from Columbus, Ohio. He was a semi-pro boxer, trouped with a tumbling act, earned a certificate as a dairy chemist from M.I.T.; served as an Army pilot in the war; then turned to acting. He is perhaps best known for his character parts on the Steve Allen Show.

The Postons are a talented and very busy couple. Jean and Tom live with their three-year-old daughter in this apartment house here in New York, near the theaters, rehearsal halls and studio in which they work.

Good evening, Jean.

SULLIVAN: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Hello, Tom.

POSTON: Hello, Ed.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Mr. and Mrs. Tom Poston -- she's rather better known as Jean Sullivan -- are no strangers to television. Chances are that at one time or another you have seen them on your screen doing either straight acting, comedy, singing, dancing, panel shows or commercials.

Jean Sullivan comes from Logan, Utah; is a graduate of U.C.L.A.; did some acting in the movies before coming to New York for the stage and television where she is now one of TV's more attractive salesladies.

Tom Poston comes from Columbus, Ohio. He was a semi-pro boxer, trouped with a tumbling act, earned a certificate as a dairy chemist from M.I.T.; served as an Army pilot in the war; then turned to acting. He is perhaps best known for his character parts on the Steve Allen Show.

The Postons are a talented and very busy couple. Jean and Tom live with their three-year-old daughter in this apartment house here in New York, near the theatre, rehearsal halls and studio in which they work.

Good evening, Jean.

SULLIVAN: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Hello, Tom.

POSTON: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Jean, this is just---

POSTON: Welcome to---

MURROW: I beg your pardon. What did you say?

POSTON: Welcome to our house.

MURROW: Thank you. Jean, I should imagine this is just about the time of night you are generally getting ready to do a commercial, isn't it?

SULLIVAN: Yes, that's very true. Fortunately, I don't have to do Blue Shield tonight.

POSTON: Or Blue Cross either.

SULLIVAN: It is very nice to be a lady of leisure.

POSTON: Everybody here is covered, Ed.

MURROW: Well, as one who makes a livelihood doing commercials on television, I am sure you are not unaware that there are perhaps a few viewers who don't always take too kindly to them.

SULLIVAN: I certainly am aware of that, and I'm not in a position to look at them, you know, from the advertising agency's point of view or anything, but from an audience point of view, I would like to see, you know, sometimes take just one point instead of 20 and just talk about that, and have a little more freedom in the dialogue and so forth.

MURROW: Jean, this is just---

POSTON: Welcome to---

MURROW: I beg your pardon. What did you say?

POSTON: Welcome to our house.

MURROW: Thank you. Jean, I should imagine this is just about the time of night you are generally getting ready to do a commercial, isn't it?

SULLIVAN: Yes, that's very true. Fortunately, I don't have to do Blue Shield tonight.

POSTON: Or Blue Cross either.

SULLIVAN: It is very nice to be a lady of leisure.

POSTON: Everybody here is covered, Ed.

MURROW: Well, as one who makes a livelihood doing commercials on television, I am sure you are not unaware that there are perhaps a few viewers who don't always take too kindly to them.

SULLIVAN: I certainly am aware of that, and I'm not in a position to look at them, you know, from the advertising agency's point of view or anything, but from an audience point of view, I would like to see, you know, sometimes take just one point instead of 20 and just talk about that, and have a little more freedom in the dialogue and so forth.

POSTON: That's pretty much what you do in your commercials, isn't it, Jean?

SULLIVAN: No on purpose.

MURROW: I would like to see that, too. Tom, you've worked television and you have worked the theater. Which have you found to be the more demanding?

POSTON: I think interviews, Ed. Well, I think, seriously, that the theater -- you were serious, weren't you?

MURROW: Yes.

POSTON: The theater is more demanding as an art form. I think cultural evidence of this might be in the fact that although very few of the most important television shows would turn out to be successful Broadway presentations, almost any good scene or good performance in a Broadway show could be transmitted to television more or less successfully. It takes a little longer to put on the show, and a little harder work on the part of all concerned, and it is a very rewarding medium. So is television, but there are different things about each that are good.

MURROW: Well, Tom, I take it that your preference for the theater is one of the reasons you're staying in New York rather than going to the coast when Steve Allen's show moves there -- right?

POSTON: That's pretty much what you do in your commercials, isn't it, Jean?

SULLIVAN: No on purpose.

MURROW: I would like to see that, too. Tom, you've worked television and you have worked the theater. Which have you found to be the more demanding?

POSTON: I think interviews, Ed. Well, I think, seriously, that the theater -- you were serious, weren't you?

MURROW: Yes.

POSTON: The theater is more demanding as an art form. I think cultural evidence of this might be in the fact that although very few of the most important television shows would turn out to be successful Broadway presentations, almost any good scene or good performance in a Broadway show could be transmitted to television more or less successfully. It takes a little longer to put on the show, and a little harder work on the part of all concerned, and it is a very rewarding medium. So is television, but there are different things about each that are good.

MURROW: Well, Tom, I take it that your preference for the theater is one of the reasons you're staying in New York rather than going to the coast when Steve Allen's show moves there -- right?

POSTON: Yes, that's right. I have what I think is a major investment in Broadway and in the legitimate stage, and although I may be out there, Jules Green has very kindly offered me a job with Steve whenever I come out, or if I want to come out permanently, at any time, and that's very nice. You know, he isn't quite buried here. We still have a couple of good ones to go.

MURROW: Jean, being a working mother and trying to bring up a child at the same time must present some problems for you, doesn't it?

SULLIVAN: Yes, it does create a lot of problems, Ed, but I find that -- well, for one thing, I am very lucky that my regular job is at night and I can spend days with Francesca, and I think Francesca and I spend more time together than the average working mother.

MURROW: Are we going to get to meet Francesca, or is she asleep?

SULLIVAN: Well, she is very much awake, and I would love to have you meet her. Just a moment. (Speaks Spanish) Here she is. Thank you, Gloria.

MURROW: Hello, Francesca.

SULLIVAN: Say hello.

POSTON: Say hello to Ed.

POSTON: Yes, that's right. I have what I think is a major investment in Broadway and in the legitimate stage, and although I may be out there, Jules Green has very kindly offered me a job with Steve whenever I come out, or if I want to come out permanently, at any time, and that's very nice. You know, he isn't quite buried here. We still have a couple of good ones to go.

MURROW: Jean, being a working mother and trying to bring up a child at the same time must present some problems for you, doesn't it?

SULLIVAN: Yes, it does create a lot of problems, Ed, but I find that -- well, for one thing, I am very lucky that my regular job is at night and I can spend days with Francesca, and I think Francesca and I spend more time together than the average working mother.

MURROW: Are we going to get to meet Francesca, or is she asleep?

SULLIVAN: Well, she is very much awake, and I would love to have you meet her. Just a moment. (Speaks Spanish) Here she is. Thank you, Gloria.

MURROW: Hello, Francesca.

SULLIVAN: Say hello.

POSTON: Say hello to Ed.

SULLIVAN: Can you say hello?

POSTON: This is all of that television equipment that I was telling you about. Her room is pretty full. She thinks Santa Claus was awfully good to her today.

MURROW: Did I hear you addressing her in Spanish?

SULLIVAN: I beg your pardon.

MURROW: Did I hear you speak to her in Spanish?

SULLIVAN: Yes. Well, I speak to Gloria in Spanish. Gloria comes from Cuba.

POSTON: Chi-Chi also -- Chi-Chi is our name for Francesca. Chi-Chi also speaks and understands Spanish very well, but guess who doesn't in the house. I know Si, Si.

SULLIVAN: Yes. He's learning. All right, buenos noches.

MURROW: Buenos noches.

POSTON: Buenos noches.

SULLIVAN: Thank you. (Francesca cries.)

POSTON: Yes, she says, "I have my union card and let's go."

SULLIVAN: I'll see you later. Hasta luego.

MURROW: Jean?

SULLIVAN: Yes.

MURROW: Tom strikes me as a pretty versatile sort

SULLIVAN: Can you say hello?

POSTON: This is all of that television equipment that I was telling you about. Her room is pretty full. She thinks Santa Claus was awfully good to her today.

MURROW: Did I hear you addressing her in Spanish?

SULLIVAN: I beg your pardon.

MURROW: Did I hear you speak to her in Spanish?

SULLIVAN: Yes. Well, I speak to Gloria in Spanish. Gloria comes from Cuba.

POSTON: Chi-Chi also -- Chi-Chi is our name for Francesca. Chi-Chi also speaks and understands Spanish very well, but guess who doesn't in the house. I know Si, Si.

SULLIVAN: Yes. He's learning. All right, buenos noches.

MURROW: Buenos noches.

POSTON: Buenos noches.

SULLIVAN: Thank you. (Francesca cries.)

POSTON: Yes, she says, "I have my union card and let's go."

SULLIVAN: I'll see you later. Hasta luego.

MURROW: Jean?

SULLIVAN: Yes.

MURROW: Tom strikes me as a pretty versatile sort of fellow. How much help is he around the house?

SULLIVAN: Well, that I would like to show you, Ed. Come on, honey.

POSTON: I have a funny feeling.

SULLIVAN: Here we have two examples. This Tom did -- this antique finish on our television set -- when we were first married four years ago, and that was the first and last thing he has done. He says he is going to make a nice little niche for this Emmy here, but so far nothing has happened. We have the tools.

MURROW: Jean, your husband doesn't seem to have any difficulties learning rhymes for all the various shows he does, so I'd assume he's not quite as forgetful as the famous forgetful character he frequently plays on television.

SULLIVAN: Oh, he certainly isn't. He is a marvelously quick studier. In fact, I never see him study. But like most men, Ed, he can forget when it is convenient, you know, and it is something that doesn't really interest him.

POSTON: Now you looka here.

MURROW: Tom, how much do you remember about those chemistry courses you took and what do you remember, and is it of any use to you now?

POSTON: Well, Ed, you know, I occupy a chair weekly of fellow. How much help is he around the house?

SULLIVAN: Well, that I would like to show you, Ed. Come on, honey.

POSTON: I have a funny feeling.

SULLIVAN: Here we have two examples. This Tom did -- this antique finish on our television set -- when we were first married four years ago, and that was the first and last thing he has done. He says he is going to make a nice little niche for this Fanny here, but so far nothing has happened. We have the tools.

MURROW: Jean, your husband doesn't seem to have any difficulties learning rhymes for all the various shows he does, so I'd assume he's not quite as forgetful as the famous forgetful character he frequently plays on television.

SULLIVAN: Oh, he certainly isn't. He is a marvelously quick studier. In fact, I never see him study. But like most men, Ed, he can forget when it is convenient, you know, and it is something that doesn't really interest him.

POSTON: Now you looke here.

MURROW: Tom, how much do you remember about those chemistry courses you took and what do you remember, and is it of any use to you now?

POSTON: Well, Ed, you know, I occupy a chair weekly on the "To Tell The Truth" panel, and it is interesting you should ask that. We had many occasions. Last week there was a chemistry major on and I asked him some pretty probing questions about high school and college chemistry -- failing grades -- and he answered them and I missed the guy. And I used to fly, you know---

MURROW: Yes.

POSTON: So on "To Tell The Truth" I'm pretty well equipped to ask those questions of the people who have flying in their experience. We had a couple since I have been on, and I missed both of those, too. It's either the fault of the original courses or my memory.

MURROW: And, Tom, your days as part of a tumbling act. There isn't much of a market these days for tumblers, or is there?

POSTON: I don't know. I don't watch Ed Sullivan as much as I used to, but -- I'm busy at that time -- I did use it. As a matter of fact, it was responsible for my first job on Broadway. I was in Cyrano de Bergerac on Broadway with Jose Ferrar, and the part required an actor to tumble off a wall and fall on his head, and I did a little tumbling in the show too, and that's how I got my first job.

SULLIVAN: There's been a little tumbling since, on the "To Tell The Truth" panel, and it is interesting you should ask that. We had many occasions. Last week there was a chemistry major on and I asked him some pretty probing questions about high school and college chemistry -- failing grades -- and he answered them and I missed the guy. And I used to fly, you know---

MURROW: Yes.

POSTON: So on "To Tell The Truth" I'm pretty well equipped to ask those questions of the people who have flying in their experience. We had a couple since I have been on, and I missed both of those, too. It's either the fault of the original courses or my memory.

MURROW: And, Tom, your days as part of a tumbling act. There isn't much of a market these days for tumblers, or is there?

POSTON: I don't know. I don't watch Ed Sullivan as much as I used to, but -- I'm busy at that time -- I did use it. As a matter of fact, it was responsible for my first job on Broadway. I was in Cyrano de Bergerac on Broadway with Jose Ferrer, and the part required an actor to tumble off a wall and fall on his head, and I did a little tumbling in the show too, and that's how I got my first job.

SULLIVAN: There's been a little tumbling since.

too, on an awful motorcycle. He ran into a car and tumbled off the motorcycle and landed on his feet. So you see it comes in handy.

MURROW: Tom, do you ride a motorcycle for fun or is that your way of getting a little exercise?

POSTON: Well, I don't really ride a motorcycle at all anymore. I had to sell it for junk. It was pretty well wrapped up and so was I for a while. But I do take exercise in one form or another -- sitting and looking. We have some rather nice things to look at here. This is a painting by a friend of ours, Yorum Kanyuk. I don't know how well you can see it, but he has a marvelous technique. This is something here, if you want to come along with---

MURROW: I'm with you. I'm with you.

POSTON: ---to our international gallery. This is by Pablo -- Pablo something or other.

SULLIVAN: That famous Spaniard; yes.

POSTON: This is by a young fellow who lives in the building.

MURROW: Oh, that's very nice.

POSTON: A painting by Nathan Wasserberger, and I think he's remarkably talented. I hope you agree.

MURROW: Very nice, indeed.

too, on an awful motorcycle. He ran into a car and tumbled off the motorcycle and landed on his feet. So you see it comes in handy.

MURROW: Tom, do you ride a motorcycle for fun or is that your way of getting a little exercise?

POSTON: Well, I don't really ride a motorcycle at all anymore. I had to sell it for junk. It was pretty well wrapped up and so was I for a while. But I do take exercise in one form or another -- sitting and looking. We have some rather nice things to look at here. This is a painting by a friend of ours, Yorum Kanyuk. I don't know how well you can see it, but he has a marvelous technique. This is something here, if you want to come along with---

MURROW: I'm with you. I'm with you.

POSTON: ---to our international gallery. This is by Pablo -- Pablo something or other.

SULLIVAN: That famous Spaniard; yes.

POSTON: This is by a young fellow who lives in the building.

MURROW: Oh, that's very nice.

POSTON: A painting by Nathan Wasserberger, and I think he's remarkably talented. I hope you agree.

MURROW: Very nice, indeed.

POSTON: Speaking of exercise, Ed, I gave a carte blanche to a young fellow named Bob, and another fellow named Moore, and they unearthed these. They were rusted to the floor, and they said, "Well, Tom, why don't you show Ed your versatility with weights?" So I thought I would just do some tricks for you.

MURROW: Careful.

POSTON: And I'll get these back to where they belong later. I'll roll them in if necessary. This is another painting by Kanyuk. We have his stuff all over the house.

MURROW: Bob, do you and Jean have any plans to join the parade of performers to the summer theaters?

POSTON: What, Bill? Summer theaters?

MURROW: Yes.

POSTON: No, I don't think so. I won't be able to. I don't think I'll have time. Jean is going to be busy this summer, too, and this is my nook. You can see how neat and tidy I keep that. Jean wants to do some summer stock this summer if she can, and she is hoping to finally work in a couple of weeks vacation with the baby in Miorca in Spain.

MURROW: It would be nice if Tom could get away with you, wouldn't it?

POSTON: Speaking of exercise, Ed, I gave a carte blanche to a young fellow named Bob, and another fellow named Moore, and they unearthed these. They were rusted to the floor, and they said, "Well, Tom, why don't you show Ed your versatility with weights?" So I thought I would just do some tricks for you.

MURROW: Careful.

POSTON: And I'll get these back to where they belong later. I'll roll them in if necessary. This is another painting by Kanyuk. We have his stuff all over the house.

MURROW: Bob, do you and Jean have any plans to join the parade of performers to the summer theaters?

POSTON: What, Bill? Summer theaters?

MURROW: Yes.

POSTON: No, I don't think so. I won't be able to. I don't think I'll have time. Jean is going to be busy this summer, too, and this is my nook. You can see how neat and tidy I keep that. Jean wants to do some summer stock this summer if she can, and she is hoping to finally work in a couple of weeks vacation with the baby in Mlorca in Spain.

MURROW: It would be nice if Tom could get away with you, wouldn't it?

SULLIVAN: Oh, it certainly would but that's too much to hope for. In four years -- what is it? -- we've had four days vacatinn together.

MURROW: Still, it must be very nice being married to somebody with such a good sense of humor.

POSTON: Now, Ed! It doesn't work out too well. I don't try too many jokes or routines with Jean. For some reason they don't go over too well. I am not sure exactly why.

SULLIVAN: Now, Ed, listen, there's another side to the story, too, because in spite of his certificate in dairy chemistry, he was never any help with the baby's formula.

POSTON: Oh, is that so. I used to drink it quite a lot.

MURROW: Well, before we start a real family row, perhaps we ought to say good night. Good night.

SULLIVAN: Good night.

POSTON: Thanks a lot, Uncle Ed.

MURROW: Thank you very much. Good night.

SULLIVAN: Good night.

POSTON: Good night.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a

SULLIVAN: Oh, it certainly would but that's too much to hope for. In four years -- what is it? -- we've had four days vacation together.

MURROW: Still, it must be very nice being married to somebody with such a good sense of humor.

POSTON: Now, Ed! It doesn't work out too well. I don't try too many jokes or routines with Jean. For some reason they don't go over too well. I am not sure exactly why.

SULLIVAN: Now, Ed, listen, there's another side to the story, too, because in spite of his certificate in dairy chemistry, he was never any help with the baby's formula.

POSTON: Oh, is that so. I used to drink it quite a lot.

MURROW: Well, before we start a real family row, perhaps we ought to say good night. Good night.

SULLIVAN: Good night.

POSTON: Thanks a lot, Uncle Ed.

MURROW: Thank you very much. Good night.

SULLIVAN: Good night.

POSTON: Good night.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Master Sergeant William Daniel and his family.

Now a word about Kent cigarettes.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Master Sergeant William Daniel enlisted in the Army when he he was 18 years old. During World War II he fought in Normandy, was captured by the Germans, spent 10 months as a prisoner of war until he escaped; made contact with the Russian Army, and was returned to our lines. Sergeant Daniel served in Korea, and later was stationed in Germany. Now this 35-year-old veteran of two wars serves as Sergeant of the Guard at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

"Here rests in honored glory an American soldier known but to God." So reads the inscription over the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier buried here in Arlington 38 years ago and joined just a year ago tomorrow, Memorial Day, by the unknown servicemen of World War II and Korea. Here day and night a continuous guard is maintained by a select handful of men from the Third Infantry, the Old Guard. The tomb guard consists of 17 men selected from among all the Army commands. Each sentinal walks this post 42 times an hour at a cadence of 120 steps a minute.

Master Sergeant Daniel, who is responsible for the performance of the guard, is also offical wreath bearer at visit with Master Sergeant William Daniel and his family.

Now a word about Kent cigarettes.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Master Sergeant William Daniel enlisted in the Army when he was 18 years old. During World War II he fought in Normandy, was captured by the Germans, spent 10 months as a prisoner of war until he escaped; made contact with the Russian Army, and was returned to our lines. Sergeant Daniel served in Korea, and later was stationed in Germany. Now this 35-year-old veteran of two wars serves as Sergeant of the Guard at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

"Here rests in honored glory an American soldier known but to God." So reads the inscription over the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier buried here in Arlington 38 years ago and joined just a year ago tomorrow, Memorial Day, by the unknown servicemen of World War II and Korea. Here day and night a continuous guard is maintained by a select handful of men from the Third Infantry, the Old Guard. The tomb guard consists of 17 men selected from among all the Army commands. Each sentinal walks this post 42 times an hour at a cadence of 120 steps a minute.

Master Sergeant Daniel, who is responsible for the performance of the guard, is also official wreath bearer at ceremonies in the cemetery. With his wife and their three children he is quartered some four city blocks away in the lower right half of this converted barracks building in Fort Meyer, Virginia.

Good evening, Sgt. Daniel.

DANIEL: Good evening, Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Daniel.

MRS. DANIEL: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: The sentry walking the post of the Unknown Soldier is always a most impressive sight.

DANIEL: Well, Ed, you've only saw very little. In a very short while I will take you to the Tomb and we can witness the full changing of the Guard.

MURROW: Oh, good. Sgt. Daniel, are you off duty tonight at home with the family or are you always on call?

DANIEL: Well, I'm off tonight, Ed. However, I am on call 24 hours a day. I will make the inspection of the guard when we go up in a very few minutes.

MURROW: Sergeant, after -- what is it? -- 14 years in the Army---

DANIEL: Yes.

MURROW: ---would it be safe to say that you're ceremonies in the cemetery. With his wife and their three children he is quartered some four city blocks away in the lower right half of this converted barracks building in Fort Meyer, Virginia.

Good evening, Sgt. Daniel.

DANIEL: Good evening, Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Daniel.

MRS. DANIEL: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: The sentry walking the post of the Unknown Soldier is always a most impressive sight.

DANIEL: Well, Ed, you've only saw very little. In a very short while I will take you to the Tomb and we can witness the full changing of the Guard.

MURROW: Oh, good. Sgt. Daniel, are you off duty tonight at home with the family or are you always on call?

DANIEL: Well, I'm off tonight, Ed. However, I am on call 24 hours a day. I will make the inspection of the guard when we go up in a very few minutes.

MURROW: Sergeant, after -- what is it? -- 14 years in the Army---

DANIEL: Yes.

MURROW: ---would it be safe to say that you're an Army careerman?

DANIEL: Yes, Ed. I feel like the Army is a very fine service to be in. I've completed 14 years service and I re-enlisted here in October of '56 for six more years. I would like to retire at 20 years; yes.

MURROW: Mrs. Daniel, I assume Bill's decision was made after a proper consultation with you?

MRS. DANIEL: Yes, it was, Mr. Murrow, but I enjoy being with the Army and traveling around. We get to meet a lot of people and see a lot of different things that we wouldn't have the opportunity to see otherwise, and we spent 27 months in Germany. We enjoyed the tour very much.

MURROW: Did you bring back any souvenirs from your assignment in Germany?

MRS. DANIEL: Yes, we did. We brought back a few pictures among other things, and here is one I would like to show you right here. It's a street in ? Germany, and I like it because it reminds me so much of out there.

MURROW: Oh, it's lovely country there, isn't it?

MRS. DANIEL: It sure is.

MURROW: Your children must have had a grand time. Did they enjoy it?

MRS. DANIEL: They sure did. They enjoyed it very an Army careerman?

DANIEL: Yes, Ed. I feel like the Army is a very fine service to be in. I've completed 14 years service and I re-enlisted here in October of '56 for six more years. I would like to retire at 20 years; yes.

MURROW: Mrs. Daniel, I assume Bill's decision was made after a proper consultation with you?

MRS. DANIEL: Yes, it was, Mr. Murrow, but I enjoy being with the Army and travelling around. We get to meet a lot of people and see a lot of different things that we wouldn't have the opportunity to see otherwise, and we spent 27 months in Germany. We enjoyed the tour very much.

MURROW: Did you bring back any souvenirs from your assignment in Germany?

MRS. DANIEL: Yes, we did. We brought back a few pictures among other things, and here is one I would like to show you right here. It's a street in Germany, and I like it because it reminds me so much of out there.

MURROW: Oh, it's lovely country there, isn't it?

MRS. DANIEL: It sure is.

MURROW: Your children must have had a grand time. Did they enjoy it?

MRS. DANIEL: They sure did. They enjoyed it very much. It was the first time they had ever been where it snowed, and they really had a time during the winter.

DANIEL: Ed, we have the children here tonight. I would like for you to meet them.

MURROW: Good. Thank you very much.

DANIEL: All right, kids, come on out. Ed, here we have Michael. He's the oldest.

MURROW: Good evening, Mike.

MICHAEL: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

DANIEL: And here we have Linda. She's the girl.

MURROW: Linda.

DANIEL: And last but not least, we have Robert. He's the baby boy.

MURROW: How are you, Bob -- all right?

ROBERT: Yes, sir.

MURROW: Mike, are you going to take up a career in the Army too?

DANIEL: Go ahead and talk.

MICHAEL: Yes, sir.

MURROW: You've decided on that, have you?

MICHAEL: Yes, sir, and also I'm in the Fort Myer Little League.

MURROW: The Fort Myer Little League?

much. It was the first time they had ever been where it snow-ed, and they really had a time during the winter.

DANIEL: Ed, we have the children here tonight. I would like for you to meet them.

MURROW: Good. Thank you very much.

DANIEL: All right, kids, come on out. Ed, here we have Michael. He's the oldest.

MURROW: Good evening, Mike.

MICHAEL: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

DANIEL: And here we have Linda. She's the girl.

MURROW: Linda.

DANIEL: And last but not least, we have Robert. He's the baby boy.

MURROW: How are you, Bob -- all right?

ROBERT: Yes, sir.

MURROW: Mike, are you going to take up a career in the Army too?

DANIEL: Go ahead and talk.

MICHAEL: Yes, sir.

MURROW: You've decided on that, have you?

MICHAEL: Yes, sir, and also I'm in the Fort Myer Little League.

MURROW: The Fort Myer Little League?

MICHAEL: Yes, on the Red Sox, and I play center-field.

MURROW: Center field. How do you hit?

MICHAEL: I hit pretty good.

MURROW: Good.

DANIEL: Well, I will tell you, Ed, he's a very good hitter but, however, some days he has his bad times out there and he comes home a little bit perturbed.

MURROW: Linda, is it too early for you to decide on what you want to be?

LINDA: No, sir. When I grow up I've decided that I want to be a nurse.

MURROW: A nurse?

LINDA: Yes, sir.

MURROW: You're quite definite about that, are you?

LINDA: Yes, sir.

MURROW: And, Bob, what about you?

ROBERT: I'll be in the Navy.

MURROW: You'll be in the Navy?

DANIEL: Ed, he's not quite old enough yet to get into the Cub Scouts. However, he is quite a bit of help around the house when the other two are gone.

MICHAEL: Yes, on the Red Sox, and I play center-field.

MURROW: Center field. How do you hit?

MICHAEL: I hit pretty good.

MURROW: Good. Thank you very much.

DANIEL: Well, I will tell you, Ed, he's a very good hitter but, however, some days he has his bad times out there and he comes home a little bit perturbed.

MURROW: Linda, is it too early for you to decide on what you want to be?

LINDA: No, sir. When I grow up I've decided that I want to be a nurse.

MURROW: A nurse?

LINDA: Yes, sir.

MURROW: You're quite definite about that, are you?

LINDA: Yes, sir.

MURROW: And, Bob, what about you?

ROBERT: I'll be in the Navy.

MURROW: You'll be in the Navy?

DANIEL: Ed, he's not quite old enough yet to get into the Cub Scouts. However, he is quite a bit of help around the house when the other two are gone.

MURROW: Sgt. Daniel, with your 24-hour responsibility at the Tomb, do you have a chance to stay home with the family many nights?

DANIEL: Yes, Ed. I'm home practically every night. However, I spend quite a bit of time keeping my uniform and equipment in shape.

MURROW: Where do you keep your uniform?

DANIEL: Well, the most hardest piece of equipment that we have to keep in shape I would say would be the shoes. This is the shoe that I have worn for two years at the Tomb of the Unknown. I would like to talk a little bit about this shoe. We have the double sole, and then the steel cleat on the heel, and inside, if you will notice, we have what is known as a cheater.

MURROW: Yes.

DANIEL: This has the shoe to make quite a bit of noise when we click our heels at the Tomb and makes it look a little more military. I would say this is the hardest part to keep up.

I would like to talk a little bit about the rifle that we use at the Tomb, Ed. A lot of tourists seem to think that this rifle is fake. However, it is an issued rifle to the Armed Forces. In our case, the only difference is the chrome MURROW: Sgt. Daniel, with your 24-hour responsibility at the Tomb, do you have a chance to stay home with the family many nights?

DANIEL: Yes, Ed. I'm home practically every night. However, I spend quite a bit of time keeping my uniform and equipment in shape.

MURROW: Where do you keep your uniform?

DANIEL: Well, the most hardest place of equipment that we have to keep in shape I would say would be the shoes. This is the shoe that I have worn for two years at the Tomb of the Unknown. I would like to talk a little bit about this shoe. We have the double sole, and then the steel cleat on the heel, and inside, if you will notice, we have what is known as a chester.

MURROW: Yes.

DANIEL: This has the shoe to make quite a bit of noise when we click our heels at the Tomb and makes it look a little more military. I would say this is the hardest part to keep up.

I would like to talk a little bit about the rifle that we use at the Tomb, Ed. A lot of tourists seem to think that this rifle is fake. However, it is an issued rifle to the Armed Forces. In our case, the only difference is the chrome bayonet and the leather sling, but it is just a regular Army issue rifle throughout the Armed Forces.

I'd like to talk a little bit about the Tomb Guard Badge, which I am wearing tonight. It's only 17 men in the Armed Forces that wear this badge. Those are the men that are guards at the Tomb and the sergeants in charge.

I would like to talk a little also of the uniform that we wear at the Tomb.

MURROW: Yes.

DANIEL: Now, this cap is the dress blue honor cap. We have a gold braid here as a chin strap, and gold around the cap and on top, which we wear gold chevrons and the gold stripes here.

MURROW: Well, the honor guard always makes an excellent appearance. Sergeant, how many visitors do you have at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier on an average day?

DANIEL: Well, Ed, I would say around the year average it would be somewhere around four to five thousand people daily -- each year average.

MURROW: And I would think that at least half of them ask questions -- right?

DANIEL: That's correct. We have people come in to visit the Tomb and they ask many questions, especially about bayonet and the leather sling, but it is just a regular Army issue rifle throughout the Armed Forces.

I'd like to talk a little bit about the Tomb Guard Badge, which I am wearing tonight. It's only 17 men in the Armed Forces that wear this badge. Those are the men that are guards at the Tomb and the sergeants in charge.

I would like to talk a little also of the uniform that we wear at the Tomb.

MURROW: Yes.

DANIEL: Now, this cap is the dress blue honor cap. We have a gold braid here as a chin strap, and gold around the cap and on top, which we wear gold chevrons and the gold stripes here.

MURROW: Well, the honor guard always makes an excellent appearance. Sergeant, how many visitors do you have at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier on an average day?

DANIEL: Well, Ed, I would say around the year average it would be somewhere around four to five thousand people daily -- each year average.

MURROW: And I would think that at least half of them ask questions -- right?

DANIEL: That's correct. We have people come in to visit the Tomb and they ask many questions, especially about the McKeevil Box. This is a World War I piece of equipment, and it is worn in the center of the man's back on his belt.

MURROW: Yes.

DANIEL: The people seem to think that this is some type of box that has a camera to tell the man actually when to turn and go back down in front of the Tomb, but it is not. The significance of this is that it represents the uniform of World War I. It is the only piece of equipment that is used -- World War I equipment -- on the Tomb. The Tomb Guard are the only men that use this in the Armed Forces.

MURROW: Well, I should imagine that your men must be quite accustomed to having their pictures taken.

DANIEL: Yes, Ed, we feel that the men at the Tomb are the most photographed men in the world today. However, we have quite a few tourists that do not bring cameras. They come to the Tomb for a more or less view of the Guard, and it is a sacred place to them.

Ed, it's time for the guard changing. We will go to the Tomb and witness the inspection of the guard, the turn-over of the orders, and the relieving of the new man. See you at the Tomb.

MURROW: Right. Thank you very much. Thank you, Sergeant.

the McKeevil Box. This is a World War I piece of equipment, and it is worn in the center of the man's back on his belt.

MURROW: Yes.

DANIEL: The people seem to think that this is some type of box that has a camera to tell the man actually when to turn and go back down in front of the Tomb, but it is not. The significance of this is that it represents the uniform of World War I. It is the only piece of equipment that is used -- World War I equipment -- on the Tomb. The Tomb Guard are the only men that use this in the Armed Forces.

MURROW: Well, I should imagine that your men must be quite accustomed to having their pictures taken.

DANIEL: Yes, Ed, we feel that the men at the Tomb are the most photographed men in the world today. However, we have quite a few tourists that do not bring cameras. They come to the Tomb for a more or less view of the Guard, and it is a sacred place to them.

Ed, it's time for the guard changing. We will go to the Tomb and witness the inspection of the guard, the turn-over of the orders, and the relieving of the new man. See you at the Tomb.

MURROW: Right. Thank you very much. Thank you, Sergeant.

(Scene shifts to Tomb of Unknown Soldier.)

DANIEL: Ed, the men are now rendering the appropriate honors to the Tomb.

MURROW: Most impressive, particularly on the eve of Memorial Day. Sgt. Daniel, how long have you been on this assignment?

DANIEL: Ed, I've been Sergeant of the Guard here at the Tomb for 27 months now.

MURROW: It must be an assignment that gives you a great deal of pride.

DANIEL: Yes, Ed. The assignment here at the Tomb -- the guards that walked tonight, and the non-commissioned officers, and the officers connected with the Tomb, feel that it is the highest honor that we can perform in peacetime.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Sgt. Daniel. Will you say our thanks to the men on duty tonight as well?

DANIEL: I sure will, Ed, and nice talking with you.

MURROW: Thank you and say good night to your family, please.

DANIEL: That I will do.

MURROW: Good night, Sergeant.

DANIEL: Good night.

(Scene shifts to Tomb of Unknown Soldier.)

DANIEL: Ed, the men are now rendering the appropriate honors to the Tomb.

MURROW: Most impressive, particularly on the eve of Memorial Day. Sgt. Daniel, how long have you been on this assignment?

DANIEL: Ed, I've been Sergeant of the Guard here at the Tomb for 27 months now.

MURROW: It must be an assignment that gives you a great deal of pride.

DANIEL: Yes, Ed. The assignment here at the Tomb -- the guards that walked tonight, and the non-commissioned officers, and the officers connected with the Tomb, feel that it is the highest honor that we can perform in peacetime.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Sgt. Daniel. Will you say our thanks to the men on duty tonight as well?

DANIEL: I sure will, Ed, and nice talking with you.

MURROW: Thank you and say good night to your family, please.

DANIEL: That I will do.

MURROW: Good night, Sergeant.

DANIEL: Good night.

I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to California for a visit with actress Zsa Zsa Gabor, who, as television viewers have discovered, is not shy on expressing opinions on almost any subject.

Next week we will also be calling on Gerald M. Loeb and his family in Redding, Connecticut. Mr. Loeb is one of the country's foremost investment consultants.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer, and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

I'll be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to California for a visit with actress Zsa Zsa Gabor, who, as television viewers have discovered, is not shy on expressing opinions on almost any subject.

Next week we will also be calling on Gerald M. Loeb and his family in Redding, Connecticut. Mr. Loeb is one of the country's foremost investment consultants.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer, and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Zsa Zsa Gabor, and

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald M. Loeb

June 5, 1959 - 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting movie and television star Zsa Zsa Gabor and her daughter in their home in Bel Air, California. Then we'll be going out to Redding, Connecticut to call on Mr. and Mrs. Gerald M. Loeb. He's an expert on investments and what goes on on Wall Street.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Zsa Zsa Gabor, and

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald M. Loeb

June 5, 1959 - 10:30 PM EST

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting movie and television star Zsa Zsa Gabor and her daughter in their home in Bel Air, California. Then we'll be going out to Redding, Connecticut to call on Mr. and Mrs. Gerald M. Loeb. He's an expert on investments and what goes on on Wall Street.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545
LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

(Commercial)

MURROW: Zsa Zsa Gabor was born in Hungary; came to this country in 1942. She, along with her two sisters, Ava and Magda, and their mother, comprise about as colorful a family as one is likely to find. Since she first appeared on the West Coast television some six years ago, Zsa Zsa has been doing very well, indeed. She has made, I think, 22 movies, including "Lilly" and "Moulin Rouge;" has played the better supper clubs here and abroad. In addition, she is constantly popping up as one of the more glamorous women on television.

Zsa Zsa Gabor and her daughter, Francesca, plus three dogs, live in this home in Bel Air, California, complete with gardens, artificial waterfall, swimming pool, and a magnificent view of the city below.

Evening, Zsa Zsa.

GABOR: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: You know, from this distance you appear to be deep in thought. Anything wrong?

GABOR: No, nothing is really wrong, except I am a little bit sad because I have to fly to New York tomorrow to make a television film Wednesday, and it's so beautiful out here and I love my house and my pool and, of course, my daughter,

(Commercial)

MURROW: Zsa Zsa Gabor was born in Hungary; came to this country in 1942. She, along with her two sisters, Ava and Magda, and their mother, comprise about as colorful a family as one is likely to find. Since she first appeared on the West Coast television some six years ago, Zsa Zsa has been doing very well, indeed. She has made, I think, 22 movies, including "Lilly" and "Moulin Rouge;" has played the better supper clubs here and abroad. In addition, she is constantly popping up as one of the more glamorous women on television.

Zsa Zsa Gabor and her daughter, Francesca, plus three dogs, live in this home in Bel Air, California, complete with gardens, artificial waterfall, swimming pool, and a magnificent view of the city below.

Evening, Zsa Zsa.

GABOR: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: You know, from this distance you appear to be deep in thought. Anything wrong?

GABOR: No, nothing is really wrong, except I am a little bit sad because I have to fly to New York tomorrow to make a television film Wednesday, and it's so beautiful out here and I love my horse and my pool and, of course, my daughter, and I have so little time to spend with her.

MURROW: Well, Zsa Zsa, it would seem to me that with a child to raise, a comfortable home to live in, and that wonderful California weather, you would start settling down and not work so hard. Why do you work so hard?

GABOR: Well, Ed, that's what I thought about. My career makes me very, very happy, and I work very hard at it, and I feel that every little show or film I do, I am improving. But also, if I show you around my house, you will understand why I work so hard. You see, I have to support this house. I am supporting my child and myself, and this takes much money. So I have to work. But thank goodness I am one of those girls who does what I like to do and I adore acting.

MURROW: Well, it must be very hard to leave all this, but before you do, why don't you show us around a little.

GABOR: Well, all right, Ed. If you look down this path here---

MURROW: Yes.

GABOR: ---to my swimming pool. This is heated and I am very proud of it because I put the heating system in last year. Then you see my Chinese garden, and on top of the garden you see some trees. On top of the trees you can see the whole of Hollywood, and some days, you know, when it's and I have so little time to spend with her.

MURROW: Well, Zsa Zsa, it would seem to me that with a child to raise, a comfortable home to live in, and that wonderful California weather, you would start settling down and not work so hard. Why do you work so hard?

GABOR: Well, Ed, that's what I thought about. My career makes me very, very happy, and I work very hard at it, and I feel that every little show or film I do, I am improving. But also, if I show you around my house, you will understand why I work so hard. You see, I have to support this house. I am supporting my child and myself, and this takes much money. So I have to work. But thank goodness I am one of those girls who does what I like to do and I adore acting.

MURROW: Well, it must be very hard to leave all this, but before you do, why don't you show us around a little.

GABOR: Well, all right, Ed. If you look down this path here---

MURROW: Yes.

GABOR: ---to my swimming pool. This is heated and I am very proud of it because I put the heating system in last year. Then you see my Chinese garden, and on top of the garden you see some trees. On top of the trees you can see the whole of Hollywood, and some days, you know, when it's sunny, I can even see Catalina Island from my bedroom. I really have a most wonderful view up here, and in the night when the lights are shining, it looks like little diamonds and emeralds and rubies from my bedroom. It's just divine!

MURROW: Zsa Zsa, you've lived and worked both here and in Europe. Have you found very much difference between the people there and here?

GABOR: Well, Ed, you see, I make pictures now in London, Paris, Madrid, Rome, and Germany, and the difference is that in England and in Germany they are just as -- very precise in the work and, you know, working on the parts at six or seven o'clock in the morning.

MURROW: Yes.

GABOR: And they are very serious about it, but in France, for example, they start shooting at twelve o'clock. They have aperitif at one, and at three o'clock they have another aperitif, so it takes you about six months to do a picture which in England or in America you would do in a month. But, of course, it's fun.

MURROW: Zsa, Zsa, is that the waterfall there?

GABOR: Yes, sir, that's my Chinese waterfall. You see, my whole house is built by Burton Scott, who used to make Chinese modern houses, and this is my Chinese waterfall, sunny, I can even see Catalina Island from my bedroom. I really have a most wonderful view up here, and in the night when the lights are shining, it looks like little diamonds and emeralds and rubies from my bedroom. It's just divine!

MURROW: Yes Yes, you've lived and worked both here and in Europe. Have you found very much difference between the people there and here?

GABOR: Well, Ed, you see, I make pictures now in London, Paris, Madrid, Rome, and Germany, and the difference is that in England and in Germany they are just as -- very precise in the work and, you know, working on the parts at six or seven o'clock in the morning.

MURROW: Yes.

GABOR: And they are very serious about it, but in France, for example, they start shooting at twelve o'clock. They have aperitif at one, and at three o'clock they have another aperitif, so it takes you about six months to do a picture which in England or in America you would do in a month. But, of course, it's fun.

MURROW: Yes, Yes, is that the waterfall there?

GABOR: Yes, sir, that's my Chinese waterfall. You see, my whole house is built by Burton Scott, who used to make Chinese modern houses, and this is my Chinese waterfall.

and I love it. I even throw sometimes coins in it hoping that--- (Laughs)

MURROW: Zsa Zsa, about the press. It seems to me that both here and in Europe they have given you and your views a good deal of attention. How much is fact and how much is fiction?

GABOR: Well, Ed, always a little bit of fact, and lots of things that are sort of dreamed up about me. Sometimes I read about Zsa Zsa Gabor, you know, and I say to myself, "Goodness, who is that woman?" As a matter of fact, I am just writing a book with Gerald Frank you know, the famous author---

MURROW: Yes.

GABOR: ---because I want to explain a little bit my background so people should understand my accent and my life a little better.

MURROW: Have you decided on a title?

GABOR: Well, we want to call it "Zsa Zsa And I."

MURROW: Zsa Zsa, some of those stories I've read -- for example, that you're an expert polo player and ping pong player. Are they true?

GABOR: Yes. As a matter of fact, if you want to see -- I couldn't have my horse in my living room, but I have and I love it. I even throw sometimes coins in it hoping that--- (laughs)

MURROW: Zsa Zsa, about the press. It seems to me that both here and in Europe they have given you and your views a good deal of attention. How much is fact and how much is fiction?

GABOR: Well, Ed, always a little bit of fact, and lots of things that are sort of dreamed up about me. Sometimes I read about Zsa Zsa Gabor, you know, and I say to myself, "Goodness, who is that woman?" As a matter of fact, I am just writing a book with Gerald Frank you know, the famous author---

MURROW: Yes.

GABOR: ---because I want to explain a little bit my background so people should understand my accent and my life a little better.

MURROW: Have you decided on a title?

GABOR: Well, we want to call it "Zsa Zsa And I."

MURROW: Zsa Zsa, some of those stories I've read -- for example, that you're an expert polo player and ping pong player. Are they true?

GABOR: Yes. As a matter of fact, if you want to see -- I couldn't have my horse in my living room, but I have the mallets. I want to show you my mallet -- okay?

MURROW: Yes. I would like you to prove that.

(Gabor goes into house.)

GABOR: Well, now here's my mallet, and just about a month ago I made a television film and played polo with two teams. They were all men and I was the only woman, and believe it or not, I even made a goal. Then I was so surprised at myself, I looked straight into the camera. But I was always horseback riding since I was a child. As a matter of fact, I have some blue ribbons, and I am very proud of that. But my other pride is fencing.

MURROW: Fencing?

GABOR: Yes. When I was a little girl I even won some medals in fencing, and now my daughter, Francesca, who I want you to meet, takes fencing lessons by Mr. Windsor, a very famous Hungarian fencing teacher here. Can I bring her in and introduce her to you?

MURROW: Please do. Please do.

GABOR: Francesca. (Calls daughter.) And this is my great big daughter. Say hello to Mr. Murrow---

FRANCESCA: Hello.

GABOR: ---and sit down.

MURROW: Hello, Francesca. That's a very pretty

the mallets. I want to show you my mallet -- okay?

MURROW: Yes. I would like you to prove that.

(Gabor goes into house.)

GABOR: Well, now here's my mallet, and just about a month ago I made a television film and played polo with two teams. They were all men and I was the only woman, and believe it or not, I even made a goal. Then I was so surprised at myself, I looked straight into the camera. But I was always horseback riding since I was a child. As a matter of fact, I have some blue ribbons, and I am very proud of that. But my other pride is fencing.

MURROW: Fencing?

GABOR: Yes. When I was a little girl I even won some medals in fencing, and now my daughter, Francesca, who I want you to meet, takes fencing lessons by Mr. Windsor, a very famous Hungarian fencing teacher here. Can I bring her in and introduce her to you?

MURROW: Please do. Please do.

GABOR: Francesca. (Calls daughter.) And this is my great big daughter. Say hello to Mr. Murrow---

FRANCESCA: Hello.

GABOR: ---and sit down.

MURROW: Hello, Francesca. That's a very pretty dress you're wearing. Did you pick it out yourself?

FRANCESCA: Yes. Thank you.

MURROW: Zsa Zsa?

GABOR: Yes?

MURROW: Do you find it difficult to pursue a career and raise a child at the same time?

GABOR: Well, to tell you the truth, Ed, it's not easy because when I'm so place like in Rome or Paris making a picture, I wake up in the night worrying if she gets enough attention, even though she does because I have wonderful people around me. But it is not easy to raise a little girl of 12 and also work as hard as I do, but I think I manage pretty well. I don't like to tell it to her, but I think she has pretty good manners.

MURROW: Francesca, tell me: have you thought about what you would like to do when you finish school?

FRANCESCA: I would like to be an actress.

MURROW: You would.

GABOR: When you finish school this summer already?

MURROW: Francesca, now I'm sure you'll tell me the truth. Your mother says she's pretty good at fencing. Is she or is she just fooling me about it?

FRANCESCA: No, she's very good.

dress you're wearing. Did you pick it out yourself?

FRANCESCA: Yes. Thank you.

MURROW: Yes Yes?

GABOR: Yes?

MURROW: Do you find it difficult to pursue a career and raise a child at the same time?

GABOR: Well, to tell you the truth, Ed, it's not easy because when I'm so place like in Rome or Paris making a picture, I wake up in the night worrying if she gets enough attention, even though she does because I have wonderful people around me. But it is not easy to raise a little girl of 12 and also work as hard as I do, but I think I manage pretty well. I don't like to tell it to her, but I think she has pretty good manners.

MURROW: Francesca, tell me: have you thought about what you would like to do when you finish school?

FRANCESCA: I would like to be an actress.

MURROW: You would.

GABOR: When you finish school this summer already?

MURROW: Francesca, now I'm sure you'll tell me the truth. Your mother says she's pretty good at fencing. Is she or is she just fooling me about it?

FRANCESCA: No, she's very good.

MURROW: Is she!

GABOR: Francesca, why don't you run along and bring some of our swords and we'll show Ed what we can do. Go on.

MURROW: Now be very careful, Francesca.

GABOR: Yes, I hope so myself, Ed. Thank you, darling. (Gabor and Francesca take fencing positions.) Now, on guard. Pardon me. That's the one. On guard, please. Beautifully. On guard. Now touche commun. There you are. Once again. There. She's just taking lessons. Now say nicely good bye in fencing. But we can fence better than that. Come here, darling.

MURROW: It's a little dangerous without the masks, though, isn't it?

GABOR: Yes, it is. Actually, one should never fence without a mask, only with a man if one doesn't have a sword in one's hand.

MURROW: All right, I'm convinced. Incidentally, that must make a novel way to entertain house guests, and I assume, Zsa Zsa, that when you are at home you do quite a bit of entertaining, don't you?

GABOR: Yes, I do. As a matter of fact, I adore it. Usually I do it out on my terrace, and I have the whole

MURROW: Is she!

GABOR: Francesca, why don't you run along and bring some of our swords and we'll show Ed what we can do. Go on.

MURROW: Now be very careful, Francesca.

GABOR: Yes, I hope so myself, Ed. Thank you, darling. (Gabor and Francesca take fencing positions.) Now, on guard. Pardon me. That's the one. On guard, please. Beautifully. On guard. Now touche commun. There you are. Once again. There. She's just taking lessons. Now say nicely good bye in fencing. But we can fence better than that. Come here, darling.

MURROW: It's a little dangerous without the masks, though, isn't it?

GABOR: Yes, it is. Actually, one should never fence without a mask, only with a man if one doesn't have a sword in one's hand.

MURROW: All right, I'm convinced. Incidentally, that must make a novel way to entertain house guests, and I assume, Zsa Zsa, that when you are at home you do quite a bit of entertaining, don't you?

GABOR: Yes, I do. As a matter of fact, I adore it. Usually I do it out on my terrace, and I have the whole thing sort of closed in with cellophane. You know, the silly Hollywood parties you read about. This is one of my parties. I am going to show you now my dining room, and I like the most to entertain there. Now, here's my dining room and I love to give sort of informal little dinner parties for 12 or 10 people. Then you really can fence with words, you know, Ed.

MURROW: It is a very attractive room.

GABOR: Do you like it? Thank you. I have lots of silver which I collected all over the world, you know -- antiques.

MURROW: Zsa Zsa, when was the last time you were in your kitchen?

GABOR: Where's the kitchen, Ed? I'm just pulling your leg. As a matter of fact, I do love to cook, and my whole family says that I am the only one who can cook in my family.

MURROW: Does your family ever agree on any one thing?

GABOR: Oh, Ed, we love each other! We adore our mother, and we love each other, but they all agree that I am the cook, so each time I go to my sisters' homes, I have to go in the kitchen and cook for them.

MURROW: All right, Zsa Zsa, so you play polo and thing sort of closed in with cellophane. You know, the silly Hollywood parties you read about. This is one of my parties. I am going to show you now my dining room, and I like the most to entertain there. Now, here's my dining room and I love to give sort of informal little dinner parties for 12 or 10 people. Then you really can fence with words, you know, Ed.

MURROW: It is a very attractive room.

GABOR: Do you like it? Thank you. I have lots of silver which I collected all over the world, you know -- antiques.

MURROW: Zsa Zsa, when was the last time you were in your kitchen?

GABOR: Where's the kitchen, Ed? I'm just pulling your leg. As a matter of fact, I do love to cook, and my whole family says that I am the only one who can cook in my family.

MURROW: Does your family ever agree on any one thing?

GABOR: Oh, Ed, we love each other! We adore our mother, and we love each other, but they all agree that I am the cook, so each time I go to my sisters' homes, I have to go in the kitchen and cook for them.

MURROW: All right, Zsa Zsa, so you play polo and you fence, and you like to cook. No other hobbies?

GABOR: Oh, yes, I do have other hobbies. I collect paintings. I will show you now one of my favorite paintings. I also paint myself but I have so little time to do that, I am afraid, that I prefer to buy paintings all around the world when I travel, you know. Here is one of my favorite ones painted by a countryman of mine, Fried Paul. He took a subject of the Moulin Rouge picture. Remember what I was doing? And this is the can-can dance.

MURROW: Yes.

GABOR: This always makes me very happy because that is my favorite and the first film I ever made -- "Moulin Rouge."

MURROW: Very nice. Zsa Zsa, with the heavy schedule you have, you probably don't get to paint as much as you would like to, but I am sure you do get to meet a lot of interesting people. Isn't that the phrase?

GABOR: Oh, yes, interesting and famous people. Not all famous people are interesting, though, but the ones I am going to show you a picture of, I think, were very famous and very interesting. This was years ago when I was a little girl. I was the only woman, I think, in the world or man, who took a picture of George Bernard Shaw and H.G. Wells together.

you fence, and you like to cook. No other hobbies?

GABOR: Oh, yes, I do have other hobbies. I collect paintings. I will show you now one of my favorite paintings. I also paint myself but I have so little time to do that, I am afraid, that I prefer to buy paintings all around the world when I travel, you know. Here is one of my favorite ones painted by a countryman of mine, Fried Paul. He took a subject of the Moulin Rouge picture. Remember what I was doing? And this is the can-can dance.

MURROW: Yes.

GABOR: This always makes me very happy because that is my favorite and the first film I ever made -- "Moulin Rouge."

MURROW: Very nice. Zsa Zsa, with the heavy schedule you have, you probably don't get to paint as much as you would like to, but I am sure you do get to meet a lot of interesting people. Isn't that the phrase?

GABOR: Oh, yes, interesting and famous people. Not all famous people are interesting, though, but the ones I am going to show you a picture of, I think, were very famous and very interesting. This was years ago when I was a little girl. I was the only woman, I think, in the world or man, who took a picture of George Bernard Shaw and H.G. Wells together.

MURROW: Very unusual.

GABOR: It is and I am very proud of it too.

MURROW: Zsa Zsa, that's the serious side about you, but what's important to you?

GABOR: Well, I think the most important thing to me is to raise my child right and beautifully, and so that she should be able to stand on her own when she will be 19 years old.

MURROW: Now, I remember when you were first on television you did a program giving advice to others. Is that right?

GABOR: Yes.

MURROW: Well, now what's the best advice you ever got?

GABOR: Well, I think the best advice I ever got was -- you know, I was raised in Budapest -- all of us -- and we were lucky children because our parents were well-to-do. Naturally, the war arrived and we lost everything, but thank goodness somebody was giving advice when I came to America that everybody should have a profession in life, men and women. You see, I know in Europe girls are not raised to have a profession. They are raised to be pretty---

MURROW: Yes?

GABOR: ---know languages, to be a good hostess and

MURROW: Very unusual.

GABOR: It is and I am very proud of it too.

MURROW: Yes Yes, that's the serious side about you, but what's important to you?

GABOR: Well, I think the most important thing to me is to raise my child right and beautifully, and so that she should be able to stand on her own when she will be 19 years old.

MURROW: Now, I remember when you were first on television you did a program giving advice to others. Is that right?

GABOR: Yes.

MURROW: Well, now what's the best advice you ever got?

GABOR: Well, I think the best advice I ever got was -- you know, I was raised in Budapest -- all of us -- and we were lucky children because our parents were well-to-do. Naturally, the war arrived and we lost everything, but thank goodness somebody was giving advice when I came to America that everybody should have a profession in life, men and women. You see, I know in Europe girls are not raised to have a profession. They are raised to be pretty---

MURROW: Yes?

GABOR: ---know languages, to be a good hostess and be married. But that is not enough of a profession I found out, so I am so happy that I learned my profession and I can be self-supporting. And I think all the young girls who are listening in tonight, I think that would be the best to know: that one should know one thing. I don't know which one they choose, but they should be self-reliable because what you learn nobody can take away from you. Money can come and go, you know that.

MURROW: Zsa Zsa, is there anything in the entertainment world that you haven't done that you would like to do?

GABOR: Yes, I'm dying to do a play on Broadway, and, as a matter of fact, I am reading right now three scripts. They want me to do a play on Broadway. But my biggest wish in life and you will laugh now, Ed -- I want to make a western movie.

MURROW: A western movie? I think it's an excellent idea.

GABOR: I would adore to make a western movie, and I can ride very well, so why can't I have a western drawl? I can also whirl a gun. I learned that the other day.

MURROW: Well, we should change the normal plot and you can come riding in waving a saber instead of a six-gun, you be married. But that is not enough of a profession I found out, so I am so happy that I learned my profession and I can be self-supporting. And I think all the young girls who are listening in tonight, I think that would be the best to know: that one should know one thing. I don't know which one they choose, but they should be self-reliable because what you learn nobody can take away from you. Money can come and go, you know that.

MURROW: Zsa Zsa, is there anything in the entertainment world that you haven't done that you would like to do?

GABOR: Yes, I'm dying to do a play on Broadway, and, as a matter of fact, I am reading right now three scripts. They want me to do a play on Broadway. But my biggest wish in life and you will laugh now, Ed -- I want to make a western movie.

MURROW: A western movie? I think it's an excellent idea.

GABOR: I would adore to make a western movie, and I can ride very well, so why can't I have a western dress? I can also whirl a gun. I learned that the other day.

MURROW: Well, we should change the normal plot and you can come riding in waving a saber instead of a six-gun, you see.

GABOR: No, I would like to use a gun, and I want to play Annie Oakley. Actually, I do want to play Annie Oakley.

MURROW: I hope you do. Zsa Zsa, thank you very much for letting us come to visit with you tonight.

GABOR: Thank you.

MURROW: I hope you have a safe trip East tonight or tomorrow, whenever you're coming.

GABOR: Tomorrow.

MURROW: Tomorrow. And will you say good night to Francesca for us?

GABOR: I will. And thank you very much to come and visit me, Ed.

MURROW: Thank you, Zsa Zsa.

GABOR: Good night.

MURROW: Good night.

In just a moment we will take you for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Loeb right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Gerald M. Loeb is said to be one of the most astute tenants of that neighborhood called Wall Street.

see.

GABOR: No, I would like to see a gun, and I went to play Annie Oakley. Actually, I do want to play Annie Oak-ley.

MURROW: I hope you do. Zsa Zsa, thank you very much for letting us come to visit with you tonight.

GABOR: Thank you.

MURROW: I hope you have a safe trip East tonight or tomorrow, whenever you're coming.

GABOR: Tomorrow.

MURROW: Tomorrow. And will you say good night to Francesca for us?

GABOR: I will. And thank you very much to come and visit me, Ed.

MURROW: Thank you, Zsa Zsa.

GABOR: Good night.

MURROW: Good night.

In just a moment we will take you for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Loeb right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Gerald M. Loeb is said to be one of the most astute tenants of that neighborhood called Wall Street.

He's a stockbroker and a partner of the E.F. Hutton and Company. He was born in San Francisco 59 years ago; went into the securities business there when he was 21. His first job lasted, I think he told me, three days. His second position lasted less than a year. His next job with the Hutton Company has now lasted 38 years, and today he's probably the most quoted financial expert on Wall Street.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald M. Loeb leave their New York apartment every Friday afternoon to spend weekends in this Oriental-style house in Redding, Connecticut. It's, on, about 55 acres of wooded land five-eighths of a mile from the main road, and about two hours away from Wall Street.

Good evening, Mrs. Loeb.

MRS. LOEB: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Mr. Loeb.

LOEB: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Mrs. Loeb, your home looks like a very comfortable place to get away from it all.

MRS. LOEB: Well, it certainly is, and we enjoy it very much after the tensions of Wall Street -- at least my husband's tensions. Would you like to see some more of it?

MURROW: Yes. I wanted to ask Mr. Loeb if your country house couldn't be the perfect place for retirement if

He's a stockbroker and a partner of the E.F. Hutton and Company. He was born in San Francisco 59 years ago; went into the securities business there when he was 21. His first job lasted, I think he told me, three days. His second position lasted less than a year. His next job with the Hutton Company has now lasted 38 years, and today he's probably the most quoted financial expert on Wall Street.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald M. Loeb leave their New York apartment every Friday afternoon to spend weekends in this Oriental-style house in Redding, Connecticut. It's, on, about 55 acres of wooded land five-eighths of a mile from the main road, and about two hours away from Wall Street.

Good evening, Mrs. Loeb.

MRS. LOEB: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Mr. Loeb.

LOEB: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: Mrs. Loeb, your home looks like a very comfortable place to get away from it all.

MRS. LOEB: Well, it certainly is, and we enjoy it very much after the tensions of Wall Street -- at least my husband's tensions. Would you like to see some more of it?

MURROW: Yes. I wanted to ask Mr. Loeb if your country house couldn't be the perfect place for retirement if you were of the retiring kind.

MRS. LOEB: Oh, it would be lovely if we were a little bit older.

LOEB: My country house? I really would prefer the stock exchange. I had an idea some years ago of buying a seat there for retirement and just staying on the floor.

MURROW: Just staying there and watching the proceedings, huh?

LOEB: Well, participating sometimes.

MURROW: I get the impression that you are rather fond of your job.

LOEB: I am very fond of my job, but, of course, it is a very fascinating job. The curtain goes up every morning with a different scene and then there are people coming from all over the world. I think I value my lunchtime with all the different types of people I'm with very much.

MURROW: Mr. Loeb, your attitude toward people reminds me of a very intriguing thought that I found in your book, "Battle For Investment Survival." You say, "The individual who does his own thinking must learn to question most mass movements of majority point of view for they are usually wrong." I wonder if you meant that only in terms of investments or as a general rule.

you were of the retiring kind.

MRS. LOEB: Oh, it would be lovely if we were a little bit older.

LOEB: My country house? I really would prefer the stock exchange. I had an idea some years ago of buying a seat there for retirement and just staying on the floor.

MURROW: Just staying there and watching the proceedings, huh?

LOEB: Well, participating sometimes.

MURROW: I get the impression that you are rather fond of your job.

LOEB: I am very fond of my job, but, of course, it is a very fascinating job. The curtain goes up every morning with a different scene and then there are people coming from all over the world. I think I value my lunchtime with all the different types of people I'm with very much.

MURROW: Mr. Loeb, your attitude toward people reminds me of a very intriguing thought that I found in your book, "Battle For Investment Survival." You say, "The individual who does his own thinking must learn to question most mass movements of majority point of view for they are usually wrong." I wonder if you meant that only in terms of investments or as a general rule.

LOEB: Well, I meant that in all terms, but it has to be pretty well understood. You see, at the beginning of mass movements it pays very well to follow along. It's at the end of mass movements when they come to an end, and people shift, that you really have to be careful. Otherwise you might lose a great deal of money.

MURROW: And that's not a good thing for an investment man to do, is it?

LOEB: That's exactly what we try to avoid.

MURROW: Mr. Loeb, I know that the stock exchange is not your only interest. You're active in the New York March of Dimes campaign, aren't you?

LOEB: Well, that's true. I had infantile paralysis when I was a boy, and I was very fortunate in being cured, and I have been interested all these years in it, and today it just so happens that I have a telegram appointing me general chairman for the new March of Dimes for next year in New York City. Of course, the March of Dimes is more interested in all types of crippling, not simply polio.

MURROW: Well, that means more work for you, and I am sure the campaign will be a success. Mrs. Loeb, whose idea was your Oriental house, and exactly where are we now?

MRS. LOEB: Well, we are just in the bedroom-sitting

LOEB: Well, I meant that in all terms, but it has to be pretty well understood. You see, at the beginning of mass movements it pays very well to follow along. It's at the end of mass movements when they come to an end, and people shift, that you really have to be careful. Otherwise you might lose a great deal of money.

MURROW: And that's not a good thing for an investment man to do, is it?

LOEB: That's exactly what we try to avoid.

MURROW: Mr. Loeb, I know that the stock exchange is not your only interest. You're active in the New York March of Dimes campaign, aren't you?

LOEB: Well, that's true. I had infantile paralysis when I was a boy, and I was very fortunate in being cured, and I have been interested all these years in it, and today it just so happens that I have a telegram appointing me general chairman for the new March of Dimes for next year in New York City. Of course, the March of Dimes is more interested in all types of crippling, not simply polio.

MURROW: Well, that means more work for you, and I am sure the campaign will be a success. Mrs. Loeb, whose idea was your Oriental house, and exactly where are we now?

MRS. LOEB: Well, we are just in the bedroom-sitting room which we sometimes use as a cocktail lounge, or for tea in the afternoon, or cocktails out on the little terrace. But it was my husband's idea, I think, as a compliment to me. It was quite a surprise. Harwell Harris was the architect that did it.

MURROW: Oh, yes. Could we see a little more of what you two have created?

MRS. LOEB: Well, this is the bedroom-sitting room, and this is the dressing room that leads to our guest room dressing room if they come and visit us occasionally.

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. LOEB: And then will you take them over here and show them the beautiful---

LOEB: This is the tearoom now. Show them the kitchen.

MRS. LOEB: This is the kitchen which we use for cocktails -- to make cocktails or cheese and we carry it on upstairs if we have to occasionally.

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. LOEB: And it's very handy for drinks and that sort of thing. Sometimes we make breakfast upstairs if we feel like it.

LOEB: Of course, here's where I bring the office room which we sometimes use as a cocktail lounge, or for tea in the afternoon, or cocktails out on the little terrace. But it was my husband's idea, I think, as a compliment to me. It was quite a surprise. Harwell Harris was the architect that did it.

MURROW: Oh, yes. Could we see a little more of what you two have created?

MRS. LOWE: Well, this is the bedroom-sitting room, and this is the dressing room that leads to our guest room dressing room if they come and visit us occasionally.

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. LOWE: And then will you take them over here and show them the beautiful---

LOWE: This is the bedroom now. Show them the kitchen.

MRS. LOWE: This is the kitchen which we use for cocktails -- to make cocktails or cheese and we carry it on upstairs if we have to occasionally.

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. LOWE: And it's very handy for drinks and that sort of thing. Sometimes we make breakfast upstairs if we feel like it.

LOWE: Of course, here's where I bring the office into the living room, I guess. There's a typewriter and dictating machine underneath.

MURROW: Is it always that neat and tidy?

LOEB: Well, I think it's a little untidy tonight, as a matter of fact, but they say it's neat. Here are some of the ornaments which Mrs. Loeb brought back from China. These two particularly were a gift from Chiang Kai-shek.

MURROW: Oh, yes. They're beautiful. Well, what about the rest of the house? Could we see a little more?

MRS. LOEB: Yes, if you'd like.

LOEB: We will go downstairs.

MRS. LOEB: We'll go right down here. (Mr. and Mrs. Loeb go downstairs.)

MURROW: Oh, yes. That looks like a Korean door.

MRS. LOEB: Well, it---

LOEB: It's hard not to bunk your head.

MRS. LOEB: It certainly is.

MURROW: Mrs. Loeb, I am sure you will have a very busy weekend or a series of them this summer, won't you?

MRS. LOEB: Oh, yes. We'll have a great many guests but then we do have at times just the two of us. We have quiet and peace. But this is the bowling alley where Mr. Loeb and I keep ourselves looking so slender.

into the living room, I guess. There's a typewriter and dictating machine underneath.

MURROW: Is it always that neat and tidy?

LOEB: Well, I think it's a little untidy tonight, as a matter of fact, but they say it's neat. Here are some of the ornaments which Mrs. Loeb brought back from China. These two particularly were a gift from Chiang Kai-shek.

MURROW: Oh, yes. They're beautiful. Well, what about the rest of the house? Could we see a little more?

MRS. LOEB: Yes, if you'd like.

LOEB: We will go downstairs.

MRS. LOEB: We'll go right down here. (Mr. and Mrs. Loeb go downstairs.)

MURROW: Oh, yes. That looks like a Korean door.

MRS. LOEB: Well, it---

LOEB: It's hard not to bunk your head.

MRS. LOEB: It certainly is.

MURROW: Mrs. Loeb, I am sure you will have a very busy weekend or a series of them this summer, won't you?

MRS. LOEB: Oh, yes. We'll have a great many guests but then we do have at times just the two of us. We have quiet and peace. But this is the bowling alley where Mr. Loeb and I keep ourselves looking so slender.

MURROW: A bowling alley?

MRS. LOEB: Yes, right here.

MURROW: Now I can see how both of you keep in shape. Mr. Loeb, will you roll a strike for us?

LOEB: I don't know about the strike but we'll take a chance and see what happens. (Throws bowling ball down the alley.) It looks pretty good.

MRS. LOEB: Wonderful.

LOEB: No, that's a spare.

MURROW: Do you want to take the spare?

LOEB: No. I think that's a little more difficult. This is really not fair. (Rolls second ball.)

MURROW: Oh, got it!

LOEB: I never made it before.

MRS. LOEB: Good for you.

MURROW: Thanks very much. Mr. Loeb, I didn't know you were a bowler, although I have heard you referred to as -- what was it? "A one-man consumer research bureau." Is that right?

LOEB: Well, yes, some people call it that. Some people think I am a one-man nuisance being too critical about things, but I do look into all sorts of things: hearing aids, tires, automobiles.

MURROW: A bowling alley?

MRS. LOEB: Yes, right here.

MURROW: Now I can see how both of you keep in shape. Mr. Loeb, will you roll a strike for us?

LOEB: I don't know about the strike but we'll take a chance and see what happens. (Throws bowling ball down the alley.) It looks pretty good.

MRS. LOEB: Wonderful.

LOEB: No, that's a spare.

MURROW: Do you want to take the spare?

LOEB: No. I think that's a little more difficult. This is really not fair. (Rolls second ball.)

MURROW: Oh, got it!

LOEB: I never made it before.

MRS. LOEB: Good for you.

MURROW: Thanks very much. Mr. Loeb, I didn't know you were a bowler, although I have heard you referred to as -- what was it? "A one-man consumer research bureau." Is that right?

LOEB: Well, yes, some people call it that. Some people think I am a one-man nuisance being too critical about things, but I do look into all sorts of things: hearing aids, tires, automobiles.

MURROW: And you really check them out yourself, do you?

LOEB: I really check them out myself.

MURROW: Mrs. Loeb, it must be a great convenience for you being married to a perfectionist, isn't it?

MRS. LOEB: In some ways it's wonderful, only rather hard when breakfast is at six o'clock and I get there at 7:59. He doesn't like that too well, but I pay no attention whatever.

MURROW: Is it true that he has clocks all around the house?

MRS. LOEB: Yes, and it's a great joy, as a matter of fact. I always know what time it is. If we're away for six weeks, the first thing that's done is the clocks are all put in order regularly.

MURROW: How did you become so time conscious, Mr. Loeb?

LOEB: Well, down at the E.F. Hutton Company we sort of measure time with clocks that stand for every one-tenth of a minute. It can cost the client a great deal of money if there is any delay. But I have always been very, very time conscious.

MURROW: Now, Mr. Loeb, you are on record as say-

MURROW: And you really check them out yourself, do you?

LOEB: I really check them out myself.

MURROW: Mrs. Loeb, it must be a great convenience for you being married to a perfectionist, isn't it?

MRS. LOEB: In some ways it's wonderful, only rather hard when breakfast is at six o'clock and I get there at 7:59. He doesn't like that too well, but I pay no attention whatever.

MURROW: Is it true that he has clocks all around the house?

MRS. LOEB: Yes, and it's a great joy, as a matter of fact. I always know what time it is. If we're away for six weeks, the first thing that's done is the clocks are all put in order regularly.

MURROW: How did you become so time-conscious, Mr. Loeb?

LOEB: Well, down at the E.F. Hutton Company we sort of measure time with clocks that stand for every one-tenth of a minute. It can cost the client a great deal of money if there is any delay. But I have always been very, very time conscious.

MURROW: Now, Mr. Loeb, you are on record as saying, "There is no line of endeavor in the world where real knowledge will pay as rich or quick a monetary reward as Wall Street." What real knowledge should the average person have, and where can he get it? That's a simple question, isn't it?

LOEB: No, I think that's a complicated question. Of course, I think as far as Wall Street is concerned, you first of all have to think of your own abilities. I think the most important knowledge is to assay yourself and see what you are fitted for, but if you are fitted for being an investment expert, or investing as an avocation, why then I think that the most important thing is to make the right contacts so that you can really find out what's going on.

MURROW: Well, sir, I am sure you don't consider speculating in the market the same as gambling, do you?

LOEB: I think it is very, very different. I never gamble anyway. Never have in my life. Speculating is something that you have some control over. You look at certain things, and consider certain facts, and then you try to foresee the future. On the other hand, gambling you have no control over. If someone spins a coin and you just go this way or that, you win or lose.

MURROW: Mr. Loeb, how do you describe the difference between speculating and investing?

ing, "There is no line of endeavor in the world where real knowledge will pay as rich or quick a monetary reward as Wall Street." What real knowledge should the average person have, and where can he get it? That's a simple question, isn't it?

LOEB: No, I think that's a complicated question. Of course, I think as far as Wall Street is concerned, you first of all have to think of your own abilities. I think the most important knowledge is to assay yourself and see what you are fitted for, but if you are fitted for being an investment expert, or investing as an avocation, why then I think that the most important thing is to make the right contacts so that you can really find out what's going on.

MURROW: Well, sir, I am sure you don't consider speculating in the market the same as gambling, do you?

LOEB: I think it is very, very different. I never gamble anyway. Never have in my life. Speculating is something that you have some control over. You look at certain things, and consider certain facts, and then you try to foresee the future. On the other hand, gambling you have no control over. If someone spins a coin and you just go this way or that, you win or lose.

MURROW: Mr. Loeb, how do you describe the difference between speculating and investing?

LOEB: Well, as a matter of fact, I don't describe the difference. Sompe people feel that when they are investing they are looking principally at safety -- they are looking principally at income -- and when you are speculating, you are thinking principally of profits or capital gains, and they are running greater risks. But I think the two should be combined. I don't think there is such a thing as a good investment if it isn't a good speculation. Anything that you buy you should buy with the hope or idea that it will go up. It may not, but that's what you should look forward to.

MURROW: Do you try to make a personal check on your investments?

LOEB: Well, it's part of my business to make a check on our clients' ivestments, and this includes not just poring over balance sheets and so forth. It includes trips to various companies; includes interviewing corporate officers. It includes talking to their competitors and things of that kind. Over here this is a 16 mm. movie screen. It is for cinemascope. I don't take this camera on my trips. I take it on my pleasure trips around the world here and there. Then we also have some Broadway productions here.

MURROW: It looks like a very fine room for showing your movies.

LOKE: Well, as a matter of fact, I don't describe the difference. Some people feel that when they are investing they are looking principally at safety -- they are looking principally at income -- and when you are speculating, you are thinking principally of profits or capital gains, and they are running greater risks. But I think the two should be combined. I don't think there is such a thing as a good investment if it isn't a good speculation. Anything that you buy you should buy with the hope or idea that it will go up. It may not, but that's what you should look forward to.

MURROW: Do you try to make a personal check on your investments?

LOKE: Well, it's part of my business to make a check on our clients' investments, and this includes not just poring over balance sheets and so forth. It includes trips to various companies; includes interviewing corporate officers. It includes talking to their competitors and things of that kind. Over here this is a 16 mm. movie screen. It is for cinemascope. I don't take this camera on my trips. I take it on my pleasure trips around the world here and there. Then we also have some Broadway productions here.

MURROW: It looks like a very fine room for showing your movies.

LOEB: Well, it is a nice room, and, of course, as you can see up here, we sort of like that thatched ceiling that we put up years ago. And the wood here is the outside of an old Colonial barn. All this is hand-pegged and hand-hewn. They say it dates back to Revolutionary days.

MURROW: Mr. Loeb, how do you see the country's economic future?

LOEB: Well, I think the most important thing is how we all look at it. If we are over-confident; if we get soft; if we think that Washington is going to hold our hands; if we think just because we have always come out on top, we will come out on top, I am afraid I can't look at it very optimistically, but if we will be realistic about it, then I think we have the population, the education, the resources -- we have everything to get ahead. That may sound a little old-fashioned, but I think we need a little old-fashioned hard work.

MURROW: Mrs. Loeb, does your husband always manage to remain calm and collected?

MRS. LOEB: Well---

MURROW: Even when he has the responsibility of investing other people's money?

MRS. LOEB: It is a great responsibility when you

LOEB: Well, it is a nice room, and, of course, as you can see up here, we sort of like that thatched ceiling that we put up years ago. And the wood here is the outside of an old Colonial barn. All this is hand-pegged and hand-hewn. They say it dates back to Revolutionary days.

MURROW: Mr. Loeb, how do you see the country's economic future?

LOEB: Well, I think the most important thing is how we all look at it. If we are over-confident; if we get soft; if we think that Washington is going to hold our hands; if we think just because we have always come out on top, we will come out on top, I am afraid I can't look at it very optimistically, but if we will be realistic about it, then I think we have the population, the education, the resources -- we have everything to get ahead. That may sound a little old-fashioned, but I think we need a little old-fashioned hard work.

MURROW: Mrs. Loeb, does your husband always manage to remain calm and collected?

MRS. LOEB: Well---

MURROW: Even when he has the responsibility of investing other people's money?

MRS. LOEB: It is a great responsibility when you are investing other people's money, but he always feels calm and quiet because he does what he can do to the best of his knowledge, and that's really all you can do, and he keeps very calm. I'm the nervous one.

MURROW: And he was calm even during the period in the crash in the 20's?

MRS. LOEB: Well, I wasn't with him at that time, but he certainly was from reputation. He knew what he was doing and he got all his people out, and that's pretty good, I think. That's what I heard.

MURROW: Mrs. Loeb, thank you very much for showing us your home tonight and thank you, Mr. Loeb, very much.

LOEB: Thanks for coming, Ed.

MRS. LOEB: Thank you for coming.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

MRS. LOEB: Good night.

MURROW: Good night. Good night, Mr. Loeb.

LOEB: Good night.

MURROW: I will be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests, and now a word about Kent cigarettes.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be calling on Mrs. Anna Rosenberg, a former Assistant Secretary of Defense, who is now are investing other people's money, but he always feels calm and quiet because he does what he can do to the best of his knowledge, and that's really all you can do, and he keeps very calm. I'm the nervous one.

MURROW: And he was calm even during the period in the crash in the 20's?

MRS. LOEB: Well, I wasn't with him at that time, but he certainly was from reputation. He knew what he was doing and he got all his people out, and that's pretty good, I think. That's what I heard.

MURROW: Mrs. Loeb, thank you very much for showing us your home tonight and thank you, Mr. Loeb, very much.

LOEB: Thanks for coming, Ed.

MRS. LOEB: Thank you for coming.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

MRS. LOEB: Good night.

MURROW: Good night. Good night, Mr. Loeb.

LOEB: Good night.

MURROW: I will be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests, and now a word about Kent cigarettes.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be calling on Mrs. Anna Rosenberg, a former Assistant Secretary of Defense, who is now a public and industrial relations consultant. Mrs. Rosenberg was the first civilian to whom President Eisenhower awarded the Medal of Freedom.

We will also visit with Jerome Robbins, the director-choreographer who created the dances for such shows as "On The Town," "Peter Pan," "The King And I, " and "West Side Story." Mr. Robbins recently directed the new hit show "Gipsy."

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer, and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

---

a public and industrial relations consultant. Mrs. Rosenberg was the first civilian to whom President Eisenhower awarded the Medal of Freedom.

We will also visit with Jerome Robbins, the director-choreographer who created the dances for such shows as "On The Town," "Peter Pan," "The King And I," and "West Side Story." Mr. Robbins recently directed the new hit show "Gypsy."

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer, and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Jerome Robbins, and

Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg.

June 12, 1959 10:30 P.M.

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting first with Jerome Robbins, director and choreographer of Broadway shows. We'll also be calling on Mrs. Anna Rosenberg, former Assistant Secretary of Defense and now a public relations consultant.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

[commercial]

CBS TELEVISION

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Jerome Robbins, and

Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg.

June 12, 1959 10:30 P.M.

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting first with Jerome Robbins, director and choreographer of Broadway shows. We'll also be calling on Mrs. Anna Rosenberg, former Assistant Secretary of Defense and now a public relations consultant.

W We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

[commercial]

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE

144 ROSLYN ROAD
MINEOLA, NEW YORK

LEGAL - ARBITRATIONS - NEGOTIATIONS - CONVENTIONS - CONFERENCES

MURROW: Jerome Robbins has been described as the outstanding director-choreographer in the American theatre today. At the age of forty he can look back on an almost unbroken string of Broadway and ballet hits during, oh, the past fifteen years. It started when Jerry, who was brought up in Weehawken, New Jersey, where he still makes his home, created the ballet "Fancy Free," - Robbins followed this with the dances for "On The Town," "High Button Shoes," "Call Me Madam," "The King and I," and then he directed and did the dances for "Peter Pan," "Bells are Ringing" and currently "Gypsy," and "West Side Story," both enjoying great success here and in London. Todate it has certainly be quite a career for the youngster who spent one year at college studying chemistry.

When Jerome Robbins is not in his Jersey home, traveling in Europe, with the ballet company, or trying out plays in New Haven or Philadelphia, he makes his headquarters in that building between the trees on Manhattan's East side. Evening, Jerry.

ROBBINS: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: What are you up to tonight?

ROBBINS: I am just sitting nervously waiting for

MURROW: Jerome Robbins has been described as the outstanding director-choreographer in the American theatre today. At the age of forty he can look back on an almost unbroken string of Broadway and ballet hits during, on, the past fifteen years. It started when Jerry, who was brought up in Weehawken, New Jersey, where he still makes his home, created the ballet "Fancy Free." - Robbins followed this with the dances for "On The Town," "High Button Shoes," "Call Me Madam," "The King and I," and then he directed and did the dances for "Peter Pan," "Bells are Ringing" and currently "Gypsy," and "West Side Story," both enjoying great success here and in London. Todate it has certainly be quite a career for the youngster who spent one year at college studying chemistry.

When Jerome Robbins is not in his Jersey home, travelling in Europe, with the ballet company, or trying out plays in New Haven or Philadelphia, he makes his headquarters in that building between the trees on Manhattan's East side. Evening, Jerry.

ROBBINS: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: What are you up to tonight?

ROBBINS: I am just sitting nervously waiting for you to arrive.

MURROW: Jerry, I have heard from some former guests on this program like Ethel Merman and Mary Martin that as a director you can be one of the toughest men they have ever met in the theatre. True or false?

ROBBINS: Guilty, guilty, guilty, guilty.

MURROW: All right, now, we'll give you equal time to comment on both of your admirers. How about Merman and Martin?

ROBBINS: Oh, they are absolutely wonderful people and wonderful people to work with; they are creators, direct, truthful, fresh and I have loved every experience I have had dealing with them.

MURROW: You know I think it was just about a year ago that I read about an unequaled record, one that you had set for Broadway, I think five theatres playing Robbins ballets or musical productions. What have you got going now?

ROBBINS: Well, "Gypsy" which just opened and "West Side Story" and over at The City Center, the New York City Ballet Company is performing some of my ballets; out on the coast, "Bells are Ringing" is playing and over in London, "West Side Story" is playing" and currently I am rehearsing a

you to arrive.

MURROW: Jerry, I have heard from some former guests on this program like Ethel Merman and Mary Martin that as a director you can be one of the toughest men they have ever met in the theatre. True or false?

ROBBINS: Guilty, guilty, guilty, guilty.

MURROW: All right, now, we'll give you equal time to comment on both of your admirers. How about Merman and Martin?

ROBBINS: Oh, they are absolutely wonderful people and wonderful people to work with; they are creators, direct, truthful, fresh and I have loved every experience I have had dealing with them.

MURROW: You know I think it was just about a year ago that I read about an unequaled record, one that you had set for Broadway. I think five theatres playing Robbins ballets or musical productions. What have you got going now?

ROBBINS: Well, "Gypsy" which just opened and "West Side Story" and over at The City Center, the New York City Ballet Company is performing some of my ballets; out on the coast, "Bells are Ringing" is playing and over in London, "West Side Story" is playing" and currently I am rehearsing a ballet company to take to Europe.

MURROW: Jerry, just how did a young chemistry student find his way into choreography?

ROBBINS: Well, I was always interested in theatre, Ed, and I went to college for a year and the money gave out so then I thought I would try the theatre because I loved it. My sister was a dancer so I went that way first and began studying, getting jobs in the chorus, in the Borscht Circuit, finally in a ballet company, and finally got a chance to do a ballet and conduct a show and from that to directing.

MURROW: Then what was your next big experience?

ROBBINS: After directing I am just here now.

MURROW: Didn't you play the Borscht Circuit with Danny Kaye at one time?

ROBBINS: Yes, I spent about four or five summers at T- with Sammy Kaye and Imogene Coco. That was a very valuable experience. We did all sorts of shows then and that is where I first thought of the new choreography.

MURROW: But now I suppose things are rather quieter than when they were in those hectic days, weren't they?

ROBBINS: Well, not very much, Ed, because shows are just as difficult to do as anything else. This looks like ballet company to take to Europe.

MURROW: Jerry, just how did a young chemistry student find his way into choreography?

ROBBINS: Well, I was always interested in theatre, Ed, and I went to college for a year and the money gave out so then I thought I would try the theatre because I loved it. My sister was a dancer so I went that way first and began studying, getting jobs in the chorus, in the Borscht circuit, finally in a ballet company, and finally got a chance to do a ballet and conduct a show and from that to directing.

MURROW: Then what was your next big experience?

ROBBINS: After directing I am just here now.

MURROW: Didn't you play the Borscht Circuit with Danny Kaye at one time?

ROBBINS: Yes, I spent about four or five summers at T- with Sammy Kaye and Imogene Coco. That was a very valuable experience. We did all sorts of shows then and that is where I first thought of the new choreography.

MURROW: But now I suppose things are rather quieter than when they were in those hectic days, weren't they?

ROBBINS: Well, not very much, Ed, because shows are just as difficult to do as anything else. This looks like a quiet room but usually it is filled with pacing people, like over there might be Arthur L- or Stephen H- clutching their brows in despair or jumping up with great ideas and over here Leonard Bernstein or J- will be writing a score but the center of the rug is worn out from pacing, mostly by me, I'm afraid.

MURROW: Is all your work here devoted to the theatre?

ROBBINS: No, Ed, I have a hobby and an antidote to the theatre right in here. This is my dark room, Ed. I call it an antidote for the theatre because I work here alone, I work here quietly, I work here without time pressure and if there is anything I don't like I can throw it out and not have to worry about it. I can make my own mistakes and don't have to show them in front of the public. Would you like to see some of my pictures?

MURROW: Yes, I would. No consultations or committee meetings?

ROBBINS: No.

MURROW: All on your own?

ROBBINS: Yes. This is a cat that I took in Venice. Here is a clown from the circus.

a quiet room but usually it is filled with passing people, like even there might be Arthur L- or Stephen K-stretching their brows in despair or jumping up with great frown and over here Leonard Bernstein or J-will be writing a score but the center of the rug is worn out from pacing, mostly by me, I'm afraid.

MURROW: Is all your work here devoted to the theatre?

ROBBINS: No, Ed, I have a hobby and an antidote to the theatre night in here. This is my dark room, Ed. I call it an antidote for the theatre because I work here alone, work here quietly, I work here without time pressure and if there is anything I don't like I can throw it out and not have to worry about it. I can make my own mistakes and not have the show seen in front of the public. Would you like to see some of my pictures?

MURROW: Yes, I would. No communications or committee meetings?

ROBBINS: No.

MURROW: All on your own?

ROBBINS: Yes. This is a set that I have in Venice. Here is a clown from the circus.

MURROW: Oh, very nice.

ROBBINS: This is one of my favorite pictures, A-

MURROW: Oh, lovely. You are not by any chance planning another career as a photographer, are you?

ROBBINS: No, Ed, I have had pictures printed in Harpers Bazaar and Life but I want to keep it away from business and make it really unpressured.

MURROW: Tell me, how do you keep track of your various projects in rehearsal, in being at home and abroad?

ROBBINS: Well, right in here I have an office and this is where I keep track of everything, Ed. Over there is a schedule for a full years work, starts about a year ago, and ends about right now, went through a trip to Europe, "West Side Story," "Gypsy," and rehearsals currently. Over here are projects that I hope to do some day, mostly dreams, some of them I'll get to do, ballets, plays, other ideas. Here are all the shows I have done, starting from "On the Town" in 1944 up to "Gypsy" now.

MURROW: Jerry, I have heard it said that Jerry Robbins' career has known only successes. Haven't you had even a partial flop?

MURROW: Oh, very nice.

ROBBINS: This is one of my favorite pictures.

-A-

MURROW: Oh, lovely. You are not by any chance planning another career as a photographer, are you?

ROBBINS: No, Ed, I have had pictures printed in Harpers Bazaar and Life but I want to keep it away from business and make it really unpressured.

MURROW: Tell me, how do you keep track of your various projects in rehearsal, in being at home and abroad?

ROBBINS: Well, right in here I have an office and this is where I keep track of everything, Ed. Over there is a schedule for a full years work, starts about a year ago, and ends about right now, went through a trip to Europe, "West Side Story," "Gypsy," and rehearsals currently. Over here are projects that I hope to do some day, mostly dreams, some of them I'll get to do, ballets, plays, other ideas. Here are all the shows I have done, starting from "On the Town" in 1944 up to "Gypsy" now.

MURROW: Jerry, I have heard it said that Jerry Robbins' career has known only successes. Haven't you had even a partial flop?

ROBBINS: Oh, I have had some big splashes, Ed. The first thing, as a matter of fact the first things I ever did in any field I ever attempted were pretty disastrous. The first time I danced the review said I hindered my partner more than I helped her. The first choreography I did, I did a night club number for Imogene Coco and it was taken off after one performance. It didn't even last the night. As a director in 1948 I directed a show called, "That's the Ticket" and it closed out of town real fast.

MURROW: No other flops?

ROBBINS: [knocks on wood]

MURROW: Jerry, is this your work room we are in now?

ROBBINS: No, this is where my secretary works. I work mostly upstairs and up there I've collected a lot of things from different shows I have been in, different trips I have taken. Here are some costume sketches by R- for the "West Side Story" ---

MURROW: Yes.

ROBBINS: --- this is from "Ballet U. S. A."

MURROW: Jerry, you have done just about everything from classical ballet to jazz works. Do you have any ROBBINS: Oh, I have had some big splashes, Ed. The first thing, as a matter of fact the first thing I ever did in any field I ever attempted were pretty disastrous. The first time I danced the review said I hindered my partner more than I helped her. The first choreography I did, I did a night club number for Imogene Coco and it was taken off after one performance. It didn't even last the night. As a director in 1948 I directed a show called, "That's the Ticket" and it closed out of town real fast.

MURROW: No other flops?

ROBBINS: [knocks on wood]

MURROW: Jerry, is this your work room we are in now?

ROBBINS: No, this is where my secretary works. I work mostly upstairs and up there I've collected a lot of things from different shows I have been in, different trips I have taken. Here are some costume sketches by R- for the "West Side Story" ---

MURROW: Yes.

ROBBINS: --- this is from "Ballet U. S. A."

MURROW: Jerry, you have done just about every-thing from classical ballet to jazz works. Do you have any trouble switching hats for the different types of dancing?

ROBBINS: No, Ed, whatever I am working on I work very hard and devote myself to it. I feel I am really very fortunate in being able to direct on Broadway and the ballet field. They call on different parts of me but still I think the American theatre is starting to combine both into one.

MURROW: From the press reports I have seen I gather that the reception given your ballets abroad is as great or greater than that given the Bolshoi Ballet here in New York. Is that correct?

ROBBINS: Well, we had a wonderful success last year, Ed, when we went to the Brussells World's Fair and the audiences were really very enthusiastic. By the way these are Ben S- sketches.

MURROW: Oh, yes, I thought I recognized them, yes.

ROBBINS: They are from the jazz ballet in the company.

MURROW: Tell us a little more about this tour you are going to take in Europe.

ROBBINS: Well, the Government is sending us, ANTA, on a formal tour, about fifteen countries. We are playing all over from Italy to Scotland to Israel, Yugoslavia, trouble switching hats for the different types of dancing?

ROBBINS: No, Ed, whatever I am working on I work very hard and devote myself to it. I feel I am really very fortunate in being able to direct on Broadway and the ballet field. They call on different parts of me but still I think the American theatre is starting to combine both into one.

MURROW: From the press reports I have seen I gather that the reception given your ballets abroad is as great or greater than that given the Bolshoi Ballet here in New York. Is that correct?

ROBBINS: Well, we had a wonderful success last year, Ed, when we went to the Brussells World's Fair and the audiences were really very enthusiastic. By the way these are Ben S- sketches.

MURROW: Oh, yes, I thought I recognized them, yes.

ROBBINS: They are from the jazz ballet in the company.

MURROW: Tell us a little more about this tour you are going to take in Europe.

ROBBINS: Well, the Government is sending us, ANTA, on a formal tour, about fifteen countries. We are playing all over from Italy to Scotland to Israel, Yugoslavia.

Greece and I think it is really wonderful that the Government has done this. I suppose that we understand now the value of dance particularly after the Bolshoi. Of course, the Government has been doing this for a number of years.

MURROW: It is one area where language is no barrier, isn't it?

ROBBINS: None at all and the audience gets to know Americans this way because no matter what country you come from you dance as a product of that country even though the techniques might be the same in every country.

MURROW: Yes. Jerry, did you ever have any trouble in getting dancers for your various productions?

ROBBINS: No, there used to be more trouble than I am faced with now. For example, when we cast "West Side Story" originally, the youngest dancer -- it was about a teen-age gang -- was eighteen years old and when we cast it this Fall to go to London the Youngest dancer was fifteen and the techniques are equally good. Their abilities to communicate on stage are good, they are very strong, almost athletic people who understand at the same time the sensitivity of the dance and theatre.

MURROW: Well, I would suppose that with the

Greece and I think it is really wonderful that the Government has done this. I suppose that we understand now the value of dance particularly after the Bolshoi. Of course, the Government has been doing this for a number of years.

MURROW: It is one area where language is no barrier, isn't it?

ROBBINS: None at all and the audience gets to know Americans this way because no matter what country you come from you dance as a product of that country even though the techniques might be the same in every country.

MURROW: Yes. Jerry, did you ever have any trouble in getting dancers for your various productions?

ROBBINS: No, there used to be more trouble than I am faced with now. For example, when we cast "West Side Story" originally, the youngest dance-- it was about a teen-age gang-- was eighteen years old and when we cast it this Fall to go to London the youngest dancer was fifteen and the techniques are equally good. Their abilities to communicate on stage are good, they are very strong, almost athletic people who understand at the same time the sensitivity of the dance and theatre.

MURROW: Well, I would suppose that with the availability of more dancers you must have big plans for the future.

ROBBINS: Well, some day, Ed, I would like to have a theatre company of my own, that is devoted not just to dancing, but also to all the arts, but my biggest plans for the future are after this four months tour to take a good rest for a while.

MURROW: Well, aside from trying to get a rest, what do you find to be your greatest problem, the most difficult task as a director?

ROBBINS: Well, directing shows, Ed, is like a lot of people getting stuck on fly paper together and you have to find your way out. It is a question of collaboration and we have respect for all the talents and when the opinions differ it can get to be a little difficult. There is also the moment in every show where you find the whole fate of the show depends on the fact that the drummer's sister's wife in Des Moines is going to have a baby. Why this bolluxes everything up I don't know but it always comes around.

MURROW: Jerry, do you have any plans for television work?

ROBBINS: No, I don't right now, Ed. I would like availability of more dancers you must have big plans for the future.

ROBBINS: Well, some day, Ed, I would like to have a theatre company of my own, that is devoted not just to dancing, but also to all the arts, but my biggest plans for the future are after this four months tour to take a good rest for a while.

MURROW: Well, aside from trying to get a rest, what do you find to be your greatest problem, the most difficult task as a director?

ROBBINS: Well, directing shows, Ed, is like a lot of people getting stuck on fly paper together and you have to find your way out. It is a question of collaboration and we have respect for all the talents and when the opinions differ it can get to be a little difficult. There is also the moment in every show where you find the whole fate of the show depends on the fact that the drummer's sister's wife in Des Moines is going to have a baby. Why this bollixes everything up I don't know but it always comes around.

MURROW: Jerry, do you have any plans for television work?

ROBBINS: No, I don't right now, Ed. I would

"Ballet U. S. A." to be seen by the whole country. We started on a tour last year and I think they would certainly appreciate the jazz ballet that we did today.

MURROW: Well, Jerry, much luck to you on this European trip and thank you very much for letting us come and visit you.

ROBBINS: Thank you, Ed. Good night.

MURROW: Thank you very much. Good night.

In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Mrs. Anna Rosenberg immediately after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

[Commercial]

"Ballet U. S. A." to be seen by the whole country. We started on a tour last year and I think they would certainly appreciate the jazz ballet that we did today.

MURROW: Well, Jerry, much luck to you on this European trip and thank you very much for letting us come and visit you.

ROBBINS: Thank you, Ed. Good night.

MURROW: Thank you very much. Good night.

In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Mrs. Anna Rosenberg immediately after a word from Bob W ight speaking for Kent.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg was once described by Bernard Baruch as blessed with the mind of a man and the soft, brown eyes of a woman. During the past twenty-five years she has used these talents plus extraordinary energy to prove that a woman's place is in any job that has to be done in city, state or national government, and, as head of Anna M. Rosenberg Associates, she's also recognized in the business world as an outstanding expert in public relations and labor relations. Mrs. Rosenberg started public service work before she was out of her teens. She served with great distinction in a half dozen agencies, was the first woman to be named an Assistant Secretary of Defense, and the only woman to be awarded both the Medal of Freedom and the Medal of Merit, the country's highest civilian honors.

Anna M. Rosenberg lives in this apartment house in New York City, it's on the upper East side of Central Park and it has been her home for some fifteen years.

Evening, Mrs. Rosenberg.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, I'm fine, thank you, how are you?

MURROW: Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg was once described by Bernard Baruch as blessed with the mind of a man and the soft, brown eyes of a woman. During the past twenty-five years she has used these talents plus extraordinary energy to prove that a woman's place is in any job that has to be done in city, state or national government, and, as head of Anna M. Rosenberg Associates, she's also recognized in the business world as an outstanding expert in public relations and labor relations. Mrs. Rosenberg started public service work before she was out of her teens. She served with great distinction in a half dozen agencies, was the first woman to be named an Assistant Secretary of Defense, and the only woman to be awarded both the Medal of Freedom and the Medal of Merit, the country's highest civilian honors.

Anna M. Rosenberg lives in this apartment house in New York City, it's on the upper East side of Central Park and it has been her home for some fifteen years.

Evening, Mrs. Rosenberg.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Good evening, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, I'm fine, thank you, how are you?

MURROW: Fine. You know, I should think with the weather we have been having this past week that you can't help but think a little bit about a summer vacation.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, thinking about it! I'm dreaming about it, Ed; I'm dreaming of taking a month off and going to Europe and my reason for going to Europe is not just an ordinary one that we all hear, but we know Europe is a wonderful vacation place, but because it is five hours away from the telephone, a wonderful thing. By the time people want to call you they find out there is a five hours difference and during that time they solve their problems and by the time it is time to get you they have forgotten all about it. My favorite place for a vacation is where the telephone connection is miserable so nobody can get you.

MURROW: So it is a good thing to look at your own country from the outside occasionally, isn't it, Anna?

MRS. ROSENBERG: A wonderful thing, makes you appreciate it ever so much more.

MURROW: Mrs. Rosenberg, you have performed so many different duties with the NRA, Social Security Administration, War Manpower Commission, to name just a few of them, you probably would have difficulty remembering them all your-

MURROW: Fine. You know, I should think with the weather we have been having this past week that you can't help but think a little bit about a summer vacation.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, thinking about it! I'm dreaming about it, Ed; I'm dreaming of taking a month off and going to Europe and my reason for going to Europe is not just an ordinary one that we all hear, but we know Europe is a wonderful vacation place, but because it is five hours away from the telephone, a wonderful thing. By the time people want to call you they find out there is a five hours difference and during that time they solve their problems and by the time it is time to get you they have forgotten all about it. My favorite place for a vacation is where the telephone connection is miserable so nobody can get you.

MURROW: So it is a good thing to look at your own country from the outside occasionally, isn't it, Anna?

MRS. ROSENBERG: A wonderful thing, makes you appreciate it every so much more.

MURROW: Mrs. Rosenberg, you have performed so many different duties with the NRA, Social Security Administration, War Manpower Commission, to name just a few of them, you probably would have difficulty remembering them all yourself, but what do you recall as your most gratifying assignment.

MRS. ROSENBERG: The most gratifying assignment I ever had, Ed, was Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower. You know on that job, really, everything that you did touched the lives of people, and I also had a wonderful boss, General Marshall.

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. ROSENBERG: He really gave me a free hand to be able to do things just to make it a little easier for the men who have to go into the service, to adapt from civilian life to military life and it wasn't easy at the best.

MURROW: There must have been a good many trying and really unhappy moments in that job?

MRS. ROSENBERG: There were some and I think one of the most heart-breaking one was when I was in Korea. You talked and joked with young boys who were joking and laughing with you and you knew they were going up the front and you didn't know if they would ever come back, and you yearned for them and you felt that everyone of them belonged to you. Those were heartbreaking moments and probably the other most heart-breaking ones were when I had to forward a selective service self, but what do you recall as your most gratifying assignment.

MRS. ROSENBERG: The most gratifying assignment I ever had, Ed, was Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower. You know on that job, really, everything that you did touched the lives of people, and I also had a wonderful boss, General Marshall.

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. ROSENBERG: He really gave me a free hand to be able to do things just to make it a little easier for the men who have to go into the service, to adapt from civilian life to military life and it wasn't easy at the best.

MURROW: There must have been a good many trying and really unhappy moments in that job?

MRS. ROSENBERG: There were some and I think one of the most heart-breaking one was when I was in Korea. You talked and joked with young boys who were joking and laughing with you and you knew they were going up the front and you didn't know if they would ever come back, and you yearned for them and you felt that everyone of them belonged to you. Those were heartbreaking moments and probably the other most heart-breaking ones were when I had to forward a selective service call and put down that thousands of men had to be called into service and to me they were not numbers. They were each individuals, the son of someone or the husband of someone, someone dearly loved and there was a heartache about that every time, Ed.

MURROW: Mrs. Rosenberg, Washington is known to most of us as having some pretty tough critics. Did they bother you much?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Well, I wouldn't be telling you the truth if I said they didn't bother me. Sure, they bothered me. The thing that bothered me most were the political criticisms, the other kind of criticism, unless you can take it you don't belong to Washington, it is just an every day affair.

MURROW: As Harry Truman said if you can't stand the heat get out of the kitchen.

MRS. ROSENBERG: That's true.

MURROW: Anna, as the phrase goes, you have quite a book to write some day. I suppose you must have kept a record of all the things you have done and the places you have been, haven't you?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Ed, that's a book that will never be written. I believe that writers ought to write books and not call and put down that thousands of men had to be called into service and to me they were not numbers. They were each individuals, the son of someone or the husband of someone, someone dearly loved and there was a heartache about that every time, Ed.

MURROW: Mrs. Rosenberg, Washington is known to most of us as having some pretty tough critics. Did they bother you much?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Well, I wouldn't be telling you the truth if I said they didn't bother me. Sure, they bothered me. The thing that bothered me most were the political critisms, the other kind of criticism, unless you can take it you don't belong to Washington, it is just an every day affair.

MURROW: As Harry Truman said if you can't stand the heat get out of the kitchen.

MRS. ROSENBERG: That's true.

MURROW: Anna, as the phrase goes, you have quite a book to write some day. I suppose you must have kept a record of all the things you have done and the places you have been, haven't you?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Ed, that's a book that will never be written. I believe that writers ought to write books and not amateurs and as far as keeping a record, no, I have never kept a record, but I have another way, a way of my own of keeping records. You know, Ed, I love china.

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. ROSENBERG: And whenever I travel all over the world I pick up something like this piece. Now, you wouldn't believe that a lovely piece of Meissen like that I happened to find in India and then this beautiful little coffee set, I bought that in Budapest in 1935, way before the communists ever came there.

MURROW: Yes, lovely.

MRS. ROSENBERG: And here I have a lovely piece of English china that is one of my favorites. Now, I bought this one in London and I bought many pieces in Paris and other places, even in Japan, and they sort of bring back to me the places I have been and the people I have seen and the things I have done.

MURROW: A very unusual and effective diary.

MRS. ROSENBERG: It is one I like very much, Ed.

MURROW: Anna, I notice there are no reminders of your earlier days but perhaps you don't need any. What do you recall most about your early childhood?

amateurs and as far as keeping a record, no, I have never kept a record, but I have another way, a way of my own of keeping records. You know, Ed, I love china.

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. ROSENBERG: And whenever I travel all over the world I pick up something like this piece. Now, you wouldn't believe that a lovely piece of Meissen like that I happened to find in India and then this beautiful little coffee set, I bought that in Budapest in 1935, way before the communists ever came there.

MURROW: Yes, lovely.

MRS. ROSENBERG: And here I have a lovely piece of English china that is one of my favorites. Now, I bought this one in London and I bought many pieces in Paris and other places, even in Japan, and they sort of bring back to me the places I have been and the people I have seen and the things I have done.

MURROW: A very unusual and effective diary.

MRS. ROSENBERG: It is one I like very much, Ed.

MURROW: Anna, I notice there are no reminders of your earlier days but perhaps you don't need any. What do you recall most about your early childhood?

MRS. ROSENBERG: What I recall best, I guess, of my early childhood was that I came over here from Budapest when I was eight years old and my father who really loved America -- probably only a foreigner really appreciates America -- took my sister and I around New York, day in and day out. I think we saw more in two months than anybody else would see in a lifetime and we went to see the statue of Liberty so often that I thought if I would go once more it would start calling me by my first name. You know, he really, he and my mother, had a love for this country and I think I have caught it and they are the ones who made me feel that no matter what you do, no matter how much you serve your country, you can never repay them for the freedom and the opportunity you have in this country. You know, Ed, sometimes I think you have to be born away from this country to really love it and appreciate it enough.

MURROW: Certainly the next best thing is to spend some time out of the country and then come back to it. That makes you appreciate it too.

MRS. ROSENBERG: That certainly does, but don't you stay away long enough so you won't appreciate it.

MURROW: I won't. Anna, did you have the usual

MRS. ROSENBERG: What I recall best, I guess, of my early childhood was that I came over here from Budapest when I was eight years old and my father who really loved America -- probably only a foreigner really appreciates America -- took my sister and I around New York, day in and day out. I think we saw more in two months than anybody else would see in a lifetime and we went to see the statue of liberty so often that I thought if I would go once more it would start calling me by my first name. You know, he really, he and my mother, had a love for this country and I think I have caught it and they are the ones who made me feel that no matter what you do, no matter how much you serve your country, you can never repay them for the freedom and the opportunity you have in this country. You know, Ed, sometimes I think you have to be born away from this country to really love it and appreciate it enough.

MURROW: Certainly the next best thing is to spend some time out of the country and then come back to it. That makes you appreciate it too.

MRS. ROSENBERG: That certainly does, but don't you stay away long enough so you won't appreciate it.

MURROW: I won't. Anna, did you have the usual childhood ambitions?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, I think I remember two childhood ambitions, Ed. One was that I wanted to be sixteen years. old. I thought at sixteen you are very grown up and you can do almost anything you want to and then when I became sixteen I found out I still couldn't do anything and the other was I wanted to be a scientific gardner.

MURROW: A scientific gardner?

MRS. ROSENBERG: That's right.

MURROW: Well, I should imagine that is one of the few projects you haven't followed through on.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Not quite, Ed. Look around where I live. I surround myself with flowers, everywhere in the house. I love flowers, and, another thing, I found that one of the things I liked doing best is a project I am engaged in now and that is called the "Salute to the Seasons."

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Where the city and some private citizens join together trying to find flowers and trees in New York and light up our beautiful buildings and it is a wonderful thing. We planted some wonderful flowers, thanks to the Mayor, all the way up Park Avenue, and thanks to some childhood ambitions?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, I think I remember two child-hood ambitions, Ed. One was that I wanted to be sixteen years old. I thought at sixteen you are very grown up and you can do almost anything you want to and then when I became sixteen I found out I still couldn't do anything and the other was I wanted to be a scientific gardner.

MURROW: A scientific gardner?

MRS. ROSENBERG: That's right.

MURROW: Well, I should imagine that is one of the few projects you haven't followed through on.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Not quite, Ed. Look around where I live. I surround myself with flowers, everywhere in the house. I love flowers, and, another thing, I found that one of the things I liked doing best is a project I am engaged in now and that is called the "Salute to the Seasons."

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Where the city and some private citizens join together trying to find flowers and trees in New York and light up our beautiful buildings and it is a wonderful thing. We planted some wonderful flowers, thanks to the Mayor, all the way up Park Avenue, and thanks to some enlightened business, the Equitable Life Insurance planted those lovely flowers they have on Fifth Avenue, and on Park Avenue the Uris Brothers, the builders, have done three beautiful blocks that are lit at night and I hope that everybody goes to see them. They are just marvellous and we are trying to plant flowers all over New York. You know New York is the gateway of the world and people come here from all over the world and from all over America and I would love to think that they don't think that the city is just a city of brick and mortar but one of flowers and trees and friendly people and I hope everyone in New York really becomes interested in more flowers and more trees.

MURROW: You know, Anna, each time I walk down Park Avenue and look at the flowers and trees I feel somewhat in your debt.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, I'm so glad.

MURROW: Wonderful ---

MRS. ROSENBERG: It isn't my debt, Ed, not my debt, Ed, it is in the city's debt really.

MURROW: Well, now, Anna, I think I know what inspired all those flowered hats you like to wear.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, you want to see some of my enlightened business, the Equitable Life Insurance planted those lovely flowers they have on Fifth Avenue, and on Park Avenue the Uris Brothers, the builders, have done three beautiful blocks that are lit at night and I hope that everybody goes to see them. They are just marvellous and we are trying to plant flowers all over New York. You know New York is the gateway of the world and people come here from all over the world and from all over America and I would love to think that they don't think that the city is just a city of brick and mortar but one of flowers and trees and friendly people and I hope everyone in New York really becomes interested in more flowers and more trees.

MURROW: You know, Anna, each time I walk down Park Avenue and look at the flowers and trees I feel somewhat in your debt.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, I'm so glad.

MURROW: Wonderful ---

MRS. ROSENBERG: It isn't my debt, Ed, not my debt, Ed, it is in the city's debt really.

MURROW: Well, now, Anna, I think I know what inspired all those flowered hats you like to wear.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, you want to see some of my flowered hats, Ed?

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Come on, I'll show them to you.

MURROW: How many do you have?

MRS. ROSENBERG: ... I'll never tell you how many I have, but I will show you some of them. Here are some perfectly flowered ones and maybe they look absurd to you but believe it or not I wear them morning, and noon and evening. Now, they don't look very business-like but I don't see why a woman can't wear flowered hats in business too. Look at them. Isn't it silly but I love them all.

MURROW: You know I learned a long time ago not to make any comment on women's hats.

MRS. ROSENBERG: No.

MURROW: They are a bit unusual for the so-called man's world you often work in, aren't they?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Well, I don't know. Why? Would you expect a man to look like a woman in a woman's world? There are men working in the woman's world so I don't believe that a woman should look mannish in a man's world. I believe you can look like yourself wherever you are and I don't find these hats are any drawback to me in business. As a matter of flowered hats, Ed?

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Come on, I'll show them to you.

MURROW: How many do you have?

MRS. ROSENBERG: ... I'll never tell you how many I have, but I will show you some of them. Here are some perfectly flowered ones and maybe they look absurd to you but believe it or not I wear them morning, and noon and evening. Now, they don't look very business-like but I don't see why a woman can't wear flowered hats in business too. Look at them. Isn't it silly but I love them all.

MURROW: You know I learned a long time ago not to make any comment on women's hats.

MRS. ROSENBERG: No.

MURROW: They are a bit unusual for the so-called man's world you often work in, aren't they?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Well, I don't know. Why? Would you expect a man to look like a woman in a woman's world? There are men working in the woman's world so I don't believe that a woman should look mannish in a man's world. I believe you can look like yourself wherever you are and I don't find these hats are any drawback to me in business. As a matter of fact I think they help, they sort of divert people a little bit.

MURROW: Anna Rosenberg, let's talk a moment about The Little Flower, Fiorello LaGuardia. He played a big part in your career, didn't he?

MRS. ROSENBERG: He played a big part in my hats too you know. He made fun of them in public and in private continually. Yes, Fiorello LaGuardia was a wonderful man. You knew him, Ed. You know how dynamic and interesting he was and I used to do labor negotiations with him and I know some funny stories and funny episodes that took place.

MURROW: Didn't he lock in a negotiating committee at one point?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, that was wonderful. We had a strike with the subways and busses and at that time the subway was still run by private people, by private companies, and the Mayor asked me to negotiate it and we sat in City Hall on a cold winter day and we were negotiating when it came about eight o'clock at night and we decided to go out and have something to eat and as we got to the door of City Hall there was a policeman there and he said, "I'm sorry, Mrs. Rosenberg, you people can't get out," and I said, "What do you mean, we fact I think they help, they sort of divert people a little bit.

MURROW: Anna Rosenberg, let's talk a moment about The Little Flower, Fiorello LaGuardia. He played a big part in your career, didn't he?

MRS. ROSENBERG: He played a big part in my life too you know. He made fun of them in public and in private continually. Yes, Fiorello LaGuardia was a wonderful man. You knew him, Ed. You know how dynamic and interesting he was and I used to do labor negotiations with him and I know some funny stories and funny episodes that took place.

MURROW: Didn't he lock in a negotiating committee at one point?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, that was wonderful. We had a strike with the subways and buses and at that time the subway was still run by private people, by private companies, and the Mayor asked me to negotiate it and we sat in City Hall on a cold winter day and we were negotiating when it came about eight o'clock at night and we decided to go out and have something to eat and as we got to the door of City Hall there was a policeman there and he said, "I'm sorry, Mrs. Rosenberg, you people can't get out," and I said, "What do you mean, we can't get out? Why, we have got to eat," and he said, "The Mayor said you eat when you settle the strike," and back we had to go to City Hall. The heat was turned off. I think the Little Flower thought that would settle the strike and it sure did and we sat there all night freezing cold without any food, until eight o'clock in the morning and the strike was settled.

MURROW: Anna, I should imagine a sense of humor must be invaluable in much of your work. Did this also hold true when you were operating at the higher levels, at the White House, for example.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, if it doesn't hold true, you will go crazy, and, Ed, the man in the White House, whose sense of humor never failed him, besides his many other attributes, that he was a great human being, Franklin Roosevelt laughed and his sense of humor never failed him even at the most serious moment and I think that was something that made him the kind of person he was.

MURROW: Mrs. Rosenberg, what was the general attitude of those you came in contact with when you first took on the most responsible military job any woman has ever held in this country ---

MRS. ROSENBERG: Yes.

can't get out? Why, we have got to eat," and he said, "The Mayor said you eat when you settle the strike," and back we had to go to City Hall. The heat was turned off. I think the little flower thought that would settle the strike and it sure did and we sat there all night freezing cold without any food, until eight o'clock in the morning and the strike was settled.

MURROW: Anna, I should imagine a sense of humor must be invaluable in much of your work. Did this also hold true when you were operating at the higher levels, at the White House, for example.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, if it doesn't hold true, you will go crazy, and, Ed, the man in the White House, whose sense of humor never failed him, besides his many other attributes, that he was a great human being, Franklin Roosevelt laughed and his sense of humor never failed him even at the most serious moment and I think that was something that made him the kind of person he was.

MURROW: Mrs. Rosenberg, what was the general attitude of those you came in contact with when you first took on the most responsible military job any woman has ever held in this country ---

MRS. ROSENBERG: Yes.

MURROW: --- Assistant Secretary of Defense.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Ed, it was from the sublime to the ridiculous. They were amazed, they were shocked, they were troubled, they were happy but I must say most of them were just a little bewildered but the nice thing about it was that as the months passed by they all become good friends and worked with me and absolutely forgot that I was a woman but Ed, the man to whom it has never made any difference, whether you are a man or a woman, was General Marshall, who was my boss. You know when he first asked me to take the job, I gave him all my shortcomings and there was a long list, believe me, but the one that I said to him, that I thought would really shock people, that after all I was a woman, and the only time from the time I knew him until the time I left the department, he was ever impatient with me, except for that remark, and he said"you know, it doesn't make any difference, a woman can do a job just as well as aman." He was the only man I ever worked with who truly believed in women.

MURROW: You must have found this something of a revelation, didn't you?

MRS. ROSENBERG: No, I didn't. I find men are very good to you. But, I found it a revelation, maybe I

MURROW: --- Assistant Secretary of Defense.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Ed, it was from the sublime to the ridiculous. They were amazed, they were shocked, they were troubled, they were happy but I must say most of them were just a little bewildered but the nice thing about it was that as the months passed by they all become good friends and worked with me and absolutely forgot that I was a woman but Ed, the man to whom it has never made any difference, whether you are a man or a woman, was General Marshall, who was my boss. You know when he first asked me to take the job, I gave him all my shortcomings and there was a long list, believe me, but the one that I said to him, that I thought would really shock people, that after all I was a woman, and the only time from the time I knew him until the time I left the department, he was ever impatient with me, except for that remark, and he said"you know, it doesn't make any difference, a woman can do a job just as well as aman." He was the only man I ever worked with who truly believed in women.

MURROW: You must have found this something of a revelation, didn't you?

MRS. ROSENBERG: No, I didn't. I find men are very good to you. But, I found it a revelation, maybe I should say I did, in a military man but you know, Ed, I think the reason for this is that General Marshall respected and loved his wife more than I have ever seen. I think that is one of the great love affairs and I think that is what makes him so kind and friendly to every woman. You know I think he is the greatest living American and I just love him and respect him.

MURROW: It always seemed to me that he had more complete control over his physical actions and his emotions than any man I have ever seen.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, he was the best disciplined human being I have ever seen. I know when we used to go up to testify in Congress I used to show my dismay and my joy and he would whisper to me and he would say, "Don't show any emotion, sit tight," and the cutest thing he used to say was, "Hold your head up, you have a double chin."

MURROW: You know, Anna, I am sure General Marshall was just that considerate of everyone who worked with him, wasn't he?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, he was very considerate. Ed, I was there about two or three weeks in the department and I was holding a meeting and trying to be my most dignified self should say I did, in a military man but you know, Ed, I think the reason for this is that General Marshall respected and loved his wife more than I have ever seen. I think that is one of the great love affairs and I think that is what makes him so kind and friendly to every woman. You know I think he is the greatest living American and I just love him and respect him.

MURROW: It always seemed to me that he had more complete control over his physical actions and his emotions than any man I have ever seen.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, he was the best disciplined human being I have ever seen. I know when we used to go up to testify in Congress I used to show my dismay and my joy and he would whisper to me and he would say, "Don't show any emotion, sit tight," and the cutest thing he used to say was, "Hold your head up, you have a double chin."

MURROW: You know, Anna, I am sure General Marshall was just that considerate of everyone who worked with him, wasn't he?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, he was very considerate. Ed, I was there about two or three weeks in the department and I was holding a meeting and trying to be my most dignified self all the brass was there, Admirals and Generals, and I put on all the dignity I knew and all of a sudden here came General Marshall and a little man came running after him with a tape measure in his hand and the General very courteously excused himself and pointed to the man and said, "Measure the chair," and to my complete dismay I realized that the General discovered that for two or three weeks I had been sitting in the chair of my predecessor who was six foot three and my feet never reached the floor all the time I was there, so he had me measured for a chair and out he went with the little man following behind him. Now, that kind of kindness and considerateness ---

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. ROSENBERG: --- he practiced not only with me but with others and all the military men may not agree with me but I think he is one of the kindest, dearest men I have ever known.

MURROW: Anna, can you remember Anna Rosenberg's very first interest in public service?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, indeed and that is what interested me in politics too, by the way, Ed. I went to high school and, oh, there was something called the "Jerry" [?]

all the brass was there, Admirals and Generals, and I put on all the dignity I knew and all of a sudden here came General Marshall and a little man came running after him with a tape measure in his hand and the General very courteously excused himself and pointed to the man and said, "Measure the chair," and to my complete dismay I realized that the General discovered that for two or three weeks I had been sitting in the chair of my predecessor who was six foot three and my feet never reached the floor all the time I was there, so he had me measured for a chair and out he went with the little man following behind him. Now, that kind of kindness and considerateness ---

MURROW: Yes.

MRS. ROSENBERG: --- he practiced not only with me but with others and all the military men may not agree with me but I think he is one of the kindest, dearest men I have ever known.

MURROW: Anna, can you remember Anna Rosenberg's very first interest in public service?

MRS. ROSENBERG: Oh, indeed and that is what interested me in politics too, by the way, Ed. I went to high school and, oh, there was something called the "Jerry" [?]

system at that time and we had to go to school on a double shift. The high school children in New York organized and we went down to the Board of Aldermen. At that time we had a Board of Aldermen and we orated and we held wonderful speeches before a group of fat, beery looking gentlemen, all smoking their cigars and not a one was paying the slightest attention to us and so finally they dismissed us and we walked out and when we got to the door I was very angry and I turned back with all the drama you can have at the age of fifteen and said, "Gentlemen, you will hear from us; our parents are voters and they will register their disgust at the voting place," at which time the beeriest and the longest cigar smoker of them all turned around and said, "Little girl, come back here, and tell us what your troubles are." That was the first time that I realized the power of the polls and the power of politics.

MURROW: Thank you very much Anna Rosenberg, for letting us come. It has been very pleasant indeed. Good night. Good night, Anna.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: I will be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests. And, now, a word about Kent cigarettes.

[Commercial]

system at that time and we had to go to school on a double shift. The high school children in New York organized and we went down to the Board of Aldermen. At that time we had a Board of Aldermen and we orated and we held wonderful speeches before a group of fat, beery looking gentlemen, all smoking their cigars and not a one was paying the slightest attention to us and so finally they dismissed us and we walked out and when we got to the door I was very angry and I turned back with all the drams you can have at the age of fifteen and said, "Gentlemen, you will hear from us; our parents are voters and they will register their disgust at the voting place," at which time the beerest and the longest cigar smoker of them all turned around and said, "Little girl, come back here, and tell us what your troubles are." That was the first time that I realized the power of the polls and the power of politics.

MURROW: Thank you very much Anna Rosenberg, for letting us come. It has been very pleasant indeed. Good night. Good night, Anna.

MRS. ROSENBERG: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: I will be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests. And, now, a word about Kent cigarettes.

[Commercial]

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to Washington for a visit with the Indian Ambassador to this country, M- and his family. We'll also be calling on Writer and Director G- and his wife actress Ruth Gordon.

And, now, from PERSON TO PERSON good night and good luck.

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to Washington for a visit with the Indian Ambassador to this country, M- and his family. We'll also be calling on Writer and Director G- and his wife actress Ruth Gordon.

And, now, from PERSON TO PERSON good night and good luck.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Garson Kanin and Ruth Gordon

Ambassador M. C. Chagla

June 19, 1959 - 10:30 PM EDT

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with writer and director Garson Kanin and his wife, actress Ruth Gordon. Then we'll be calling on the Indian Ambassador to this country, M. C. Chagla, and Mrs. Chagla, in Washington.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Garson Kanin and Ruth Gordon

Ambassador M. C. Chagla

June 19, 1959 - 10:30 PM EDT

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with writer and director Garson Kanin and his wife, actress Ruth Gordon. Then we'll be calling on the Indian Ambassador to this country, M. C. Chagla, and Mrs. Chagla, in Washington.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545
LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

(Commercial)

MURROW: At last count author-director Garson Kanin and his wife, actress and playwright Ruth Gordon, had something more than a half-dozen separate careers going between them in various fields of writing and the theater.

Garson Kanin was born in Rochester, New York; worked as a Western Union messenger, a clerk at Macy's, a burlesque comedian, a saxophonist in several jazz bands, before he went to Hollywood where he became one of the screen's leading directors. He has also written a number of plays for the movies and Broadway, one of his most successful being "Born Yesterday," and now in a new field, he has written his first novel, "Blow Up A Storm."

Ruth Gordon, whom he married some 17 years ago, has had a long career as one of the leading actresses of the American stage, most recently in "The Matchmaker," and a highly profitable career as a playwright.

For the past eight years Garson Kanin and Ruth Gordon have lived in a five-story town house in the middle of this block in what's called the "Turtle Bay Area" in midtown Manhattan.

Evening, Gar.

KANIN: Oh, hello, Ed.

(Commercial)

MURROW: At last count author-director Garson Kanin and his wife, actress and playwright Ruth Gordon, had something more than a half-dozen separate careers going between them in various fields of writing and the theater.

Garson Kanin was born in Rochester, New York; worked as a Western Union messenger, a clerk at Macy's, a burlesque comedian, a saxophonist in several jazz bands, before he went to Hollywood where he became one of the screen's leading directors. He has also written a number of plays for the movies and Broadway, one of his most successful being "Born Yesterday," and now in a new field, he has written his first novel, "Blow Up A Storm."

Ruth Gordon, whom he married some 17 years ago, has had a long career as one of the leading actresses of the American stage, most recently in "The Matchmaker," and a highly profitable career as a playwright.

For the past eight years Garson Kanin and Ruth Gordon have lived in a five-story town house in the middle of this block in what's called the "Turtle Bay Area" in midtown Manhattan.

Evening, Gar.

KANIN: Oh, hello, Ed.

MURROW: Evening, Ruth.

GORDON: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Are you packing or unpacking?

GORDON: Well, we're unpacking.

KANIN: "Un."

GORDON: "Un"; yes. We just got back from Europe two days ago and we're right in the thick of it.

MURROW: Well, I know you both do a great deal of traveling. Was this trip for pleasure or did it have something to do with one of those many careers?

GORDON: Oh, Ed, you know, when you go to Paris it's pleasure. It's pleasure, let's face it, but underneath it all there was a fundamental thing. We're connected with a play, a big, triumphant hit of Paris, "Le Bon Soupe."

KANIN: That means "The Good Soup," to prove I can speak French.

MURROW: Oh, thank you very much. Grateful to you, Gar. "The Good Soup."

KANIN: Yes. And I am making an adaptation of it, Ed, and I'm going to have the great, great joy of directing Ruth in it this fall.

MURROW: Oh, wonderful! Is it a comedy?

KANIN: What would you call it, darling?

MURROW: Evening, Ruth.

GORDON: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: Are you packing or unpacking?

GORDON: Well, we're unpacking.

KANIN: "Un."

GORDON: "Un"; yes. We just got back from Europe two days ago and we're right in the thick of it.

MURROW: Well, I know you both do a great deal of traveling. Was this trip for pleasure or did it have something to do with one of those many careers?

GORDON: Oh, Ed, you know, when you go to Paris it's pleasure. It's pleasure, let's face it, but underneath it all there was a fundamental thing. We're connected with a play, a big, triumphant hit of Paris, "Le Bon Soupe."

KANIN: That means "The Good Soup," to prove I can speak French.

MURROW: Oh, thank you very much. Grateful to you, Gar. "The Good Soup."

KANIN: Yes. And I am making an adaptation of it, Ed, and I'm going to have the great, great joy of directing Ruth in it this fall.

MURROW: Oh, wonderful! Is it a comedy?

KANIN: What would you call it, darling?

GORDON: I'd call it just a wonderful play. You can describe it further.

KANIN: Well, it's an epic play about a woman's life, and, in fact, this woman is so complicated that it takes two actresses to play her, and Ruth is going to play one half of her and someone else will have to play the other half.

MURROW: Well, I know that getting settled down after a trip is usually an unpleasant chore and usually makes for something of a mess around the house, doesn't it?

GORDON: Yes. Yes.

KANIN: Yes, it does. Well, it isn't going to be as much of a mess as this production that we're bringing over from Paris. David Merrick is importing every stitch of it -- every buckle, every necktie, every stick of furniture and every cup. So that's going to be something to put together, but we'll soon be on our way with that. I think we better go upstairs.

GORDON: Yes, this is cluttered. We'll find something less cluttered, Ed.

KANIN: We'll have to go this way because the staircase is all full of luggage and everything. This is the garden, as you see -- one of the favorite rooms at this time of the year. You know, you're in the "Turtle Bay Gardens" at

GORDON: I'd call it just a wonderful play. You can describe it further.

KANIN: Well, it's an epic play about a woman's life, and, in fact, this woman is so complicated that it takes two actresses to play her, and Ruth is going to play one half of her and someone else will have to play the other half.

MURROW: Well, I know that getting settled down after a trip is usually an unpleasant chore and usually makes for something of a mess around the house, doesn't it?

GORDON: Yes. Yes.

KANIN: Yes, it does. Well, it isn't going to be as much of a mess as this production that we're bringing over from Paris. David Merrick is importing every stitch of it -- every buckle, every necktie, every stick of furniture and every cup. So that's going to be something to put together, but we'll soon be on our way with that. I think we better go upstairs.

GORDON: Yes, this is cluttered. We'll find something less cluttered, Ed.

KANIN: We'll have to go this way because the staircase is all full of luggage and everything. This is the garden, as you see -- one of the favorite rooms at this time of the year. You know, you're in the "Turtle Bay Gardens" at this moment.

MURROW: Yes.

KANIN: We have our neighbor, Katherine Hepburn, who lives right over here. And on this side, our good neighbors, Kathy and Gardner Cosford. And over there there's kind of a famous New York house called the Maxwell-Perkins House where Thomas Wolfe did a lot of his writing when he was in New York. And this is where we live right now.

MURROW: You know, there aren't too many gardens like this left in Manhattan.

GORDON: No.

KANIN: No. I wish you could really get a good look at it, Ed. It's sort of a jungle on 49th Street, and if you look over this way, in the daytime, of course, you can see the UN Building, and up there is the tower of the Waldorf-Astoria. So that's about all we have out here. Do you want to go upstairs?

GORDON: Let's go upstairs and see another room up there.

MURROW: Does the rest of your home reflect this casual living?

GORDON: Yes, sort of. Sort of. You can see we're going up the outside staircase -- luggage on the other this moment.

MURROW: Yes.

KANIN: We have our neighbor, Katherine Hepburn, who lives right over here. And on this side, our good neighbors, Kathy and Gardner Cosford. And over there there's kind of a famous New York house called the Maxwell-Perkins House where Thomas Wolfe did a lot of his writing when he was in New York. And this is where we live right now.

MURROW: You know, there aren't too many gardens like this left in Manhattan.

GORDON: No.

KANIN: No. I wish you could really get a good look at it, Ed. It's sort of a jungle on 49th Street, and if you look over this way, in the daytime, of course, you can see the UN Building, and up there is the tower of the Waldorf-Astoria. So that's about all we have out here. Do you want to go upstairs?

GORDON: Let's go upstairs and see another room up there.

MURROW: Does the rest of your home reflect this casual living?

GORDON: Yes, sort of. Sort of. You can see we're going up the outside staircase -- luggage on the other one.

KANIN: It would be pretty casual if I fall down.

GORDON: Yes. Don't fall down. That we wouldn't like to do at all. Ed, we have to say something about Ethel Barrymore tonight. (Picks up picture of Ethel Barrymore.)

MURROW: Oh, yes.

GORDON: Ethel Barrymore, who died yesterday, the great lady of the stage, great actress, great friend. Many years ago she gave me this picture. I knew her from 1918 on when she asked me to have Thanksgiving dinner with her, and I couldn't believe that I was going to have dinner with Ethel Barrymore. And at this much later date I can hardly believe that I was the good friend of Ethel Barrymore, and that she was my friend. All of show business feels a terrible loss tonight. You must feel it too, Ed.

MURROW: I certainly do. A truly great lady.

GORDON: Yes.

MURROW: Ruth, you started acting when you were quite young. Has the theater changed very much over the years?

GORDON: Oh, Ed, and how! And how! You know, in those days we had barnstorming companies, and they don't have any of those anymore at all.

MURROW: Yes.

one. Moment.

KANIN: It would be pretty casual if I fall down.

GORDON: Yes. Don't fall down. That we wouldn't like to do at all. Ed, we have to say something about Ethel Barrymore tonight. (Picks up picture of Ethel Barrymore.)

MURROW: Oh, yes.

GORDON: Ethel Barrymore, who died yesterday, the great lady of the stage, great actress, great friend. Many years ago she gave me this picture. I knew her from 1918 on when she asked me to have Thanksgiving dinner with her, and I couldn't believe that I was going to have dinner with Ethel Barrymore. And at this much later date I can hardly believe that I was the good friend of Ethel Barrymore, and that she was my friend. All of show business feels a terrible loss tonight. You must feel it too, Ed.

MURROW: I certainly do. A truly great lady.

GORDON: Yes.

MURROW: Ruth, you started acting when you were quite young. Has the theater changed very much over the years?

GORDON: Oh, Ed, and how! And how! You know, in those days we had barnstorming companies, and they don't have any of those anymore at all.

MURROW: Yes.

KANIN: Ruth was a considerable barnstormer in her day. In fact, that left us with a pretty good friendly game, if you want to play it. It goes like this, Ed. I say to you, "Where do you come from, Ed?"

MURROW: Yes?

KANIN: And you say---

MURROW: I say, "Greensboro, North Carolina, near there."

GORDON: I played there.

KANIN: That's what she says. She played there. That's the game. We hardly ever run into anyone and ask them that question that she couldn't say she played there.

GORDON: Well, you see, the second year I was on the stage, I was in a real barnstorming company called "Fair And Warmer," and there were seven companies of that out, and I was in the sixth. So you see I wasn't in the worst one. We played 39 weeks of one-night stands -- just glorious and a wonderful lesson in geography, and plus all that, getting $60 a week, mind you, I arrived in New York City at the end of the tour with $400 -- four hundred lovely dollars -- pinned to my corset cover. (Laughter)

MURROW: Gar, how did you manage to make the switch from directing to writing your own plays?

KANIN: Ruth was a considerable barnstormer in her day. In fact, that left us with a pretty good friendly game, if you want to play it. It goes like this, Ed. I say to you, "Where do you come from, Ed?"

MURROW: Yes?

KANIN: And you say---

MURROW: I say, "Greensboro, North Carolina, near there."

GORDON: I played there.

KANIN: That's what she says. She played there. That's the game. We hardly ever run into anyone and ask them that question that she couldn't say she played there.

GORDON: Well, you see, the second year I was on the stage, I was in a real barnstorming company called "Fair And Warmer," and there were seven companies of that out, and I was in the sixth. So you see I wasn't in the worst one. We played 39 weeks of one-night stands -- just glorious and a wonderful lesson in geography, and plus all that, getting $60 a week, mind you, I arrived in New York City at the end of the tour with $400 -- four hundred lovely dollars -- pinned to my corset cover. (laughter)

MURROW: Gar, how did you manage to make the switch from directing to writing your own plays?

KANIN: I got switched, Ed. I didn't make it myself any more than any of us make the switches in our life. It happened that I was pursuing a quiet and lucrative career as a film director, and the war looked as though it were looming up, and then came the draft, and I was drafted. I was living in Beverly Hills at the time, and most of the other people on my block were rejects, and so I landed pretty early in the Army of boredom. There wasn't very much to do, so to relieve that boredom, I started to write. So, you see, I was sort of forced into it. In those days we really didn't have anything to do in the Army, and the most we did was to get lined up all the time and have stuff issued to us. We did that morning, afternoon and evening. They would keep issuing stuff. I remember I had a buddy at that time, Red Rose -- I wonder where he is today -- and he used to worry about this terribly. Finally, I said to him one day on the field -- I said, "You know, Red, there's nothing much to worry about. We could be doing a lot worse than this." And he said, "Yeah, I know, but every time the Army gives me something, I feel I'm gettin' in deeper." (Laughter)

MURROW: And thus came "Born Yesterday" among others, I suppose.

KANIN: Yes.

KANIN: I got switched, Ed. I didn't make it myself any more than any of us make the switches in our life. It happened that I was pursuing a quiet and lucrative career as a film director, and the war looked as though it were looming up, and then came the draft, and I was drafted. I was living in Beverly Hills at the time, and most of the other people on my block were rejects, and so I landed pretty early in the Army of boredom. There wasn't very much to do, so to relieve that boredom, I started to write. So, you see, I was sort of forced into it. In those days we really didn't have anything to do in the Army, and the most we did was to get lined up all the time and have stuff issued to us. We did that morning, afternoon and evening. They would keep issuing stuff. I remember I had a buddy at that time, Red Rose -- I wonder where he is today -- and he used to worry about this terribly. Finally, I said to him one day on the field -- I said, "You know, Red, there's nothing much to worry about. We could be doing a lot worse than this." And he said, "Yeah, I know, but every time the Army gives me something, I feel I'm gettin' in deeper." (Laughter)

MURROW: And thus came "Born Yesterday" among others, I suppose.

KANIN: Yes.

MURROW: Incidentally, it just occurred to me. This is the publication date of your first novel, isn't it?

KANIN: I thought you were never going to mention it, Ed.

GORDON: Want to see it?

MURROW: Yes.

KANIN: It's out here. I'll be right back, darling. (Goes into another room.) This is where I have been working all day sort of sending these out. This is the baby, (Holds up copy of book) Ed, an eight-pound bouncing baby book that was born around here today, and I must say I can hardly believe it myself after two years of it, but there it is.

MURROW: Gar, I read the first three chapters. Is it autobiographical?

KANIN: Well, I hardly know by now, Ed. I couldn't say. After two years of dealing with it, it's too difficult for me to separate the fact from fancy, and the unusual from reality, but I know if it isn't true, it might be true. I hope that most of it is true; yes.

MURROW: How has the reaction been so far?

KANIN: Well, it's been, I must say -- it has been dandy. It's been fine. However, my young publisher, Bennett Cerf, points out that I'm accustomed to working in a theater MURROW: Incidentally, it just occurred to me. This is the publication date of your first novel, isn't it?

KANIN: I thought you were never going to mention it, Ed.

GORDON: Want to see it?

MURROW: Yes.

KANIN: It's out here. I'll be right back, darling. (Goes into another room.) This is where I have been working all day sort of sending these out. This is the baby. (Holds up copy of book) Ed, an eight-pound bouncing baby book that was born around here today, and I must say I can hardly believe it myself after two years of it, but there it is.

MURROW: Gar, I read the first three chapters. Is it autobiographical?

KANIN: Well, I hardly know by now, Ed. I couldn't say. After two years of dealing with it, it's too difficult for me to separate the fact from fancy, and the unusual from reality, but I know if it isn't true, it might be true. I hope that most of it is true; yes.

MURROW: How has the reaction been so far?

KANIN: Well, it's been, I must say -- it has been dandy. It's been fine. However, my young publisher, Bennett Cerf, points out that I'm accustomed to working in a theater where we depend largely on seven reviews, but he says when you write a book it's different because you depend on two thousand reviews from all over the country. This was a little overwhelming to me. I think we have about 1,900 reviews to go, so we're hoping that they will keep coming the way they have been coming up to tonight.

MURROW: Gar, tell me, when you and Ruth are writing at the same time, do you share the same workroom, or do you isolate yourselves?

KANIN: Well, no, we don't work in the same room. We couldn't. I wish we could. It would be much more pleasant. No, I work down here and Ruth works upstairs, but, you know, I have things of hers around. I have a picture of her there all the time, and little mementos. Oh, there's a thing of hers here that I keep on the wall. This is a -- I suppose you can't see it, but it's a review from the NEW YORK TIMES, December 22, 1915.

MURROW: Well, I assume it's complimentary or you probably wouldn't have it hanging on the wall -- right?

KANIN: Yes. It's Maude Adams in Peter Pan, and that was Ruth's baby. I would like to read you a chunk of it, but that's the sort of thing I need permission for. Darling, is it all right if I pick out a little chunk of this Maude where we depend largely on seven reviews, but he says when you write a book it's different because you depend on two thousand reviews from all over the country. This was a little overwhelming to me. I think we have about 1,900 reviews to go, so we're hoping that they will keep coming the way they have been coming up to tonight.

MURROW: Gar, tell me, when you and Ruth are writing at the same time, do you share the same workroom, or do you isolate yourselves?

KANIN: Well, no, we don't work in the same room. We couldn't. I wish we could. It would be much more pleasant. No, I work down here and Ruth works upstairs, but, you know, I have things of hers around. I have a picture of her there all the time, and little mementos. Oh, there's a thing of hers here that I keep on the wall. This is a -- I suppose you can't see it, but it's a review from the NEW YORK TIMES, December 22, 1915.

MURROW: Well, I assume it's complimentary or you probably wouldn't have it hanging on the wall -- right?

KANIN: Yes. It's Maude Adams in Peter Pan, and that was Ruth's baby. I would like to read you a chunk of it, but that's the sort of thing I need permission for. Darling, is it all right if I pick out a little chunk of this Maude

Adams review and read it? Ed seems to be interested.

GORDON: Yes.

KANIN: Well, this was written by Alexander Wolcott, although when he wrote this review, he hadn't achieved a by-line as yet. However, he wrote: "The new Wendy, Gladys Gillon, is an inappropriate choice and sadly disappointing, but Ruth Gordon is ever so gay as Nibs."

MURROW: Very nice. Very auspicious beginning. Ruth, you and Gar have collaborated on a number of occasions. Did you give him much help with the book?

GORDON: Oh, no, Ed. You know, it took him two years to write it, and I never got to read it until the fifth draft.

KANIN: And Ruth is writing a play at this moment and I haven't read one word of that, although she has been working on it for almost a year. That sounds, I'm afraid, kind of eccentric.

GORDON: No.

KANIN: I didn't mean it to be that, or even unfriendly, but we have found that if we talk ourselves at each other, or read it at each other, and tell it at each other, that pretty soon it gets all done and the steam goes out of the telling, and we sort of spoil it. So we try to keep it to our-

Adams review and read it? Ed seems to be interested.

GORDON: Yes.

KANIN: Well, this was written by Alexander Woolcott, although when he wrote this review, he hadn't achieved a by-line as yet. However, he wrote: "The new Wendy, Gladys Gillon, is an inappropriate choice and sadly disappointing, but Ruth Gordon is ever so gay as Nibs."

MURROW: Very nice. Very auspicious beginning. Ruth, you and Gar have collaborated on a number of occasions. Did you give him much help with the book?

GORDON: Oh, no, Ed. You know, it took him two years to write it, and I never got to read it until the fifth draft.

KANIN: And Ruth is writing a play at this moment and I haven't read one word of that, although she has been working on it for almost a year. That sounds, I'm afraid, kind of eccentric.

GORDON: No.

KANIN: I didn't mean it to be that, or even unfriendly, but we have found that if we talk ourselves at each other, or read it at each other, and tell it at each other, that pretty soon it gets all done and the steam goes out of the telling, and we sort of spoil it. So we try to keep it to ourselves until it is finished, and then, of course, we do what we can for each other. I must say Ruth helped me enormously on the book. Of course she did.

GORDON: It's very sweet of him to say that. It's not true.

MURROW: Ruth, which do you prefer: acting or writing?

GORDON: Oh, Ed, that's a question should never come up. There is no answer to it, really, but, you know, they're both wonderful, and when I was in "The Matchmaker" that was the high point of my whole long, long career when Thornton Wilder wrote that last act where I became part of the audience and the audience came up on the stage with us. That was a great moment. And then also in writing when there's a morning when it goes well -- when it goes wonderfully -- that's great, too. You know, I'm lucky.

MURROW: When you do have some spare time in all this heavy schedule, what do you do with it?

KANIN: I worry.

GORDON: Oh, no, he doesn't, and I don't either. We just walk.

KANIN: I walk off my worry.

GORDON: No. But, you know, we're such good selves until it is finished, and then, of course, we do what we can for each other. I must say Ruth helped me enormously on the book. Of course she did.

GORDON: It's very sweet of him to say that. It's not true.

MURROW: Ruth, which do you prefer: acting or writing?

GORDON: Oh, Ed, that's a question should never come up. There is no answer to it, really, but, you know, they're both wonderful, and when I was in "The Matchmaker" that was the high point of my whole long, long career when Thornton Wilder wrote that last act where I became part of the audience and the audience came up on the stage with us. That was a great moment. And then also in writing when there's a morning when it goes well -- when it goes wonderfully -- that's great, too. You know, I'm lucky.

MURROW: When you do have some spare time in all this heavy schedule, what do you do with it?

KANIN: I worry.

GORDON: Oh, no, he doesn't, and I don't either. We just walk.

KANIN: I walk off my worry.

GORDON: No. But, you know, we're such good walkers that every time we go into a new district, we have to look up where the cobbler is and get our shoes mended because we just walk the soles right off our shoes.

KANIN: We collect railway stations, too, the way some people collect coins and stamps. We have railway stations all over the world that we're real crazy about.

GORDON: Yes. We're transients. We're real transients.

MURROW: Well, unfortunately, we've got to walk away from this pleasant visit. Thank you very much, Ruth.

GORDON: Thank you, Ed.

MURROW: Thank you, Gar.

KANIN: Are you leaving so soon?

MURROW: I'm sorry, but good night.

KANIN: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with India's Ambassador, M. C. Chagla. And now a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Mahomed Ali Currim Chagla is India's Ambassador to the United States and Mexico. He is also India's Minister to Cuba, and he serves as a special judge at the In-walkers that every time we go into a new district, we have to look up where the cobbler is and get our shoes mended because we just walk the soles right off our shoes.

KANIN: We collect railway stations, too, the way some people collect coins and stamps. We have railway stations all over the world that we're real crazy about.

GORDON: Yes. We're transients. We're real transients.

MURROW: Well, unfortunately, we've got to walk away from this pleasant visit. Thank you very much, Ruth.

GORDON: Thank you, Ed.

MURROW: Thank you, Gar.

KANIN: Are you leaving so soon?

MURROW: I'm sorry, but good night.

KANIN: Good night, Ed.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with India's Ambassador, M. C. Chagla. And now a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Mahomed Ali Currim Chagla is India's Ambassador to the United States and Mexico. He is also India's Minister to Cuba, and he serves as a special judge at the International Court of Justice at The Hague -- an interesting combination of jobs for a very able man.

Ambassador Chagla was born 58 years ago in Bombay; went to college there, and then to Oxford in England. He practiced and taught law for about 20 years before he became a judge, and later he was Chief Justice of the High Court of Bombay. He has also acted as governor of Bombay's state, and is a delegate to the United Nations.

This is the Indian Embassy in Washington, D. C. where the ambassador and Mrs. Chagla have been in residence now for some seven months.

Good evening, Ambassador Chagla.

CHAGLA: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Ambassador Chagla, all of your various jobs must not leave much time for diversion. Do you ever get a chance to observe the Washington Senators? The baseball team, I mean.

CHAGLA: You know, Mr. Murrow, my Prime Minister has asked this question -- and don't forget he does infinitely more work than I do and carries a very big burden -- and was asked how do you manage to do all this, and his answer was, "I am only 69." So I can say I am only 58. With regard to the baseball game, I was present at the opening game in Washington ternational Court of Justice at The Hague -- an interesting combination of jobs for a very able man.

Ambassador Chagla was born 58 years ago in Bombay; went to college there, and then to Oxford in England. He practiced and taught law for about 20 years before he became a judge, and later he was Chief Justice of the High Court of Bombay. He has also acted as governor of Bombay's state, and is a delegate to the United Nations.

This is the Indian Embassy in Washington, D. C. where the ambassador and Mrs. Chagla have been in residence now for some seven months.

Good evening, Ambassador Chagla.

CHAGLA: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Ambassador Chagla, all of your various jobs must not leave much time for diversion. Do you ever get a chance to observe the Washington Senators? The baseball team, I mean.

CHAGLA: You know, Mr. Murrow, my Prime Minister has asked this question -- and don't forget he does infinitely more work than I do and carries a very big burden -- and was asked how do you manage to do all this, and his answer was, "I am only 69." So I can say I am only 58. With regard to the baseball game, I was present at the opening game in Washington when the President was supposed to throw the ball, but he was not present.

MURROW: Yes.

CHAGLA: Vice President Nixon was there, and I enjoyed the game thoroughly.

MURROW: Well, as an expert in international law, you didn't have any trouble understanding baseball's rules, did you?

CHAGLA: I assure you that the baseball rules are infinitely more complicated and more difficult to understand than the rules of the International Court, but I had an expert sitting next to me and he explained to me all the fine points of the game, and very soon I hope to become a baseball fan.

MURROW: Ambassador Chagla, I know that that pedestal next to you has a special significance. Would you explain it to us?

CHAGLA: Yes. This is the emblem of a state in our country, and this is a copy of the column that was set up by one of our greatest emperors, Asoka, who lived and flourished 300 years B.C., and he put up this column at the spot where Chandragupta Maurya preached his first message of peace. These are the four lions that face the four directions of the world proclaiming peace to the world, and this inscrip-

when the President was supposed to throw the ball, but he was not present.

MURROW: Yes.

CHAGLA: Vice President Nixon was there, and I enjoyed the game thoroughly.

MURROW: Well, as an expert in international law, you didn't have any trouble understanding baseball's rules, did you?

CHAGLA: I assure you that the baseball rules are infinitely more complicated and more difficult to understand than the rules of the International Court, but I had an expert sitting next to me and he explained to me all the fine points of the game, and very soon I hope to become a baseball fan.

MURROW: Ambassador Chagla, I know that that pedestal next to you has a special significance. Would you explain it to us?

CHAGLA: Yes. This is the emblem of a state in our country, and this is a copy of the column that was set up by one of our greatest emperors, Asoka, who lived and flourished 300 years B.C., and he put up this column at the spot where Chandragupta Maurya preached his first message of peace. These are the four lions that face the four directions of the world proclaiming peace to the world, and this inscription here in Sanskrit, which means ?

"Peace only will prevail." I hope, Mr. Murrow, you will agree that ultimately peace will prevail.

MURROW: I certainly do. Mr. Ambassador, you and Mrs. Chagla must have greeted quite a few visitors in the seven months you have been in Washington. Is she enjoying it?

CHAGLA: Well, visitors have very many times visited our legation, and here is my wife, who very much would like to meet you.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Chagla.

CHAGLA: This is Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Chagla.

MRS. CHAGLA: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: That's a beautiful sari you're wearing.

MRS. CHAGLA: Thank you. The head piece is from Kashmir and the bottom is hand-woven from Bombay.

MURROW: Well, I would think the Chaglas must find the life of an ambassador in Washington quite different from that of the chief justice of Bombay.

CHAGLA: Very different, Mr. Murrow. As chief justice I only work and function within the narrow boundaries of the record. As a diplomat I am most of the time off the record. As chief justice, after I have done my five hours work tion here in Sanskrit, which means "peace only will prevail." I hope, Mr. Murrow, you will agree that ultimately peace will prevail.

MURROW: I certainly do. Mr. Ambassador, you and Mrs. Chagla must have greeted quite a few visitors in the seven months you have been in Washington. Is she enjoying it?

CHAGLA: Well, visitors have very many times visited our legation, and here is my wife, who very much would like to meet you.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Chagla.

CHAGLA: This is Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Good evening, Mrs. Chagla.

MRS. CHAGLA: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: That's a beautiful sari you're wearing.

MRS. CHAGLA: Thank you. The head piece is from Kasmir and the bottom is hand-woven from Bombay.

MURROW: Well, I would think the Chaglas must find the life of an ambassador in Washington quite different from that of the chief justice of Bombay.

CHAGLA: Very different, Mr. Murrow. As chief justice I only work and function within the narrow boundaries of the record. As a diplomat I am most of the time off the record. As chief justice, after I have done my five hours work in court, I have a life to myself. I had a lot of privacy. Here I have forgotten what privacy means.

MURROW: Ambassador Chagla, I know it is always open season on ambassadors to make speeches. Have you found that to be very much of a chore?

CHAGLA: No, Mr. Murrow, I really enjoy speaking to the people of America. I have spoken in various parts of the country and to various types of people, and may I say why I enjoy it?

MURROW: Yes; please do.

CHAGLA: I find that the people of this country appreciate frankness. If they know that you are a friend of theirs, and you like them, they welcome your frankness, and by now the people of America know that I like them and I am a friend of theirs, and so I do not hesitate to speak absolutely frankly to them.

MURROW: You rather like the rough and tumble of questions and answers, too, don't you?

CHAGLA: Well, I enjoy that more than anything else. You see, both in England and in India this is an institution which is almost unknown. In this country after almost every speech of yours, questions are asked of you and you are to answer them, and I think this is but right that it should in court, I have a life to myself. I had a lot of privacy. Here I have forgotten what privacy means.

MURROW: Ambassador Chagla, I know it is always open season on ambassadors to make speeches. Have you found that to be very much of a chore?

CHAGLA: No, Mr. Murrow, I really enjoy speaking to the people of America. I have spoken in various parts of the country and to various types of people, and may I say why I enjoy it?

MURROW: Yes; please do.

CHAGLA: I find that the people of this country appreciate frankness. If they know that you are a friend of theirs, and you like them, they welcome your frankness, and by now the people of America know that I like them and I am a friend of theirs, and so I do not hesitate to speak absolutely frankly to them.

MURROW: You rather like the rough and tumble of questions and answers, too, don't you?

CHAGLA: Well, I enjoy that more than anything else. You see, both in England and in India this is an institution which is almost unknown. In this country after almost every speech of yours, questions are asked of you and you are to answer them, and I think this is but right that it should be so. If you place before the audience a certain proposition, or your point of view, you must be prepared to be cross-examined on that, and I have been telling the audience that for nearly 30 years I have been cross-examining the witnesses, and it is a new experience for me to step into the witness box and to be cross-examined.

MURROW: Mr. Ambassador, do you find American audiences sympathetic to your views?

CHAGLA: Very sympathetic. I think there is a growing understanding and an awareness of what India stands for; of what India's policy is; of what India's point of view is, and it is really a pleasure to speak with the people of America.

MURROW: Mrs. Chagla, do you and your children accompany the Ambassador on his speech-making trips in this country?

MRS. CHAGLA: We do sometimes.

CHAGLA: Well, when my wife comes with me, I'm sure she gets bored listening to me, and as regards my children, my daughter was here for two months. She has just gone back to Bombay. My one son is studying at Cambridge, England, and the other son is working in New York. And may I point out to you a picture of my daughter which is here?

be so. If you place before the audience a certain proposition, or your point of view, you must be prepared to be cross-examined on that, and I have been telling the audience that for nearly 30 years I have been cross-examining the witnesses, and it is a new experience for me to step into the witness box and to be cross-examined.

MURROW: Mr. Ambassador, do you find American audiences sympathetic to your views?

CHAGLA: Very sympathetic. I think there is a growing understanding and an awareness of what India stands for; of what India's policy is; of what India's point of view is, and it is really a pleasure to speak with the people of America.

MURROW: Mrs. Chagla, do you and your children accompany the Ambassador on his speech-making trips in this country?

MRS. CHAGLA: We do sometimes.

CHAGLA: Well, when my wife comes with me, I'm sure she gets bored listening to me, and as regards my children, my daughter was here for two months. She has just gone back to Bombay. My one son is studying at Cambridge, England, and the other son is working in New York. And may I point out to you a picture of my daughter which is here?

MURROW: Yes.

CHAGLA: That's my daughter, Mr. Murrow. I think you met her.

MURROW: Yes, I did.

CHAGLA: That's my only grandchild.

MURROW: Oh, yes. Did you bring many things with you when you came from India?

CHAGLA: Well, I brought a few things, but there is one special thing I would very much like to show you, and that is a portrait of Mahatma Gandhi. There it is. Now let me tell you a little history about this. I was asked to open the exposition of the lady who has been responsible for this portrait in Bombay, Mrs. Pandit---

MURROW: Yes?

CHAGLA: ---and as a token of appreciation, she sent me this portrait. Now, from a distance it looks like a crayon drawing---

MURROW: Yes, it does.

CHAGLA: ---but it is not. It has been made out of human hair, thousands and tens of thousands human hairs interwoven, and you can imagine the labor, the patience, the concentration that was required to prepare this. Let me say this is a wonderful likeness of Gandhi.

MURROW: Yes.

CHAGIA: That's my daughter, Mr. Murrow. I think you met her.

MURROW: Yes, I did.

CHAGIA: That's my only grandchild.

MURROW: Oh, yes. Did you bring many things with you when you came from India?

CHAGIA: Well, I brought a few things, but there is one special thing I would very much like to show you, and that is a portrait of Mahatma Gandhi. There it is. Now let me tell you a little history about this. I was asked to open the exposition of the lady who has been responsible for this portrait in Bombay, Mrs. Pandit---

MURROW: Yes?

CHAGIA: ---and as a token of appreciation, she sent me this portrait. Now, from a distance it looks like a crayon drawing---

MURROW: Yes, it does.

CHAGIA: ---but it is not. It has been made out of human hair, thousands and tens of thousands human hairs interwoven, and you can imagine the labor, the patience, the concentration that was required to prepare this. Let me say this is a wonderful likeness of Gandhi.

MURROW: Very remarkable. Certainly Gandhi's philosophy continues to be a strong guide for your people, doesn't it?

CHAGLA: Oh, yes, it has become part of our philosophy, part of our politics, part of our foreign policy.

MURROW: Sir, how would you describe current relations between our two countries?

CHAGLA: I have never known the relations to be better or more cordial. There is a friendliness and understanding, a sympathy which is really striking.

MURROW: I think you told me once that you would like to see more private capital invested in India. Isn't that right?

CHAGLA: I did. I want economic cooperation not merely between government and government, but between the people of this country and the people of my country---

MURROW: Well---

CHAGLA: ---and that can only come about if capitalists and industrialists in this country are prepared to invest in India.

MURROW: Well, sir, as a great jurist turned to be what I might call a salesman for his country, just how do you sell India as an investment for American capital?

MURROW: Very remarkable. Certainly Gandhi's philosophy continues to be a strong guide for your people, doesn't it?

CHAGLA: Oh, yes, it has become part of our philosophy, part of our politics, part of our foreign policy.

MURROW: Sir, how would you describe current relations between our two countries?

CHAGLA: I have never known the relations to be better or more cordial. There is a friendliness and understanding, a sympathy which is really striking.

MURROW: I think you told me once that you would like to see more private capital invested in India. Isn't that right?

CHAGLA: I did. I want economic cooperation not merely between government and government, but between the people of this country and the people of my country---

MURROW: Well---

CHAGLA: ---and that can only come about if capitalists and industrialists in this country are prepared to invest in India.

MURROW: Well, sir, as a great jurist turned to be what I might call a salesman for his country, just how do you sell India as an investment for American capital?

CHAGLA: Well, I don't like that commercial expression.

MURROW: I'm sorry.

CHAGLA: My duty is not to sell anything. My duty is to interpret my country to the people of this country, and what I have been pointing out to the people of this country is the great importance of India today in the contest of the world. Let me put it to you this way. India is a great democracy. So is this country. India is trying to improve her lot; to fight for equality; to introduce prosperity, industrialize the country, but all by democratic methods. If India succeeds, democracy will succeed not only in India, but in the whole of Asia and Africa because the people of Asia and Africa are watching the experiment in India. If democracy fails in India, if it cannot find prosperity democratically, then, as I said somewhere, the lights will go out in Asia and Africa, and what I have been telling my American friends is you must join us in this exciting adventure of fighting for equality in India because in doing so you are not merely helping India, the people of India; you are helping the cause of democracy and the cause of peace, and the cause of freedom.

MURROW: Mr. Ambassador, we were speaking a moment ago of questions and answers. What do you reply to people who

CHAGLA: Well, I don't like that commercial expression.

MURROW: I'm sorry.

CHAGLA: My duty is not to sell anything. My duty is to interpret my country to the people of this country, and what I have been pointing out to the people of this country is the great importance of India today in the contest of the world. Let me put it to you this way. India is a great democracy. So is this country. India is trying to improve her lot; to fight for equality; to introduce prosperity, industrialize the country, but all by democratic methods. If India succeeds, democracy will succeed not only in India, but in the whole of Asia and Africa because the people of Asia and Africa are watching the experiment in India. If democracy fails in India, if it cannot find prosperity democratically, then, as I said somewhere, the lights will go out in Asia and Africa, and what I have been telling my American friends is you must join us in this exciting adventure of fighting for equality in India because in doing so you are not merely helping India, the people of India; you are helping the cause of democracy and the cause of peace, and the cause of freedom.

MURROW: Mr. Ambassador, we were speaking a moment ago of questions and answers. What do you reply to people who complain about India being neutralist?

CHAGLA: Well, I tell them India is not neutral. Now, please remember this: Alliances are not merely caused by military pacts. There are stronger bonds than military pacts that can unite two countries, and India and the United States are united by stronger bonds than the bonds of military pacts. They are united by basic things in life. They are united by the fact that you and me believe in democracy. We are united by the fact that you and me believe in freedom. We believe in the dignity of man. We believe in the rule of law. These are stronger bonds than the bonds, as I said, of the military pact. We are not neutral. We are irretrievably, deeply, irrevocably committed to the cause of democracy at peace. That's not neutralist.

MURROW: Mr. Ambassador, in your seven months in Washington, what has most excited, most interested you?

CHAGLA: What has excited me most is television. The very fact that I am now facing about 50 million people, and being seen by 50 million people is the most exciting thing that could happen. I hope I am not doing an injustice to your program. Perhaps more people than 50 million see it. Don't forget, Mr. Murrow, that we have no television in India. As regards what has interested me, it is the friendliness, the complain about India being neutralist?

CHAGLA: Well, I tell them India is not neutral. Now, please remember this: Alliances are not merely caused by military pacts. There are stronger bonds than military pacts that can unite two countries, and India and the United States are united by stronger bonds than the bonds of military pacts. They are united by basic things in life. They are united by the fact that you and me believe in democracy. We are united by the fact that you and me believe in freedom. We believe in the dignity of man. We believe in the rule of law. These are stronger bonds than the bonds, as I said, of the military pact. We are not neutral. We are irretrievably, deeply, irrevocably committed to the cause of democracy at peace. That's not neutralist.

MURROW: Mr. Ambassador, in your seven months in Washington, what has most excited, most interested you?

CHAGLA: What has excited me most is television. The very fact that I am now facing about 50 million people, and being seen by 50 million people is the most exciting thing that could happen. I hope I am not doing an injustice to your program. Perhaps more people than 50 million see it. Don't forget, Mr. Murrow, that we have no television in India. As regards what has interested me, it is the friendliness, the kindliness, the informality of the people of America, and the dignity of labor which this country believes in. I find if a man is doing an honest job, never mind what the job is, he is respected, and that is a very great comfort.

MURROW: Thank you very much, indeed, for letting us come and visit you. Thank you, Mrs. Chagla.

CHAGLA: Thank you, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Mr. Ambassador. Mrs. Chagla, thank you. I hope in the course of the coming year to see some of this great adventure in India that you have had a chance to tell us just a little bit about tonight.

CHAGLA: You will be very welcome in India, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Thanks so very much. Good night.

CHAGLA: Good night.

MRS. CHAGLA: Good night.

MURROW: Thank you again.

I will be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests. Now a word about Kent cigarettes.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to visit with the former head of the United Press, Hugh Bailey here in New York. Mr. Bailey has been associated with the news business kindliness, the informality of the people of America, and the dignity of labor which this country believes in. I find if a man is doing an honest job, never mind what the job is, he is respected, and that is a very great comfort.

MURROW: Thank you very much, indeed, for letting us come and visit you. Thank you, Mrs. Chagla.

CHAGLA: Thank you, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Mr. Ambassador. Mrs. Chagla, thank you. I hope in the course of the coming year to see some of this great adventure in India that you have had a chance to tell us just a little bit about tonight.

CHAGLA: You will be very welcome in India, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Thanks so very much. Good night.

CHAGLA: Good night.

MRS. CHAGLA: Good night.

MURROW: Thank you again.

I will be back in a moment to tell you about next week's guests. Now a word about Kent cigarettes.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Next week we'll be going to visit with the former head of the United Press, Hugh Baily here in New York. Mr. Baily has been associated with the news business for over 40 years and has covered major events in the lives of every American president from Teddy Roosevelt to President Eisenhower.

Next week we will also be calling on actress Lee Remick and her husband, television director Bill Colleran. Within the past two years Miss Remick has become one of Hollywood's most successful young new actresses.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

---

for over 40 years and has covered major events in the lives of every American president from Teddy Roosevelt to President Eisenhower.

Next week we will also be calling on actress Lee Remick and her husband, television director Bill Colleran. Within the past two years Miss Remick has become one of Hollywood's most successful young new actresses.

There are some of the people who made tonight's program possible.

ANNOUNCER: PERSON TO PERSON is produced by John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer and Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And now from PERSON TO PERSON, good night and good luck.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Lee Remick and Bill Colleran

High Baillie

June 26, 1959 - 10:30 PM EDT

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with actress Lee Remick and her husband, television director Bill Colleran. Then we'll move on to the home of Hugh Baillie, former president of the United Press.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

CBS Television

PERSON TO PERSON with EDWARD R. MURROW

Guests: Lee Remick and Bill Colleran

High Baillie

June 26, 1959 - 10:30 PM EDT

MURROW: Good evening. I'm Ed Murrow. The name of the program is PERSON TO PERSON. Tonight we'll be visiting with actress Lee Remick and her husband, television director Bill Colleran. Then we'll move on to the home of Hugh Baillie, former president of the United Press.

We'll be ready to go right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

DORIS C. NEGER REPORTING SERVICE
224 ROSLYN ROAD MINEOLA, NEW YORK
Pioneer 6-5545

LEGAL • ARBITRATIONS • NEGOTIATIONS • CONVENTIONS • CONFERENCES

(Commercial)

MURROW: Actress Lee Remick says of herself that she's a mixture of Boston, Broadway and Piggott, Arkansas. She was born in Quincy, Massachusetts; got her first acting breaks on Broadway, and in New York television, and started her first movie role in Piggott, Arkansas.

Her husband, Bill Colleran, whom she married two years ago, started out to study medicine but is now in show business too, producing and directing musicals for television.

Lee Remick's first film was "A Face In The Cloud" followed by "The Long Hot Summer." She has just returned to New York after filming the soon to be released "Anatomy Of A Murder."

Miss Remick, her husband, and their four-month-old daughter live in a duplex apartment in this building -- the one in the middle there -- on the East Side of Manhattan. Bill also maintains his offices here.

Evening, Lee.

REMICK: Good evening. How are you?

MURROW: Evening, Bill.

COLLERAN: Evening.

MURROW: This has been a rather hectic year for

(Commercial)

MURROW: Actress Lee Remick says of herself that she's a mixture of Boston, Broadway and Piggott, Arkansas. She was born in Quincy, Massachusetts; got her first acting breaks on Broadway, and in New York television, and started her first movie role in Piggott, Arkansas.

Her husband, Bill Colleran, whom she married two years ago, started out to study medicine but is now in show business too, producing and directing musicals for television.

Lee Remick's first film was "A Face in The Crowd" followed by "The Long Hot Summer." She has just returned to New York after filming the soon to be released "Anatomy of A Murder."

Miss Remick, her husband, and their four-month-old daughter live in a duplex apartment in this building -- one in the middle there -- on the East Side of Manhattan. Bill also maintains his offices here.

Evening, Lee.

REMICK: Good evening. How are you?

MURROW: Evening, Bill.

COLLERAN: Evening.

MURROW: This has been a rather hectic year for the two of you, hasn't it?

REMICK: Oh, it has. It's been a wonderful year. One of the most wonderful things about it was the birth of our baby. And then Bill has done five big special television shows, and I have just returned, as you said, from shooting "Anatomy of A Murder."

MURROW: Lee, while you were making "Anatomy" you had a chance to work with an old friend of mine, Joe Welsh.

REMICK: Oh, yes.

MURROW: Tell me, how would you rate lawyer Joe Welsh as an actor?

REMICK: I would rate him at the top of the class. He was just wonderful -- a marvelous man. He was a great gentleman, and I must say Mr. and Mrs. Welsh both were our favorite baby sitters in Michigan. They took care of Kaita on many an occasion. He's a wonderful gentleman. All the time that I knew him, and as well as I got to know them both, I would ask him time and time again to please call me by my first name, and he would say, "Yes, Miss Remick." Never failed.

MURROW: Bill, it must be rather nice to have the lady of the house back home again.

COLLERAN: Oh, is it! I got so tired of those

the two of you, hasn't it?

REMICK: Oh, it has. It's been a wonderful year. One of the most wonderful things about it was the birth of our baby. And then Bill has done five big special television shows, and I have just returned, as you said, from shooting "Anatomy of A Murder."

MURROW: Lee, while you were making "Anatomy" you had a chance to work with an old friend of mine, Joe Welch.

REMICK: Oh, yes.

MURROW: Tell me, how would you rate lawyer Joe Welch as an actor?

REMICK: I would rate him at the top of the class. He was just wonderful -- a marvelous man. He was a great gentleman, and I must say Mr. and Mrs. Welch both were our favorite baby sitters in Michigan. They took care of Jeffie on many an occasion. He's a wonderful gentleman. All the time that I knew him, and as well as I got to know them both, I would ask him time and time again to please call me by my first name, and he would say, "Yes, Miss Remick." He never failed.

MURROW: Well, it must be written in the law that lady of the house back home again.

COLLEMAN: Oh, is that! I get so tired of frozen chicken pies. Let me tell you, it was awful. All the time she was away I kind of left the house just sit until she got back and since then we've been doing some decorating. It's about three-quarters finished now. This is the living room, and there's my marvelous Bing Crosby chair over there from the first show I did with Bing last year.

MURROW: Oh, yes. Lee, tell me, just how old were you when the acting bug first bit you?

REMICK: Well, the acting bug was not the first one that bit, actually. I started as a dancer and I studied dancing from the time I was about eight years old here in New York, and then my first job was as a dancer. But then I began to get little bitty acting parts, and I got to like that an awful lot better and I was better at it, so that took over.

COLLERAN: Then Kazan saw her in a thing she did on television for Robert Montgomery and that was the real beginning of her screen career.

MURROW: So you had your dramatic training right here in New York -- right?

REMICK: Actually, I never had any formal acting training, Ed. Everybody thinks I have just because I worked with Kazan, and they all figure automatically that means frozen chicken pies. Let me tell you, it was awful. All the time she was away I kind of left the house just sit until she got back and since then we've been doing some decorating. It's about three-quarters finished now. This is the living room, and there's my marvelous Bing Crosby chair over there from the first show I did with Bing last year.

MURROW: Oh, yes. Lee, tell me, just how old were you when the acting bug first bit you?

KEMICK: Well, the acting bug was not the first one that bit, actually. I started as a dancer and I studied dancing from the time I was about eight years old here in New York, and then my first job was as a dancer. But then I began to get little bitty acting parts, and I got to like that an awful lot better and I was better at it, so that took over.

COLLERAN: Then Karen saw her in a taping she did on television for Robert Montgomery and that was the real beginning of her screen career.

MURROW: So you had your dramatic training here in New York -- right?

KEMICK: Actually, I never had any formal acting training, no. Everybody thinks I have just become a vehicle with Karen, and then all figure automatically that where Actors Studio. In my case that wasn't true at all. I found that once I started to work, I was fortunately busy enough that I never had time to go to class, and I found that I learned just as much, I think, working with directors and with other actors.

MURROW: Bill, how about you? How did you happen to drift away from medicine to musicals?

COLLERAN: Well, Ed, the drift began in a little town in Minnesota called Hoka of about 500 population, and I lived there until I was about 18, and when I went into the Navy, my family moved to California. And so when I got out of the Navy, I went out to California expecting to go back into medicine, but I suddenly decided I wanted to go to work in pictures. So I went out to Fox one day and it happened to be the day on which somebody had just quit and so I went to work on Monday.

MURROW: Bill, I should imagine there are certain small differences between life in midtown Manhattan and life in Hoka, Minnesota -- right?

COLLERAN: Are there! Are there ever! Lots of them. And I will say that every once in a while I start thinking about them and I do miss Minnesota and the country and farms, and particularly around thrashing time because that Actors Studio. In my case that wasn't true at all. I found that once I started to work, I was fortunately busy enough that I never had time to go to class, and I found that I learned just as much, I think, working with directors and with other actors.

MURROW: Bill, how about you? How did you happen to drift away from medicine to music?

COLLERAN: Well, Ed, the drift began in a little town in Minnesota called Hoke of about 500 population, and I lived there until I was about 18, and when I went into the Navy, my family moved to California. And so when I got out of the Navy, I went out to California expecting to go back into medicine, but I suddenly decided I wanted to go to work in pictures. So I went out to Fox one day and it happened to be the day on which somebody had just quit and so I went to work on Monday.

MURROW: Bill, I should imagine there are certain small differences between life in midtown Minneapolis and life in Hoke, Minnesota -- right?

COLLERAN: Are there! Are there even! You can tell them. One I will say that everyone in a while I start talking about them and I do miss Minnesota and the country, the farms, and particularly around threshing time because was my favorite time of the year, not only because of all the food, but I started out when I was about five as the water boy, and then I graduated to stacking the grain. Then, finally, when I really made it, I got my own horse, which was an old plow horse called Belle that I had for years and years. I don't know what happened to her. She has faded away.

REMICK: Even though we live in New York and we have no real farm, we have our own little version of the "Back 40" here.

MURROW: What is it?

REMICK: Well, it's our jungle. It's a collection of plants which Bill has been working on and growing for five or six years, some of them, especially the great big tree. He has a green thumb and he can make anything grow under any conditions. It's wonderful.

MURROW: I should think one of these days before you know it you'll have yourselves a helper. By the way, who does the baby look like?

REMICK: Well, you know, it's sort of split up.

COLLERAN: A little of both.

MURROW: You wouldn't happen to have a picture around, would you?

COLLERAN: Would we!

was my favorite time of the year, not only because of all the food, but I started out when I was about five as the water boy, and then I graduated to stacking the grain. Then, finally, when I really made it, I got my own horse, which was an old plow horse called Dolly that I had for years and years. I don't know what happened to her. She has faded away.

REMICK: Even though we live in New York and we have no real farm, we have our own little version of the "Back 40" here.

MURROW: What is it?

REMICK: Well, it's our jungle. It's a collection of plants which Bill has been working on and growing for five or six years, some of them, especially the great big tree. He has a green thumb and he can make anything grow, under any conditions. It's wonderful.

MURROW: I should think one of these days before you know it you'll have yourselves a helper. By the way, what does the baby look like?

REMICK: Well, you know, it's sort of ugly.

COLLEMAN: A little of both.

MURROW: You wouldn't happen to have a picture around, would you?

COLLEMAN: Would we!

REMICK: Of course we do.

COLLERAN: A few thousand.

REMICK: They're in here in the dining room which is as yet a sort of incomplete room. We have everything but dining room chairs -- no place to sit down and eat, so it makes it a little bit awkward.

COLLERAN: And in here I happen to have, as I say, a few hundred pictures of you know who that I haven't had time to hang yet, so I will bring out my favorite that I took when she was up in Ishpeming with her mother, and there's herself.

REMICK: Isn't that cute?

MURROW: Oh, that's wonderful. A very handsome young lady.

REMICK: Thank you.

MURROW: She'll hate you for that when she's about 19, won't she?

REMICK: Yes, she will.

MURROW: I'm sure her grandparents must be as proud of her as you are.

REMICK: Oh, they're wonderful! They can't stay away from her, and then tend to spoil her a little bit. One of the rare presents Kaita has received so far in her young life is this piece of metal sculpture, which is a gift from RENICK: Of course we do.

COLLERAN: A few thousand.

RENICK: They're in here in the dining room which is as yet a sort of incomplete room. We have everything but dining room chairs -- no place to sit down and eat, so it makes it a little bit awkward.

COLLERAN: And in here I happen to have, as I was a few hundred pictures of you know who that I haven't had time to hang yet, so I will bring out my favorite that I took when she was up in Lapponing with her mother, and there's here it.

RENICK: Isn't that cute?

MURROW: Oh, that's wonderful. A very handsome young lady.

RENICK: Thank you.

MURROW: She'll hate you for that when she's older, won't she?

RENICK: Yes, she will.

MURROW: I'm sure her grandparents must be so proud of her as you are.

RENICK: Oh, they're wonderful! They can't wait away from her, and then tend to spoil her a little bit. One of the more pressing facts has presented so far in this life in this piece of metal sculpture, which is a very my father to Kaita on her baptismal day. He appeared here on the way to church with this great big, huge gift---

MURROW: Yes?

REMICK: ---which we thought would probably be a kind of conventional toy, and it turned out to be this wonderful guardian angel. We call him Tommy after St. Thomas of Defiance. He takes care of everything in the house.

MURROW: Oh, wonderful! A very good start if you are planning a collection of modern sculpture, too, isn't it?

REMICK: Well, yes, except that we really -- most of our things in the house are antiques. We have very little in the way of new and modern things. One of our very favorite collections is this of these ancient heads from Greece. These first three are Fifth Century B.C. Greek heads, and the other two are Fifth Century Roman heads. They're quite lovely and our very favorite favorite things.

COLLERAN: And then I've got a little thing here which is not nearly so important historically or artistically, but I am very proud of it and fondof it.

MURROW: Well, it looks interesting, but what is it?

COLLERAN: It's a cup, but a very special cup that came from the captain's cabin of the first steamship that my father to Kate on her baptismal day. He appeared here on the way to church with this great big, huge gift----

MURROW: Yes?

MERRICK: ----which we thought would probably be a kind of conventional toy, and it turned out to be this wonderful guardian angel. We call him Tommy after St. Thomas of Defiance. He takes care of everything in the house.

MURROW: Oh, wonderful! A very good start if you are planning a collection of modern sculpture. Too, isn't it?

MERRICK: Well, yes, except that we really -- most of our things in the house are antiques. We have very little in the way of new and modern things. One of our very favorite collections is this of these ancient heads from Greece. These first three are Fifth Century B.C. Greek heads, and the other two are Fifth Century Roman heads. They're quite lovely, and our very favorite favorite things.

COLLEMAN: And then I've got a little thing here which is not nearly so important historically or artistically, but I am very proud of it and fond of it.

MURROW: Well, it looks interesting, but what is it?

COLLEMAN: It's a cup, but a very special cup that came from the estate's cellar of the first Governor's sailed the Atlantic and sunk off of Salt Island down in the Caribbean where we shot all the underwater stuff when I was directing "Windjammer," and, you know, underwater one day I happened to come across this cup underneath a board.

MURROW: You know, "Windjammer" must have been an interesting assignment for an ex-Navy man, wasn't it?

COLLERAN: Oh, was it! Spending three months on that beautiful ship. But the greatest experience for me, an ex-Navy man, was with the Caribbean Fleet when I was connected by a headset to the entire Caribbean Fleet and suddenly I found myself saying, "Bring those destroyers in. Move the battleships over this way. Bring the jets lower." And because of the wide screen thing, and having to get so much closer to camera---

MURROW: Yes?

COLLERAN: ---I could never get the destroyers to come close enough to camera, and so we kept doing it over and over, and finally I said, "Now this next time is the last time. Really close this time." And so they started coming at me full speed, and I was looking through the camera and suddenly a stagehand just as they were coming down on top of us, reached up his hand and said, "Stop!" to this big battleship.

sailed the Atlantic and sank off of Salt Island down in the Caribbean where we shot all the underwater stuff when I was directing "Windjammer," and, you know, underwater one day I happened to come across this cup underneath a board.

MURROW: You know, "Windjammer" must have been an interesting assignment for an ex-Navy man, wasn't it?

COLLERAN: Oh, was it! Spending three months on that beautiful ship. But the greatest experience for an ex-Navy man, was with the Caribbean Fleet when I was connected by a headset to the entire Caribbean Fleet and suddenly I found myself saying, "Bring those destroyers in. Move the battleships over this way. Bring the jets lower." And because of the wide screen thing, and having to get so much closer to camera---

MURROW: Yes?

COLLERAN: ---I could never get the destroyers to come close enough to camera, and so we kept doing it over and over, and finally I said, "Now this next time is the last time. Really close this time." And so they started coming at me full speed, and I was looking through the camera and suddenly a stagehand just as they were coming down on top of us, reached up his hand and said, "Stop!" in this little ship.

REMICK: The funny thing about it was he speaks of himself as an ex-Navy man. He was a seaman second class and here he was commanding the entire Caribbean Fleet.

MURROW: Lee, tell me, have you and Bill ever thought of working together as a team sometime?

REMICK: Oh, yes, we hope to very much. We're looking, you know, for something to do together either on the stage or in films or in television.

COLLERAN: We have our own corporation now and we're looking for the right property that we want to do first together.

REMICK: I only hope that if it's a film, and it's done on location, it's done on some romantic spot. It seems to me all other actresses get to go to places like Paris, and the South of France, and Rome, and all of my pictures have been made in -- one was in Piggott, Arkansas, and one in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, and one in Durango, Colorado, and "Anatomy" was in Ishpeming, Michigan. I never seem to get to the exotic places. I only hope that's what we do.

MURROW: Well, I'm sure you will. Other than plans to work together, what's the big dream in the Remick-Colleran future?

COLLERAN: Well, getting back to the "Back 40."

KEMLICK: The funny thing about it was he speaks of himself as an ex-Navy man. He was a seaman second class and here he was commanding the entire Caribbean fleet.

MURROW: Lee, tell me, have you and Bill ever thought of working together as a team sometime?

KEMLICK: Oh, yes, we hope to very much. We're looking, you know, for something to do together either on the stage or in films or in television.

COLLERAN: We have our own corporation now and we're looking for the right property that we want to do first together.

KEMLICK: I only hope that if it's a film, and it's done on location, it's done on some romantic spot. It seems to me all other actresses get to go to places like Paris, and the South of France, and Rome, and all of my pictures have been made in -- one was in Piggott, Arkansas, and one in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, and one in Durango, Colorado, and "Anatomy" was in Ishpeming, Michigan. I never seem to get to the exotic places. I only hope that's whatever MURROW: Well, I'm sure you will. Either that plans to work together, what's the big dream in the Kemlick-Colleran future?

COLLERAN: Well, getting back to the Mack A.

It's a farm. We would like to have a really great working farm some place here in the East. Probably in upstate New York or western Connecticut or western Massachusetts. But a place that really is a real farm on which I can get back into the dirt and all that stuff, you know.

MURROW: Lee, what sort of farm hand do you think you'd make?

REMICK: Well, I'd love to make a try at it, but being a New York girl, my only experience with the wide open spaces has been kind of confined to Central Park.

COLLERAN: She's not exactly the pioneer type.

REMICK: Not exactly.

MURROW: Well, thank you very much, indeed, Lee. Thank you, Bill, for letting us come tonight.

REMICK: Thank you.

COLLERAN: Thank you, Ed.

MURROW: And will you say good night to Kaita for us, or good morning perhaps.

REMICK: Yes, that we will.

COLLERAN: Yes. Okay.

MURROW: Thank you very much, indeed. Good night.

REMICK: Good night.

COLLERAN: Good night.

It's a farm. We would like to have a really great working farm some place here in the East. Probably in upstate New York or western Connecticut or western Massachusetts. Get a place that really is a real farm on which I can get back into the dirt and all that stuff, you know.

MUNROW: Lee, what sort of farm hand do you think you'd make?

RAMICK: Well, I'd love to make a try at it, but being a New York girl, my only experience with the wide open spaces has been kind of confined to Central Park.

COLLERAN: She's not exactly the pioneer type.

RAMICK: Not exactly.

MUNROW: Well, thank you very much, indeed, Lee. Thank you, Bill, for letting us come tonight.

RAMICK: Thank you.

COLLERAN: Thank you, Ma.

MUNROW: And will you say good night to Kurt for us, or good morning perhaps.

RAMICK: Yes, that we will.

COLLERAN: Yes. Okay.

MUNROW: Thank you very much, indeed. Good night.

RAMICK: Good night.

COLLERAN: Good night.

MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Hugh Baillie, and now a word from Kent cigarettes.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Hugh Baillie was born into a newspaper family in Brooklyn about 68 years ago. His grandfather was a reporter, and his Scottish father, David G. Baillie, was a reporter and literary secretary to Andrew Carnegie. Hugh started in the newspaper business in Los Angeles while he was in his teens. He joined the United Press in 1915, and 20 years later became president of the U.P., one of the world's largest news gathering agencies. From 1935 to 1955 during 20 great newsmaking years, Hugh Baillie was really the top man at U.P. Four years ago he retired, but not to take it easy. He has been traveling, writing, and recently published his book, "High Tension," recollections of 45 years of reporting.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Baillie have a house in La Jolla, California, and for 25 years they have also lived in an apartment in this building on New York's East Side.

Evening, Hugh.

BAILLIE: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

BAILLIE: I'm fine, and I'm just remembering this is the second time you've had me on. Do you remember the MURROW: In just a moment we'll take you for a visit with Hugh Baillie, and now a word from Kent cigarettes.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Hugh Baillie was born into a newspaper family in Brooklyn about 68 years ago. His grandfather was a reporter, and his Scottish father, David G. Baillie, was a reporter and literary secretary to Andrew Carnegie. Hugh started in the newspaper business in Los Angeles while he was in his teens. He joined the United Press in 1915, and 20 years later became president of the U.P., one of the world's largest news gathering agencies. From 1935 to 1939 during 20 great newsmaking years, Hugh Baillie was really the top man at U.P. Four years ago he retired, but not to take it easy. He has been traveling, writing, and recently published his book, "High Tension, recollections of 45 years of reporting."

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Baillie have a house in La Jolla, California, and for 25 years they have also lived in an apartment in this building on New York's East Side.

Evening, Hugh.

BAILLIE: Hello, Ed.

MURROW: How are you?

BAILLIE: I'm fine, and I'm just remembering this is the second time you've had me on. Do you remember the first time in London just before the war?

MURROW: I do, indeed.

BAILLIE: When you asked me about our arrangements for covering it?

MURROW: How many correspondents you had and where your circuits ran and so forth.

BAILLIE: 500 correspondents then, and where the circuits ran and all the rest of it -- sure.

MURROW: How's Mrs. Baillie?

BAILLIE: Well, she's fine but she's not here tonight, Ed, I'm sorry to say. She's across the street looking at television.

MURROW: I'm sorry. Give her my regards, will you?

BAILLIE: Shall do. She's missed very few of your shows and she's not going to miss this one, that's for sure.

MURROW: Hugh, how's the book coming?

BAILLIE: Well, they tell me the book's coming along fine. Of course, the author doesn't always know exactly what the score is, and I have one of the biggest free lists in the world, I'm sure of that because we have a lot of friends, but I think it's going along fine, Ed. Thanks very much.

first time in London just before the war?

MURROW: I do, indeed.

BAILLIE: When you asked me about our arrangements for covering it?

MURROW: How many correspondents you had and where your circuits ran and so forth.

BAILLIE: 500 correspondents then, and where the circuits ran and all the rest of it -- sure.

MURROW: How's Mrs. Baillie?

BAILLIE: Well, she's fine but she's not here tonight. Ed, I'm sorry to say. She's across the street looking at television.

MURROW: I'm sorry. Give her my regards, will you?

BAILLIE: Shall do. She's missed very few of your shows and she's not going to miss this one. That's for sure.

MURROW: Hugh, how's the book coming?

BAILLIE: Well, they tell me the book's coming along fine. Of course, the author doesn't always know exactly what the score is, and I have one of the biggest fan lists in the world. I'm sure of that because we have a lot of friends, but I think it's going along fine. Ed. Thanks very much.

MURROW: Hugh, we all know that book jackets can be a little bit misleading; as misleading as headlines. Now, the cover on your book calls you a "hard-hitting, irascible reporter."

BAILLIE: Irascible.

MURROW: Irascible; that's right. Does it take a tough man to run a wire service?

BAILLIE: Why, sure, of course it takes a tough man. It takes a tough man to run a newspaper, too. It takes a tough man to run a wire service, I say, because he is dealing with a staff that's scattered all over the world. He's got a deadline to meet every minute somewhere -- some newspaper going to press in some language, and he has to inject from his own person a great deal of energy and enthusiasm out over the world. That makes for toughness, and the newspaper reporter -- newspapermen are tough, too. They have to ask questions they'd rather not because they're reporting and digging out the news. They have to -- well, they don't have to ,we never asked anybody to go to a war, but they go to wars when they don't have to go, in order to get the news, and they have to fight for the news a great deal on account of the very many people who would rather not have any news come out at all.

MURROW: Yes. Hugh, I have always been grateful

MURROW: Hugh, we all know that book jackets can be a little bit misleading; as misleading as headlines. Now, the cover on your book calls you a "hard-hitting, irascible reporter."

BAILLIE: Irascible.

MURROW: Irascible; that's right. Does it take a tough man to run a wire service?

BAILLIE: Why, sure, of course it takes a tough man. It takes a tough man to run a newspaper, too. It takes a tough man to run a wire service, I say, because he is dealing with a staff that's scattered all over the world. He's got a deadline to meet every minute somewhere -- some newspaper going to press in some language, and he has to inject from his own person a great deal of energy and enthusiasm out over the world. That makes for toughness, and the newspaper reporter -- newspapermen are tough, too. They have to ask questions they'd rather not because they're reporting and digging out the news. They have to -- well, they don't have to, we never asked anybody to go to a war, but they go to war when they don't have to go. In order to get the news, one has to fight for the news a great deal on account of the very many people who would rather not have any news come out at all.

MURROW: Yes. Hugh, I have always been an ardent to you for supplying me with some manpower during World War II.

BAILLIE: Yeah, quite a few. Charles Collingwood.

MURROW: And Dick Hartalett.

BAILLIE: Eric Severeid.

MURROW: Bill Downs.

BAILLIE: Yeah. Larry LeSeur.

MURROW: And Howard Smith. I stole a lot of people from you, didn't I?

BAILLIE: Walter Cronkite. Dick Hartalett.

MURROW: Ah, that was a long time ago. Tell me, what does Hugh Baillie do these days to keep busy in retirement.

BAILLIE: Well, of course that's a question a lot of people have asked me, Ed, and it often amuses me because I know so many guys who never did anything all their lives to justify their existence, but when you have been active, you're supposed to be dying on the vine or like an old soldier, fading away or something of the kind. I'm trying to put the brakes on as much as I can. I've had 40 years of the United Press. Now I say let somebody else have a chance. However, I do travel a good deal. I've got a worldwide correspondence of friends I made when I was running the United Press, and even before I was running it. I am interested in some armor-to you for supplying me with some manpower during World War II.

BAILLIE: Yeah, quite a few. Charles Collingwood.

MURROW: And Dick Hartzlett.

BAILLIE: Kyle Severeid.

MURROW: Bill Downs.

BAILLIE: Yeah. Larry Leseur.

MURROW: And Howard Smith. I stole a lot of people from you, didn't I?

BAILLIE: Walter Cronkite. Dick Hartzlett.

MURROW: Ah, that was a long time ago. Tell me, what does Hugh Baillie do these days to keep busy in retirement.

BAILLIE: Well, of course that's a question a lot of people have asked me, Ed, and it often amuses me because I know so many guys who never did anything all their lives to justify their existence, but when you have been active, you're supposed to be dying on the vine or like an old soldier, fading away or something of the kind. I'm trying to put my brakes on as much as I can. I've had 40 years of the United Press. May I say let somebody else have a chance. However, I do travel a good deal. I've got a worldwide correspondence of friends I made when I was running the United Press, even before I was running it. I am interested in [illegible] ial stuff I'll show you in a minute. I've gotten a little interested in music even.

MURROW: Have you!

BAILLIE: Yeah -- that you might never have heard of.

MURROW: No, I haven't. I thought I knew you pretty well but I didn't know this.

(Mr. Baillie plays mechanical piano.)

MURROW: Hugh, this is a talent I didn't know you had.

BAILLIE: Well, I have to practice a good deal, Ed. A lot of practice is required. See, Ed, no hands. That is about the extent of my musical capabilities.

MURROW: Well, Hugh, when you're not enjoying mechanical musical moments, I have a hunch you have a great urge to get out and cover a story again, don't you?

BAILLIE: Oh, sure. I often have an urge to get out and cover a story. I often have an urge to tell the guy that's covering the story how to do it.

MURROW: Just can't get out of the habit, huh?

BAILLIE: Yeah -- as if I knew better than he. But you know how that is--- lal stuff I'll show you in a minute. I've gotten a little interested in music even.

MURROW: I do.

MURROW: Have you!

BAILLIE: Yeah -- that you might never have heard of.

MURROW: No, I haven't. I thought I knew you pretty well but I didn't know this.

(Mr. Baillie plays mechanical piano.)

MURROW: Hugh, this is a talent I didn't know you had.

BAILLIE: Well, I have to practice a good deal. Ed. A lot of practice is required. See, Ed, no hands. This is about the extent of my musical capabilities.

MURROW: Well, Hugh, when you're not enjoying mechanical musical moments, I have a hunch you have a great urge to get out and cover a story again, don't you?

BAILLIE: Oh, sure. I often have an urge to get out and cover a story. I often have an urge to tell the world that's covering the story how to do it.

MURROW: Just can't get out of the habit, eh?

BAILLIE: Yeah -- as if I knew better than --- but you know how that is---

MURROW: I do.

BAILLIE: ---you've directed quite a few men covering stories, and covered quite a few yourself.

MURROW: Well, Hugh, what else keeps you occupied these days?

BAILLIE: Well, as I say, I've got an interest in armorial stuff, you might call it: claymores, armor -- stuff like that. For instance, this is Henry VIII's armor, a miniature from the Tower of London.

MURROW: Yes.

BAILLIE: Of course, he got pretty fat after that and he couldn't have worn this. You see, the mace comes out. You can hit yourself a pretty good clout on the head with it if you want to. These suits of armor are also miniatures from the Tower of London. The swords are removable, you see.

MURROW: Yes.

BAILLIE: They're all jointed and work. Now, these are what we call today Scottish claymores. They're really Highland broad swords. The true Scottish claymore is a two-handed sword.

MURROW: Are those ancestoral weapons?

BAILLIE: Well, I'm afraid I can't claim that, Ed, because the Baillies are Lowlanders. We come from down in Ayrshire, and down there they didn't use the claymores. They BAILLIE: ---You've directed quite a few men covering stories, and covered quite a few yourself.

MURROW: Well, Hugh, what else keeps you occupied these days?

BAILLIE: Well, as I say, I've got an interest in armorial stuff. You might call it: claymores, armor -- stuff like that. For instance, this is Henry VIII's armor, a miniature from the Tower of London.

MURROW: Yes.

BAILLIE: Of course, he got pretty fat after that and he couldn't have worn this. You see, the mace comes out. You can hit yourself a pretty good clout on the head with it if you want to. These suits of armor are also miniatures from the Tower of London. The swords are removable, you see.

MURROW: Yes.

BAILLIE: They're all painted and work. Men. These are what we call today Scottish claymores. They're real Highland broad swords. The true Scottish claymore is a two-handed sword.

MURROW: Are these ancestral weapons?

BAILLIE: Well, I'm afraid I can't claim that because the Baillies are lowlanders. We came from down in Ayrshire, and down there they didn't use the claymore. The were used by the wild Highlanders more, you see.

MURROW: Hugh, I seem to recall during World War II you and Field Marshal Montgomery had some anxious moments together. It was in Holland, wasn't it?

BAILLIE: Yes, it was in Holland. It was the battle of Arnhem. I've got a picture down here that will throw some light on that. And, incidentally, down here, this is the room where I wrote the book -- one version of it. I wrote the book twice. Sometimes I think I wrote it three times. You see, this was during the battle of Arnhem, and here's Monty and here's me, and here's his caravan. You remember?

MURROW: Yes, I do.

BAILLIE: You remember those well from the desert when you were down there. And the battle of Arnhem. This was in Eindhoven, actually. Arnhem was up the Rhine a little way, and the great battle was going on up there. But he took me inside -- into this caravan -- and talked to me all about his African campaign, and drew these sketches of the Mareth Line and El Alamein.

MURROW: Yes?

BAILLIE: And, incidentally, inside here he had two big lithographs of Rommel hanging up. In one of them were used by the wild Highlanders more, you see.

MUNROW: Hugh, I seem to recall during World War II you and Field Marshal Montgomery had some anxious moments together. It was in Holland, wasn't it?

HAILLIE: Yes. It was in Holland. It was the battle of Arnhem. I've got a picture down here that will throw some light on that. And, incidentally, down here, this is the room where I wrote the book -- one version of it. I wrote the book twice. Sometimes I think I wrote it three times. You see, this was during the battle of Arnhem, and here's Monty and here's me, and here's his caravan. You remember?

MUNROW: Yes, I do.

HAILLIE: You remember those well from the desert when you were down there. And the battle of Arnhem, quite in Eindhoven, actually. Arnhem was up the Rhine a little and the great battle was going on up there. Just he and I inside -- into this caravan -- and talked to his staff about the African campaign, and drew these sketches of the Rommel line and Mt Alamein.

MUNROW: Yes?

HAILLIE: And, incidentally, inside there are two big lithographs of Rommel hanging. In one of them fierce, hat over one eye, and ready to fight. In the other one he was drawn. He looked like a patent medicine ad -- before and after taking -- and Monty said, "Now, Mr. Baillie, that's Marshal Rommel before he met me, and that's after he met me." Then he said, "I should like to capture Marshal Rommel one of these days and sit him right down there where you're sitting, right across from this desk here, and spend the day discussing his mistakes."

This little trinket here, Ed -- I'm not a souvenir hunter, but I brought that back from the war because it saved my life once at the battle of Arnhem.

MURROW: How is that?

BAILLIE: Well, we were riding in a jeep that came under artillery fire and the driver of the jeep got a little bit excited and ran into a tree, and I went out through the windshield and that took the shock.

That's the book, incidentally. I think I should hold it up sometime this evening.

MURROW: You certainly should. Well, all that was a few years ago.

BAILLIE: Yes.

MURROW: What do you expect the big news stories to be tomorrow -- in the coming month?

fierce, but over one eye, and ready to fight. In the other one he was drawn. He looked like a potent medicine ad -- before and after taking -- and Monty said. "Now, Mr. Hallite, that's Marshal Rommel before he met me, and that's after he met me." Then he said. "I should like to capture Marshal Rommel one of these days and sit him right down there where you're sitting, right across from this desk here, and spend the day discussing his mistakes."

This little trinket here, Ed -- I'm not a souvenir hunter, but I brought that back from the war because it saved my life once at the battle of Arnhem.

MURROW: How is that?

HALLITE: Well, we were riding in a jeep that came under artillery fire and the driver of the jeep got a little bit excited and ran into a tree, and I went out through the windshield and that took the shock.

That's the book, incidentally. I think I should hold it up sometime this evening.

MURROW: You certainly should. Well, all this was a few years ago.

HALLITE: Yes.

MURROW: What do you expect the big news story to be tomorrow -- in the coming months.

BAILLIE: In the coming month? Well, in the coming month -- I'll make that month, Ed---

MURROW: All right.

BAILLIE: ---I'd say possible war and money. They're always big stories. As long as we have this pressure with the Russians over Berlin, we have the possibility, of course, of a war. There are too many people who have access to too many delicate instruments of war to be feeling absolutely safe about being protected from it. And money is always a big news story, particularly today when taxes and prices are going up so fast.

MURROW: Yes. Hugh, we all know that for many years you were a leader in the battle for freedom of information. How goes the fight?

BAILLIE: Well, the fight goes on. The fight will always go on, in my judgment, as the United Press was the leader of the fight from the very beginning, and we found very many people or places where the people did not want to give out the news, and where there were barriers placed up against the news and things like that. Well, we fought and fought and tore them down. In Europe they had cartels. They controlled all the news and only gave it to each other, or to those who subscribed to their system. We find now that that's all gone. In a place like Washington there is a great deal of top secret stuff. They brought that phrase out of the war, of course. Top secret this and top secret that. It isn't really top secret at all, but somebody wants to keep it quiet.

MURROW: Yes?

BAILLIE: In 1948 we had a session at Geneva. We met there to draw an international treaty for reciprocity in news gathering.

MURROW: I remember that.

BAILLIE: That was the whole idea. We drew up three treaties. They differed. They are all down here at the United Nations now, so far as I know, gathering dust. Anyway, it was a good try.

MURROW: Hugh, a personal inquiry.

BAILLIE: Yes?

MURROW: What do you think of the reviews your book has received? The book called "High Tension." I must get that name in again.

BAILLIE: Thanks. Well, the reviews have been very good. I haven't seen a single unfavorable one, Ed. The book must be good or these people who write the reviews must like me, I don't know which. Anyhow, they have been very good and I am being piled up here, and it's beginning to look all gone. In a place like Washington there is a great deal of top secret stuff. They brought that phrase out of the war, of course. Top secret this and top secret that. It isn't really top secret at all, but somebody wants to keep it quiet.

MURROW: Yes?

RAILLIE: In 1948 we had a session at Geneva. We met there to draw an international treaty for reciprocity in news gathering.

MURROW: I remember that.

RAILLIE: That was the whole idea. We drew up three treaties. They differed. They are all down here at the United Nations now, so far as I know, gathering dust. Anyway, it was a good try.

MURROW: Hugh, a personal inquiry.

RAILLIE: Yes?

MURROW: What do you think of the reviews your book has received? The book called High Tension. I must get that name in again.

RAILLIE: Thanks. Well, the reviews have been very good. I haven't seen a single unfavorable one. The book must be good or these people who write the reviews must like me. I don't know which. Anyhow, they have been very good and I am being piled up here, and it's beginning to like the Collyer brothers.

MURROW: Well, Hugh, I hope it sells a million.

BAILLIE: Thanks.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

BAILLIE: Thanks very much, and bon voyage on your sabbatical.

MURROW: Thank you very much. Thank you, Hugh, for letting us come and I hope Mrs. Baillie enjoyed television tonight.

BAILLIE: Thanks. Thanks, Ed.

MURROW: Good night, Hugh.

I'll be back in a moment right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Thank you, Mr. Gruber. For six years now at the conclusion of each of the 250 PERSON TO PERSON programs that we have done, I have reminded you that those are some of the people who helped make this program possible: David Moore, Charles Romine, Aaron Ehrlich, Liz Scofield, Nancy Commarata, Bob Dailey, Charles N. Hill, Robert M. Salmon, and the producers, John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer, and there are hundreds more. No one who has been on television with any regularity needs to be reminded that in order like the Collyer brothers.

MURROW: Well, Hugh, I hope it sells a million.

BAILLIE: Thanks.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

BAILLIE: Thanks very much, and bon voyage on your sabbatical.

MURROW: Thank you very much. Thank you, Hugh, for letting us come and I hope Mrs. Baillie enjoyed television tonight.

BAILLIE: Thanks. Thanks, Ed.

MURROW: Good night, Hugh.

I'll be back in a moment right after a word from Bob Wright speaking for Kent.

(Commercial)

MURROW: Thank you, Mr. Gruber. For six years now at the conclusion of each of the 250 PERSON TO PERSON programs that we have done, I have reminded you that those are some of the people who helped make this program possible: David Moore, Charles Romine, Aaron Ehrlich, Lee Scott, Nancy Corporate, Bob Bailey, Charles M. Hill, Robert Ballmon, and the producers, John A. Aaron, Jesse Zousmer, and there are hundreds more. No one who has been on television with any regularity needs to be reminded that [illegible] to do anything in this medium, you need an instrument, and the primary instrument is not lights or cameras, cables, cue cards, or cosmetics or consoles. The primary instrument is people; people who know their jobs, who are proud of it, people who care. What little success we have had in interesting you with our 500 electronic visits with guests all the way from Canada to Cuba, Connecticut to California, is the result of the combined efforts of more people than we could possibly mention tonight. People such as Ken Hunt, Frank Light, Joan Pilkington, Frances Arbel, Ronnie Greene, Buddy Altman, Josephine Iannello, and Cantrie Mullen, most of whom stand anywhere from six to 60 feet from me every Friday night performing the various chores that help make this program possible. There are many more who are on duty throughout the whole land demonstrating a rare blending of skills in what I am informed is the most difficult technical program that regularly appears on television. Some of you may recall some minor technical failures but never a complete collapse.

To the CBS technicians from coast to coast; to the staff and the field men of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company; to the independent phone companies, local power companies, a real salute from those of us who don't know how it's all done to those of us who do know, and who

to do anything in this medium, you need an instrument, and the primary instrument is not lights or cameras, cables, cards, or cosmetics or consoles. The primary instrument is people: people who know their jobs, who are proud of it, people who care. What little success we have had in interesting you with our 500 electronic visits with guests all the way from Canada to Cuba, Connecticut to California, is the result of the combined efforts of more people than we could possibly mention tonight. People such as Ken Hunt, Frank Light, John Pillington, Frances Ardel, Ronnie Greene, Buddy Altman, Josephine Iannello, and Cantrie Mullen, most of whom stand anywhere from six to 60 feet from me every Friday night performing the various chores that help make this program possible. There are many more who are on duty throughout the whole land demonstrating a rare blending of skills in what am informed is the most difficult technical program that regularly appears on television. Some of you may recall some minor technical failures but never a complete collapse.

To the CBS technicians from coast to coast, to the staff and the field men of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, to the independent phone companies, local power companies, a real salute from those of us who know how it's all done to those of us who do know, and to have done it so well for 250 weeks, and that includes such experts as Gaylord Caldwell and Leroy Thomas, who have been responsible in the literal sense of that word for protecting the household effects of our guests, all of whom have been most gracious, tolerant and cooperative.

All of these people have made it possible to take you into homes you might not otherwise have been permitted to visit; to meet people you might not otherwise have had occasion to know and to hear many people say some worthwhile things that might never have been heard outside their own living rooms.

As you may have heard, I am starting tomorrow on a rather over-publicized leave of absence for one year. CBS has announced that PERSON TO PERSON will resume in the fall. When I return to the Columbia Broadcasting System, I hope to do something that will merit the continued loyalty you have shown towards this half-hour. So until then, from PERSON TO PERSON, good night, a good year and good luck.

Prog Bus Pers

Dec 9 1954

to ERM:

Re the Mickelson letter..and Johnny and I are in agreement that there's little to be gained in prolonging the issue.

We complained about TV's use of the picture window device on election night. Sig's paragraph two states the whole issue:"The only distrinctive feature of key-insertion which was developed at the request of the Person to Person staff is the window device." And in the same parapgrah he writes (CAPITALS [redacted] MINE) "I would deplore the use of key-insertion in any way which would be a direct copy of Person to Person's use of a WINDOW frame but matting through a PICTURE frame or mat is quite different."

I don't really know the difference between "picture" and "window" in this sense.

But the facts are these:

1- Paul Wittlig, manager of new effects development, tells me that P to P was first at CBS to use live remotes in key-insertion(we call it matting)

2- Wittlig says to his knowledge no network show..(some local technicians may have tried it without his knowledge).. ever brought a live remote through a matting amplifyer..as we do.

3- Mikelson's terminology is evasive and not connected with the device as it is distinctly used on Person to Person. For example:

a) Sammon, quoted as one of developers of key-insertion, says no one before us ever used a live remote through a matting amplifyer.

b* There were others who used Rear projection through a wall or blank space..never a live remote

c) For your information the device we used was originally worked out in theory by Aaron Ehrlich and technicians at Sperry Gryoscope on a friendship basis..not officially through Sperry.

d- The original Adeventure shows did use film in an area between moderator and guest who sat across a table from each other. RP's have long been in use in TV.. and Hollywood.

e- CBS's use of amatting amplifyer at the 1952 convention had little relation to what we use. Then, you'll recall, Cronkite's face came up ina corner of the pool camera shot of the whole hall. Cronike was then "wedge wiped" into the whole picture.

f- Mikelson says CBS stations now have six matting amplifyers. Probably true. At the time Person to Person went on the air CBS*TV New York owned one. This amplifyer could wipe (a la Cronkite at the convention) it could not mat.

g- On January 27, 1954, by memo I asked Thompson for "an extra metting amplifyer if needed in the studio" . This request was frequebtly repeated. On June 17, 1954, Thompson wrote me "we are submitting a budegt request for theconstruction of matting amplifyer." Both memos are available.

h- Following additional memos and conferences we were promised that a spare matting amplifyer would be available in our studio on November 30th, 1954. (WE NOW HAVE IT) ~~[illegible]~~... even though, Sig says, "its listed in tv production manual" etc

4- Mikelson says "Matting through a frame has been done for some time by WINKY DINK2". Fact of the matter is Winky took air eight days after our first show.

5- Mikelson says"...the same policy must hold for the use of the wireless microphone, which predates Person to Person and will undoubtedly be in general use, particularly on special events programs, as soon as it becomes practiable."

a) Wittlig says we were the first to use this type of microphone(as distinguished from the convention walkie-talkie box) on this network. He doesn't know about others. (Dinah Shore may have tried it once on NBC. Godfrey inspected it but never used it.)

b- We found and rented the Stevens mike (which had been used on Hollywood movie lots) The proof of this is that Person to Person picked up a tab for more than a thousand bucks because Technical Operations did not return it when they were supposed to.

c- The Budelman was "discovered" at our request because the Stevens didn't work. The Budelman was "peffected" in co-operation BY CBS and Budelman. We have a stack of prodding memos to prove our interest in a wireless microphone. I'M certain Grossman and Chamberlain will acknowledge that we have been the instigators of whatever perfection has been achieved. On Sept 29, this year, Grossmen memos "The two new receivers for wireless microphone operation on the P to P show are scheduled for delivery" etc.

d- Technical Operations..this off record..consistently opposed use of the wireless microphone because it was not considered airworthy. It was our persistent heckling, and actual air tests on our Friday nights, that led to development of the mike and its now more general use: ie Omnibus.

6- Mikelson's notes re a new mike , far superior to Budelman, is correct. It was "found" as a result of your prodding of Grossman and Chamberlain and my insistence that we would need a good wireless mike for future projects.

7- I agree that its "unthinkable to bottle up the use of technical devices..or restrict them to first program which used them."

But the whole point of the Mikelson memo is that we are using stuff that's been around a long time.

8- I am excellent informed that a high official of the company recently questioned his top aides..at some sort of board or planning meeting.. about "the mike that Murrow uses on Person to Person." No one present at that meeting could come within 50 per cent on what it cost... where it could be procured..or what its state of development was. But all were informed that "particularly on special events programs" the wireless mike used on the Murrow show should be employed.

9- To use Mikesleon's phrase:"If there are any points in which we have not made myself clear or if you have ay other questions" don't ask me.

10- And in closingI refer you to recent rewviews of the Hy Gardner show and the latest Goodson-Todman remoter...in which printed notice is ~~minimum~~ taken of the similarity to Person to Person...because of the picture window.

JV

Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

F.506

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

To Mr. Murrow cc: Messrs. Stanton, Van Volkenburg, Robinson

From Mr. Mickelson

Station

December 8, 1954

My warm thanks for your memo of December 4 regarding the key-insertion device as it relates to PERSON TO PERSON and our Election Night show. Your original memo arrived just after I got away for a couple weeks of vacation, hence my delay in sending you a prompt reaction.

Normally, I'd much prefer a face to face discussion, but, since I had completed a reply outlining my position on your original complaint, I think I should put it on the record. In the future, however, however, I would certainly prefer, as you suggest, to handle these matters in conversation rather than on paper.

Your attitude, as expressed in the December 4 memo, is understandable from your point of view but from the broader point of view of CBS News and Public Affairs I must take issue with your statement that "the complaint was justified", for the following reasons:

1.- Key-Insertion, the engineer's term for the technical device used in PERSON TO PERSON, was developed, according to my understanding, by CBS Television Technical Operations, specifically by Ben Ackerman and Bob Sammon (who was then Assistant Manager of Technical Operations).

2.- The only distinctive feature of key-insertion which was developed at the request of the PERSON TO PERSON staff is the window device. Matting through a frame has been done for some time by WINKY DINK and, of course, the frame has similarly been used consistently in connection with rear-projection. I would deplore the use of key-insertion in any way which would be a direct copy of PERSON TO PERSON's use of the window frame but matting through a picture frame or map is quite a different matter.

3.- The basic device of the matting amplifier from which key-insertion is developed has been in use by CBS Television since the Republican Convention in 1952 and is now available in six CBS Television studios in New York, in Television City in Hollywood, and is being installed at WMAR-TV, in Baltimore, and WBBM-TV, in Chicago. NBC also has the equipment.

4.- The matting amplifier, as a production device, is listed in the current CBS Television Production Manual and producers, agencies and sponsors alike are being encouraged to use it.

5.- The CBS News and Public Affairs policy is to encourage inventiveness in the use of all available technical devices.

To _____

From _____

Station _____

6.- It is unthinkable to bottle up the use of technical devices of any kind or to restrict these devices to the first programs which used them.

In general, the same policy must hold for the use of the wireless microphone, which predates PERSON TO PERSON and will undoubtedly be in general use, particularly on special events programs, as soon as it becomes practicable. That time is fast approaching. I have just learned that a new wireless microphone, which is far superior to the Budelman version, is being tested by General Engineering. When and if some wave legth problems can be resolved it will be available for general use.

If there are any points in which I have not made myself clear or if you have any other questions, I will be glad to sit down and talk with you about them at your convenience.

Jy

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Nicholson

from: Mr. Murrow

cc: Messrs. Van Volkenburg
Robinson

bc: Mr. Paley

December 3, 1954

Further re my memorandum to you of November 4th about use of the PERSON TO PERSON picture window on election night. Since this is the time for retracting strong language in Washington and elsewhere, and since even Senator Dirksen, that Liberace of politics, has uttered words about the approaching of the Yuletide season of forgiveness; I send you this epistle to say that I should not have indicted said memorandum which I understand has had some circulation throughout the organization. My complaint was justified, like McCarthy and I hope a different context, I withdraw nothing but it wasn't done in an appropriate fashion. In future if I can think up a good reason for a complaint I will raise my voice in anguish in person and since neither of our tones are dulcet, I am sure you will do the same.

E.R.M.

rh

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Sig Mickelson from: Mr. Edward R. Murrow

cc: Mr. Van Volkenberg
Mr. Robinson

November 4, 1954

I was quite distressed on Tuesday night to find that our election coverage on television was employing the "picture window" device which PERSON TO PERSON first introduced and which has become as much of a trademark for us as "the bursting stars" are to Gleason or the "dancing chorus line" is to the Sullivan Show.

In both these latter cases I'm sure - because Gleason and Sullivan are regarded as "pretty valuable pieces of property" - they at least would have been accorded the courtesy of being advised that their "trademarks" were being used.

We were not advised.

This may be regarded as of small import to some, but to us this represented an inexcusable case of complete disregard of our desire to protect what we consider an essential element of the PERSON TO PERSON show.

If the picture window was used on election night, what is there to prevent its use next time at a dog show or other such event.

The window, like our mobile Budeleman microphone, will serve no further useful purpose on PERSON TO PERSON if it is going to be exploited every time CBS finds itself unable to work out something for itself.

I cannot express my feelings too strongly in this regard. And am rather disappointed to think that the CBS Special Events staff in addition to being somewhat lean on ideas, is also a little short of the common decencies as well.

.E.R.M.

CONGRATULATIONS

by WESTERN UNION (52) (43)

12/3/54

NA167 CGN DL PD=WUX TDL WEST LOSANGELES CALIF 4 221PMP=
EDWARD R MURROW, COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM=
DLR 485 MADISON AVE=

=DEAR E, YOUR BING CROSBY SHOW WAS ONE OF THE BEST YOU'VE HAD IN A LONG TIME AND THAT IS SAYING A LOT, CONGRATULATIONS TO YOU AND YOUR STAFF, BEST WISHES=
HARRY BRAND=

P&P

Ed;

Bill Holden is in for Jan 28.. he,too, is in the Crosby picture "Country Girl"

Can you get around to calling Holden on his set.. Hollywood 9-2411.. extension 656... between 4;30 and 6 p.m. our time.

Tell him I'll look him up when I go out for the Crosby thing.

jz called 11/23

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Paley

from: Mr. Murrow

November 23, 1954

Jessel correspondence

Regarding the attached. The trouble with the west coast origination is "that old devil money." I am not sure that we can get out of Santa Monica. I suggest you might care to tell Mr. Jessel that we will give the matter sympathetic consideration and be in touch with him in due course.

Informatively, Eddie Cantor is also putting the heat on us, and we are now playing with the idea of originating the whole show from the coast for five or six weeks next autumn.

E.R.M.

rh

565

File

P to P

CBS RADIO

Office Communication

J.a

to: Mr. Murrow

from: Mr. Seward

November 15, 1954

We have learned via Decca Records that Bing Crosby will appear on PERSON TO PERSON Friday, December 3.

Bing will return to the air in a five-a-week 15-minute program 9:15 to 9:30 p.m. Mondays through Fridays on November 22. The format of this program is a new one and it will be very much in Radio's and Bing's interests to have Bing describe what he is attempting to do in this radio series. He is so modest a person and so prone to lean over backwards in avoiding anything that looks like press agentry that he probably won't mention the radio program unless he is asked direct questions about it. I hope you will find it appropriate to do so.

Jim

J.M.S.

693

PKP

NOVEMBER 15, 1954

JANET LEIGH
TONY CURTIS
2018 COLDWATER CANYON
BEVERLY HILLS, CALIFORNIA

HAVE JUST SEEN FRIDAY NIGHT KINESCOPE STOP MY SILENCE WAS BEST PART OF WHOLE PROGRAM STOP HEREAFTER WHENEVER WE HAVE AUDIO TROUBLE WILL SWITCH TO YOU TWO WITH UTMOST CONFIDENCE STOP. 'TWAS REALLY BETTER THAN I THOUGHT FRIDAY NIGHT. AGAIN THANKS.

REGARDS,

ED MURROW

PtoP

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Irv Haberman cc: Izzy Seigal, Ed Murrow

from: Jesse Zousmer

November 3, 1954

We are tickled pink that your shot of Mohammed Ali made the current Life Magazine, and any time Life's editors want to credit "Irving Haberman of CBS-TV" we are agreeable to omitting a mention of PERSON TO PERSON.

Why don't you tell Harriman you ought to be paid more.

J. Z.

Program Business Pd

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Ed

from: Jesse

November 3, 1954

Three problems:

1. Would you estimate the proposed PERSON TO PERSON move to California at six months away or a year away? Our estimators would like to know.

2. We are surveying Lowell's place Tuesday afternoon. Maybe we should look yours over - for a number of reasons - at the same time. If you agree - what's the name of your farmer, and will you warn him?

3. Could you give A. B. Chamberlain a ring and tell him that our Budelmans - despite the new additions - are still giving us trouble, and will he assure us that he is still giving it his number one top priority personal medal of honor attention. We are starting to go out of town on a number of shows now where we may not have our local crew experts to make repairs and adjustments for us at the last minute.

Person to Person

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Messrs. Fullmer, Grossman, Thompson

from: Mr. Murrow

October 27, 1954

THANKS

erm

jz

We are retaining our remote crews.

We are not being charged overtime..I gather omnibus is ~~mp~~ picking up the tab.

You wanted to write: grossman or Thompson or Falknor

Memorandum from
A. F. BROOKS

A reference to the incident from a column in one of the local newspapers.

* * *

"Hurricane Al" Lazuk, whose hunting trip to Canada was messed up by "Hurricane Edna," found himself tangling with latest of stormy sisters in Westport Friday night.

* * *

Al was one of SNET engineers working at Martha Raye's home there on facilities set up by phone company to carry TV broadcast to New York for Ed Murrow's show.

* * *

With Walt McGuire, Bob Penning and Herb Nelson, all from NH, Al kept fingers crossed as 100-foot steel microwave tower swayed in gale.

* * *

Temporary power loss in early evening blacked out TV cameras, but Al McGowan's C.L.&P. men got lines fixed just three minutes before scheduled 10:30 show.

* * *

Teamwork of phone and power company men enabled Murrow to keep unbroken record of never having lost remote pickup.

* * *

Now Al's wondering what's in store for him Oct. 28, when rig moves to Marian Anderson's home in Danbury.

P40P
A+Z.

THE SOUTHERN NEW ENGLAND TELEPHONE COMPANY

227 CHURCH STREET
NEW HAVEN 6, CONNECTICUT
MAIN 4-9221

ALLERTON F. BROOKS
PRESIDENT

October 22, 1954

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

While it is true that lately we have been quite actively engaged in repairing the damage caused by the almost head-on assault of two hurricanes and a sideswipe from a third, we are never so busy that we cannot value an understanding and appreciative letter such as you wrote, concerning the difficulties encountered during hurricane "Hazel" in endeavoring to establish sound and picture channels from Miss Martha Raye's home near Westport.

I knew at the time that our engineers were working to establish and maintain this connection and all of us were as anxious as you and your colleagues must have been, to have the contact established in time and not broken.

I need not tell you that it will give me a great deal of satisfaction to pass on your kind praise to all those who were concerned.

Sincerely yours,

Al F. Brooks

3+A

NEW YORK TELEPHONE COMPANY

140 WEST STREET, NEW YORK 7, N.Y.

KEITH S. McHUGH
PRESIDENT

EXCHANGE 4-4600

October 21, 1954

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Many thanks for your good letter of October 20th. You were a thoughtful fellow to take the time to write me as you did.

Our people tell me that they were faced with a bit of a problem last Friday night when Hurricane Hazel made her unwelcome visit. Cooperating with the Southern New England Telephone Company, however, it was possible to reroute the program through Long Island, and everyone was pleased that the outcome was so satisfactory to you and to your vast television audience.

I know that all our folks who were involved in the job would appreciate knowing of your feelings toward their work, and I will make sure that they see your letter.

Thanks again for writing.

Sincerely,

Keith S McHugh

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

PLP

October 20, 1954

Dear Mr. McHugh:

Somewhere in your vast organization there is a group of technicians to whom I owe a debt. Last Friday night we were originating a television program from the home of Miss Martha Raye near Westport when Hurricane Hazel intervened. We gave up hope of getting a signal out at all, but somehow just a few minutes before that portion of the program was scheduled to go on we had both sight and sound with perfect clarity. I don't know how it was done, but I do know that I am grateful and I wanted to say so.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Keith S. McHugh
President
New York Telephone Company
140 West Street
New York, New York

rh

October 20, 1954

Dear Mr. Brooks:

Even at the risk of overburdening your correspondence, I cannot refrain from sending you this brief note. Last Friday night we were originating a television program, PERSON TO PERSON, from the home of Miss Martha Raye near Westport. It was a difficult technical operation and Hurricane Hazel intervened. When the first part of the program went on the air we still had neither sound nor picture from Miss Raye's residence. My colleagues tell me that some of your engineers and technicians (unfortunately, I do not know their names) wrought major miracles; and at the appropriate time, both sound and picture came through beautifully.

It seems to me that in all fields of communications the technicians do not receive their due credit and I wanted to take this opportunity to say, through you, my thanks to the men of your company who managed somehow to get us out of Westport. Our own technicians were still singing the praise of your men even after the weekend.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Allerton F. Brooks
President
Southern New England Telephone Company
New Haven, Connecticut

rh

Re RAYE

Re Westport Telephone Co. Installation.....

Letter should go to

Allerton F. Brooks
President
Southern New England Telephone Co.
New Haven, Conn.

The signal was relayed to the Plainview tower on L.I. and then into the Empire State Building.. This part of the operation would be covered by a letter to

Keith S. McHugh
President
New York Telephone Company
140 West Street
New York City...

(I believe that Mr. Murrow sent a note to Mr. McHugh once before)

Bob Sammon

P & P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to:

from:

CONFERENCE CALL

Chicago Sun Times - Lucia Carter

Buffalo News - Ray Finch

San Francisco Examiner - Dwight Newton

Cheyenne Wyoming Tribune - Kirk Knox

Bill Shaw Jean Marie

50

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Marge Maginnis

from: Michael J. Foster

cc: Edward R. Murrow
John Aaron
Jesse Zousmer
Art Settel

October 5, 1954

As per our conversation please set up with the telephone company the following conference call, for 5 PM New York time tomorrow, Wednesday, October 6:

Edward R. Murrow.....Extension 7494

John Aaron.....Extension 7560

Jesse Zousmer.....Extension 414

Michael Foster on Art Settel's new number....Extension 7855

Dwight Newton-San Francisco Examiner.....Sutter 1-2424

Kirk Knox-Cheyenne Wyoming Tribune..... 44455 Extension 37

Lucia Carter-Chicago Sun-Times

Ray Finch-Buffalo Evening News.....Mohawk 4444

MJF

Person to Person

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Murrow

from: Mr. Grossman

cc: Mr. Zousmer
Mr. Chamberlain
Mr. Thompson
Mr. Wilson
Mr. Sather

No Ans.

September 29, 1954

The two new receivers for wireless mike operation on the PERSON TO PERSON show are scheduled for delivery on October 15 per Engineering Department advice. The Engineering Department expects to have the diversity system in operation for these receivers by November 15.

Starting approximately November 13 Technical Operations will be able to provide a spare matting amplifier at Grand Central on Fridays for the show.

When the above three items are delivered this will complete the entire list of equipment since all other items have previously been delivered.

Messrs. Zousmer and Sammon have this story as they attended a meeting with us last Monday afternoon at which time it was discussed in detail.

HG:w

50

P&P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Messrs. Aaron and Zousmer

from: Mr. Murrow

August 5, 1954

Prime Minister of Pakistan, Mohammed Ali speaks excellent English. Due to reach Washington October 7th, will be in New York the week of October 11th; and we can do him from Pakistan House here in New York which is a pretty colorful place. Will one of you please advise Lauri Shaffi about the date.

E.R.M.

rh

565

CONSULATE GENERAL OF PAKISTAN
PAKISTAN HOUSE
12 EAST 65TH STREET
NEW YORK 21, N.Y.

Confidential

Prime Minister Mohammed Ali shared beach Washington October 7. He shared be in New York week of October 11th 1954.

What day of the week will the program be on this year?

[illegible] 2/8/54

CLASS OF SERVICE

This is a full-rate Telegram or Cablegram unless its deferred character is indicated by a suitable symbol above or preceding the address.

WESTERN UNION

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

FX-1201

SYMBOLS

DL=Day Letter

NL=Night Letter

LT=Int'l Letter Telegram

VLT=Int'l Victory Ltr.

The filing time shown in the date line on telegrams and day letters is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

1 .OA463 WR JUL 17 PM 6 30

O.BHA193 NL PD=FAX BEVERLY HILLS CALIF 17=

JOHN AARON, COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM=

485 MADISON AVE NYK=

GARY COOPER LEAVING NEW YORK APPROXIMATELY TEN DAYS.

UNDERSTAND HE HAS NOT YET HEARD FROM YOU OR MURROW.

WOULD APPRECIATE HEARING FROM YOU. KINDEST REGARDS=

=ARTHUR JACOBS=..

360 North Bedford Drive

Sherry Netherlands

EL5-2800

try him Friday

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

JULY 26, 1954

ARTHUR JACOBS
360 NORTH BEDFORD DRIVE
BEVERLY HILLS, CALIFORNIA

REPLYING YOUR WIRE MR. ARRON'S ABSENCE ON VACATION WE DID TRY GARY COOPER FORLUNCH LAST WEEK BUT HE UNABLE MAKE IT. WILL TRY AGAIN THIS WEEK WHEN MR. MURROW IN AGAIN.

D.MCDONOUGH
SECRETARY MURROW

262-550-32

Person to Person

June 3, 1954

Dear Mr. Sembower:

Very many thanks for your kind letter of May 24th and for your interesting suggestion. However, I regret to have to tell you that neither I nor the producers of PERSON TO PERSON feel that your idea would fit well into that program. The whole idea is to visit and talk with people who are alive today, and we feel that it would be somewhat confusing to our audience if we attempted to inject an historical note into the program every once in a while. Thank you for your interest.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. John F. Sembower
105 South La Salle Street
Chicago 3, Illinois

rh

TELEPHONE CENTRAL 6-1431

JOHN F. SEMBOWER
105 SOUTH LA SALLE STREET
CHICAGO 3, ILLINOIS

May 24, 1954

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
News Director
Columbia Broacasting System
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Your excellent PERSON TO PERSON series has suggested to me an adaptation which I would like to propose to you. I wonder if the same general format you now employ so effectively might not be used for "interviews" with such celebrated figures as George Washington at Mount Vernon, Thomas Jefferson at Monticello, Andrew Jackson at the Hermitage, Abraham Lincoln at Springfield, and so on.

The idea of interviewing present-day celebrities in their own habitats is one of the happiest inspirations for a way to introduce them to the public in an appealing and illuminating manner. The personal possessions one treasures and the kind of home he builds up about himself are perhaps the very best keys to the person himself. Just as people prominent in the news today "come alive" on your program, so would great leaders of any period.

Along with this general suggestion, however, are some provisos which I believe would be necessary to the success of such a series:

- It should not be a separate series, but should be integrated with your present program. Otherwise, if it stood alone, it might be too historical in its approach. On the other hand, a combination of the present and the past would afford some common denominators of its own that would leaven both presentations.

- Extreme care should be exercised to keep the portrayal of the historical figure on the same informal, personal plane that your present guests are. Well cast professional actors should play the roles, but they should fully reflect the "temperance" that Hamlet asked of the players "that may give it smoothness." Any temptation to get these persons of the past to comment on current happenings, or to give loaded or barbed quotations, must be eschewed. Your present format would be perfect, it seems to me, and as you interviewed them about their possessions, interests, and activities I believe a new meaning of the roles they played would come across to the viewers with great impact.

If this suggestion impresses you as having any possibilities, I would be delighted to prepare, without any obligation whatsoever of course, a suggested script on, say, Washington at Mount Vernon or Lincoln at Springfield. I know these locales quite well.

I probably should say a little something about myself perhaps by way of giving some qualifications I may have for such an ambitious undertaking. I am a professorial lecturer at Northwestern University in business law, and also practice law. But my undergraduate degree was in history and journalism, and I still write newsfeatures regularly for the North American Newspaper Alliance and the King Features Syndicate. I am not awfully experienced at TV writing, but I have been a close student of your format, which I admire greatly. Would you be good enough to give me your reactions to this suggestion?

Very sincerely yours,

John F. Sembower

JOHN F. SEMBOWER

JFS:jn

P&P

CBS RADIO

Office Communication to: Messrs: Murrow, Aaron, Zousmer

May 20, 1954

from: Jack Beck

Gentlemen, all:

Thanks for the beautifully encased study of the upright tower of Pinza; it makes for a good conversation piece on the office wall.

FYI: Charlie Glett tells me that Ackerman tells him that PTP has approached Sharman Douglas about a job with the show next fall which would involve her to the exclusion of her other duties "about one day a week."

I told Glett what I knew of the original talk with Sharman and of my subsequent conversation with her at your direction. Unless you have had subsequent conversations with her I would surmise this is the result of Sharman getting her hopes up.

As ever, Jack

5/21

Mr. M.:
She returns from Europe June 11.
Ann'd.

F302

P to P

May 11, 1954

Dear Mr. Kenen:

Very many thanks for your nice letter and kind comments of April 19th. I am interested in what you have to say about the eight young Americans who will attend the World Assembly of Youth to be held in Singapore next August. I do not know whether it will be possible to arrange to present these young people on PERSON TO PERSON because our programs are lined up pretty far in advance and we seem to be fully booked until the end of the current season. However, I shall discuss this with the co-producers of the program at the earliest possible moment, and if we can do anything about it we will let you know.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Peter B. Kenen
Public Relations Officer
Young Adult Council
508 West 114 Street
New York 25, New York

rh

K.C.

508 West 114th Street
New York 25, New York

April 19, 1954

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am not sure that you will remember meeting me this last year at United Nations but, if it will help you place me, I was introduced to you by Mr. V. K. Krishna Menon of India as the correspondent for the Intercollegiate Broadcasting System at United Nations.

At this moment, however, I am engaged in another project for which I should like to enlist your help. This summer, eight young Americans, students and working people, will travel to Singapore to represent the United States at the Second General Assembly of the World Assembly of Youth. WAY, as you probably know, was established in the late 1940's as a non-Communist answer to the World Federation of Democratic Youth and held its first General Assembly at Cornell University in the summer of 1951.

The forthcoming meeting, scheduled to last through most of August, will be the most important WAY session to date and should be one of the most important international youth gatherings since World War Two.

While I am not among the fortunate eight and shall not be traveling with them through Asia and to Singapore, I am the public relations officer of the Young Adult Council, youth affiliate of the National Social Welfare Assembly, coordinating group for the major young adult organizations in the United States, and U.S. representative in the World Assembly of Youth.

In that capacity I have been trying to publicize both the preparations of the United States Delegation to WAY and the World Assembly itself. And believe me, Mr. Murrow, it is a difficult task for there appears to be little interest in youth movements in the United States.

In any case, I am writing to you to ask whether you could help us by presenting the United States Delegation to your television audience. I had in mind, in particular, your "Person to Person" program which would be ideally suited -- from our point of view.

I realize that you have a very heavy schedule and suspect, from my own radio work, that your program is arranged far in advance. But I do hope that you can give the suggestion some thought and, should it seem at all promising to you, that you may allow me to tell you more about it in person.

May I add, sir, my own congratulations to those you have already received on your "McCarthy program". You have already heard from the delegates to the Young Adult Council and from our college radio station directors. But I cannot resist adding my own thanks to you.

In the hope, then, that I shall be hearing from you, I remain

Most respectfully yours,

Peter B. Kenen

Peter B. Kenen
Public Relations Officer,-Young.
Adult Council

PKP

May 6, 1954

Dear Mr. Moree:

Many thanks for your letter and the suggestion about Stephen Galatti. Our PERSON TO PERSON programs for the rest of the season are pretty well set, but I would like to think about the possibility of getting Galatti on at some future time, and shall certainly discuss the suggestion with the co-producers of the program.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. E. A. Moree
Suite 201
627 Dorchester Street West
Montreal 2, Canada

rh

SUITE 201
627 DORCHESTER STREET WEST
MONTREAL 2

April 26,1954.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Dear Ed:

Viewing your program "Person to Person" and meeting the following day with Stephen Galatti, head of the American Field Service organization, it occurred to me that you might like the suggestion of giving Galatti and his work about the same treatment you gave to the creator of Howdy Doody.

Galatti is doing one of the most significant jobs in the field of long-range international relations that I know of. For instance, for the forthcoming school year Galatti's organization will place in high schools and preparatory schools throughout the United States, not less than 400 junior or senior pupils from schools in Germany, France, England, Greece and other countries of Europe. The State Department has, up to this year, made a grant of $100,000 to assist in this work, allocating the expenditure to Germany. This grant has been reduced this year to $50,000, Mr.Galatti tells me.

This indoctrination is a two-way street. The communities which place foreign pupils in their schools for a year have the privilege of nominating local pupils for 6 to 8 week tours in the home town of the pupil they are entertaining in the U.S.

These 'teen-agers live in a family in the town which gives them the privilege of a year's schooling. Coupled with this school experience is a 3 week bus trip around the U.S. There are other facets of this which are extremely interesting and I think might be highlighted entertainingly in one of your programs.

Perhaps you might get in touch with Mr. Galatti at the American Field Service Club, 113 E. 30th St., telephone Murray Hill 6-2095. I have not discussed with him the propriety of making this suggestion to you, but I am sending him a copy of this letter.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow Apr. 26, 1954.

I am sure that you will not consider this an intrusion upon the rather interesting contact I had with you when we were bringing Lord Woolton to the United States for the Waldorf dinner.

By the way, you are doing one hell of a swell job on McCarthy - and more power to you!

Sincerely yours,

E. A. Moree

EAM:sw E.A.Moree

P.S. Galatti, incidentally, is devoting his entire time to this work without compensation.

TRADE NEWS

485 Madison Avenue, New York 22, N.Y.

P to P

May 4, 1954

NOXZEMA CHEMICAL TO ALTERNATE SPONSORSHIP OF "PERSON TO PERSON"

The Noxzema Chemical Company has signed for alternate-week sponsorship of Edward R. Murrow's "Person to Person" series over the CBS Television Network, effective Friday, May 28, William H. Hylan, CBS Television Vice President in Charge of Network Sales, announced today.

Current "Person to Person" sponsors, the American Oil Company (AMOCO) in the East, and the Hamm Brewing Company in the Midwest, will continue their endorsement of the series, alternating with Noxzema's every-other-week schedule (CBS Television, Fridays, 10:30-11:00 PM, EDT).

The program, which made its debut last October, features Murrow's televisits to the homes of the great and the near-great.

Sullivan, Stauffer, Colwell & Bayles, Inc., is the agency for the Noxzema Chemical Company. AMOCO is represented by The Joseph Katz Company, and the Hamm Brewing Company by Campbell-Mithun, Inc.

"Person to Person" is produced by John Aaron and Jesse Zousmer in cooperation with Edward R. Murrow. Directors are Franklin Schaffner, Charles N. Hill and Robert Sammon.

* * *

Prog. Business

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Tom Connolly

from: Merritt H. Coleman

cc: Messrs. Seward
Cassarle
Fagan
Rosen
Peterson
O'Malley

May 4, 1954

Mr Murrow: This seem to be outstraightened. We shall assume you will be absent from radio show for same eight week period.
Jim 5/5/54

For purposes of Mr. Edward R. Murrow's eight week summer vacation "SEE IT NOW" and "PERSON TO PERSON" will be suspended commencing with the first full week in July (i.e., commencing Sunday, July 4, 1954).

"SEE IT NOW" will hiatus after the broadcast scheduled for June 29, 1954. Broadcasting will resume August 31.

"PERSON TO PERSON" will have its last broadcast prior to Mr. Murrow's vacation on July 2, 1954. Broadcasting will resume September 3.

MHC:eh

Mc

P to P

CBS RADIO

Office Communication to: Messrs. Murrow, Zousmer & Aaron

from: Mr. Seward

April 29, 1954

Subject: Delayed Broadcasts for Person to Person

The sales people tell me it is now critically important that we permit TVR's of Person to Person in the cities which can not be cleared on a live basis. They tell me that from Noxzema's point of view this is imperative and that Amoco considers it highly desirable. The basic points involved might well be summarized as follows:

Broader Coverage

Messrs. Dawson and Connolly report that "at the present time the program is on 27 live stations for Amoco and 10 live stations for Hamm Brewing. We estimate Amoco can use 60 plus markets and Hamm is potentially interested in about 45 markets. Obviously this kind of coverage can mean far greater acceptance and can increase the program's ratings. So many advertisers judge the success of a program on its Nielsen ratings that it is always advantageous to have good ratings, and since Person to Person is already doing so well on a limited network, it is our belief it could gain even greater heights."

Improve the Clearance Picture

Messrs. Dawson and Connolly report: "This point is closely tied in with that of broader coverage, but does stand on its own feet in the following way: 10:30 PM is Station Option time; there are many stations in the country which simply refuse to clear any network in, what they consider, their time. If Person to Person could be made available on a TVR basis, we stand a chance to get what could be better time on a delayed basis than we could get live, and there are areas where 10:30 is a little late. Mind you, Jim, I'm not selling down 10:30 PM, but am trying to show that in some markets, periods of time before 10:30 could be more desirable. If TVR's are good for the advertiser, and the above reasons indicate they are necessary, then we believe they are good for the program."

Possibility of Obtaining Live Clearances by Withholding Consent of TVR's

The television representatives report that their examination of a number of instances yields few instances in which markets were cleared for this reason. The fact is that the stations in the cities which we seek have been making out too well to be susceptible to economic pressure. On the other hand, there is some evidence that stations do attempt to convert TVR's into live programs, although the evidence is not over-whelming.

CBS RADIO

Office Communication

to:

from:

Desirability of Viewer Feeling That Conversation Is Taking Place At Time of Broadcast.

Undoubtedly there is some value in having the viewer know that the discussion he is hearing and seeing is taking place while he is actually looking at his television set, just as the live broadcast of a concert has an intangible value that a broadcast of recordings lacks. On the other hand, however, it is easily possible to overestimate the importance of this point. Permitting the use of TVR's in cities which can not be cleared on a live basis would not eliminate the values derived from the live telecast in the cities in which it is carried live, and would also permit the program to be carried and substantial values derived in numerous other cities.

Relation of Attitude Toward TVR's To Improvement of Network Time Period

It seems to me that the network time period will be improved only throuth the collaborative efforts of substantial advertisers, the Person to Person group and the CTD management. If we have substantial advertisers who will see to it that CTD offers the first good time period which becomes available and if the network advertise is able to use the fact of a substantial network as a part of the argument, we can expect an improvement of the time period reasonably promptly. Getting and holding the substantial advertiser is a condition precedent, however, and I don't believe that it will work the other way.

J.M.S.

692

Person to Person

April 29, 1954

Dear Mr. Bennett:

Very many thanks for your nice letter of April 16th and your kind comments. I and my colleagues on the PERSON TO PERSON staff are indeed happy to receive greetings from our newest sponsor, and should I have an opportunity to visit Salt Lake City I shall certainly remember your kind invitation.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. H. H. Bennett
Executive Vice President
Zions Co-Operative Mercantile Institution
Salt Lake City
Utah

rh

K.C

ZIONS CO-OPERATIVE MERCANTILE INSTITUTION

EXECUTIVE OFFICE

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH

April 16, 1954

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
C B S - Television
485 Madison Avenue
New York City, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It's a most unusual opportunity which was tendered to us by KSL-TV to sponsor on a local basis an outstanding network show such as your "Person to Person".

Z C M I, which is "America's First Department Store", is happy to present this program to the people within the Salt Lake City viewing area. This is our first excursion into the field of important television presentation, and we are proud to have such an excellent medium to test the pulling power of television as part of the publicity program of a local institution.

If any of your assignments should bring you to this part of the west, we should be honored to have you visit your newest sponsor.

Sincerely,

Z C M I

H H Bennett

H. H. BENNETT
Executive Vice President

HHB:mb

P&P

THE BRITISH BROADCASTING CORPORATION

630 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK 20, N. Y.

WASHINGTON, D. C. NEWS OFFICE
NATIONAL PRESS BUILDING
TELEPHONE EXECUTIVE 3-1465
CABLES: NEWSCASTS, WASHINGTON

NEW YORK OFFICE
TELEPHONE CIRCLE 7-0656
CABLES: BROADCASTS, NEW YORK

March 22, 1954

Mr. John Aaron
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear John:

Mr. Cecil Madden has asked me to send the following to Ed Murrow, and I wonder if you would like to pass it on to him.

I look forward to hearing from you about the "Person to Person" kinescopes.

Yours sincerely,

Aubrey Singer,
Television Officer

AS:bgn

Enc:

for Ed Murrow Cecil

More Letters to The Editor . . .

'Person to Person' was truly Personal TV

● While the world is the first to admit that the BBC is the master of TV technicalities, it is quite obvious to the viewing public in this country that they do not make the fullest use of them.

The Coronation, I think, was the only occasion upon which the BBC really showed the way in the field of television presentation, and I think it a great pity. It is all the more credit, therefore—though in a negative sort of way—that they should put on a film which showed all we licence-holders just how TV can be applied.

The film in question was that which illustrated American Ed Murrow's programme Person to Person, where TV cameras were used, together with ingenious back-projections, to bring the people he interviewed on to the screen in their natural surroundings, as it were. How much better, how much more imaginative is this skilful application of the television art than the turgid lumps of hesitant chat which pass for interviews on our own TV screens.

Is it that no one thinks of this kind of idea on this side of the Atlantic, or do those to whom such ideas are suggested raise the inevitable wail about cost? But apart from the purely technical angle, it would do a great deal towards brightening interviews if our questioners were to inject some of the leading questions posed by such a quiz-master as Murrow in place of the monotonous platitudes which are a feature of the studio-bound interviews sent out from Lime Grove.

St. Albans, Herts. A. F. Goodyear.

The "ingenious back-projections" were, in fact, the "inlay" system of TV which the BBC uses quite frequently.—EDITOR.

Commentator Peter Dimmock and the "Roving Eye" were the centre of much attraction when TV's brilliant invention went a-roving in Piccadilly last month

The Roving Eye

● What a really excellent idea is TV's new "roving eye" technique which we saw in Panorama recently. The idea of the camera being able to travel around London's West End and show us on-the-spot pictures is a perfect sign of the times and of TV development. Now that this technique is available, what about a TV "In Town To-night" programme?

Dorchester, Dorset. Harold Newman.

New Slant on Suppressors

● As a regular motorist and an occasional viewer, might I suggest that the present squabbles about suppressors on car engines might be resolved if every owner of a non-suppressed car were given this simple piece of apparatus when he went next to renew his licence, the cost being defrayed from TV licence fees.

I am sure the Government could buy suppressors at something like sixpence each, as against the present cost of about two shillings to the individual.

After all, is there any reason—apart from the fading compulsion of social obligation—why all motorists should go to the expense and trouble of buying and fitting a suppressor, regardless of whether he has a television set or not?

Acton, London. F. D. Hodges.

THE LAST WORD

TV "Sports Report" Wanted

● Surely the BBC realise that, as with radio audiences, Saturday sport is the most important item of the day for viewers. The afternoon TV sport activities—amateur games though they are—have a huge viewing audience. Surely, then, we are entitled to a special programme during the week, such as a sports newsreel?

For many years I have been an ardent listener to radio's "Sports Report," and it is perhaps because I am a comparative newcomer to the viewing ranks that I find it difficult to understand why the football results, etc., are not given on TV. I must add, though, that the sports programmes on TV—especially boxing—are really excellent. If only we could have a little more.

Kingstone, Hereford. Geo. R. Dellow.

You will love the flavour of Ricory—the grand full flavour of fine coffees and chicory skilfully blended. You will find it clean and pleasant to handle, quick and easy to make. And, while you are saving precious pennies, you will always be certain of quality—because Ricory is made by Nestlé's . . .

you must try

Ricory

2/2 4 OZ. TIN

Ricory is a soluble coffee and chicory product composed of coffee and chicory solids, combined and powdered with added dextrose, maltose and dextrins.

R7

THE NEW COFFEE AND CHICORY DRINK BY NESTLÉ'S

C
O
P
Y

C
O
P
Y

J. WALTER THOMPSON COMPANY

Chicago 11, Illinois

410 N. Michigan Avenue

March 16, 1954

Mr. John T. McHugh
The Joseph Katz Company
488 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear John:

Enclosed is a carbon of a letter delivered to CBS February 10 ordering "Person To Person" for the Parker Pen Company. I thought you might be interested in seeing what was written. The letter was written in accordance with formal authorization by the Parker Pen Company following the Board of Directors' meeting Friday, February 5. On Monday, February 8, the client authorized us to go ahead, verbal instructions were given CBS February 9, written authorization reached me, and February 10 the letter was written to Columbia in accordance with their instructions regarding what the letter should state. They were aware of our verbal purchase order February 8.

Just after I finished talking with you at 10:30 your time, Tom Dawson called to say that CBS cannot accept an order for alternate weeks starting in September. He said that he first had to find out from you if Amoco was going to give up the program, if Amoco would hold the program every week until September, waiting for our client, and also if Amoco wanted to give up alternate weeks after September. He implied that as far as he knew, Amoco only wanted alternate sponsorship as of now for a limited period. I told him that I was sure you wanted alternate sponsorship forever and anon, that he should make definite inquiry about this point.

I am sorry that I cannot feel as confident as you that everybody has all the cards on top of the table away down East there in New York. However, as long as we two, at least, can talk over the telephone, I am certain that we can make sure that each knows what the other agency is trying to do.

I still don't understand how it can be that you put in calls for me which were not returned or reported to me. I am very sorry if the error was made on this end.

J. WALTER THOMPSON COMPANY

I have to be the eternal optimist in my end of the advertising business. Therefore, I continue to hope that something will work out satisfactorily so that Amoco will share with us this very good program.

All the best of good wishes to you and Bob Swan.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ Peter

Peter A. Cavallo, Jr.

P&P

THE BRITISH BROADCASTING CORPORATION

630 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK 20, N. Y.

WASHINGTON, D. C. NEWS OFFICE
NATIONAL PRESS BUILDING
TELEPHONE EXECUTIVE 3-1465
CABLES: NEWSCASTS, WASHINGTON

NEW YORK OFFICE
TELEPHONE CIRCLE 7-0656
CABLES: BROADCASTS, NEW YORK

Robert Watt

March 11, 1954

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow: PERSON TO PERSON

Mr. Cecil Madden, our Assistant Controller of Television Programmes, after making inquiry through Paul Niven, has asked me to write to you and inquire whether we might be given permission to show "PERSON TO PERSON" as a regular feature on BBC Television. This request is a direct result of our recently showing the edition, which featured the Captain of the Queen Mary.

As you know, this was extremely well received in Britain, and the BBC are only too anxious to have the opportunity of showing more of these programmes. At the moment we are only originating thirty-five hours of programming per week. However, I gather that at least one "PERSON TO PERSON" a month is being considered.

At a recent luncheon with Mr. John Aaron, I understood that you had no objection to our having the use of some of your kinescopes, and in fact you were only awaiting on official letter from us before granting the necessary permission.

I hope this letter fits the bill, and I would welcome an opportunity of discussing the matter further with you or Mr. Aaron.

Lastly may I take this opportunity of thanking you and Mr. Friendly for all your help and kindness in providing us with a kinescope of Tuesday's "SEE IT NOW". I gather that a space is being reserved for it tomorrow night on BBC, and London will provide me with the reactions for you.

Yours sincerely,

Aubrey Singer
Television Officer

AS:bgn

PuP

THE BRITISH BROADCASTING CORPORATION

HEAD OFFICE: BROADCASTING HOUSE, LONDON, W.1

TELEVISION CENTRE: WOOD LANE, LONDON, W.12

TELEPHONE: SHEPHERDS BUSH 8030 TELEGRAMS & CABLES: BROADCASTS, TELEX, LONDON

Reference 35/CM.

22nd February, 1954.

Mr. Ed Murrow,
c/o C.B.S. Television Network,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York 22,
New York, U.S.A.

Dear Ed,

Your "Person to Person" kinescope you sent us had made a great impression here. This is just to thank you and C.B.S. for it. We wish we could have some more of such quality.

All wishes to you.

Sincerely,

Cecil

(Cecil Madden.)
Assistant to Controller of Television Programmes.

BPB

(T E L E T Y P E)

C
O
P
Y

C
O
P
Y

THIS IS J. WALTER THOMPSON CO. CGO 2-19-54 10-07 CST

TO MESSRS. BOB SWAN AND JOHN MCHUGH

FRM PETER A CAVALLO, JR - JWT CG

SORRY TO REPORT THAT PARKER HAS PROCEEDED WITH PLANS TO CO-SPONSOR "FOUR STAR PLAYHOUSE" WITH SINGER. NOT BEING ABLE TO COLLABORATE WITH U AND AMOCO ON MURROW SERIES IS GREAT DISAPPOINTMENT TO ALL. UNDERSTAND THAT FORD WAS PROMISED FIRST RENEWAL ON ALL MURROW AVLABILITY BY CBS THRU J. WALTER THOMPSON PURCHASE OF MURROW RADIO. PERHAPS THIS EXPLAINS WHY CBS ATTITUDE PROJECTED TO JOHN SAND BERG WAS SO PESSIMISTIC ABT PARKER'S PROSPECTS OF CLEARING STATIONS FOR UR SHOW. TKS FOR ALL UR HELP. BEST WISHES FRM ALL

END OR GA

THANK YOU

END 10-10 9

C
O
P
Y

C
O
P
Y

February 10, 1954

Mr. Robert Schroeder
Columbia Broadcasting System
410 North Michigan Avenue
Chicago 11, Illinois

Dear Bob:

The Parker Pen Company has authorized us to place an order for the "Person to Person " program contingent upon the network and consequent coverage which CBS can offer.

Will you please tell us what stations at what costs will be available to us if Amoco agrees to an alternating sponsorship, including those new markets you now know to be available? Please give us the package price of the program.

The Parker Pen Company would like to have clearance on every inter-connected station of the CBS network.

Sincerely yours,

Peter A. Cavallo, Jr.

pjc

Person to Person

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: H. Cowham

from: E. R. Murrow

February 2, 1954

We seem to be running into constant bad luck or just old-fashioned poor signals on our remotes from Washington.

At the moment we have a tentative plan to go down to Washington on "Person to Person", March 12. Is there anything we can do, say, promise, pay, or threaten to make certain that our Washington signal stands up to the quality of our other remotes?

Maybe you can get together with Aaron and Zousmer and work some of your old-time radio magic.

E.R.M.

nic

565

P to P

Trendex

Ed:

On the Cushing-Dache show these were the ~~ratings~~ TRENDEX:

NATIONAL

P to P 21.1
Fites..... 11.5
Down Go..... 4.8
Share of aud - P to P - 45.5

BOSTON

P to P.....41.6
Fites.....16.9
Share of aud 71.7

ja

PS: Robinson says if Boston were in our national rating rather than one shot the national rating would have been 4 points higher

WU017 PD DUPLICATE

Person to Person

WUX PITTSBURGH PENN NOV 20 1137AME

KKX

EDWARD R MURROW,COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM INC

DEAR ED' I DEEPLY REGRET I AM UNABLE TO ADJUST MY DECEMBER SCHEDULE SO THAT I COULD HAVE THE PLEASURE OF JOINING YOU ON TELEVISION FIRM COMMITMENTS OF LONG STANDING MAKE IT IMPOSSIBLE. WARM REGARDS

BEN FAIRLESS

1244P..

RECEIVED
1953 NOV 20 PM 2:02
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Orville Sather

from: Ed Murrow

November 11, 1953

It is my inclination, and indeed my duty, to tell you that your "remote crew chiefs" Cheeseman and Grenier have been doing an excellent job on the remote pick-ups on PERSON TO PERSON. I base this comment on evidence rather more conclusive than would be provided by my own observation; I have had eloquent comments from the persons whose homes have been invaded, speaking of the courtesy and consideration of your crews and also their obvious interest in the program and the personalities involved.

This is merely to say my thanks and, more importantly, to relay the universally favorable comments I have had from those who have opened their homes to us.

E.R.M.

dm

565

Person to Pe

November 5, 1953

Dear Ken:

Many thanks for your nice letter about PERSON TO PERSON. Thanks also for your suggestions of Peter Hunt and Dr. Norman Vincent Peale. I don't quite see at this point when we might get around to them since we already have our programs scheduled for many weeks ahead. If we decide to approach them, I will let you know.

Best regards.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Kenneth S. Giniger
Vice President and
General Manager
Hawthorn Books, Inc.
70 Fifth Avenue
New York 11, New York

rh

HAWTHORN BOOKS INC. PUBLISHERS
70 FIFTH AVENUE · NEW YORK CITY 11 · OREGON 5-2019

K.C

October 28, 1953

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Ed:

I have been watching your new show with a great deal of interest and want to compliment you on it. I particularly enjoyed last week's Godfrey interview and that with the struggling young actor which followed it.

It occurred to me that I might make two suggestions which you may find of interest. The first would be Peter Hunt, the artist, illustrator and designer, whose houses on Cape Cod, at Orleans and Provincetown, would be wonderful on TV and whose own personality projects quite well. The other would be Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, whose farm at Pawling should be of interest to your audience and whose family is quite photogenic.

Both these men are close personal friends and, if you are interested in them, I would be glad to do anything I can to be of assistance. My interest, incidentally, is not entirely altruistic; I am Peter Hunt's publisher and, before we set up this operation, had been Norman Peale's editor for many years.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Most sincerely,

K. S. Giniger
Vice President and General Manager

KSG/mb

Person to Person

October 30, 1953

Dear Mr. Haile:

Very many thanks for your kind letter about SEE IT NOW and PERSON TO PERSON. As you can imagine a great deal of hard work goes into producing these programs, and it pleases all of us enormously to receive encouragement such as yours.

Many thanks for your good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Robert G. Haile
245 Hillside Avenue
Williston Park, New York

rh

Give one PP. K.C.?

ROBERT G. HAILE
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW
245 HILLSIDE AVENUE
WILLISTON PARK, N. Y.
GARDEN CITY 7-7589

October 9, 1953

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
TV Station WCBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

If you need some further encouragement for continuing your Tuesday night program, "See It Now", and your Friday night program, "Person To Person", here it is.

Both programs were first seen by a friend a few weeks ago and since then word has passed around until you now have ten families in this area tremendously interested. None of these families can suggest any way in which you can better the programs except that they all hope you continue with the variety and coverage which you are presently giving.

They all recognize it is not only a stimulating program but a vital one, helping the American people bridge the gap from neighbor to neighbor within our own country, and from neighbor to neighbor without.

My very best wishes for your continued success.

Very truly yours,

Robert G. Haile

ROBERT G. HAILE

RGH:grk

✓

Person to P.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Robinson

from: Mr. Murrow

October 23, 1953

As you know, we make considerable play on the air about this program being live, and I feel very strongly that running it on a delayed basis anywhere (as much as I would like to be in Philadelphia) would make us look just plain ridiculous.

E.R.M.

565

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Murrow

from: Hubbell Robinson

Oct. 21st, 1953

I understand that you have felt that it would be inadvisable to use any delayed broadcasts on "Person To Person."

I can certainly understand your feeling against any blanket employment of this practice.

However, in Philadelphia, we have a situation which I am wondering if you might not want to consider. Don Thornburgh is eager to carry the show and he can on a delayed basis on a Sunday afternoon following your Friday night show.

Would there be any value to setting up a policy that repeats cannot be any later than 48 hours following the New York origination?

HR

Schuster, Max

October 22, 1953

Dear Max:

Very many thanks for your nice note about PERSON TO PERSON. I am delighted to hear that you enjoyed the first show. All of us who work on it are finding this program a real pleasure to produce.

I hope we are still managing to keep you home Friday nights!

Best regards.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. M. Lincoln Schuster
Simon and Schuster, Inc.
630 Fifth Avenue
New York 20, New York

rh

THE INNER SANCTUM OF SIMON AND SCHUSTER
PUBLISHERS · 630 FIFTH AVENUE
ROCKEFELLER CENTER · NEW YORK 20

October 7, 1953

Dear Ed Murrow:

May I pause in the day's occupation to release a twenty-one-gun salvo in honor of your first "Person to Person" show last Friday? You have added a new dimension to that tired old cliché and overworked medium of "mass communication" — and what a vibrant, civilized, humane dimension you made it, both with Campanello and Stokowski!

I'm deeply glad I was home Friday night — and I think I'll make a habit of it!

Yours faithfully,

M Lincoln Schuster

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
580 Park Avenue
New York City

MLS:CD

Person to Person

October 20, 1953

Dear Mr. Neale:

Many thanks for your very nice letter and your kind comments concerning my programs. I, too, am sorry that it is for the present impossible for WCAU to carry PERSON TO PERSON on Friday nights. However, I think their explanation for their inability to do so is perfectly reasonable and I fail to see what they can do at this point to alter the situation.

For my own part, I still feel very strongly that if this program is to be carried at all it should be live, so I have a share in the responsibility with WCAU for your current disappointment. I hope that perhaps we may be able to work out a more satisfactory arrangement in the near future.

Again, many thanks for writing as you did.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Douglas T. Neale, President
Edwin J. Schoettle Company
533 North Eleventh Street
Philadelphia 23, Pennsylvania

rh

Mr. M
F.Y.I

usual nice letter

Edwin J. Schoettle Company
533 North Eleventh Street
Philadelphia 23, Pa.

DOUGLAS T. NEALE
PRESIDENT

October 9, 1953

Mr. Edward R. Murrow, Vice President
Columbia Broadcasting Company
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

On April 10 I wrote you to try to tell you how much your programs have meant to members of the Neale family over the last few years, and the high regard of everyone of us for you and for the work you're doing continues and increases.

On Sunday, September 27 I happened to see a New York Herald Tribune and read with great interest about your projected new television program scheduled for 10:30 on Friday evenings. We, of course, marked it on our calendar at home and made it a point to be there to see the first broadcast. Much to our dismay, Station WCAU did not carry it. I called to find out why and then wrote a letter to Mr. John McClay, Program Manager of WCAU. A copy of this letter is enclosed.

Mr. McClay's reply of October 7 is very courteous and gives a fair enough reason for their failure to carry your new program. At the same time, it's apparent to me that a large part of your viewing public in the Philadelphia area is seriously disappointed by their inability to secure this new television program, and it would seem to me that if the Philadelphia viewers have to choose between two evils, that of seeing the program a day or two late in reproduced form or of not seeing it at all, they would much prefer the first alternative.

It's apparent that WCAU has suggested carrying this program on Sunday and that your feeling at the moment is that the program must be carried as a "live" show. I can understand your feeling about the matter but, at the same time, those of us in this area are really on the horns of a dilemma, and we just don't like to miss any Edward R. Murrow program.

I hope sooner or later WCAU will be able to rearrange their schedule so that they can carry your new show when it is presented elsewhere but, in the meantime, I'm sure many of us in this area would be most grateful if you would make it possible for them to carry it, for example, on Sunday as a rebroadcast.

My sincere good wishes to you for your continued success in bringing thoughtful and worthwhile programs to the many people who have come to have great confidence in you.

Sincerely yours,

DTN/kz

COPY

WCAU Television

October 7, 1953

Mr. Douglas T. Neale
President
Edwin J. Schoettle Company
533 North 11th Street
Philadelphia 23, Pa.

Dear Mr. Neale:

Replying to your letter of October 5, I am going to undertake an explanation of the rather complex circumstances which currently prevent our carrying "Person to Person".

Let me say first of all that we are quite as anxious to carry Mr. Murrow's program as you are to see it - and this is not merely lip service. Ed Murrow has been a good friend and associate of many of us here for many years, and we share your admiration for his competence and showmanship.

As you undoubtedly know, Mr. Murrow does another television program "See It Now". The program used to be heard on Sunday evenings and was switched to Tuesday at 10:30 PM. In order to continue to carry this program, we moved our local 10:30 - 11 PM Tuesday show to Friday night at 10:30. The sponsor strenuously objected to this, pointing out that he had contracted for the time in good faith, and that it was unfair to jeopardize his audience by such an arbitrary move. However, we insisted - and let me repeat, we moved this client to 10:30 PM Friday night - a time which was then completely open.

Shortly thereafter, we were advised of Mr. Murrow's "Person to Person" show and that it would be at 10:30 Friday night.

It is one thing to feel a responsibility to the audience which prompts us to schedule a program like "Person to Person" rather than a program like "Death Valley Days" at 10:30 PM Fridays. It is quite another thing, however - having already moved a sponsor against his will - to insist that he move again, and for the same Mr. Murrow who caused him to move once before.

Ours is a business organization, Mr. Neale, as is yours. Should you contract with one of your clients to deliver products to him on a given schedule, I doubt if you would - not once, but twice - refuse him delivery in order to accommodate a customer of whom you were personally fond. Should you do so, you might soon be without customers.

In the above statement, I do not mean to carp, nor to take issue with your right to criticize our program practices. I am simply trying to relate to your business the problems which occur in ours. Secondly, I do not mean to imply that television broadcasting is entirely a business - in the sense that yours is. We incur serious responsibility in the public interest which we must exercise. WCAU-TV's record in that regard is so sound that I do not hesitate to refer to it.

Since notification about the "Person to Person" progrm - a matter of many weeks - we have attempted to get Mr. Murrow's agreement to our telecasting his program at another time. To date we have not been successful. Mr. Murrow feels strongly that his program should be carried "live" or not at all. We don't agree. Rather we feel that the time we can offer late Sunday afternoon might be even better in that children as well as adults could see this program; further, we feel that bringing the program to Philadelphia at any reasonable time is preferable to not bringing it at all. We shall continue to try to solve the problem and hope that "Person to Person" will soon be seen over our facilities in Philadelphia.

Perhaps in this letter (copies of which I am sending to several other persons who wrote concerning "Person to Person"), I have failed to convince you of the reasonableness of our position. However, I hope you will agree that we have not resorted to subterfuge nor avoided a frank explanation of our problem.

I appreciated your letter, as well as the several others which reached me, and I should be very happy to hear from you whenever you care to comment on our operations.

Cordially,

Signed John L. McClay
Assistant Manager
WCAU-TV

COPY

October 5, 1953

Mr. John McClay, Program Manager
Station WCAU
City Line at Monument Avenue
Cynwyd, Pa.

Dear Mr. McClay:

The enclosed announcement was in the New York paper on Sunday, September 27 and I cut it out with much interest because we never knowingly miss any of Mr. Murrow's programs and, of course, I think he is considered by most people to be the star salesman of the entire Columbia Broadcasting System. His nightly radio program and his very excellent television program on Sundays "See it Now" have been musts in our family for a long time.

Needless to say, we tuned in at 10:30 last Friday night in an effort to see the first of his new series of television programs. I was so astonished to find it missing from Channel 10 that I called your station immediately and was informed that you had no plans for carrying this new program in Philadelphia. Apparently, there is some conflict with another sponsor.

I can't imagine that any other program could be considered of equal importance and judging from what your phone operator told me about the number of complaints she had received in one evening, it would appear that a great many other people feel as I do.

To continue to carry an inferior program when this is available is doing a disservice to your viewing public in Philadelphia, and I sincerely hope that you will make arrangements to turn over the facilities of Channel 10 to Mr. Murrow's program without further delay. The reasons for doing it seem so obvious that I hesitate to write a longer letter in order to elaborate them, but I would appreciate a report on your proposed plans if you have time to advise me.

Very truly yours,

Signed Douglas T. Neale

Pub- Person to Person

October 15, 1953.

Dear Dave,

Many thanks for your very nice note. I am delighted to hear that you enjoyed the first PERSON TO PERSON show, and hope you will continue to approve as the series progresses. As you should know, I value your good opinion very highly indeed.

The best of good wishes and warm regards to you and Mary Elizabeth.

As ever,

Mr. Davidson Taylor
National Broadcasting Company, Inc.,
R.C.A. Building
Radio City, New York 20, N.Y.

Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. F. 506

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

To Mr. Murrow

From Mr. Paley

Station

October 8, 1953

Ret'd day
P. to P.

I tried to get you on the phone last Friday night after "Person To Person", but you were out. I thought it went very well, indeed, and that you had the makings of one of the most interesting shows on television. It obviously will improve as you get a better hang of it, but it was damned good for an opener.

I was a little troubled by the device used in giving you a bridge to your interviewees. I think I would prefer the elimination of the window-screen in your room and would bring about the connection by simply stating as you did in some of your "See It Now" interviews that you are going to have a visit through the use of television cameras "now set up and ready" in Mr. Blank's house. On the other hand, it may pay to work further on improving the present mechanism.

I think one of the things that threw me off the use of this device was the stark nature of the setting you were in, although I could see that you had a problem in trying to figure out just what would be right. On the one hand, I suppose you didn't want to be sitting in a control room the way you do on "See It Now"; on the other hand, you didn't want to have a phoney living room atmosphere created for you. Maybe one of the ways of getting over this dilemma is to have you picked up very close, as you are during "See It Now" so that the setting and background become of little importance.

As I said above, though, I think you've got a sure winner in this show and it will be creating a lot of excitement.

"See It Now" last Tuesday was excellent. The piece on India was one of the best things I've seen in a long while.

I do want to see the Nehru piece which was done on the first "See It Now" broadcast of this season. If you can send me the film, I will screen it at home.

2

2

NATIONAL BROADCASTING COMPANY, INC.

A SERVICE OF RADIO CORPORATION OF AMERICA

RCA Building, Radio City, New York 20, N.Y.

CIRCLE 7-8300

October 6, 1953

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York City
New York

Dear Ed:

The first broadcast in your Person To Person series was, in my opinion, superb. This is the direction in which I feel television will go.

Anything good done in this line at one network helps everybody at other networks and other stations to do better.

Bless you and good luck.

Sincerely,

Dave

Davidson Taylor

DT:AM

Ed

Jess: FYI Write

Person to Person

"P TO P" got a plug on the "HONESTLY, CELESTE" show on CBS*TV last nite Sequence was about a gal newspaper reporter who writes a story on apartments which won't permit children and gets famous because of the article..... Among accolades (good word eh?) she gets a telegram asking for an appearance on "P to P"....

Bob S....

Pto P

COLUMBIA RECORDS INC.

A Subsidiary of Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

799 SEVENTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 19, NEW YORK • CIRCLE 5-7300

JAMES B. CONKLING
President

Thurs -

Dear Ed -

You are a hero to my wife - (nocum)

As she is a Mormon, she was overly delighted with the job you did on Benson.

Then she told me of your show the other night (I missed it) about N.J. women in politics that she says was one of the greatest pictures of the true "Christmas" that she has ever seen -

Sincerely

L

CLASS OF SERVICE

This is a fullrate Telegram or Cablegram unless its deferred character is indicated by a suitable symbol above or preceding the address.

WESTERN UNION

(48)

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

FX-1201

SYMBOLS

DL=Day Letter

NL=Night Letter

LT=Int'l Letter Telegram

VLT=Int'l Victory Ltr.

The filing time shown in the date line on telegrams and day letters is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

NA151 PD=WUX NEWYORK NY 2 1040A=

1953 OCT 2 AM 10 57

EDWARD R MURROW=

580 PARK AVE=

DEAR ED. ALL GOOD WISHES FOR THE PREMIERE OF PERSON TO PERSON TONIGHT=.

FRANK STANTON=

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

PTP

CBS RADIO

Office Communication to: Mr. Hylan cc: Mr. Murrow

from: Mr. Seward

March 30, 1953

Subsequent to our conversation, I advised Messrs. McHugh and Swan of the Joseph Katz agency that they would be given through the close of business April 10 to decide whether or not they would purchase PERSON TO PERSON. I also advised them, however, that ~~if it became important~~ to the American Oil people to have a couple of additional days, they should telephone us about it.

J.M.S.

JMS:PL

1137

Person to Person

December 13, 1956

Dear Miss Shultz:

Please forgive the delay in answering your wire of November 5th which was received here during my absence in Israel.

I am sorry that it isn't possible for us to do as you suggested and invite Mrs. Rose Halprin to be our guest on PERSON TO PERSON, but the year's programs are pretty well planned at the beginning of the season and our definite commitments are made pretty far ahead.

Thank you for your suggestion and your offer of assistance.

Sincerely yours,

Miss Lillie Shultz
The Kenmore Associates
120 East 56th Street
New York, New York

fc

RECEIVED
1956 NOV -5 PM 7:05
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

WUA072 PD

KL NEW YORK NY NOV 5 525PME

EDWARD R MURROW

CBS

MAY WE SUGGEST AS GUEST ON YOUR "PERSON TO PERSON" PROGRAM THE ACTING CHAIRMAN OF THE JEWISH AGENCY IN AMERICA MRS ROSE HALPRIN STOP AS YOU KNOW AGENCY IS THE PRINCIPAL ORGANIZATION OF WORLD JEWERY FOR ASSISTANCE TO ISRAEL STOP MRS HALPRIN IS AN AMERICAN WHO HAS LIVED MANY YEARS IN ISRAEL STOP INTERVIEW WOULD BE OPPORTUNITY TO PRESENT A PRESENTABLE WOMAN IN ONE OF THE MOST IMPORTANT ORGANIZATIONAL JOBS IN THE WORLD AND ALSO TO SECURE A REFLECTION OF A REPRESENTATIVE SPOKESMAN OF THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMUNITY ON CRITICAL MIDDLE EAST ISSUES STOP IF THIS IDEA HAS APPEAL WOULD BE GLAD TO RENDER ALL POSSIBLE ASSISTANCE IN MAKING ARRANGEMENTS

THE KENMORE ASSOCIATES LILLIE SHULTZ PLAZA

3-1872 120 EAST 56TH STREET NEWYORKCITY

632P..

Lewis, Jerry
P-P

December 5, 1956

Dear Jerry:

I write belatedly to say you my thanks for sitting in for me on PERSON TO PERSON while I was in Israel. The reaction to your substitution was altogether favorable; one more such instance and you will have to work every week while I retire to the farm. Johnny, Jesse, and everyone involved in the actual production thought you were not only easier to work with but more gracious and generous than I am -- also funnier.

I am truly in your debt for undertaking the chore, and the mail indicates that a lot of other people are too.

As ever yours,

Mr. Jerry Lewis
1048 N. Amalfi Drive
Pacific Palisades, California

rh

Lewis, Jerry

Jerry Lewis
PACIFIC PALISADES
CALIFORNIA

December 21, 1956

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Ed:

I write belatedly, too, to thank you for your very nice letter of December 5, and to express my appreciation to you, Jesse, Johnny, and the crew for that memorable night on PERSON TO PERSON. Every possible courtesy was extended to me, and it certainly was my pleasure to be on the show.

I am looking forward to seeing you when I return to New York the 10th of January.

Always,

Jerry

Jerry

JL/jt

And a real big thank you for the book! I shall always cherish everybody's

DIRECTORS:
HAROLD W. SNOAD
MISS JESSIE SMITH
WILFRED A. HAWKES
GORDON DAVIES

EVERYBODY'S PUBLICATIONS LTD.
TELEGRAMS: EVERYBODY'S, FLEET, LONDON.
TELEPHONE: FLEET STREET 7521.
114, fleet street,
london, e.c.4.

24th October, 1956.

OCT 27 1956

My dear Ed,

It has suddenly hit me again like a thunder-clap that the B.B.C. turned down your interview with the Windsors.

I am told the interview is in script, and available.

Please will you air-mail me a copy; and, if I want to buy it to publish in EVERYBODY'S, what will it cost me?

All the boys in the Savile Club join with me, I am sure, in saying: How are you? Good luck, and we hope to see you soon.

All the best,

Norman Ewart

E. R. Murrow, Esq.,
485 Madison Avenue,
NEW YORK,
U.S.A.

Ewart of Savile Club?

P to P.

CBS RADIO

Office Communication

to: Mr. Murrow

from: Mr. Seward

October 19, 1956

Apparently the Ampex recording equipment which will make high-quality video tapes of PERSON TO PERSON will not be available until late November at the earliest. Accordingly I am holding up the consent letters which we discussed a week or so ago.

Jim

J.M.S.

693

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: James Seward cc: E. R. Murrow, Paul Rosen

from: Jesse Zousmer

October 16, 1956

One of us seems to have made a mistake in the budget allowance for Miss Cammarota. Having fought a number of battles through the financial jungle in these parts, Mr. Aaron and I have decided to make the figure right, out of our own pockets.

J. Z.

Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. P to P F. 502

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

To

From Mr. Zousser

Station Mr. Murrow

October 10, 1956

I'm against it too. Unless you and Johnny have strong feelings, let's duck it.

E.R.M.

rh

Story on Murrow family for Colliers

October 1, 1956

Dear General Laury:

Each week I perpetrate a television program with the title of PERSON TO PERSON. It is an informal interview from the "victim's" home. We have visited such people as General Maxwell Taylor and General Shepherd when he was Commandant of the Marine Corps. This is merely to say that when you next come to the States it would give me great pleasure to chat with you about NATO and related subjects.

I was very much disappointed to miss you by only a few hours in Tripoli last spring.

If you are disposed to consider this invitation and ask one of your aides to make me a signal before your next visit, we can arrange matters with minimum inconvenience.

As ever yours,

General Lauris Norstad
SHAPE
Paris, France

rh
cc: Mr. Aaron

September 27, 1956

Dear Mr. Logan:

Thank you for your gracious letter and particularly for your comments about Mr. Welch. I, too, felt that it would have been useful and interesting to prolong the conversation with him indefinitely.

I cherish the hope that one day you and Mrs. Logan will permit us to come and visit you with our electronic gadgets.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Joshua Logan
435 East 52 Street
New York 22, New York

rh

JOSHUA LOGAN

Long Ridge Road
Conn.
14 Sept 1956

Dear Mr Murrow:

My wife and I had such a delightful experience last night watching your person to person visits with Frank Sinatra and especially Mr Welsh that I felt I had to write and thank you. It was such a intimate interview on both sides that I was quite transported & wanted to last on and on.

JOSHUA LOGAN

We are all grateful to you for bring such fine experiences to us -

With best wishes & the hope that you will continue your career for a long time I remain

Yours sincerely

Joshua Logan

P to P

HEADQUARTERS FIRST ARMY
GOVERNORS ISLAND, NEW YORK 4, NEW YORK
OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC INFORMATION OFFICER

3 August 1956

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
"Person to Person"
CBS-TV
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

Here is a suggestion for your "Person to Person" program.

The subject is a Reserve Forces Act trainee. Although we have no one specifically in mind at this writing, we would attempt to find an Olympic prospect, a ballplayer, or a show business "name" for added billboard value.

This is how we visualize the presentation. On your screen is an aerial film showing the terrain of the Fort Dix reservation. Your introduction would be something along the lines of "Olympic discus hopeful, Joe Green, lives on this ten thousand acre tract in New Jersey. Joe calls this land Fort Dix and Fort Dix calls Joe, 'Private Green'".

The scene changes. Green, well turned out, is seated comfortably in a chair or on a cot in his squad room. After answering questions on his new life in the Army, Green introduces the remainder of his "family", which is to say his squad and the sergeant. The sergeant or an officer gives the Army point of view toward RFA. Joe takes us on a "tour" as the cameras visit the day room with its facilities and the kitchen for a look around and a word with one of the cooks who explains the mess point of view toward feeding the young trainees.

Now a question from you on how Joe's parents feel about his participation in RFA training. Joe replies with the suggestion that you ask his mother directly. Mrs. Green is waiting in the reception room of the Post Guest House, which is provided by the Army for the accommodation of visiting relatives.

The Reserve Forces Act -- which is intended to strengthen the reserve components, allows a man, 17 to 18½, to discharge his military obligation by joining the Army Reserve or National Guard for eight years of which only six months is on full active duty. It is often misunderstood by the public. A presentation such as the one outlined above would do much to clarify the Act for the public and at the same time provide interesting entertainment, we feel.

Please be assured of complete cooperation on the part of the Army to make this presentation as effective as possible.

Cordially,

Ed Brown

EDWARD D. BROWN, JR.
Captain, Artillery
Radio-TV Division

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Seward cc: Messrs. Murrow, Sumner, Thompson from: Mr. Chamberlain

July 23, 1956

Thanks for calling our attention to the Wall Street Journal article on a new high sensitivity RCA image-orthicon camera tube.

We've been watching this development for some time although this tube shows little or no promise for broadcast use. It's too noisy. Extensive engineering tests by RCA, Camden engineers indicate negative results for broadcast application. It is an excellent tube for certain industrial and medical applications.

However, arrangements are being made to get a sample tube which we'll carefully test to determine its usability for Person-to-Person and similar programs.

Don't expect too much. If it can be used satisfactorily with reduced studio lighting, we'll adopt it promptly.

Please continue to spot-light new technical equipment or techniques that come to your attention. It serves as a double-check and focuses attention on items of above average interest, items needed for more efficient program production.

DA.

Pto P.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Henry Grossman cc: Ira DeLumen
E.R. Murrow

from: Jesse Zousmer

July 6, 1956

I'm aware of the fact that labor-management contracts cannot be changed overnight, but I call your attention to this fact which may affect further negotiations: during the past year on PERSON TO PERSON we found costs averaging $2,000 more when a New York remote crew was assigned to a Boston area remote. For example - when the WNAC crews did the Admiral Byrd and Vannevar Bush remotes the cost ranged from 27 to $2800. When the New York crews did the Marciano remote, in the same general area, the cost was $4,600. You will recognize that this is quite a budget item for us.

I just thought you should know. I have the detailed figures if you are interested.

J.Z.

565

Pres & Bus.

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication to: Jesse Zousmer

from: Edward R. Murrow

February 25, 1958

I suggest we put in writing the facts of life plus our forward commitments on the coast and send it to the appropriate authorities.

fc

E.R.M.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E.R. Murrow

from: J. Zousmer

February 18, 1958

FYI - within the next week or so because of a re-routing of network line feeds to the coast PERSON TO PERSON charges will go up by some fantastic percentage.

We asked the money boys about this and were told there is nothing we can do -- nothing they can do -- that we will just have to absorb the charges (which our best sources indicate will be something like $1800 per west coast show).

It was also suggested by the budget boys that we could cut costs by going to the coast less often.

Inasmuch as this will add an estimated $10,000 to our 42-week budget we will have obvious difficulties keeping within the budget.

Just thought you ought to know in advance.

J. Z.

30

Bus. P.P.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: David Klinger cc: E.R. Murrow, P. Rosen

from: Jesse Zousmer

March 10, 1958

In reference to my February 13 note on additional costs that will accrue to PERSON TO PERSON because of the re-routing of line feeds to the West Coast:

My best estimate now is that each time we go to the West Coast it will mean roughly $900 over our previously planned costs for this season.

Inasmuch as we are now committed for six additional visits, are tentatively planning two more, and inasmuch as my information is that this $900 will decrease for originations west of Chicago but east of the coast -- this could mean an additional budgeting cost for the season of between 8 and 10 thousand dollars.

I understand some of the problems the re-routing has brought to your desk.

I just wanted this on the record.

J. Z.

nic

P. to P.

✓

dpl
5 July 1956
A7-2/2 & P15-2/2

Mr. Herman A. Feldmann
Manager - Public Relations
Maryland Shipbuilding & Drydock Company
P. O. Box 597
Baltimore 3, Maryland

Dear Mr. Feldmann:

Thank you very much for taking the time and effort to let us know how much you enjoyed the appearance of Coast Guard Seaman Richard Moreland and his family on the Edward R. Murrow Program, "Person to Person", June 29.

I am sending a copy of your letter to Mr. Murrow, Coast Guard Headquarters in Washington, D. C. and SN Moreland at Tarrytown Light Station.

Your interest in the Coast Guard is deeply appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

H. C. PERKINS
Rear Admiral, USCG
Commander, Eastern Area and Commander, Third Coast Guard District

Copy to: (with enclosure)

Mr. Edward R. Murrow ✓
CBS-TV (CPI)
CBS-TV, N.Y.
Tarrytown LIGHTA

Maryland Shipbuilding & Drydock Company
P. O. Box 537 Baltimore 3, Maryland

June 29, 1956

Commandant
United States Coast Guard
3rd Naval District
New York, N. Y.

Sir:

Like many viewers I saw the Ed Murrow show, Person to Person, last Friday night.

I not only enjoyed my visit to the lighthouse, but feel that the interview with your young but very personable representative brought great credit to the Coast Guard.

I thought you would like to know that this opinion was expressed by a number of my friends.

Sincerely yours,

(s) H. A. Feldmann
Ex-Commander, USNR
Herman A. Feldmann
Manager - Public Relations

HAF:bc

COPY

P+P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Thompson

from: Mr. Murrow

June 28, 1956

As you know, I am a technical moron; but I know enough about what's involved in PERSON TO PERSON to realize that the crew at the Lighthouse last week did a superlative job. I am in their debt, and a lot of viewers are too.

You might like to know that almost without exception after those Friday night shows I get a letter from the guests we have visited speaking in superlatives about the conduct and behavior of the crews. It is one of the most pleasant aspects of working the show.

E.R.M.

rh

565

TO Mr. M.

FROM NiC

6/25

Just to remind you -

thank you note to technical crew that worked the lighthouse remote.

Note should be addressed to Tommy Thompson (Director of Technical Operations)

The Technical Director on remote was Lou Scannapieco.

CBS TELEVISION

A Division of Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

485 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 22, NEW YORK · PLAZA 1-2345

June 20, 1956

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
580 Park Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

We refer to the agreement between you and us dated as of September 10, 1947, as amended, and especially to our letter amendment dated May 5, 1955.

This will confirm that the sponsors of the "PERSON TO PERSON" television program series are taking a summer hiatus in the broadcasts thereof immediately following the broadcast of June 29, 1956, and that in accordance with said letter amendment, your summer leave of absence will be concurrent therewith. Resumption of broadcastong is presently scheduled for September 14, 1956.

Very truly yours,

CBS TELEVISION
A division of Columbia
Broadcasting System, Inc.

By

6
22
56

P & P

MEMBER

COSMOS TRAVEL BUREAU, INC.

45 WEST 45TH STREET • NEW YORK 36, N. Y. • TEL. CIRCLE 5-7711

GABRIEL REINER
PRESIDENT

June 16, 1956

CABLE ADDRESS
"COSMOTRAV NEWYORK"

RESERVATIONS
SHIP, PLANE
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC CRUISES AND TOURS

CAR PURCHASE CAR HIRE

INSURANCE
TRAVELERS CHECKS
FOREIGN EXCHANGE

Mr. Ed Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York City

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I enjoyed very much last Friday's broadcast with Tex and Jinx who are good friends of mine.

I am arranging Michael McCrary's trip to the Soviet Union and so many friends of yours are clients of ours.

As you know we managed to work out some arrangements with various travel organizations in the Soviet orbit area. We do get some results and we do hope that the trend will continue for greater and greater freedom for all people to move from one country to another.

It would indeed be a great honor if we ever could look after your own trip to the Soviet Union or anywhere else. You can ask Tex and Jinx about us.

With kindest regards,

Sincerely yours,

Gabriel Reiner

AGENTS AND CORRESPONDENTS IN MAJOR CITIES THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Hylan

from: Mr. Murrow

May 25, 1956

Regarding the proposed purchase of PERSON TO PERSON by Time and Life, there will be no change of any kind in the format or time allocation for commercials. We will continue the program and control all aspects of the show including selection of guests. There will be no collaboration with Time and Life on the matter of still pictures inside the homes of our guests. We will, obviously, not commit ourselves to tie-in or relate our guests with personalities who may be appearing in Life Magazine. The commercials will originate from a studio other than "42".

In short, we propose to control and operate the show as we have in the past and to give the same degree of cooperation we have given our sponsors in the past. The fact that Time and Life would be a potential sponsor should not entitle them to any preferred privileges or publicity before, during, or after the show.

E.R.M.

sh

565

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Ed

from: Jesse

May 23, 1956

Johnny and I talked with Frank Schaffner. He's delighted that we want to keep him on; is grateful for our efforts in his behalf and would consider the raise we talked about very ample.

He also assures us that under his present plans he contemplates no "conflicts" with other shows he may be doing.

50

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Ed

from: Jesse

May 23, 1956

Hearing no dissent we have granted duPont permission to do a take-off on PERSON TO PERSON before the Home Economics Association meeting in Washington.

50

P to P

May 18, 1956

Dear Sherman:

Belatedly, let me say I am sorry you couldn't make the date for PERSON TO PERSON. You caused us no inconvenience and the invitation is still open.

I am in your debt for the liquid refreshment you so graciously sent, and hope to stop by and say my thanks in person before long.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Sherman Billingsley
3 East 53 Street
New York, New York

rh

STORK CLUB
3E.53
March 9, 1956

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
580 Park Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Wanted to thank you for thinking of the Billingsley family in connection with your "Person to Person" T.V. Show, and tell you how very sorry I am that we will be unable to be a part of it, but as we explained to Mr. Aarons of your office, Mrs. Billingsley plans being out of town that weekend. You have my sincere apologies for the inconvenience we have caused you.

Having been a part of this business called Television, I am well aware of the problems which are created when people cancel, whether 24 hours ahead or a week ahead and I am sincerely sorry.

I do hope that you will bring Mrs. Murrow and come in to see us very soon. Again, many thanks for thinking of us.

Best regards,

Sherman Billingsley

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
200 Park Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Wanted to thank you for thinking of the Billingsley family in connection with your "Person to Person." I'm glad you liked it. Now very sorry I am that we will be unable to be a part of it, but as we explained to Mr. Barone of your office, Mrs. Billingsley has been being out of town that weekend. You have my sincere apologies for the inconvenience we have caused you.

Having been a part of this business called television, I am well aware of the problems which are created when people cancel. Whether Spencer Tracy or a deep sleep head are I am sincerely sorry.

I do hope that you will print Mrs. Murrow and come in to see us very soon. Again, many thanks for thinking of us.

Best Regards,

Norman Rockwell

Rec'd 4/27

March 3, 1960

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
200 Park Avenue
New York, New York

P40P

May 11, 1956

Dear Herb:

Many thanks for the kind words. I am grateful and will keep trying.

As ever yours,

Mr. Herbert Bayard Swope
745 Fifth Avenue
New York 22, New York

rh

HERBERT BAYARD SWOPE
745 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK 22, N.Y.

30 April 1956

Dear Ed Murrow, —

Your "Person-to-Person" - always good - was never better than this week's.

You weren't afraid of being high brow, and your courage carried your people with you.

Your shows were interesting and important.

Good luck,

Herbert Bayard Swope

Edward R. Murrow, Esq.
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N. Y.

EDWARD R. MURROW

P&P

OK
JA

May 9, 1956

Dear Phil:

You are a very thoughtful guy, and I am grateful for yours of April 27th. We will investigate the possibility of visiting Henry Viscardi.

Thanks again for the suggestion.

As ever yours,

Mr. Philip D. Reed
Chairman of the Board
General Electric Company
570 Lexington Avenue
New York 22, New York

rh

J. Aaron

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY
570 LEXINGTON AVE., NEW YORK 22, N.Y.

PHILIP D. REED
CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

April 27, 1956

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

Here is a suggestion that may or may not be of interest to you.

Yesterday I paid a visit to a little company known as Abilities, Inc., in West Hempstead, Long Island, whose president is Henry Viscardi, Jr. The company has 240 employees. It is engaged in manufacturing a variety of components, most of them requiring a high degree of skill, for such companies as Sperry Corporation, Dictograph, General Electric, etc. This work is let to them on a strictly competitive business basis and they have a splendid record of performance.

I am not going to describe Hank Viscardi or his company to you except to say that every single one of them suffers from a major physical disability, and the great majority of them would be considered unemployable. These people were determined to work and support themselves, and Hank Viscardi, himself born without legs, has shown them how to do it.

I enclose a reprint of some testimony he gave recently before a Senate committee in which he opposed a bill which would reduce to age 50 the eligibility of persons suffering from total and permanent disability to receive Social Security. He is just about the most articulate, dedicated and altogether delightful person I have met.

It occurs to me that you might like to consider him as a possible subject for one of your "Person to Person" programs. I can't imagine its being anything but a tremendous success. Hank Viscardi lives somewhere on Long Island, is married and has a family.

If this interests you and if I can be of any help, please let me know.

All the best to you, as always.

Sincerely,

Phil

PDR:HA

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communicati

to: Mr. Aaron

from: Mr. Murrow

April 30, 1956

I suggest something like this might solve the letters proposing politicians for PTP:

Dear _____:

Thank you for writing to suggest ------- as someone we might visit on PERSON TO PERSON. We have decided, for the time being at least, not to undertake visits to political candidates because were we to do so, the list might well become endless, and the contents of the program somewhat repetitious. We have the feeling, rightly or wrongly, there will be adequate opportunities for politicians to express their philosophy and point of view on other programs.

Thank you again for writing.

565

rh

E.R.M.

LOOK

COWLES MAGAZINES INC. Look Building, 488 Madison Ave., New York 22, N.Y., MUrray Hill 8-0300

S. O. SHAPIRO, Vice President

April 11, 1955

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

E.R.

Dear Ed:

Thanks from all of us for the attention you gave Milton Greene's covers for Look in the Monroe interview Friday night. It was most prestigious for us.

Warmest regards.

Sincerely,

My God!

P&P

APRIL 6, 1956

BARON AND BARONESS SILVERCRUYS
2300 FOXHALL ROAD
WASHINGTON, D.C.

DELIGHTED ~~XXXX~~ YOU ARE PERMITTING US TO VISIT YOU ON MAY 11th STOP AM OFF TO ALGERIA TOMORROW BUT HOPE TO SEE YOU AFTER I RETURN. BEST REGARDS.

EDWARD R. MURROW

~~XXXX~~

202-550-32

P&P

The NATIONAL SOCIETY for Crippled Children and Adults, Inc.

11 SO. LA SALLE ST., CHICAGO 3, ILL.

PHONE FRanklin 2-0390

Dean W. Roberts, M.D.
Executive Director

President Emeritus
William T. Sanger, Ph.D.
Richmond, Virginia

Immediate Past President
Edgar Kobak
New York, New York

Executive Committee

President
Theodore H. Wegener
Boise, Idaho

Vice-President
Tom B. Medders
Wichita Falls, Texas

Vice-President
Mrs. Bruce Schaefer
Toccoa, Georgia

Vice-President
Parker Trowbridge
Worcester, Massachusetts

Treasurer
Davis E. Geiger
Ashland, Kentucky

Lester E. Cox
Springfield, Missouri

Paul Dietrich
Los Angeles, California

Eli Gorodezky
Phoenix, Arizona

Malcolm Hecht
Baltimore, Maryland

James B. Johnson, M.D.
Newark, Ohio

John J. Lee, Ph.D.
Detroit, Michigan

Lawrence J. Linck
Hinsdale, Illinois

Mrs. James M. Skinner, Jr.
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Maurice Warshaw
Salt Lake City, Utah

Booker Worthen
Little Rock, Arkansas

Secretary
Miss Daisy Byler
Chicago, Illinois

April 3, 1956

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Ed Murrow:

Your telecast Friday night on PERSON TO PERSON in the visit to Governor and Mrs. Sherman Adams made the high-light of our Easter Seal campaign, and we are deeply grateful. The interpretation which it gave was beneficial to every Easter Seal Society across the nation.

When Governor Adams spun his flyer anecdote, I realized what was happening to your inspired idea of addressing contributions to "Sherman Adams, The White House", but I appreciated your thought immensely. In fact, every year since you returned from England, your help to crippled children and their Easter Seal appeal has strengthened our efforts and increased our returns.

It has been a privilege to have your help, and on the occasion of PERSON TO PERSON, the pleasant association with the members of your staff. Jesse Zousmer let me sit-in on the rehearsal at the Adams home, which was an amazing experience for me - amazing in the synchronization which a remote show demands.

For everything - our warm thanks go to you.

Sincerely,

Nena Badenoch

Nena W. Badenoch
Director, Television and Radio

NEW YORK OFFICE

NWB:gcr

REPLY:
NEW YORK OFFICE, 270 PARK AVENUE, NEW YORK 17, NEW YORK
Telephone: Plaza 1-1850

EASTER SEALS HELP CRIPPLED CHILDREN

P to P

WOMAN'S HOME

COMPANION

640 FIFTH AVENUE · NEW YORK 19, N.Y.
PLAZA 9-1000

OFFICE OF THE EDITOR

March 26, 1956

Z

Dear Ed:

Just a note to say that I very much appreciate your thoughtfulness in mentioning Woman's Home Companion so nicely the evening you visited Pearl Buck. I thought she came over beautifully and hope you think so too.

Best regards,

Woodrow

Woodrow Wirsig

P.S. Your report on the Arab-Israeli problem was superb.

Mr. Edward Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. P to P F. 502

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

To Dr. Stanton

From Mr. Murrow

Station

March 23, 1956

Regarding the letter from Bartlett, the Armed Forces Television Service is now receiving the PERSON TO PERSON kinescopes from Elgin. We are told that within a few weeks Rhein-Main Airbase and Fort Richardson will be serviced regularly.

Aside from this, I would prefer to stay with the no-kinescope policy since we find this helps us considerably in securing guests.

E.R.M.

rh

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: MR. MURROW cc Messrs. Van Volkenburg, Hardy

from: Dr. Stanton

March 9, 1956

I am familiar with your policy regarding PERSON TO PERSON TVR's. But before I respond to E. L. Bartlett's March 5 letter, I would like to ask if you want to make an exception in the case of Alaska.

FS

FRANK STANTON

WW

P&P

CHICAGO
SUN-TIMES
211 West Wacker Drive, Chicago 6, Illinois

ANdover 3-4800

Feb. 13, 1956

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS Television
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Ed,

Congratulations on your splendid Friday night show. Ralph Newman's appearance is still the talk of the town and I personally thought the visit to the bookshop was excellent.

I'm inclosing a clipping of the column I thought you would find of interest. With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Irv Kupcinet

IK:jk

KUP'S COLUMN

KUPCINET

Memo to Dave Garroway: Chicago pals, who knew you when, are blowing their stacks over your Satevepost article, "I Lead a Goofy Life." "So 'goofy,'" they're asking, "as to ignore completely any mention of the late W. (Biggie) Levin, your personal manager who steered you from a local deejay to network fame and fortune?" . . . The State Lake Building, one of the Loop's landmarks, will get a new name after WBKB moves its TV studios there next year. It'll become the American Broadcasting Co. (ABC) Building. . . . Valentines to 39-year-old Jack Benny, who celebrates his 62d birthday Tuesday.

hair, even though gentlemen reportedly prefer blondes.

RALPH BELLAMY, A PUMP ROOM visitor the other day, was heading for Hollywood to discuss a new TV series. "But not another Mike Barnet," Bellamy bellowed. "No more cops and robbers for me." . . . Israeli Ambassador Abba Eban checks into the Edgewater Monday for a two-day stay. He'll be a guest lecturer at NU. . . . The florists of America have adopted Frankie Sinatra's latest tune as their theme: "Flowers Mean Forgiveness." (But why did you forget in the first place?) . . . Hollywood furrier Al Teitelbaum is on top of the news. His latest mink is called "Monaco blue" in honor of guess who. It'll be on display at Sheridan Art Galleries next Monday.

MARGUERITE PIAZZA

ON ED MURROW'S Person to Person Friday night you were escorted on a visit to the bar of the Civil War Books Club, where Lincoln scholar Ralph Newman displayed a number of drinking glasses bearing the names of prominent persons who are Civil War students. Among these was the name Adlai Stevenson. In rehearsal earlier that day, Murrow asked Newman on their closed circuit hookup: "You sure you want to display that glass bearing Adlai Stevenson's name?" "Yes," was the reply. "OK with me," said Murrow. "But I am sure Vice President Nixon will demand equal glass time."

P40P

JANUARY 10, 1956

MR. ARTHUR LUND
CAMPBELL-MITHUN, INC.
1300 NORTHWESTERN BANK BUILDING
MINNEAPOLIS 2, MINNESOTA

CAN DO FTOOE INTERVIEW ANY FRIDAY NIGHT EXCEPT FEBRUARY 3. SAY WHEN.

ED MURROW

58-032

cc: Mr. Zousmer, plus correspondence

SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY SYRACUSE 10, NEW YORK

SCHOOL OF JOURNALISM - Office of the Dean

P&P

December 19, 1955

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

May I commend you for the sharpness of your questioning on your "Person To Person" TV broadcast last Friday and, of course, let me thank you for the compliment which you extracted from young George Lyons. I don't suppose anything has resulted in more telephone calls to me.

As a kind of honorary alumnus of the School, you may be interested in the Journalism Banquet which we held this fall. I enclose a program. It was a memorable occasion since Dewitt and Lila Acheson Wallace received the Journalism Medal. Mr. Wallace made his first speech in 34 years.

Sincerely,

W. C. Clark
Dean.

wcc:fk
enc.

Annual Banquet

SCHOOL OF JOURNALISM
SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY

October 27, 1955

SHAW DINING HALL

Distinguished Service Medal Awards

1936 to 1955

1936	FREDERIC W. GOUDY
1944	HANSON WEIGHTMAN BALDWIN
1944	WATSON DAVIS
1944	GEORGE HORACE GALLUP
1944	EDWARD R. MURROW
1946	HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE
1946	JOHN SHIVELY KNIGHT
1946	ALFRED B. STANFORD
1948	DREW PEARSON
1948	J. HENRY HOLLOWAY
1949	GEORGE VENABLE ALLEN
1949	DONALD DOWELL BELDING
1949	NEIL HOPPER BORDEN
1949	LEE HASTINGS BRISTOL
1949	GERALD W. CUNNINGHAM
1950	FRANK GANNETT
1950	PRINTERS INK
1950	METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
1951	ROBERT McLEAN
1951	M. LYLE SPENCER
1951	THOMAS D'ARCY BROPHY
1951	JAMES WEBB YOUNG
1952	ALEXANDER A. JONES
1952	FAIRFAX M. CONE
1953	BERNARD C. DUFFY
1954	ADVERTISING COUNCIL OF AMERICA
1955	WESLEY I. NUNN
1955	LILA ACHESON WALLACE
1955	DEWITT WALLACE

Program

October 27, 1955

Invocation

Announcement of Student Awards

Presentation of the Daily Orange Creed written by Irving Templeton, first Daily Orange editor

DEAN EMERITUS M. LYLE SPENCER

Presentation of the first Borden Foundation Scholarship in Journalism

JOHN H. McCAIN
Vice President of the Borden Company Foundation

Presentation of the Distinguished Service Medal of the School of Journalism

DEAN WESLEY C. CLARK

Acceptance

WESLEY I. NUNN
President of the Advertising Federation of America

Presentation of Distinguished Service Medals of the School of Journalism

DEAN CLARK

Acceptance

DEWITT WALLACE and LILA ACHESON WALLACE

Benediction

Chicago Daily Tribune
Revere Patriot
"BORN
Two Manual For 50 Press
The Publishers' Auxiliary
NEA Announces Speaker For Annual Fall Meeting PHOTOGRAPH BROAD
TELE
PUBLIC RELATIONS JOURNAL
SYRACUSE HERALD-JOURNAL
Torrential Rains Swamp Chicago Area
Coffee Trade Curb, Pr
Laid to New York
1,743 Emplo
Editor & Publisher
20 Cents
THE CHRISTIAN
Dixie
American Printe
Herald
NEW YORK Tribune
THE CHURCH MESSENGER
Magazine Industry
MAGAZINES FOR THE MILLIONS
Home Town
The Inland Printer
Stet
THE POST-STANDARD
Harriman Raps Ives
Collier's
PRESBYTERIAN LIFE
Dwellers

Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. Person to Person F-502

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

To Mr. Seward

From Mr. Murrow

Station

November 9, 1955

Re the attached memorandum: I think the payments are entirely in order.

E.R.M.

Payments for Aaron Erlich

P to P

JESS RAND

PUBLICITY - PUBLIC RELATIONS

292 S. LA CIENEGA BOULEVARD - BEVERLY HILLS, CALIF. - OLYMPIA 2-0944

November 7th 1955

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Trust this note finds you in the best of health and spirits.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank you and the members of your staff for the privilege of having my client, Sammy Davis, Jr., appear on PERSON TO PERSON. Needless to say, it was a thrill for all concerned. Sammy's grandmother still hasn't stopped talking about the dozen roses you sent her. I trust that our handling of the show on this end met with your expectations.

On my next visit to New York I am sure that the Yankees will not be playing the Brooklyn Dodgers and so it may be possible for you and I to chat for a few minutes. On my last visit to your office, you were straddling a chair and sadly viewing the second game of the series. I being a Yankee fan and you, as I know, a Dodger fan - - well, we decided that this would be a most inopportune time to talk. Just wait till next year!

With kindest personal regards.

Sincerely,

Jess Rand

Jess Rand

JR:m

P&P

Rinehart & COMPANY · INCORPORATED
Publishers

232 MADISON AVENUE · NEW YORK 16 · N. Y.

October 11, 1955

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am sure you are overwhelmed by people such as myself offering suggestions for interviewing their clients on "Person-to-Person," but I am writing at this time since I understand there has been some discussion in the past about the possibility of doing a telecast with Morris L. Ernst.

As you may know, we will publish Mr. Ernst's new book, UTOPIA 1976, November 3 and I have sent an advance copy under separate cover. If there is a plan to use Mr. Ernst on the program, you may be sure we will be willing to co-operate in every way.

Sincerely yours,

Patricia Newell

Patricia Newell
Publicity Director

PNrvbm

Ex Fx1 P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: JZ

from: MOORE 9/14/55

Phoned Ethel Merman this aft. Said she was astounded with the great reaction on the show. They've received over 200 letters from people, not friends, saying, "Just wanted to let you know how nice it was visiting with you Friday night." Said it was nice hearing from people "who didn't want something".

Another thing, Bob Six has been flooded with applications from girls who want to be airline hostesses.

He, Bob, came to N.Y. Sunday on business. Riding up the elevator in the hotel, operator said, "Gee, Mr. Six, that steak sure looked good Friday night. I'd like to've had some of it."

Read her the review in Variety. She mighty pleased.

Box
Rec 418

P&P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Ed

from: Jesse

It seems General Taylor's work schedule has caught up with him and his aides are looking for a way to relax his schedule. On your behalf I agreed to the following program for Tuesday night, October 11.

They'll send a car for us to WTOP. It's a half hour drive to Fort Myer. We will have a half hour to get a bite and meet the General at his quarters with Mrs. Taylor at 9 PM.

I'm politely informed that he usually retires at 10:30, but I'm sure we can stay later if we get him started.

By the time we go down I will have a full backgrounder on him and what he has been saying in his speeches around the country lately.

Pub. Bus. Prop

CBS RADIO

Office Communication

to: Mr. Van Volkenburg

from: Mr. Seward

September 2, 1955

This is to remind you of the telephone conversation we had this morning regarding the income from the sale of PERSON TO PERSON on a co-op basis on alternate weeks in some fourteen cities.

I should like to confirm to Mr. Murrow that the income therefrom will be subject to the same split -- as between CTD and PERSON TO PERSON -- as the income from the network sponsor. I should also appreciate your letting me know the amount of such income for the 1954-1955 season and the outlook for the 1955-1956 season.

J. M. S.

jms/ms

BC: Mr. Murrow

Jack explained that he had authorized this co-op sale some time ago as a means of holding the stations. In addition to following up on the above, I will look into the character of the individual local sponsorships as soon as I return from Lake Placid.

Jim

Person to Person

August 31, 1955

Dear George:

Many thanks for your interesting letter of August 25. We shall start investigating your useful suggestions immediately. The small bounce in Yakima was interesting. The crew and stewardess were very steady indeed; and after the affair, when on television, I tried to do my small bit for Northwest in the area of public relations.

You will be interested to know that we are already working on the possibility of visiting Dr. Mayo. Again, my best thanks.

As ever yours,

Mr. George E. Masters
Director of Public Relations
Northwest Airlines, Inc.
1885 University Avenue
Saint Paul 1, Minnesota

rh

NORTHWEST AIRLINES INC.

1885 University Avenue

SAINT PAUL 1, MINNESOTA

August 25, 1955

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

On your recent trip to Oregon you mentioned you wanted some ideas for "Person to Person" shows that could originate in the midwest. Here goes:

The Rev. Harold Wilke, armless Lutheran (I believe he's an Evangelical Lutheran) of 13325 East Bagley Road, Cleveland, 30, Ohio. Though armless since birth when it was necessary to amputate both arms at the shoulder, he served as a chaplain in World War II, helping restore morale for disabled veterans. Had a church in Chicago before being transferred to Cleveland. Drives a car. Married and I believe has one child. Unusually brilliant and inspiring. In his 30s.

John S. Pillsbury, chairman of the board of the Pillsbury company. An outstanding business leader. Has a beautiful home. Adress is Crystal Bay, Lake Minnetonka, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dr. Charles Mayo of the Mayo Clinic. Striking personality. Address is Rochester, Minnesota.

Margaret Culkin Banning, Duluth, Minn., author, with whom you are familiar. She is the wife of Leroy Salsich, chairman of the board of Oliver Mining Co.

Lee and Les Smith, twin brothers who are pilots for Northwest Airlines, flying Stratocruisers. They farm in their spare hours and specialize in raising blooded horses. Address is either care of NWA or Rosemount, Minn. Photo enclosed, also recent magazine story. Both have been flying for NWA about 25 years.

Capt. Walter Bullock, temporarily based in Tokyo, where he is a pilot for Northwest Airlines. He has been flying since 1916. Good personality. Built his own "pusher" plane, photo of which is enclosed. Has farm at Lakeville, Minn. Can be reached through us. Clipping from Christian Science Monitor gives you some background.

James Ford Bell, Sr., chairman of the board of General Mills. Address is Minneapolis. Book collector. Good speaker and outstanding personality.

Maybe one of these may have some interest for you.

In closing just want you to know how upset we were that you were aboard the DC3 that took the bounce in Washington. Had hoped to see you when you went through here but was called out of the city. To say the least, you have several rain checks for a few snifters.

Sincerely,

George

George E. Masters
Director of Public Relations

EMERGY
709
COMPASS LIGHTS RESERVED
RESERVED
OIL COOLER FLAPS
INTERCOOLER FLAPS

Capts. Lee (left) and Les Smith

Please Credit
NORTHWEST Orient AIRLINES
Photo
Public Relations Dept.

Please Credit
NORTHWEST ORIENT AIRLINES
Photo
Robert R. Blanch Photography
301 Times Annex Neg. No. 2-1289

FC

2665

Lee and Les Smith

Please Credit
NORTHWEST Orient AIRLINES
Photo
Public Relations Dept.

29

Capt Wall Bullock
with Jim Wheeler of Shell Oil Company

Don Berg
Minneapolis 4, Minn.
MAin 2385
advertising photography
NEG. NO. 7/6 73-5
reorder by this No.

CAUTION
GASOLINE AREA

WALT BULLOCK
AND HIS CURTISS PUSHER REPLICA

Please Credit
NORTHWEST ORIENT AIRLINES
Photo
Robert R. Blanch Photography
801 Times Annex Neg. No. 5064

NORTHWEST
N

WALT BULLOCK

-o-

THE PLANE HE FLIES FOR A HOBBY AND THE PLANE HE FLIES FOR A LIVING

Please Credit
NORTHWEST ORIENT AIRLINES
Photo
Robert R. Blanch Photography
301 Times Annex Neg. No. 5008

Capt Wall Bullock
Takeoff
From Farm Runway

Don Berg
Minneapolis 4, Minn.
MAin 2385
advertising photography
NEG. NO. 78100
reorder by this No.

Lee and Les Smith...50 Years With NWA!

One of Aviation's most remarkable careers belongs to Northwest's famed identical twin pilot team, Capts. Lee (left) and Les Smith, who recently marked a half-century with NWA. See: Smith Brothers Still Flying High! Page 5.

NORTHWEST AIRLINES NEWS

MAY • 1955 Vol. 12 • No. 5

Prizes for Best Pictures . . .

Advertising Announces Employee Photo Contest

Here's a chance for Northwest employees who are camera addicts to put their talents to work and perhaps earn a few extra dollars doing it:

The Advertising Department, in response to a Suggestion Award Plan suggestion by Alex Igyarto, cargo sales representative in New York, is sponsoring a huge new Employee Photo Contest to obtain pictures suitable for reproduction on such things as calendars and Sales Department brochures. Pictures also will be used by Public Relations with news releases produced by that department.

For his suggestion Igyarto was awarded $25 by the Suggestion Award Plan committee. The suggestion will be re-evaluated at a later date.

Advertising is looking primarily for unusual scenic pictures taken along Northwest's domestic and international route system and in territory considered to be in Northwest's "trade area," such as Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Pictures should have emphasis on scenery, not people. If people do appear, they should be a secondary factor to the overall picture.

Pictures with Northwest identification in them, such as an NWA plane in the background, and pictures featuring Northwest planes, also will be considered.

Separate awards will be made for color pictures and for black-and-white pictures. Negatives may be of any size.

First prize in the color picture category will be $50. Black-and-white first prize will be $25. Awards of $10 for color and $5 for black-and-whites will be made for all pictures kept by the Advertising Department.

Here are complete rules:

THE ADVERTISING Department Picture Contest is open to all employees, domestic and international.

THE CONTEST will run from May 1 through July 31.

WINNERS will be announced on or about August 15.

SEND ENTRIES to: Picture Contest Editor, Advertising Department, GO, either by company mail or first class mail.

PEOPLE WHO are recognizable in pictures must be available to sign publicity release forms.

NEGATIVES must be submitted with pictures. Polaroid camera pictures are unacceptable.

DECISIONS of the judges will be final.

ENTRIES submitted must be the property of employees who submit them.

NEGATIVES of winning pictures will become the property of Northwest Airlines, Inc.

Advertising will return all pictures not adjudged winners to employees submitting them. Duplicate negatives of winning pictures will be made and will be given to employees submitting winning entries.

—Bud Morgan

"We are continually on the lookout for good and unusual pictures for use in our sales promotion program," says J. W. Mariner, Sales vice president. "Because photography is such a prominent hobby and because so many Northwest employees travel extensively, we feel many of you may have pictures which can be put to good use."

Names of contest winners, along with their winning entries, will be published in a future issue of the NEWS.

CONGRATULATIONS to NWA for winning a "Paul Bunyan" award for the second straight year were extended, recently, by Joseph Sjursen, right, Seattle Chamber of Commerce Paul Bunyan Award chairman, to Bill Pollock (left), W. R. Public Relations and Tom Marshall, SEA DSM. Paul Bunyan awards go yearly to business firms for "excellence of year-around advertising and publicity programs featuring Seattle." Award is given by the Seattle Chamber. Northwest won Paul Bunyan awards the past two years on the basis of advertisements featuring Seattle NWA has run in papers throughout the U. S. and the Orient, publicity releases and pictures featuring Seattle and travel folders featuring Seattle and the Pacific Northwest.

Newly-Created Sales Position Goes to Veteran Bert Talbot

B. J. Talbot, veteran sales specialist with the airline, whose experience in the company has extended from London to Manila, has been named to a newly created position with Northwest Orient Airlines, James W. Mariner, vice president-sales, announced today.

B. J. Talbot

He is being made director of sales development, with headquarters in the company general offices. Until this appointment, he was district sales manager at New York.

Talbot, a native of St. Paul, is a graduate of St. Thomas College in that city. He joined Northwest Orient Airlines September 9, 1940, as passenger agent at Chicago.

He was named district sales manager at Manila April 1, 1947; sales manager for the Philippines January 15, 1948; European director, with headquarters in London, August 1, 1950; Hawaii sales manager October 16, 1950; and district sales manager at New York January 1, 1953.

Talbot opened Northwest's sales office in Manila in 1947 and was one of the founders of the Philippine Junior Chamber of Commerce. One of the first projects of the Philippine Jaycees was the "Clean Up Manila Campaign," after World War II.

Orchids for NWA Flight To Honolulu

Northwest Airlines
Seattle-Tacoma Airport
Seattle 88, Washington

Gentlemen:

It gives me a great deal of pleasure to let you know how much Mrs. D. and I enjoyed our recent trip to Hawaii via your service. Every courtesy was extended us by your Mr. Ploof and Mr. Norheim at Tacoma, as well as your Mr. Cato Wray, at Honolulu. In addition, your planes were very comfortable, the food excellent, and while en route everything was done for us by the members of the crew to make the trip most enjoyable.

We also want to thank you for the enlarged picture taken on our arrival at Honolulu, which, incidentally, appeared in the Tacoma News-Tribune.

We are certainly planning another trip to the Islands and you may rest assured we will go Northwest Airlines.

Sincerely,
R.D.
Tacoma

Mademoiselle Article Leads Off NWA 'Promote Hawaii' Program

In line with its avowed policy to promote Hawaii, Northwest Orient Airlines cooperated with one of America's leading fashion magazines, Mademoiselle Magazine, to produce an extensive fashion layout in its April issue, now on the newsstand.

Northwest arranged for the project with Mademoiselle, flying its editor, Edie Raymond, its fashion photographer, Hermann Landshoff, and two models to the Islands, recently. They were accompanied by Phyllis Haggerty, of NWA's New York PR office.

During a two-week stay they visited Oahu and Kauai "on location," with the cooperation of the Hawaii Visitors Bureau.

Pictures in Mademoiselle, in color and black-and-white, include an Oahu tropical forest, sugar plantation, Waikiki Beach, the Royal Hawaiian Hotel, Kewalo Basin, Iolani Palace, the First Chinese Church of Christ and Don the Beachcomber's.

On Kauai, the group photographed Coco-Palm Lodge, a lauhaula weaver, bamboo forest, black lava rocks and a net fisherman.

FUTURE PLANS for promoting Hawaii are formulated by, from the left, R. G. Collins, NWA General Sales Manager, Bill Cogswell, Executive Director of the Hawaii Visitors Bureau, and Margaret McEachern, NWA Public Relations Department Travel Editor. The three conferred in Honolulu, recently, as Northwest announced plans for a sustained "promote Hawaii" program in cities along its domestic route system.

During coming years, a large portion of Northwest's sales promotional activity and publicity activity will be directed toward promoting Hawaii as a vacationland.

"This is a natural outgrowth of the fact that Hawaii is the only year-around warm weather vacation area on Northwest's route system, excepting parts of the Orient," according to J. W. Mariner, Sales vice president.

Northwest will promote Hawaii through newspaper, radio, magazine and television advertising, with publicity releases and by direct mail pieces, window displays and special promotions.

R. G. Collins, NWA general sales manager, and Margaret McEachern, PR's travel editor (see picture), recently returned from the Islands where they laid groundwork with the Hawaii Visitors Bureau for Northwest's promotional program.

Northwest was the first airline to receive Civil Aeronautics Board permission to link Hawaii with the Pacific Northwest gateway of Portland-Tacoma-Seattle.

TITLE PAGE of Hawaii fashion section in April issue of Mademoiselle Magazine, featuring Northwest Orient Airlines, is reproduced above. Photo by Hermann Landshoff, courtesy of Mademoiselle.

NORTHWEST AIRLINES NEWS

Northwest Airlines, Inc.
1885 University Ave.
St. Paul, Minn., USA
Printed in U.S.A.

The Northwest Airlines News is published monthly by the Public Relations Department for employees of Northwest Orient Airlines. All employees are invited to submit contributions or suggestions to News Correspondents at their stations or directly to the News Editor, Public Relations Department, General Office.

George E. Masters
Director of Public Relations

Public Relations Staff
Twin Cities
M. L. Putnam
Milt Davis
Margaret McEachern
Robert L. Johnson
Reynold Malmer
Chicago
Ford Eastman
Seattle
William L. Pollock
New York
Phyllis Haggerty

KEITH SAUNDERS, Managing Editor of American Aviation Daily, is shown with his wife on arrival in Honolulu aboard an NWA plane, recently. Not pictured is their daughter, Judie.

NWAers List . . .
Vacation Time Is Here Again!
. . . Favorite Spots

How do you plan to spend your vacation this year?

This was the question asked of several NWAers as soft and balmy breezes began wafting their thoughts toward that favorite lake or "place I'd like to see."

JIM HENDRICKSON, master mechanic, STP—"I usually go up to Detroit Lakes. My brother has a cottage up there so we usually do some fishing. We'll also probably go to Fargo to visit relatives."

MARGE SHAW, secretary to L. S. Holstad, comptroller, GO—I really don't have my vacation planned, but I do know I'll probably spend it at some resort."

WALLY PETERSON, assistant to insurance manager, GO—"I hope to go fishing up in Canada and maybe take a canoe trip into the canoe country up around Ely."

GORDY BARTSH, pilot—"I just got back from my vacation. My wife and two children and I spent 10 days at Fort Lauderdale, Florida, just lying on the beach and swimming."

SAM AZZARELLO, general inspector, STP—"I'm really going to spend an unusual vacation. I'm going to stay at home. Probably dig for uranium or flowers."

FLOYD HOMSTAD, pilot—"I may go over to Honolulu next November when I'll most likely take my vacation. You can't beat Honolulu for a vacation."

GEORGIA HALVORSON, stewardess—"I just started with Northwest, but a year from now, I'd like to take my mother to Mexico. She's always wanted to go there."

VERNA KIRCHNER, secretary to Sam Wyman, manager, passenger service, GO—"I'd like to go to a lake where I could just swim and boat, but mostly just lie on the beach."

HAROLD HODGSON, mechanical foreman, STP—"During the last week in July, my wife and boy and I are leaving on a month-long vacation trip covering about 8,000 miles. We're going to really see the whole west."

Malmer Added to NWA Public Relations Staff

Reynold W. Malmer, formerly associated with the Public Relations staff of the Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co., St. Paul, joined the PR staff of Northwest Orient Airlines in April.

Malmer

Before coming to St. Paul, Rey worked as a news reporter-photographer on the Mankato (Minn.) Free Press. While there he served as publicity chairman for several civic and fraternal organizations.

He attended Winthrop (Minn.) public schools and is a graduate of the University of Minnesota School of Journalism.

MARGARET KINGDOM, Instrument Shop master mechanic, STP, receives a Suggestion-Award check for $440 from Carl Magnuson, left, Power Plant and Accessory Overhaul superintendent, as Manfred Boe, Instrument Shop mechanical supervisor, watches. Margaret's $440 for two suggestions was top money in the latest Suggestion-Award listing.

Margaret Kingdom's $440 Tops Latest Award Winners

Margaret Kingdom, who worked in the composing room of various newspapers as type setter, linotype operator and foreman before coming to Northwest Orient Airlines a dozen years ago, has just made a couple of ideas add up to $440.

As a master mechanic in the instrument shop at STP, she suggested improved installations in the Turbo Constellations. One, referring to a gyro horizon indicator, was cashed in for $250; the other, referring to a turn and bank indicator, paid off at $190.

Searle F. (Sy) Stewart, record analyst, GO, received $100 for a tax saving suggestion. Arthur J. Johnson, crew chief, STP, received a like sum for a suggestion covering silver plating savings.

George T. Burda, master mechanic, STP, received $50 for a suggestion regarding the repair of burned motors.

Others receiving Suggestion-Award money under latest listings were:

STP—Leon A. Kamerud, $5; Donald W. Carlson, $10; John M. Vik, $10; Fred Priesnitz, $20; Lloyd W. Meehl, $15; J. R. McLaughlin, $25; Walter W. Keller, $5 and another award of $5; George E. Becker and Ray Damon, $25 each; Lyle E. Canedy, $5; John H. Shanks and Cecil Iffert, $10 each; Arthur Pojar, $10; John A. Rice, $10; John Shoefstall, $20 and John H. Swedahl, $30.

MSP—Robert L. Eickhold, $15. CLE—Clifford A. Sargent, $5; also another award of $5. SEA—M. E. Baker, $10; J. A. Anderson, $10. GO—Blanche Wagner, $5.

T-C Golf Tourney Slated at Gall's Saturday, May 21

Northwest's first Twin Cities Golf Tournament and Spring Frolic will be staged at Gall's Country Club, North St. Paul, Saturday, May 21.

Entry blanks have been distributed to Golf Committee members at STP, MSP, GO and GOA and are available from them. Signs have been posted announcing Golf Committee members.

Dinner and golf tickets are $3.75 each. Golf only is $1.75; dinner only, $2.00. Employes are urged to wear Aloha shirts or other colorful attire.

Confirmed duffers and women golfers are being especially encouraged to enter this year's tourney. There is a need, too, for women scorekeepers. They can sign up with any Golf Committeeman.

Prize awards to all kinds of golfers, dinner and dancing will highlight post-golf festivities.

It is anticipated that a second Twin Cities golf tourney will be held in September of this year, similar to the tournament held at Forest Lake last September.

Half-Century with Northwest . . .

Smith Brothers Still Flying High!

By Bob Johnson

A couple of remarkable people paused the other day to reflect on one of commercial aviation's truly remarkable careers.

The people are Northwest's famous identical twins—Captains Lee and Les Smith. Their career is one that has spanned a half-century in aviation—all with Northwest Orient Airlines.

Lee, 20 minutes younger than his "older" brother, joined Northwest July 1, 1929. He's currently No. 2 on the pilot seniority list. Les, No. 5 in pilot seniority, joined the airline March 1, 1930. Together they have racked up more than 40,000 flying hours!

Lest anyone gets any funny ideas, the Smith Brothers are emphatic on one point. "Flying is the greatest thing in the world," says Les. "We'll be at it for a long, long time."

LEE, left, and Les pose with Plainsman, one of their prize-winning horses. Both are expert horsemen.

Capts. C. L. "Les" Smith and R. L. "Lee" Smith were born on a farm near Sanborn, Iowa, 47 years ago. Later, with their parents, they moved to Minneapolis. They are younger brothers of another famous Northwest pilot, Chad Smith, who died in 1931 following an appendix operation. It was through Chad's interest in flying that Lee and Les developed their interest.

"Our earliest ambition," Lee remembers, "was to fly with Northwest. We never wanted to do anything else."

"Les and I sank our life savings—$850—into an old World War I Curtiss Jenny and Chad taught us to fly it. That was back about 1926. He'd barnstorm on weekends to make expenses. On weekdays, he gave Les and me instruction."

Lee got his pilot's license in 1928; Les got his the following year. Les now has 22,000 flying hours; Lee has 18,000, a total smaller than his older brother's because of the six years, from 1942 to 1948, he spent as NWA operations manager and Eastern Region vice president.

Since joining the airline, Lee and Les have flown every type of equipment operated by Northwest, from the Waco night mail planes to the Boeings. Lee flew the first night mail from Chicago to the Twin Cities, making the return trip after "Deke" DeLong brought the plane to Chicago.

IN OCTOBER, 1951, Northwest inaugurated Boeing Stratocruiser service to Washington, D. C., in conjunction with the airline's 25th Anniversary celebration. Lee and Les skippered the first DCA Boeing flight and another set of twins, Beverly and Marvyl Brady, were the stewardesses. Above, they sample Northwest's 25th Anniversary birthday cake with Vice President and Mrs. Alben Barkley. The Veep boarded the flight at MSP.

The Smiths have no overall philosophy about flying, except, as Les said, that it's "the greatest thing in the world."

"We take each trip as it comes along and handle each problem as it arises."

"It's almost a miracle," says Lee, "how flying has improved the last two decades. It's the safest thing in the world. The airplanes, the engines, the navigational aids—everything about flying—gets better and better."

"I've got only one scar on my body," says Les. "That was from an automobile accident. I smashed my forehead on a Model T windshield in 1921."

Identical is the word for the tall, lean and keen-eyed Smith Brothers. Not only do they look exactly alike and display the same mannerisms, but they're both six feet and both weigh 160 pounds. "We even borrow each other's uniforms," Lee confided, "when our own aren't pressed." Both fly the same schedule, though on different days.

Both are family men and they live in separate houses on "Sky Acres," their 360-acre farm at Rosemount, Minn. "Naturally, we can't farm full time," says Les. "We do what we want to do and hire help to do the rest."

Lee and Les hunt and fish together, but the hobby closest to their hearts is horse raising. They've owned more than 50 horses and have exhibited many of them at horse shows from coast-to-coast.

One of their best, "Plainsman," had a rather picturesque background. The Smiths first saw him as a wild horse on the Montana prairie and were impressed by the nimble manner in which he jumped culverts, fences and ditches in eluding cow hands who were trying to round him up.

Plainsman finally was cornered. The Smith Brothers bought him and carted him back to Rosemount in a trailer. After three months' training, he was ready. In his first show appearance, he won every event in which he was entered. In 1948, Plainsman won seven of eight open classes at the Oak Brook Olympic trials.

Les has two boys, both fliers, naturally. Noel, 24, is a Navy J.G. Lieutenant, flying anti-submarine duty out of Atlantic City. Robert, 21, is now undergoing U. S. Air Force flying instruction in Georgia. Lee has three boys and a girl, ranging in age from 16 to five. The boys "aren't quite sure yet" whether or not they want to be fliers.

Looking back on 50 years in aviation, the Smiths were asked, if they had it to do over again, what changes they'd make.

"Not one," they echoed. "We'd do the same thing. Right now, we're really looking forward to getting a crack at those commercial jets!"

DURING WORLD WAR II, Les, left, and Jerry Thompson, were two of Northwest's pilots who ferried C-46 cargo planes from Wilmington, Del., to a small town north of Calcutta, India, for the Air Transport Command. Above, Les and Jerry are greeted on arrival back in the Twin Cities by Lee, who was at that time Operations Manager for Northwest.

INAUGURATED JUNE 1, 1945:

NWA Coast-to-Coast Service 10 yrs. Old!

At 8:30 a.m., June 1, 1945, a DC-3 piloted by Capt. Mel Swanson left the La Guardia Field runway at New York City, climbed into the morning sky and turned its nose westward, toward Portland and Seattle. At the same moment, far to the west, another NWA DC-3, with Capt. Earl Hale at the controls, was speeding eastward.

The two planes passed each other west of Detroit. A vision which had been sought for six long years became a reality. Northwest became the Nation's fourth transcontinental airline.

In the decade that has ensued, Northwest has built up its transcontinental service to the point where there is none better. New schedules include both one-stop Boeing Stratocruiser service from IDL to PDX, and one-stop DC-6B air tourist service from IDL to SEA.

ABOVE: Portland Rose Queen Joan Williams, with her attendants, presents bouquet of roses to Stewardess Vi Cochran for delivery to New York's Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia on NWA's first eastbound transcontinental flight.

•

CENTER: At New York, Croil Hunter discusses christening plans with Miss Alma Kaye, star of "Sing Out, Sweet Land," who swished champagne over DC-3 that made first westbound transcontinental flight.

•

RIGHT: At the Twin Cities, Paul Schutte, left, and Matt Thompson, St. Paul Association of Commerce, right, present first-flight mementos for Mayor LaGuardia to Co-pilot Jerry Kilian, Stewardess Louise Rudquist and Captain Curt Davis.

A HOBBY has a pleasantly insidious way of sneaking up on you. That's a discovery of Mickie Fiksdal, NWA's Chief Stewardess. Mickie acquired a pretty glass slipper back in 1939. Today, settling in a new home in MSP, she discovered she has a collection of shoes and slippers running into the hundreds that demands a special room for display purposes. Her collection ranges from miniatures small enough to fit onto a fingernail to others large enough to serve as plant holders. They're made of spun glass, porcelain, pottery, leather, gold, silver, bronze, wood, straw, fabric and leather. Some of the shoes Mickie has found for herself in curio shops across the U. S. and in the Orient, Alaska and Hawaii. Others have been gifts, many from stewardesses and pilots who know of her hobby. Mickie has been with NWA since 1946.—M.McE.

New Offline Sales Offices Opened in Atlanta, Dallas

Northwest Orient Airlines will further develop passenger and cargo potentials through the recent opening of off-line district sales offices in two key Southern areas, James W. Mariner, vice president-Sales, said last week.

One new office is located in Dallas, Texas, with Robert E. Nice as district sales manager. The other is in Atlanta, Ga., with Royel E. Vreeland as district sales manager. Both men have had extensive sales experience with Northwest Orient Airlines.

Nice

The Dallas office, located in the Southland Building annex, 209 Brawder street, was opened April 18. It serves Texas and Oklahoma, formerly part of the Minneapolis-St.Paul district; and Arkansas and Louisiana, formerly assigned to the Chicago district.

The Atlanta office, located in the Atlanta Journal building, was opened May 1. Comprising this district are Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and Florida, formerly assigned to the Chicago district.

Both Dallas and Atlanta have originated thousands of dollars worth of business for Northwest, Mariner explained. It is expected that the volume will increase sharply as more attention is concentrated on the areas. Nice joined Northwest Orient Airlines in 1946 as a transportation agent at Minneapolis. He was serving as assistant district sales manager at Seattle before his Dallas appointment. Vreeland, a veteran of 10 years with NWA, began as a Chicago transportation agent and most recently was senior sales representative at CHI.

Vreeland

Connies now on Interchange . . .

Eastern Boasts Pioneering Past

A further improvement in the four-month-old Eastern-NWA interchange between the Twin Cities and Miami went into effect April 24 with the inauguration of two daily flights between the two points.

The increased service consists of one first class and one air coach flight daily—the latter flight being the one newly instituted.

With the stepped-up spring and summer schedule, Northwest's Stratocruisers, used on the interchange the past four months, have been replaced by EAL turbo-compound Super-C Constellations. NWA flight crews fly the ships between the Twin Cities and Chicago; EAL crews between Chicago and Miami.

IN FLIGHT view of one of Eastern Air Lines' Super-C Constellations, now in service on the NWA-EAL Twin Cities-Chicago-Miami interchange route. Eastern uses its Super-C Constellations on express runs between Northern commercial and financial centers and resort cities in the South.

The Super-C Constellations recently were added to Eastern's fleet as part of a $150,000,000 equipment program — the largest ever undertaken at one time by a commercial operator.

EAL retired all of its 21-passenger DC-3s in favor of 60 new twin-engine 40-passenger Martin Silver Falcons and added 30 88-passenger Super Constellations as well as 16 turbo-compound Super-C Constellations. A dozen Douglas DC-7Bs are slated for delivery to EAL late this Spring.

Expansion and enterprise such as this has been characteristic of Eastern Air Lines during its 29-year history.

The company traces its earliest beginnings back to 1926, when the U. S. government invited competitive bids for mail contracts via air between New York City and Atlanta. The bid accepted was that of a young flier named Harold F. Pitcairn, who manufactured aircraft for county fair exhibits. The agreement to deliver airmail was a challenging one, as Pitcairn first had to build an airplane to fulfill his contract.

Seeing a market for both his planes and his talents in mail contracts, Pitcairn went ahead with his production of planes, recruited a handful of World War I flying veterans and daredevil barnstormers and began a route survey.

The government award of the 595-mile route linking Atlanta with Miami came in November, 1927, and Pitcairn Aviation found itself in possession of the "eastern air line," a total of 1,387 air miles from New York to Miami.

The success of its first operations and the significant events that followed led Eastern right up to its recognition today as one of the world's leading commercial airlines.

In 1929, after a year of operation, Pitcairn sold his airline to North American Aviation, Inc. Its name was changed to Eastern Air Transport, and EAT, even during the depression years, continued to flourish and expand.

Passenger service was inaugurated. Such aircraft as Curtiss Kingbirds, Ford Tri-Motors, Stinsons and Curtis Condors were added. During this time, Eastern moved its operating base from Richmond, Va., to more centrally located Atlanta.

In 1933, control of North American passed to the General Motors Corporation. Out of this transaction emerged the figure of Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, who was to provide the guiding influence in the future development of Eastern.

A new corporation, Eastern Air Lines, Inc., was formed in 1934. Routes were extended from Chicago to Atlanta and from Atlanta to New Orleans. Once again it moved its operating base, this time from Atlanta to Miami.

With the appointment of Capt. Rickenbacker as vice president and general manager of Eastern, expansion became the order of the day. Obsolete aircraft were replaced with Douglas DC-2s, followed by the famous DC-3. The latter 1930's saw the transfer of Eastern from General Motors control to a group of friends led by Captain Rickenbacker.

Today, Eastern Air Lines ranks as one of the "Big Four" in U. S. Commercial aviation. Eastern is serving an area reaching from New England and the Great Lakes in the North to Florida and the Gulf states in the South; from the Atlantic seaboard and Puerto Rico in the East to the Mississippi and Texas in the West.

Through the NWA-EAL interchange, the Southeast Atlantic coastal area is linked to the Northwest and to Hawaii, Alaska and the Orient by "one carrier" service for the first time.

WHEN NORTHWEST Stratocruisers inaugurated the NWA-EAL Twin Cities-Chicago-Miami interchange four months ago, EAL pilots received Boeing training in Seattle. Above, NWA Captain Russ Sorkness, second from left, describes Boeing characteristics to EAL pilots A. C. Williams, W. T. Jamieson and R. G. Minick. EAL Super-C Constellations are now flying the interchange. Boeings fly the winter interchange schedule.

Two More Mark 20 Years; Seven Get Fifteen-Year Pins

Two new members joined Northwest Orient Airlines fast-growing 20-Year Club during April. They are:

Roy A. Philblad, mechanical foreman, STP, who joined Northwest April 16, 1935.

Wade B. Stanley, master mechanic, STP, an employe since April 1, 1935.

Both were presented with their 20-year pins at the annual 20-Year Club dinner, April 30, along with 19 other new 20-year club members previously reported. (A full report of this year's 20-year club dinner will be carried in the June issue.)

Seven Northwest employes received 15-year pins during April. They are: James W. Barron, Jr., senior radio operator, CLE; Kenneth J. Brinnon, Captain, SEA; A. E. Floan, vice president and secretary, GO; Alfred H. Lohmar, Captain, MSP; James W. Speer, Jr., district sales manager, PDX; Roland T. Thoensen, mechanical supervisor, STP, and George A. Weston, master mechanic, SEA.

Receiving 10-year pins during March were:

Harvey J. Culver, master mechanic, STP; Donald J. Curtis, master mechanic, STP; Robert A. Lanz, equipment serviceman, STP; Joseph V. Rocca, equipment serviceman, GEG; Daniel F. Sowa, senior meteorologist, SEA; Herbert W. Sundberg, crew chief, CHI, and John M. Thompson, transportation agent, BTM.

Believed 1st Built . . .

Stratocruiser Model "Flies" Domestic System

What is believed to be the first large scale flying model of the Boeing B-377 Stratocruiser ever built is now being seen by customers in NWA ticket offices across the nation.

The model was constructed by Alroy D. Piepgras, NWA assistant comptroller, in 1950 in a back-street hobby shop in the Shinjuku district of Tokyo. When Al returned to the U. S. two years ago after six years in the Orient, he shipped his model back with him.

It's now used by the Advertising Department for display purposes and is currently on exhibit in the St. Paul ticket office. It's been used as the feature attraction of many Stratocruiser displays around Minneapolis-St. Paul and elsewhere.

Al, who has constructed model airplanes for a number of years, built the model in six months with the aid of the Japanese hobby shop owner. The plane is made of balsa struts and balsa stripping and weighs about eight pounds. It has a wingspan of approximately five feet.

"READY FOR TAKEOFF" at Holman Field, St. Paul, is what is believed to be the first large flying model of the Boeing Stratocruiser ever constructed. Left is Al Piepgras, NWA assistant comptroller, who built the model in Tokyo in 1950. Al is being assisted by Bill Hoffman, mechanical supervisor of accessory overhaul, who's squirting gas into one of the gigantic Hope-B engines (one-eighth horsepower each) that power the model. It is now used by the Advertising Department for display purposes in cities along NWA's domestic system.

The Boeing is powered by four one-eighth horsepower Hope-B engines, which are Japanese made and which Al feels "are the best engines of their type in existence." The plane holds one pint of gas.

"She's a smooth-flying ship," says Al, "just like the big Boeings. It takes two men to handle her, though, and she needs quite a bit of runway for takeoff."

The model has about three hours of flying time logged. It's handled at the end of a 60-foot guidewire. It was constructed from Boeing plans and is an exact scale model all the way.

The model was "grounded" temporarily in April, 1952, when Northwest inaugurated Stratocruiser service over its "Great Circle" route between the U.S.A. and the Orient. It was painted Northwest colors and put on display in NWA's Tokyo City Ticket Office, where it attracted throngs.

Since 1950, other large Boeing models have been constructed and flown, but as far as Al knows, his was the first.

Piepgras joined Northwest Orient Airlines 16 years ago as a clerk at the St. Paul airport. During his six-year stint in the Orient he held down various jobs with the company. Before returning to the U. S., he was administrative assistant to the vice president-Orient Region.

Editorials

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Features

BOSTON, MONDAY, MAY 23, 1955 "First the blade, then the ear, then the full grain in the ear" C (R)

May, 1955

Flying Is a Relative Thing

An Intimate Message From New York

By Harry C. Kenney

NEW YORK

Capt. Walter Bullock is probably this minute flying a giant super-turbo-compound Constellation at a 300-mile clip over the broad Pacific to the Orient. The fact that this man is comfortably and safely maneuvering 137,500 pounds of airplane, cargo, and passengers at 20,000 feet in the air is not particularly important. It is being doné many times every day and night throughout the world.

What is interesting is that Captain Bullock's flying experience spans the whole era of commercial aviation, and he is still at the controls of one of Lockheed's most powerful long-distance planes. It emphasizes the enormous expansion aviation has made within one adult's flying experience.. His career parallels the growth of commercial aviation.

Captain Bullock learned to fly in 1916 and was credited with being the youngest pilot in America. His lessons took 486 minutes at $1 a minute. He was a World War I pilot and following this experience he established one of the first speed records—68 miles an hour—in 1919.

He was a World War II pilot in the China-India-Burma theater, headed an ice research unit for the United States Air Force, competed four times in Bendix air races, has 25,000 hours pilot time in the air, and has flown about every type aircraft except rockets. His picture hangs in the Aviation Hall of Fame, Washington, D.C.

But this sort of biography could go on for pages. Captain Bullock's 39-year career in the air reads not only like a modern history of aviation but an Alice in Wonderland account of the birth, growth, and maturity of a major industry in this country.

And here is the dramatic comparison. This man began to feel the wind in his face, the thrill of solo flight, with a 1907 model Wright pusher plane—the kind that had warped wings, bicycle wheels, and the pilot's seat sticking out in front of the machine.

He has since built his own ship—a replica of the 1907 job. He haunted machine shops, old hangars, and aviation parts dealers from coast to coast. Gradually he acquired most of the materials he needed for his "pusher." The parts he couldn't find, he made himself.

When Captain Bullock took off for his first spin he had a "deluxe job" weighing 700 pounds costing him a hard-earned $3,000. The "deluxe" part included an oil gauge and duraluminum in place of the original spruce and bamboo struts. He got it off the ground and soared into the air at 50 miles an hour.

In 1926, a company known as Northwest Airways—now Northwest Orient Airlines—began an air-mail service between Twin Cities and Chicago and was soon flying passengers in small Stinson planes. Captain Bullock joined up with this budding aviation firm as a pilot.

Today, when this man takes over the controls of a Constellation, pointing its nose toward the Far East, he has under command an airplane that represents millions of man-hours of work. If Captain Bullock was to build this ship—assuming he had the know-how—it would take him a matter of centuries.

It will carry 47 passengers in transoceanic siesta arrangement; 59 to 63 passengers in luxury configuration; or 94 passengers in tourist style.

Even this experienced pilot gets a thrill out of lifting this giant ship—with a length of 116 feet and a wing span of 123 feet—into the air after a 5,000-foot run with all four engines roaring with precision.

Captain Bullock's antique pusher contained a 75-horse-power engine and a maximum speed of 55 miles an hour. The four Wright turbo-compound engines provide 3,250 bhp each, for a total take-off power of 13,000 bhp. He cruises at 22,600 feet, has three-blade, antiicing, full feathering, reversible pitch propellers.

His Lockheed G has weather surveillance-navigational radar and he can "see" storms, terrain, snow, and can avoid turbulence. The plane has analyzers of all sorts that inform the engineer about the running condition of the plane. There are automatic and manual-controlled features that require highly skilled men within the pilot's cabin.

The ship flies through the night, the daytime, and bad weather. Safety factors within the plane and ground controls have combined to make flying an everyday safe affair.

But to "Walt" Bullock his future is all before him. As he puts it, "we're just getting started good on this flying business."

TO Mr. Murrow

FROM Rebe Holder

August 8, 1955

Jesse asked me to tell you that Dick Powell and his wife June Allison are set for the first PERSON TO PERSON show and the attached wires were sent.

P&P

Ruby Cowan
226 North Canon Drive
Beverly Hills, California

Ed Murrow and I delighted news Dick and June agreeable appear our opening show September second. Ed sending them telegram this afternoon. Will have CBS representative and phone company experts survey house later this week after contacting you. regards

jesse zousmer

Mr and Mrs Dick Powell
3100 Mandeville Canyon
West Los Angeles
California

Delighted at news you both agreeable have us visit your house September second. Looking forward to it with much enthusiasm. Will phone you when I return to city. My best.

Edward R. Murrow

charge to: person to person

See General Correspondence 1955 for original and brochure

P-P
Roosevelt, A.B.
Dr Ralph Bunche

THE ALLIANCE, Inc.

200 EAST 66th STREET NEW YORK 21

Templeton 8-3625

Officers
ARCHIBALD B. ROOSEVELT
President
JOHN BAUMANN
Vice-President
CHARLES KENNETH CLINTON
Secretary
GARDNER OSBORN
Treasurer

ZYGMUND DOBBS
Research Director

July 19, 1955

R. C.

Mr. E. R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Ave.
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I cannot help wondering what is wrong with American industry today. The tremendous growth of our industry is one of the shining examples of what can be done in a free enterprise system. In spite of that, the management and directors of many of these companies are constantly supporting, in one way or another, leftist sympathizers and leftist propaganda. All this leads up to the fact that I happened to hear Edward R. Murrow's second showing of Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, once on "Person-to-Person" and the second time on "See It Now." It was almost sickening to watch and listen to his speech before the graduating class of young students. It was even more sickening to think that such stuff was being dished out because it was made possible by the money collected from free enterprise.

I am enclosing a brochure on Dr. Ralph J. Bunche and hope that you will read it carefully. You may rest assured that all of the facts in it have been carefully documented. Also, there are many other facts which, if you would take the trouble to go to a public library and look up the references in the brochure, you would be astonished to learn. As you will see, if you take the trouble to read it, the brochure clearly shows the leftist sympathies of Bunche over a long period of years. I can find no denial by him or repudiation of these sympathies.

A copy of this brochure is being mailed to every officer and director of the Aluminum Co. of America and the Columbia Broadcasting System.

Very truly yours,

Archibald B. Roosevelt

Archibald B. Roosevelt
President

ABR:C

P20P

May 17, 1955

Dear Mr. Roberts:

Many thanks for your letter of May 6th.

I have not yet had an opportunity to call your letter to Mr. Murrow's attention but shall do so at the earliest possible opportunity, and will then let you know whether there is any likelihood of PERSON TO PERSON inviting Dr. Alexander Lippisch to appear on the program.

In the meantime thank you for your thoughtfulness in making the suggestion.

Sincerely yours,

KAY CAMPBELL,
EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT

Mr. Ford Roberts
Radio Station WMT
Cedar Rapids, Iowa

fc

WMT
Basic Columbia Network
IOWA'S FINEST FREQUENCY
PARAMOUNT THEATRE BUILDING
CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA

May 6, 1955

Miss Kay Campbell
Executive Ass't To EdwardR. Murrow
485 Madison Ave.,
New York 22, New York

Dear Miss Campbell,

I am addressing this letter to you in the hope that if you think it would be of interest to Mr. Murrow you would bring it to his attention.

We have here in Cedar Rapids a man whom I feel would make an excellent guest on Mr. Murrow's "Person to Person" television program. I am referring to Dr. Alexander Lippisch, formerly the chief design engineer for the Messerschmitt Aircraft works in Germany. Near the conclusion of World War II, Dr. Lippisch fled the Nazi regime and obtained asylum with the American Military Government. He requested permission to come to the United States where he hoped he could make his knowledge available to our government. Subsequently, he was hired by the Collins Radio Company of Cedar Rapids to head their Aeronautical Research Department.

Two of Dr. Lippisch's most widely acclaimed accomplishments are: The development, in the late 1920's, of the Delta wing design; the type of wing now being used by our government in their recently developed V.T.O. plane. And, the design and construction of the first jet-powered fighter plane ever used in combat. While developing this plane, Dr. Lippisch obtained actual flight speeds in excess of 600 miles per hour in 1939, at which time our American planes had barely reached the 400 m.p.h. mark.

At the present time, Dr. Lippisch is conducting a series of programs on WMT TV entitled, "The Secret of Flight". Although quite technical, it has enjoyed a large following. This, of course, is in addition to his work with the Collins Radio Company.

This, I believe, will give you some idea of what type of guest Dr. Lippisch would be. If you feel Mr. Murrow might consider Dr. Lippisch as a future guest on "Person to Person" and would like further information, I will be glad to put you in touch with Dr. Lippisch personally, or with our Department of News and Public Affairs.

Very truly yours,

Ford Roberts

Ford Roberts
Radio Station WMT, Cedar Rapids, Iowa

Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. P to P F. 502

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

To Mr. Van Volkenburg cc: Mr. Aaron

From Mr. Murrow

Station

May 3, 1955

We are pretty well booked for PERSON TO PERSON for the remainder of the season. We will consider Governor McKeldin, who is by the way a friend of mine, for the autumn.

E.R.M.

rh

P&P

May 3, 1955

Dear Mrs. Peale:

Thank you for your letter and for suggesting Mildred Dilling. We are committed for the remainder of this season, but we shall consider her for next season.

We are enjoying the farm in Pawling. I am deeply distressed that I will not be introduced by you at the dinner for Mary Taber, but I will be in London for the elections.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Norman Vincent Peale
1030 Fifth Avenue
New York 28, New York

rh
bc: Mr. Aaron - plus correspondence

P&P

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: Mr. Edward R. Murrow April 7, 1955

from: Howard L. Kany cc: Messrs. Mickelson, Gitlin, Harris, Howell

As you probably know, we have in production a pilot, EYE ON THE WORLD film. EYE ON THE WORLD is being planned as a 30-minute weekly series backgrounding the news.

We expect to have the pilot completed by May 1 and full production is anticipated as soon thereafter as feasible, possibly by July 1.

John Howell, CBS Television Film Sales account executive, has been discussing the possible sale of EYE ON THE WORLD with Bob Swan, Radio and Television Vice-President of the Katz Agency in Baltimore representing the American Oil Company. Mr. Howell detects some interest on the part of Mr. Swan for EYE ON THE WORLD as a network summer replacement for Person to Person. I thought you would like to know of this as Mr. Swan said he may be talking with you tomorrow. It's our understanding that any decision that might come would have the approval of Art Lund of Campbell-Mithun, Inc. (for Hamms Beer).

EYE ON THE WORLD is to be produced as a high quality current affairs program focusing attention during each weekly film on typical individuals as they are affected by the trend of significant news events. For example, among the stories to be treated in the pilot are:

Tension in the Formosa strait
Fast turnover of French premiers
The current stock market trend, and
The debut of big league baseball in Kansas City.

EYE ON THE WORLD is to be a Newsfilm production using the full facilities of Newsfilm and the entire department of News and Public Affairs. Needless to say, we would be most pleased and proud if it were selected as a Person to Person replacement program.

HLK:dm

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

7 to: Richard Salant cc: E.R. Murrow

from: Jesse Zousmer

March 16, 1955

Ed Murrow has asked me to remind you that we did Rabbi Silver on PERSON TO PERSON on November 12th. Silver mentioned the Jewish Tercentenary.

And unless I'm mistaken you might ask Milton Krents whatever happened to Dr. Wahsman. About a year ago I talked with Krents... (I'm fairly certain...) about Wahsman. Krents was to set it up and call me back. He never did.

Also: Irving Berlin doesn't want to play with us and we have doubts about Mr. Baruch's hearing.

J.Z.

r.r.

CBS RADIO

Office Communication to: Mare Gruner

from: Ed Murrow

March 8, 1955

Dear Mare,

Many thanks for your suggestion of Philip Wylie as a guest on PERSON TO PERSON. I would like to do him but there are technical reasons why we can't get out of Miami at present.

We'll keep him on the list.

Sincerely,

ilzy

TO: ed

FROM: jz

re Marc Cramer's suggestion of Wylie from Miami.. we can't get out of there at present.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Edward R. Murrow

from: Marc Cramer ext 7379 Feb. 21st 1955

N.G.

Dear Ed,

What about using PHILIP WYLIE on your PERSON TO PERSON show some night. He has a beautiful home in Miami, Fla. and I took a hunk of film on him last Friday (1 min.) for use on YOUTH TAKES A STAND and he was great. I called him to thank him and mentioned that you might be interested in doing him on PTP...he seemed interested tho awfully busy at the moment. I think it would make a good show.

Best

Abner

P. S. His address and home number:

7450 S. W. 47th Court, Miami, Fla. (home)
Mohawk 1-4955 (home)

P to P

CLASS OF SERVICE

This is a full-rate Telegram or Cablegram unless its deferred character is indicated by a suitable symbol above or preceding the address.

WESTERN UNION

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

FX-1201

(59)

SYMBOLS

DL = Day Letter

NL = Night Letter

LT = Int'l Letter Telegram

VLT = Int'l Victory Ltr.

The filing time shown in the date line on telegrams and day letters is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

1955 JAN 29 PM 1 -05

NA042 DL PD=NEW YORK NY 29 1150AME=

EDWARD R MURROW, CARE CBS=

485 MAD AVE 21 FL=

MANY THANKS FOR A MOST WONDERFUL AND THRILLING EXPERIENCE. DAVE CHUCK AND THE REST OF YOUR GANG COULD NOT HAVE BEEN NICER. WE THOROUGHLY ENJOYED THE WHOLE THING. THANKS AGAIN AND VERY BEST REGARDS.

SINCERELY=

JEAN AND LOU AUER=

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

Office Communication to: Mike Foster cc: Ed Murrow

from: Jesse Zousmer

7

January 10, 1955

Mr. Murrow has turned over to me a letter from Will Jones of the Minneapolis papers suggesting that you told Jones that Mr. Murrow "had turned down a request for an at-home session because of a personal policy of not involving your home and family in business matters."

From time to time Ed may have so told some interviewers. But the fact is that more than a dozen publications have carried stories and pictures taken of the Murrows at home in New York or at Pawling.

For the future: the reason Mr. Aaron and I have suggested that no reporters be allowed to visit the Murrows at home is a simple one. When the time comes we think it should be done logically by PERSON TO PERSON cameras. I attach for your perusal some 20 odd of the most recent suggestions from viewers that they'd like to visit the Murrows at home. Further, at least a half dozen reporters in the New York area have been refused permission to do a PERSON TO PERSON interview with Mr. Murrow at his home.

Jones' point that he had to "laugh" at the idea that Mr. Murrow was refusing visits at his home for a "personal policy" is well taken.

J. Zousmer

nic

CBS

October 10, 1961

NOTE FOR: Person to Person
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Mr. Murrow says that the attached letter must have been written by a "nut" and means nothing to him. He suggests that it be filed at C. B. S.

Dorothy Baas
Secretary to Edward R. Murrow

Attachment

Oct. 2 letter from Vera R. Stevenson-Gardiner "to release E. R. M. from all monetary & personal obligations because of a TV show done in her husband's home"

At New Orleans recently, Dr. Stanton in the course of an address referred to the recent quiz program disclosures and announced that because of the inherent impossibility of policing their production, CBS had decided to eliminate from its program schedule all programs based upon contests for large sums of money or lavishly expensive prizes. He went on to say that "this single action will not accomplish our aims....we do propose to be more certain in the future that it is we and we alone who decide not only what is to appear on the CBS Television Network, but how it is to appear. We accept the responsibility for content and quality and for assurance to the American people that what they see and hear on CBS programs is exactly what it purports to be. . . Details of how this general policy is to be implemented will be revealed step by step as they are developed."

After the inclusion of those statements in a prepared address, and although no programs were therein referred to by name, in the course of a telephone interview from New Orleans with a New York reporter, Dr. Stanton referred, among other things, to certain interview-type programs which might possibly require examination as to whether or not there had been sufficient disclosure that they were not entirely unrehearsed. Included among the programs thus named were PERSON TO PERSON, a program originated by Edward R. Murrow and his associates but for some time past and now owned by CBS.

No suggestion was made by Dr. Stanton that PERSON TO PERSON was not a highly desirable program or that there had been included in its format any such deceits as had been involved in certain quiz programs. Dr. Stanton's reference to PERSON TO PERSON was rather by way of explaining by example the statement in his New Orleans address that CBS would not stop with its action of eliminating quiz programs whose inherent nature tempted the use of deceitful practices, but would go beyond the elimination of deliberate deceit to make certain that in the future there would not be even unintentional deception and that all of its programs would be revealed to be exactly what they are.

In the case of PERSON TO PERSON there never had been any affirmative suggestion that the show was not prepared and rehearsed. In the nature of the program it had to be - and a knowledge of that fact by the public would not detract in any degree from the success or appeal of the program. It was Dr. Stanton's statement that in the case of programs such as PERSON TO PERSON, and other interview programs, it would be affirmatively indicated in the future - and there is no reason why it should not be so indicated - if they are not entirely spontaneous.

No suggestion was intended that either Mr. Murrow or his associates had been lacking in integrity in the past production of PERSON TO PERSON.

Mr. Murrow's comments on Dr. Stanton's statements were made in London without a full realization of the background facts and in the mistaken belief that his integrity and that of his colleagues as producers had been attacked. In those circumstances his remarks were, perhaps, unduly vitriolic. Mr. Murrow not only applauds and vigorously supports, but has previously advocated, the CBS basic policy of assuming responsibility for what appears on the network and how it appears and for seeing to it that in the future its programs will be exactly what they purport to be. Mr. Murrow will conform to that policy by continuing to produce his own programs in full accordance with the principles.

Mr. Murrow, still on leave in London, authorized the comment that "If this policy is carried out - is generally supported by the industry, by sponsors and the public - television will become, as a result of CBS leadership, a more reliable and responsible medium."

P-P

Burke - CBS

FORM 2—(6/58)
W. & S. LTD.

Commercial Cables

SUBSIDIARY OF
AMERICAN CABLE & RADIO CORPORATION

PLEASE SEND REPLY
"VIA COMMERCIAL"

RING FOR A MESSENGER
TO COLLECT OR TELEPHONE YOUR MESSAGE
TO LONDON WALL 5678

Commercial Cables

A. C. & R. SERVES THE WORLD BY CABLE AND RADIO

Mackay Radio

All America Cables and Radio

D 785

1959 OCT 23 PM 8 34 .6

RAD EDC

HEAD OFFICE:
27/33, WORMWOOD STREET,
LONDON, E.C.2.

THE FOLLOWING CABLEGRAM WAS RECEIVED "VIA COMMERCIAL"

EDC1297/CBS3 NEWYORK 142/1/50 23 315P

ED MURROW COLBROSYS LONDON

AARON AND ZOUSMER SAY THEY RECEIVED FOLLOWING FROM STANTON QUOTE I HAVE JUST READ YOUR LETTER OF TODAY STOP PARAGRAPH MY STATEMENT THAT IN THE FUTURE WE WANT ALL CBS PROGRAMS TO BE EXACTLY WHAT THEY PURPORT TO BE WAS CERTAINLY NOT INTENDED AS A SLUR

Sent 9/5

Commercial Cables

SUBSIDIARY OF
AMERICAN CABLE & RADIO CORPORATION

SEND REPLY
"COMMERCIAL"
FOR A MESSENGER
TO COLLECT OR TELEPHONE YOUR MESSAGE
TO LONDON WALL 5678

Commercial Cables

A.C. & R. SERVES THE WORLD BY CABLE AND RADIO

Mackay Radio

All America Cables and Radio

1959 OCT 23 PM 8 34 .6

RAD EDC

HEAD OFFICE:
27/33, WORMWOOD STREET,
LONDON, E.C.2.

THE FOLLOWING CABLEGRAM WAS RECEIVED "VIA COMMERCIAL"

A1

EDC1297/CBS3 ED MUR 2/50

ON PERSON TO PERSON COMMA ITS PRODUCERS AND STAFF COMMA OR ON THE MANY GUESTS WHO HAVE APPEARED ON THAT PROGRAM STOP INDEED COMMA IT REFERRED TO A PRODUCTION PRACTICE FOR WHICH COMMA AS I HAVE ADMITTED COMMA WE AT CBS HAVE BEEN AT LEAST AS RESPONSIBLE AS ANYONE ELSE

Sus 9/59

Commercial Cables

SUBSIDIARY OF
AMERICAN CABLE & RADIO CORPORATION

SEND REPLY
"COMMERCIAL"
FOR A MESSENGER
TO COLLECT OR TELEPHONE YOUR MESSAGE
TO LONDON WALL 5678

Commercial Cables

A. C. & R. SERVES THE WORLD BY CABLE AND RADIO

Mackay Radio

All America Cables and Radio

HEAD OFFICE:
27/33, WORMWOOD STREET,
LONDON, E.C.2.

THE FOLLOWING CABLEGRAM WAS RECEIVED "VIA COMMERCIAL"

AL EDC1297/CBS3 ED MUR 3/42

STOP PARAGRAPH ALL I HAVE ASKED OF YOU IS THAT YOU INFORM THE VIEWEING PUBLIC OF THE PRODUCTION PRACTICES ON PERSON TO PERSON SO THAT THE PROGRAM CAN BE EXACTLY WHAT IT PURPORTS TO BE SINCERELY CC TO MURROW UNQUOTE REGARDS

BURKE

Sorry

-0-

(MURROW)

T-V COMMENTATOR EDWARD R. MURROW HAS SEVERELY CRITICIZED THE PRESIDENT OF THE COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM, FRANK STANTON.

MURROW SAID, AND THESE ARE HIS WORDS, "DR. STANTON HAS FINALLY REVEALED PUBLICLY HIS IGNORANCE BOTH OF NEWS AND THE REQUIREMENTS OF TELEVISION PRODUCTION. HE SUGGESTS THAT PERSON-TO-PERSON, A PROGRAM WITH WHICH I WAS ASSOCIATED FOR SIX YEARS, WAS NOT WHAT IT PURPORTED TO BE. I AM SORRY THAT DR. STANTON FEELS THAT I HAVE PARTICIPATED IN PERPETRATING A FRAUD UPON THE PUBLIC."

MURROW CONTINUED, AND AGAIN WE QUOTE, "MY CONSCIENCE IS CLEAR. HIS SEEMS TO BE BOTHERING HIM."

STANTON HAD CRITICIZED PERSON-TO-PERSON BECAUSE IT WAS REHEARSED. IN A STATEMENT IN LONDON, MURROW SAID, "THE ALTERNATIVE TO A DEGREE OF REHEARSAL WOULD BE CHAOS. SURELY STANTON MUST KNOW THAT CAMERAS, LIGHTS AND MICROPHONES DON'T JUST WANDER AROUND A HOME."

-0-

Stanton, F.
4-C-10

(MURROW)

T-V COMMENTATOR EDWARD R. MURROW HAS SEVERELY CRITICIZED THE PRESIDENT OF THE COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM, FRANK STANTON.

MURROW SAID, AND THESE ARE HIS WORDS, "DR. STANTON HAS FINALLY REVEALED PUBLICLY HIS IGNORANCE BOTH OF NEWS AND THE REQUIREMENTS OF TELEVISION PRODUCTION. HE SUGGESTS THAT PERSON-TO-PERSON, A PROGRAM WITH WHICH I WAS ASSOCIATED FOR SIX YEARS, WAS NOT WHAT IT PURPORTED TO BE. I AM SORRY THAT DR. STANTON FEELS THAT I HAVE PARTICIPATED IN PERPETRATING A FRAUD UPON THE PUBLIC."

MURROW CONTINUED, AND AGAIN WE QUOTE, "MY CONSCIENCE IS CLEAR. HIS SEEMS TO BE BOTHERING HIM."

STANTON HAD CRITICIZED PERSON-TO-PERSON BECAUSE IT WAS REHEARSED. IN A STATEMENT IN LONDON, MURROW SAID, "THE ALTERNATIVE TO A DEGREE OF REHEARSAL WOULD BE CHAOS. SURELY STANTON MUST KNOW THAT CAMERAS, LIGHTS AND MICROPHONES DON'T JUST WANDER AROUND A HOME."

-0-

Stanton, F

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM, INC.

485 Madison Avenue, New York 22, New York · PLaza 1-2345

FRANK STANTON
President

October 22, 1959

Messrs. John A. Aaron
and Jesse Zousmer
PERSON TO PERSON
501 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Messrs. Aaron and Zousmer:

I have just read your letter of today.

My statement that in the future we want all CBS programs to be exactly what they purport to be was certainly not intended as a slur on PERSON TO PERSON, its producers and staff, or on the many guests who have appeared on that program. Indeed, it referred to a production practice for which, as I have admitted, we at CBS have been at least as responsible as anyone else.

All I have asked of you is that you inform the viewing public of the production practices on PERSON TO PERSON so that the program can be exactly what it purports to be.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ FRANK STANTON

cc Mr. Edward R. Murrow

COPY

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM, INC.

485 Madison Avenue, New York 22, New York · PLaza 1-2345

FRANK STANTON
President

October 22, 1959

Messrs. John A. Aaron
and Jesse Zousmer
PERSON TO PERSON
501 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Messrs. Aaron and Zousmer:

I have just read your letter of today.

My statement that in the future we want all CBS programs to be exactly what they purport to be was certainly not intended as a slur on PERSON TO PERSON, its producers and staff, or on the many guests who have appeared on that program. Indeed, it referred to a production practice for which, as I have admitted, we at CBS have been at least as responsible as anyone else.

All I have asked of you is that you inform the viewing public of the production practices on PERSON TO PERSON so that the program can be exactly what it purports to be.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ FRANK STANTON

cc Mr. Edward R. Murrow

COPY

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. R. Murrow

from: Aaron & Zousmer

June 25, 1959

Yesterday, after word got around that Godfrey would not do P to P next fall, Charlie Andrews, who Jim Seward had told us would produce P to P for Godfrey, asked to talk to our staff. He told them that he had acted under the best of intentions and information when he previously told them they would be kept on, as a group, next season. He explained that now, he, too, was, in effect, without a producer's job.

Following a day of variable rumors, Mike Dann came over to our shop to talk to the staff today. He suggested that he would like to speak to the group without A and Z being present.

We have now learned--no great reportorial "digging" involved--that Dann has told them that they will all be re-hired next season with the possible exception, as we get it, of "the Assistant"... whoever that is.

Anyhow, as of 4:30 PM today, there is some assurance that most of the staff will be re-hired next year.

A & Z

AZ

10/15 Call Clifton

Person. To - Mrs

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. R. Murrow

from: J. Zousmer June 2, 1959

As part of my official duties -- assuring very competent, well-spoken women that they need have no fears on P-to-P -- I had a long conversation this morning with Mrs. Anna Rosenberg.

I think I've assuaged her fears. But I give you fair warning now that it may be difficult to restrain her from complimenting you in public. After all, she told me, she told Bill Paley everything she wanted to tell him about you.

Incidentally, we may hit a small ten-strike on her relations with General Marshall. It's a delicious morsel: The General is the only man she ever met who had no feeling...prejudice... re women, "because he has such complete love and respect for Mrs. Marshall."

I'm sure Sheila has noted that we have scheduled drinks with Mrs. Rosenberg at 4:00 PM, Thursday, June 11.

J.Z.

jmi

TO erm

FROM jz

4/30/59

Boy, we're getting closer.

FYI, on May 1th, weare doing songwriter Julie Styne and using the roof at 580 Park for our transmitter. Superintendent Downing offered us the whole building..just so you know.

D TO P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. R. Murrow

from: J. Zousmer April 15, 1959

F.Y.I. -- We have arranged for Whitney North Seymour to share P-P with Isaac Stern, April 24. For May 1, it's Cadet Pete Dawkins at West Point with Gale Storm from Hollywood.

Mrs. Lasker has accepted for May 22.

J.Z.

jmi

P. & P.

CBS NEWS

Office Communication

to: J. Aaron
J. Zousmer

from: E. Murrow

March 16, 1959

The new Indian Ambassador is one of the most remarkable men I have ever met. His credentials are attached, together with the card of his Press Attache.

The Indian Embassy is a remarkable place and I think we ought to do Chagla sometime this Spring.

E.R.M.

jmi
Att.

Press Clip

TV What's On? RADIO

Godfrey to Spell Murrow On 'Person to Person'

By KAY GARDELLA

Arthur Godfrey will definitely replace Edward R. Murrow on "Person to Person" during the '59-'60 season, when the CBS commentator takes a year's sabbatical from his network chores to "travel and learn more."

In announcing this yesterday, CBS was uncertain whether Murrow would resume his duties on the interview stanza when he returns to work in July of 1960. Hubbell Robinson, veepee in charge of network programs, commented: "We haven't nailed this down yet." Murrow said: "No one makes a plan a year in advance."

Following this, the chain-smoking commentator said that he definitely plans to return to CBS July 1, 1960—the date set in his letter to President Frank Stanton, in which he requested the leave of absence. He denied rumors suggesting he'd team up with another network after the 12-month layoff. "I have a long-term contract with CBS," he insisted. Just how long neither he nor anyone else at the web would say.

Arthur Godfrey

Edward R. Murrow

News Shows Dropped

Regarding Murrow's 7:15 P.M. radio newscast, John Day, director of news for CBS, said yesterday that they would be scrapped after he leaves. "World Tonight," the news roundup show will be inserted, only it will be extended to a half hour. When it begins its new run in July, Blair Clark will be anchorman, with CBS analysts such as Eric Sevareid and Howard K. Smith probably used from time to time.

Murrow informed us yesterday [illegible] the remaining "Small World" shows this year and approximately half of them during the '59-'60 season. "Because of the flexibility of the format," he explained, "I can originate a show from almost anywhere on the globe." When he doesn't appear, he'll be replaced by CBS commentators yet to be named.

As to the hour-long TV documentaries which Murrow and co-producer Fred Friendly were working on, things are uncertain. Day said he didn't know whether there were any plans to put any more of these on before Murrow leaves.

However, an informed source said "two more would be done between now and the first of July." One of them will be on Canada, covering business, the St. Lawrence Seaway, and trade between the two nations.

It Was No Surprise

Murrow's decision to quit for a year climaxes a long period of strained relations with the CBS brass. Once conceded to be the fair-haired boy in the news field, Murrow has been losing his status with the network for some time.

It started back in 1956 when his program "See It Now" series ran into sponsor difficulty and was subsequently dropped from the CBS schedule. He refused to accept a Sylvania award for the show after it had been a[illegible]. Later, in November, Murrow was handed a lowly chore to perform on election night. At the time, however, he insisted it was a satisfactory assignment. The final blow came when the double-domed newscaster made the front pages with a broadcast about call girls entitled "The Business of Sex."

Murrow, it was reported, was angry because CBS didn't stand by him during the furor. Yesterday, he told us, he was not "angry" at the position CBS took. "I was just interested," he commented.

As he pointed out last night on the Douglas Edwards newscast (CBS-TV, 7:15 P. M.), these "arguments with the CBS management" are not the reason for this move. At 50, he said, he just wants to catch up on some rest and learning.

MACY'S TV &

Ed — FYI — Jo

P.rop.

V

14 LA NY 2-9-59

JOHN AARON

CC JESSE ZOUSMER

PERSON TO PERSON

DAILY VARIETY TODAY QUOTE..

REAL GROWN-UP TELEVISION THE MEDIUM AT ITS VERY BEST MUST HAVE BEEN THE SETSIDE REACTION TO EDWARD R MURROWS LIVE INTERVIER WITH CUBAS FIDEL CASTRO IN HAVANA ON LAST FRIDAY NIGHTS PERSON TO PERSON BOTH CBS AND MURROW STRUCK A PROUD NOTE FOR TV TO SILENCE FOR A TIME THE CLAIM OF CRITICS THAT THE MEDIUM HAS GONE SOFT AND JUVENILE THAT IT WAS LIVE MADE IT ALL THE MORE EXCITING AND REWARDING UNQUOTE

CONGRATULATIONS

JACK BECK

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. R. Murrow

from: J. Zousmer

This is our tentative Castro script written after a half hour with Fidelito (I checked and it's proper and gracious of you to so address the kid) with Papa still in the woods doing whatever the hell you do in the woods.

Maybe Johnny will see him by 3 PM our time -- although all of this meets with the approval of the Important Ladies of the Hilton.

Oh well, Rockwell can go for an hour and a half!

2-

1. GOOD EVENING FIDEL. SO MUCH HAS HAPPENED IN THE PAST FEW WEEKS ~~I HAD I WON'T BORE ARE WHATIS NEW~~. BUT YOU'RE STILL LOOKING WELL...AND QUITE RELAXED. (FIRST TIME BEEN OUT OF MILITARY CLOTHES)

2. (~~[illegible]~~ (ON ED OFF MAT)

AT THE AGE OF THIRTY-TWO YOU NOW HAVE IN YOUR HANDS MUCH POWER...AND MUCH RESPONSIBILITY. AREN'T YOU A LITTLE FRIGHTENED BY THIS?

3. WHAT ABOUT YOUR PERSONAL SAFETY? THIS IS SOMETHING YOU MUST THINK ABOUT --OR DOESN'T IT WORRY YOU? ~~IMAGINE YOU CAN'T WALK SEEMING ABOUT ...OR DO YOU?~~ (TELLS OF TAKING WALKS AT NIGHT ALONE, MEETING AND TALKING TO ADMIRERS ON STREET)

4. ARE YOU CONCERNED AT ALL ABOUT THE COMMUNIST INFLUENCE IN CUBA?

4.

FIDEL, I'M TOLD THAT

5. ~~I BELIEVE~~ YOU SAW YOUR MOTHER FOR THE FIRST TIME IN FOUR YEARS THIS CHRISTMAS EVE. THAT MUST HAVE BEEN QUITE A REUNION. WHAT DID SHE HAVE TO SAY TO YOU.

6. AND I'M SURE SHE ASKED ABOUT HER GRANDSON. WASN'T FIDELITO SUPPOSED TO BE WITH US TONIGHT? (YES, HE CALLS SON INTO ROOM, CARRYING DOG)

X.

7. (WHEN SEE FIDELITO AND DOG)

HELLO, FIDEL, JR. THAT'S A GOOD-LOOKING PUPPY YOU HAVE THERE. IS HE YOURS? (NO, GIVEN BY ~~XXXXXXX~~ ADMIRER TO FATHER, BUT HARD TO HOUSE-TRAIN)

8. ~~(TO FIDELITO)~~

FIDELITO, DO YOU HAVE A DOG OF YOUR OWN? (YES, 2 DOGS, ~~[illegible]~~ ~~[illegible]~~)

8A- WHAT KIND ARE THEY?

9. FIDEL, WHEN WAS THE LAST TIME YOU WERE IN THE UNITED STATES?

10. WHEN DO YOU THINK YOU'LL BE VISITING US AGAIN?

11. WILL THAT BE WITH THE BEARD...OR WITHOUT IT? (PLANS TO SHAVE IT OFF NEXT JULY 26)

12. FIDELITO, HAVE YOU HEARD FROM ANY OF YOUR ~~CLASSMATES SINCE YOU LEFT BURGOS IN NEW YORK TO RETURN TO SPAIN?~~ FRIENDS AT SCHOOL IN N.Y? (CUE FOR SON TO GO TO PIANO TO SHOW BOOK OF LETTERS)

13. (AFTER SEE BOOK OF LETTERS)
WHAT DID THEY SAY?
~~WOULD YOU READ US ONE OF THOSE LETTERS, FIDELITO?~~ ~~(HEN READS ONE LETTER)~~ COVER INSCRIPTION)

14. ~~(AFTER FIDELITO READS LETTER)~~ COVER)

THANK YOU VERY MUCH, FIDELITO. WE WON'T KEEP YOU UP ANY LONGER. FIDEL, WERE YOU AS GOOD-LOOKING AS YOUR SON WHEN YOU WERE HIS AGE? (CUE TO OTHER ~~(SON LEAVES ROOM AS FATHER GOES TO OTHER~~ ROOM TO SHOW PHOTO OF SELF AS CHILD)

15. (AFTER SEES PHOTO ~~OF FIDEL AS HE SITS DOWN~~)

YOUTH IS A WONDERFUL PERIOD IN A MAN'S LIFE, THOUGH SOMETIMES WE APPRECIATE IT TOO LATE. FIDEL, WHAT DO YOU REMEMBER MOST ABOUT YOUR CHILDHOOD?

16. THE ~~NEX~~ CUBAN LIBERATOR, JOSE MARTI, WAS A PARTICULAR HERO OF YOURS. MANY OTHERS WHO HAVE TAKEN PART IN LIBERATION MOVEMENTS...THE SUCCESSFUL ONES...HAVE MENTIONED THE ELEMENT OF LUCK. DO YOU BELIEVE IN LUCK?

17. WAS THERE EVER A TIME IN THE FIGHT THAT YOU LEAD, THAT YOU THOUGHT THINGS MIGHT NOT WORK OUT...THAT SOMETHING WOULD GO WRONG?

18. WHAT ABOUT THE TRIALS? IF THEY WERE STARTING ALL OVER AGAIN, WOULD YOU LIKE TO HAVE SEEN THEM HANDLED ANY DIFFERENTLY?

19. FIDEL, WHAT DO YOU WISH MOST FOR YOUR COUNTRY IN THE MONTHS AHEAD?

6).
20. GOODBYE TO FIDEL AND SON.

(FILLS)

A. WHAT PLANS DO YOU HAVE FOR REVIVING THE TOURIST TRADE IN CUBA.

B. WHEN YOU HAVE A MOMENT OR TWO TO RELAX, DO YOU EVER GET TO TAKE A SWIM OR SEE A MOVIE.

C. CAN YOU REMEMBER THE LAST BOOK YOU READ?

D. MEN WHO WOULD YOU SAY ARE THE REAL HEROS OF THE REVOLUTION?

PoP

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Messrs. Aaron and Zousmer — cc: Mr. Murrow from: Paul A. Rosen — February 3, 1959

I recently advised you of a possible pre-emption of PERSON TO PERSON on April 10, 1959.

I am now advised that this pre-emption will not be effected.

P. A. R.

PAR:jr

Person to Person

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. R. Murrow

from: J. Aaron January 30, 1959

Thought you'd be interested in knowing that Grant Tinker and the boys at Revlon are delighted with an advance Nielsen rating they got on PERSON TO PERSON the first two weeks of January.

We averaged 25.5 with roughly a 40% share of audience, and an estimated 10½-million homes, or close to 30-million viewers.

John

J.A.

jmi

TO Sheila

FROM J. Zousmer

F

1-29-59

U R G E N T

Please show this to Mr. Murrow as soon as possible. We would like it decided before the day is out.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. R. Murrow

from: J. Zousmer January 29, 1959

French Television is "desperately" trying to get our Genevieve kinescope for use at the time the girl is in Paris with the Paar show.

Evidently the French have called Stanton, Cowan, et al.

Genevieve and her manager have no objections. Johnny and I don't either.

I gather no money is changing hands (a new gambit for CBS).

You approve?

J.Z.

jmi

Person To Person

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Messrs. Aaron and Zousmer

cc: Mr. Murrow

from: Paul A. Rosen

January 26, 1959

The broadcast of PERSON TO PERSON now scheduled for April 10, 1959, is tentatively subject to pre-emption. As soon as we have definite information on this, I will advise you, but, in the interim, I would suggest that you continue planning for a program on that date.

P. A. R.

PAR:jr

Person To P.

January 13, 1959

Dear Mr. Ouimet:

Before PERSON TO PERSON goes visiting again this Friday, I must relay to you the excellent report we received from Mr. Sammon and Mr. Moore of my staff on the complete cooperation given them by all members of your technical department, particularly Mr. Cecil Browne.

Down here in New York we were very much impressed with the picture quality and audio you sent us.

And I'm sure that the behind-the-scenes effort of your technical people was a major factor in the whole production.

I do hope that someone has relayed to you the words of appreciation that Mrs. Karsh spoke after the show was over.

All of us are determined to drop into Canada homes more often.

Sincerely,

Edward R. Murrow

Mr. J. Alphonse Ouimet
President, Canadian Broadcasting Corp.
140 Wellington Street
Ottawa, Canada

jmi
cc: Mr. W. J. Dunlop

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Lou Cowan cc: Harry Ommerle from: John Aaron & Jesse Zousmer

December 22, 1958

We see by Time Magazine of December 22, 1958...newspapers not being available...that at a recent news conference President Eisenhower said in part: "What I would like to get help in pleading for throughout the country is respect for the law."

We propose a one-hour "spectacular" to be called "The Law".

It would have no direct reference to the situation in the South today, but its story would be unmistakable.

We foresee enlisting the President's participation even though the program will be sponsored.

"The Law" would be as exciting a show as the law and its place in this nation has been.

It would speak of the law of the Old West and the law of the jungle, the written law and the unwritten law.

It would speak of lawyers like Samuel Leibowitz and Daniel Webster, of Bill Fallon and Jerry Geisler and John W. Davis.

It would be "Perry Mason" and "The Verdict Is Yours". It would be Jim Arness and Paul Muni. It would be Hiss and Hughes, Costello and Cardoza, Jack Benny and Louis D. Brandeis. And it would be Fatty Arbuckle and Dred Scott.

"The Law" might re-enact the highlights from Marbury vs. Madison through Sacco-Vanzetti down through the Triangle Fire, Bruno Hauptman and Jimmy Hoffa.

It would be the law made by the man who signs his will. And the law made after a nation has divided for war.

It would have the sweep of American History and the intimacy of the boudoir.

Because "The Law" is the people.

P to P

CBS NEWS

Office Communication to: Nancy Cammarotta from: Sheila

December 9. 1956

I have just had an extremely agitated telephone call from a Mrs. Emily Holt, onetime National Executive Secretary of AFTRA, who lives at 25 East 9th Street, i.e. in the same building as Agnes de Mille.

It seems that on the Friday that Agnes de Mille was on PTP, some of our wires got snagged round a pipe leading out of Mrs. Holt's basement and snapped it off, causing a flood in her basement, where her houseman sleeps. Sandy Bell went in and turned a valve which shut off the water a half-hour after it had started, and then the crew went home. Mrs. Holt mopped up, but an hour or two later, what she terms a pressure build-up built up and it flooded again. She had to send her 70-year old houseman uptown to a hotel, and his clothing was damaged also some rugs, added to which she was without his services while his room dried out. She says that a Mr. Cheeseman and a Mr. Kelly have rung up, offering to repair the damage but actually there is no damage as such, except for compensation which she feels should be given the houseboy for his shock and discomfort, etc. She is most anxious to have nothing to do with insurance people, for some reason which I don't quite follow, but feels that $75 or $100 to the houseboy would assuage his wounded feelings.

I apologized for the occurrence and promised that Johnny or Jesse would be in touch with her about this. Her telephone number is GRamercy 5-0133. By the way, she says if you do intend to put this in hands of insurers, to let her know first, so that she knows what to expect.

JZ

BOB S... 12/2/58

RE:CANAVERAL

ERM/Sobel

P to P

IF ED WERE TO GO TO CANAVERAL FOR THE " PTOP" PROGRAM, THE FOLLOWING CONDITIONS WOULD HOLD:

1. THE MATTING DEVICE COULD NOT BE USED. (LONG TECHNICAL EXPLANATION WHICH I WON'T GET INTO HERE)

2. BECAUSE OF THE LACK OF SYNC-LOCK, THERE WOULD VERY LIKELY BE PICTURE ROLLS BETWEEN ED AND THE REMOTES ON "TAKES"

3. UNLESS ED WERE TO ORIGINATE FROM ONE OF THE EXISTING POOL PICKUP LOCATIONS THERE WOULD BE ADDITIONAL CONSTRUCTION (WITHOUT GETTING INTO THE TIME AND MONEY PART OF THE OPERATION) FOR ANOTHER LOCATION. COULD BE THAT THERE JUST ISN'T ENOUGH TELCO GEAR IN THE AREA TO HANDLE ANOTHER PICKUP LOCATION.

4. THERE IS NO VIDEO SERVICE GOING BACK DOWN TO CANAVERAL SO ED WOULD HAVE TO DEPEND ON OFF-THE-AIR SERVICE FROM SOME STATION IN THE AREA WHICH CARRIES THE SHOW (i.e. ORLANDO) FOR VIDEO CUE. THERE COULD BE NO PRE-SHOW VIDEO CO-ORD. DON'T KNOW HOW TV RECEPTION IS AT CANAVERAL.

5. WE HAVE BEEN ADVISED THAT THERE IS NO AUDIO RETURN SERVICE TO CANAVERAL (THE NETS ARE USING PHONES FOR CUES) SO THE AUDIO COULD NOT BE HANDLED AS WE HAVE HANDLED IT IN THEPAST. HOWEVER, AN INQUIRY HAS BEEN PLACED WITH AT & T FOR AUDIO AND VIDEO SERVICE FOR 10-1100 P.M. WITH THE POSSIBILITY OF A CLASS "D" CIRCUIT GOING BACK DOWN. AND IF WE GET THAT AUDIO AT LEAST IS POSSIBLE. WILL LET YOU KNOW.

6. USE OF THE CIRCUITS WOULD BE ABOUT 1,500 DOLLARS.. SHARED CONSTRUCTION COSTS MIGHT BE SEVERAL THOUSAND DOLLARS (UNKNOWN AT THE MOMENT BECAUSE TELCO DOESN'T HAVE THE COSTS THEMSELVES YET) ((THIS ON CONFIDENTIAL INFO- BUT SUPPOSEDLY NBC HAS GIVEN THEM BLANK CHECK FOR THIS WEEKS' OPERATION)).

7. PER MAC JOHNSON (NEWS DEP'T.) THEY ARE PLANNING 3 PICKUP LOCATIONS * BLOCKHOUSE * ROAD BLOCK * AND BASE OF ROCKET * POSSIBLE SHOOTS PLANNED 12:45 A.M. * 1:14 A.M. * 1:34 A.M. (IN SOME TEN MINUTE PERIOD AROUND THESE) ALSO PLANNING ON USE OF NEW TYPE SMALL CAMERAS. ZELLNER AND BOB WILSON ARE ON THEIR WAY DOWN THERE NOW. WJXT JACKSONVILLE HANDLING TECHNICAL END WITH SOME BORROWED EQUIPMENT FROM NBC... NBC ORDERED CIRCUITS...

CONTACTS: ZELLNER - STARLITE MOTEL - COCOA BEACH - SUNSET
DICK BATE (CBS CORRESPONDENT) " SUNSET

8. WE HAVE BEEN TOLD THAT THERE IS LIMITED ACCESS (TIME- TO THE AREAS WHERE THE CAMERAS WILL BE FOR ANY SORT PURPOSES. DON'T KNOW HOW OUR AIR TIME FITS IN WI MOON-SHOOT PLAN.

MORE.....

9. [redacted] THE AUDIO PROBLEM (FROM A DELAY OR ECHO STANDPOINT) COULD BE WORSE THAN IT HAS EVER BEEN. THIS BECAUSE OF THE EXTRA DISTANCE FROM FLORIDA TO N.Y. TO L.A. AND THEN BACK TO CANAVERAL VIA N.Y.

10. AS THE SUN SLOWLY SETS OVER CAPE CANAVERAL WE HEAR THOSE FAMOUS WORDS " NO PROBLEMS " WHAT DID HE SAY..????

TO erm

Pro P

From JESSE ZOUSMER

11/24/58

Warwick and Legler's Grant Tinkham thot our suggestions on the Campy-Jessel advt were very legitimate. (He disagreed with Revlon) Abrams of Revlon said unless it ran HIS way it wouldn't run at all. We told Tinkham to thank Abrams but we refused to permit the advt to run as they wanted it to run. Abrams prior reaction was:"Tell em it runs my way and they'll come around." We ain't going around.

A&V

JOHN A. AARON

Ed —

For your file in case this comes up in the future

Jo

PERSON TO PERSON

RE WAGNER & WOOD

P TO P

Over course past year or so we made several attempts to invite Wagner & Wood on P to P through their studios and agents.

Wagner through Bill Smith at 20th Century Fox & William Morris... Wood through Dorothy Atlas at Warner's and MCA.

Problem apparently was no permanent home till recently. Also dual film assignments.

Recently, Wagner went on tour to promote new movie for 20th, accompanied by wife and Bill Smith of 20th. When they reached New York, Smith called, said he had talked to them re P to P, that he was leaving town that day but they were staying on and that before leaving he would tell them that I would call and try to arrange for Ed to drop up for a drink.

This was Wednesday, Oct. 29th.

I called at 5 that day, as Smith suggested. When Nancy got through to them, Wagner was out but Wood took the call. When Nancy explained who was calling & what the call was about, Wood said(3 or 4 times) "we're not interested in P to P, tell him to call my agent."

Nancy said the conversation was hardly "pleasant", told me about it and I said tell Wood to forget about the call.

That same day, a bit annoyed, I wired Bill Smith at 20th. The wire said:"If Robert Wagner's telephone manners are as his wife's I think we were fortunate in having avoided doing them up to now."

A week or so later, Smith called from the Coast and said that he had shown my wire to Wagner. Why he did this he didn't explain. He did say, however, that Wagner was "browned-off" about it.

Off the record, at this time, Smith said on the phone that maybe we were "lucky" that we didn't get involved with Wagner & Wood. He said sometime he'd tell us why. He indicated Wagner wasn't a bad guy but Wood was no bargain. (We've heard this from other people in the past).

Several days later, Wagner called me from the Coast and using some choice four-letter words said we had "insulted his wife." I told him my side of the story, he said his wife had a different version and after exchanging a few more unpleasantries, I hung up!

A day or two later(Mon. or Tues. of Thanksgiving Week) I got a phone call from Sol Leon at William Morris, the agency representing Wagner. Leon asked for a letter of apology on Wagner's behalf. I went through the whole story again with him. When I finished, Leon implied I had no business telling Smith what I thought of Wood and I told Leon it was none of his business what I told Smith, since Smith was the one who set up arrangements for the call in the first place. There ensued some more jockeying on the phone and finally Leon said we could end the whole thing if only I would send Wagner a pacifcying wire. I said I didn't feel we were wrong but that I would discuss it with Ed.

I told Ed about this on Monday Nov. 24th when we had drinks with Fuller and he agreed that there was no need to send the wire. Jesse(who was spared this ordeal by telephone) expressed his feelings somewhat stronger. So I did nothing.

Today, Nov. 26th, Leon of William Morris called again - this time in response to a letter I had sent him the night before in which I said, in part, that I felt "no useful purpose would be served in communicating further with Wagner." I also noted that while I could understand Wagner's "loyalty" to his wife, he should understand my "loyalty" -on a different level - to my secretary and the report she gave me. I also noted that we had done many, many William Morrus clients on P to P and that our past record for good manners and understanding spoke for itself.

Today, Leon again asked that we reconsider our refusal to send a wire of apology. He suggested that Wagner had taken the matter to Lastfogel(Pres. of Wm. Morris) that and we'd "be hearing more about it." He also mentioned that my stubborness was "bad business" for P to P, since the show is built on good will. He indicated that Wagner & Wood were very B-I-G stars and that if they "sppead the word", it could be that neither studio they work for(Warner's & 20th) would "cooperate" with us in the future.

I said "who cares."

We never got anyone from Warner's in 6 seasons. And as for 20th, they've caused us more trouble than good. (You may recall, they were the ones who tried to stop us from doing Marilyn Monroe - even threatening a suit.)

Leon said: "Think it over."

Then the phone rang.(Today still - Nov. 26th). It was Marty Kummer of MCA. He wanted to know what was going on. Natalie Wood, their client, was raising a storm over the wire to Smith. But as I was in the midst of telling Kummer the whole story, he said he had to take another phone - it seems his Thanksgiving Day reservation for his family at Luchow's was fouled up. He didn't call back.

So, it's now 6:43 p.m. on Thanksgiving Eve as I finish this and I've reached two conclusions:

(1) Anyone who works in T.V. is nuts

(2) If I don't get home soon with the turkey, the dog is gping to be awfully disappointed tomorrow.

ja

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. R. Murrow

from: J. Aaron

November 19, 1958

Rosie Dolly called and wants you, Jesse and me and our wives to come up for a home-cooked dinner any night you can make it in the next week or two. She plans a small dinner party and mentioned that she was inviting only Aly Khan and one or two others whom she said you probably already know. The date is up to you.

When can I tell her you can make it?

John
~~J. A.~~

Dec. 2 or 3 -
Please let me know

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. R. Murrow

from: J. Zousmer

November 7, 1958

The Jimmy Byrnes remote would cost us $12,000 plus an estimated $3,000 for a New York crew to do the job.

In addition, three South Carolina stations that now carry PERSON TO PERSON would not be able to take the show -- therefore we would have to provide for a substitute program on the Friday night we had Mr. Byrnes and then arrange to let the three stations show a kinescope of the PERSON TO PERSON program they missed.

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Messrs. Aaron & Zousmer

from: Paul A. Rosen

November 6, 1958

A further reminder that on December 12, 1958, we are planning on a regular broadcast of PERSON TO PERSON, notwithstanding previous information regarding pre-emption.

P. A. R.

PARijr

PtoP

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Herb Carlborg cc: E. R. Murrow

from: J. Zousmer - J. Aaron

October 30, 1958

Regarding the PLAYHOUSE 90 script, "Face of a Hero", which you were kind enough to let us look at:

1 - Mr. Murrow vaguely remembers some discussion, last spring, of his doing a PLAYHOUSE 90 dramatic program. His reaction was negative.

2 - No one has ever spoken to us about the use of the technical device we employ.

3 - It is our feeling that the name PERSON TO PERSON should not be used the way it is in "Face of a Hero."

4 - We would appreciate it if the device employed by PLAYHOUSE 90 differs in some major respect from our own.

5 - If producer Fred Coe is interested (page 4 of script) we rarely show any camera gear on PERSON TO PERSON except by accident. And we employ no monitors in the home.

6 - Regarding the script's suggestion "we will visit Mr. Jackie Gleason the actor at his home in New York City" we would look with favor on the substitution of a fictitious name.

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. R. Murrow

from: J. Zousmer - J. Aaron

October 29, 1958

We have moved the ball to the five-yard line and now we need our heavy fullback to carry it over.

We can put a live camera in the Supreme Courtroom. This has not been done before -- live.

However, Lew Shollenberger's information at the moment -- from Burton's secretary -- is that Burton cannot enter the "live" courtroom.

Do you think it is worth a call to Warren (who I'm told has approved the live camera in the courtroom) to see if we could move Burton in only to say in effect: "First I sat in this chair, then I moved to this one and the last few years I have been in this one."

He might, for the edification of the public, identify the seats of all the Justices.

Our feeling is this: shooting the court live would be a Pyrrhic victory without a body in it. Further, only a Philadelphia lawyer could explain the niceties of letting a half dozen technicians enter the room but not one who has served there for 17 years.

What you think?

V

ERT FYI

Journal, Lou Prop!

From "The Status Seekers" by Vance Packard, published by David McKay.

Page 68.

Reference to a Richard Doan of Newtown, Connecticut, "who until recently was a highly respected dealer in antiques, and is now a radio executive."

"Mr. Doan related that one night he and his wife were watching Edward R. Murrow's television program 'Person-to-Person,' while Mr. Murrow was 'visiting' the New York apartment of a theatrical celebrity. The camera came to rest on a pair of eighteenth-century portraits. The Doans gasped in excitement . The portraits had, a few years ago, hung in their own living room until they had found a buyer. The theatrical celebrity modestly explained to Mr. Murrow, 'Ed, those aren't my folks...They're my wife's ancestors.'"

Course!

Person To Person

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. R. Murrow

from: J. Aaron - J. Zousmer

October 29, 1958

F.

We have the feeling we're being nipped away at.

Attached find Harrison's order discontinuing Trendex despite our protests.

Also six-weeks-old request to start getting ready for Christmas... Rosen told me this afternoon that it is on Harrison's desk. We have an ashtray gift order that should be signed tomorrow at the latest.

And in case you've forgotten, we agreed to a $1000 budget cut at the start of the season - with reservations on line charges.

On a more pleasant matter, we have agreed to do Burton a week from Friday.

K.C. Sent

Will you either have Miss Hogg send the attached telegram tonight or phone Burton. Lou Shollenberger tells us he's anxious to hear from you.

I will handle Burton (to get Jerry Lewis out of my conscience) and hope to see him Monday.

Maybe prior to that we can convince Warren to let us see Burton in the big room.

Exhibit No. 3 attached is for your amusement.

kt (Encl. 4)

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Zousmer cc: Mr. Aaron
Mr. Eliasberg

from: Mr. Harrison October 24, 1958

File

Dear Jesse:

I have requested that the Research Department discontinue the subscription for the special Trendex reports for PERSON TO PERSON effective after tonight's broadcast.

In the past we have, at your insistence, continued these ratings notwithstanding the fact that in the opinion of our Research Department and Sales staff the ratings have served no useful purpose.

The purpose for which you required them in the past is now being completely fulfilled by the Arbitron measurements which we shall receive daily, and we will furnish you with a copy on Monday morning of the preceding Friday night's Arbitron report.

For your information, the network has discontinued every special Trendex report in the house.

WSH:mb

FYI

Ed

I guess we have to go along, and be "refined."

P.S. Notice 7 CBS Trendex ratings in yesterday's paper!

Ed/ FH/

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Paul Rosen

from: Jesse Zousmer

September 17, 1958

You will recall PERSON TO PERSON was granted "an expenditure not to exceed $7,500" for a certain matter covered in my memorandum to you of November 5, 1957.

Inasmuch as would like to get this in the works as soon as possible could you approve a similar expenditure for the current year?

J. Z.

Oct 29

Rosen says "no same for spots yet"

✓

365

3

LENNEN & NEWELL, INC.

ADVERTISING

SAN FRANCISCO OFFICE
235 MONTGOMERY STREET

BEVERLY HILLS OFFICE
308 NORTH RODEO DRIVE

380 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 17, N. Y.

October 28, 1958

Mr. John Aaron
Co-Producer
PERSON TO PERSON
CBS Television Network
501 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear John:

Let me say first that commercial cueing on last Friday's PERSON TO PERSON was a great improvement and showed the time and effort applied to this problem. The only hitch was a little sloppy cueing of Murrow at the tail-end of the show. Chuck Hill seemed hung up on the phone with someone and dropped the reins momentarily. (UNTRUE)

I don't wish to send this script problem to the Supreme Court, but I fail to see why the agency representative at a program cannot have a copy of the show script during performance. We certainly realize that changes are made and that the script does not fully represent the finished production; however, it is a valuable guide for us during the show and a logical place to make notes. To assuage any doubts in your mind, these scripts are placed in a confidential file and never released for general perusal.

Let's remain friends, but please provide us with a script at air time.

Kindest regards.

Cordially,

LENNEN & NEWELL, INC.

William R. Seth
Program Supervisor

WRS:mn

October 27, 1958

Dear Bill:

I know that in the past few weeks you have been requesting a script of our Friday night show and that we have told you that they are not available.

The reason we have not been giving you one is that the script more often than not doesn't reflect what actually went on the air -- and that I imagine is your primary concern.

We have never permitted the so-called script to get out of our hands and are reluctant to do so now. Inasmuch as we have agreed to supply you each Monday with a full transcript of the air show, we feel that this should be adequate for your purposes and trust that you understand the problem at our end.

Kindest regards,

John A. Aaron

Mr. William Seth
Lennen & Newell, Inc.
380 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

P-P

Statement by Ed Murrow October,24,1959

Dr. Stanton has finally revealed publicly his ignorance both of news and the requirements of television production. He has discovered suddenly that not all diplomats at the United Nations will answer all of Larry LeSueur's questions. He suggests that Person-to-Person, a program with which I was associated for six years, was not what it purported to be. Surely Stanton must know that cameras, lights, and microphones don't just wander around a home. The producers must know who is going where and when and for how long. They must know whether the individual will require twenty seconds or two minutes to answer a question. The alternative to a degree of rehearsal would be chaos. I am sorry Dr. Stanton feels that I have participated in perpetrating a fraud upon the public. My conscience is clear. His seems to be bothering him.

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Herb Carlborg

from: Jesse Zousmer

October 22, 1958

We are not sending ourselves any sealed special delivery envelopes to hold for a grand jury but I call to your attention the third commercial for Kent for the October 24 show.

It starts: "There's a wonderful quality about this show. You get a feeling of people as they really are...and sometimes the results are surprising, aren't they".

We hope that our guests do nothing live to embarrass the taped commercial or the sponsor.

But after 5 years of living with the unpredictable we wouldn't want to bet on it.

J. Z.

cc: E. R. Murrow

PtoP

PERSON TO PERSON

October 22, 1958

Dear Helen:

We will do Chloe Gifford on PERSON TO PERSON sometime around the end of January or the beginning of February in connection with the Heart Fund Drive.

I'm sure we can call on you for aid -- if we should need it.

It is good of you to keep scouting guests for us.

Sincerely,

Jesse Zousmer

Miss Helen J. Sioussat
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
1735 De Sales Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

cc: Edward R. Murrow

nic

pto P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Zousmer

cc: Messrs. Murrow, Dawson, Hoag, Cassarle

from: Mr. Carlberg

October 20, 1958

Subject: P. Lorillard, Kent

Referring to your memo of October 9 and our subsequent discussion, I completely agree with you that the lead-in referred to was ridiculous. As you know, we have effected a change in a number of these lead-ins. I have finally, I believe, been able to convince the agency that material not in line with the facts, even though the intent is to pay respects to the program, has a negative effect both on the advertiser and on the show.

HAC:mcm

Hac

30

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: H. Carlborg cc: E. R. Murrow, T. Dawson, R. Hoag, H. Ommerle

from: Jesse Zousmer

October 9, 1958

I know you have approved the latest Kent commercial with misgivings if not with reluctance.

Mr. Aaron and I obviously have no desire to have a weekly hassle with the Lennen & Newell people.

It seems to us that we must reach some sort of equitable understanding with Lennen & Newell very soon.

To say as they do in the third commercial: "You know, Ed Murrow has a keen news sense and chooses his Person to Person guests accordingly. Most of them are in the news or making news."... is utterly ridiculous.

We agree Murrow has a keen news sense, but to say that Person to Person guests are chosen "accordingly"..."most of them are in the news or making news" is just not true.

For example: Jerry Lewis, our first guest, hasn't done anything newsworthy since his last picture.

Abbie Van Buren writes a daily column without reference to news.

President Goheen of Princeton got the job fifteen months ago.

Victor Riesel was blinded over two years ago.

Vincent Price was on the $64,000 Question way back.

I don't remember when Mata-Hari did anything newsworthy.

Among our upcoming guests are Jeanette MacDonald and Gene Raymond...news?

Herb, I hope you don't think we're quibbling. We just think Lennen & Newell are trying to define the show for their own commercial purposes with no regard to the facts.

ket

553

Ed/FYI

JA - JZ

BOB S..

DON'T KNOW IF YOU'VE READ THE REVIEW OF "OLD MAN AND THE SEA " IN THIS MORNING'S TRIB BUT AMONG OTHER ITEMS IN THE STORY OF HOW DIFFICULT IT WAS TO MAKE THE PIX (5,000,000 DOLLARS)... IT MENTIONED SPECIAL TRANSMITTER AND MICROPHONE FOR AUDIO SEQUENCES IN BOAT.....

IT WASN'T IN AN OCEAN AND IT DIDN'T COST 5,000,000 BUT WE DID THE SAME THING WITH MEL ALLEN.....

10/8/58 S

Pro P ~~Zousmer, J.~~

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. R. Murrow

from: J. Zousmer

f

October 8, 1958

Longacre 3-1000.

I am reliably informed that George Allen might be willing to play with us some Friday night.

He is generally available at the New Yorker hotel (although we have to do the show from Gettysburg).

I am told he will be in town all day Thursday and part of Friday until he goes vacationing with Ike.

J.Z.

no George V. Allen listed in Gettysburg only George E.

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Paul Rosen cc: E. R. Murrow

from: Jesse Zousmer

September 30, 1958

A number of crewmen of the submarine Nautilus were extremely helpful in rendering special services to us during the PERSON TO PERSON program last Friday night.

As you know, it has been our practice to pay for services rendered on every occasion.

In the past, this has usually taken the form of arranging a small party for the men who aided us, gave up shore leave, and in many cases, acted as part of our staff over an eight or ten day period.

In the case of the Nautilus, the crewmen have decided that they would be most pleased with a cash contribution made to the pregnant wife of a crewman who recently died aboard the ship.

Accordingly, could you use your good offices to get us -- quickly -- a check for $250 made out to Mrs. Irene Szarzynski, which I will forward to Captain Anderson.

For your information, the crew desires that we give no publicity to this.

J. Z.

jk

553

PtoP

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Messrs. Aaron & Zousmer

cc: Messrs. Murrow & Howard

from: Paul A. Rosen

September 29, 1958

I confirm to you that release forms covering possible foreign use of PERSON TO PERSON tvr's will not be sent to participants in the 1958 - 1959 broadcast season until at least four weeks following their appearance.

P. A. R.

PAR:jr

565

CLASS OF SERVICE

This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

WESTERN UNION

TELEGRAM

Ptop

1201

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

SYMBOLS

DL = Day Letter

NL = Night Letter

LT = International Letter Telegram

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

PDCOS CTA001

CT AKA042 NL PD=AKRON OHIO 26=

1938 SEP 27 AM 12 34

EDWARD R MURROW= CBS

NYK=

YOUR PROGRAM TONIGHT INTERESTING AND ENJOYABLE

CONGRATULATIONS AND BEEST WISHES TO YOU AND YOURS=

MR AND MRS PAUL CLARK=

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

P to P.

Friday
9-26
6:15 pm

7

(over telephone)

Western Union

Dear Ed: Sincere best wishes for another successful PERSON TO PERSON season.

Bill Wilson, Jr.
Young & Rubicam
Chicago, Illinois

Copy given to ERM.

P to P

WEED TELEVISION CORPORATION

Television Station Representatives

New York * Chicago * Boston * Detroit * Atlanta * Hollywood * San Francisco * Des Moines * Dallas

579 Fifth Avenue * New York 17, N.Y.

September 25, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS Television
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

I know you will be happy to know your letter to me on PERSON TO PERSON resulted in us getting an order for P. Lorillard PERSON TO PERSON on KTVA and KTVF.

Many thanks for all your help. We certainly appreciate it. Augie Hiebert sends his kindest regards.

Best regards.

Sincerely yours,

Roy

Roy Smith

RVS:fl

Person To Person

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E.R. Murrow

from: J. Aaron

September 24, 1958

Attached is the carbon of the letter we sent Gene Kelly for reference if he calls you. Also, attached is a note from Bob Hoag from the CBS Sales Department regarding the Toy Show.

J.A.

50

September 23, 1958

Dear Gene:

As you may have heard, we have suggested that you and Milton Berle share a "Person to Person" program with us this fall.

Since you are in Milton's New York apartment and he is currently in your west coast home, it occurred to us that there were a number of interesting possibilities - the most obvious being that he could cue you around his apartment and you could cue him around your's.

I understand that Berle is enthusiastic about the idea, that he is agreeable to doing the program, and feels Friday night, November 28th - Thanksgiving weekend - is an ideal date.

I gather one of the immediate problems, from your point of view, is the uncertainty as to the opening date of "Flower Drum Song", though at last reports I heard it was to be Thursday, November 27th. If that is the case, there would be no serious problems since "Person to Person" involves a minimum amount of time and preparation - no more than a few hours.

If, on the other hand, it develops that the show is still on the road at that time, I am hopeful that we can still "firm up" the date of the 28th and arrange for you to come back to town for that one night.

You can be assured that we would make it as easy and pleasant for you as we possibly could and that the end result would more than compensate for the minor inconveniences. We can easily work around your own schedule and prepare a comprehensive outline of what we would do that evening well in advance of the program.

Will you give some thought to this and let me know if the November 28th date is satisfactory under the circumstances I have outlined. Since Berle has already indicated his acceptance, I think it only proper that we let him know the outcome.

If all is well at your end, it might serve a good purpose if we got together for lunch or drinks some time prior to the 28th.

Sincerely,

Edward R. Murrow

Mr. Gene Kelly
525 Park Avenue
New York
New York

jk

September 23, 1958

Mr. Robert E. Ring
CBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Bob:

Just a note to tell you of the disposition of the "Toy Show". As you know, I discussed this at length with Charlie Mastrogger - Director of Advertising for J-M's. The net result of the discussion is that he is quite interested in the show. My presentation was somewhat lacking in specifics and in addition, had to be in a minor key because of the difficulties involved in producing the show for 1958.

We left it that I was to initiate proceedings in the latter part of May or early June, 1959, for a telecast date the first week in December of '59.

In my opinion, this is a great possibility for J-M's and is something that could be done year after year. I will be in touch with you at a later date regarding next year.

Cordially yours,

John G. Hagland

JGH/bh

cc: Messrs. George Falk
Jerry Lessner ✓

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Messrs. Aaron & Zousmer

from: Paul A. Rosen

September 19, 1958

Please be advised that we presently contemplate that the PERSON TO PERSON broadcast now scheduled for Friday, December 12, 1958, will be pre-empted on that date.

If there are any changes in this date, or in the circumstance, I will advise you.

P. A. R.

PAR:jr

565

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. R. Murrow

from: J. Zousmer

September 12, 1958

Sam Rayburn can be reached by phone at Justice 3-4125 Bonham, Texas.

We make these two suggestions:

1. That we offer him the date November 7 -- the first Friday following the election with a Washington origination. If he can't be in Washington on that date, we can offer him November 14, 21 or 28.

2. You might casually explain to him that while the program is commercial, he will have no connection with it and will be separated from the commercial by your introducing him and signing him off.

After consulting the experts, it appears that Bonham is too difficult and costly for us and Dallas is just his sister's home. Of course, we have no objection to having his sister, or is it sisters, on the program with him.

J. Z.

50

jk

CLASS OF SERVICE

This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

WESTERN UNION

TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

1201

SYMBOLS

DL = Day Letter

NL = Night Letter

LT = International Letter Telegram

1958 SEP 8 PM 3 47

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

(45)

NA293 PD=WUX NEW YORK NY 8 513PME=

EDWARD R MURROW DLR IMMY BY BOY RADIO NEWS=

=485 MADISON AVE=

DELIGHTED THAT YOU MANAGED TO FILL THE TIME AND GET OFF ON TIME=

JOHN AND JESSE=

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

Mr Elroy. Neil
(Person to Person)

August 14, 1958

Mr. Neil McElroy
Secretary of Defense
Washington, D. C.

I DOUBT THAT YOU WILL RECALL OUR CONVERSATION SOME TIME BEFORE YOU ASSUMED YOUR PRESENT DUTIES REGARDING A VISIT FROM PERSON TO PERSON BUT IF YOU COULD BE DISPOSED TO LET US VISIT YOU SOME TIME IN OCTOBER WE WOULD ALL BE DELIGHTED STOP REGARDS

Edward R. Murrow

News
514-43

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

April 11, 1958

MEMO FOR Mr. Murrow:

Because this is Neil McElroy's first talk as Secretary of Defense, and because it deals primarily with the proposed reorganization of the Defense Department -- a subject of major importance to all of us -- I thought a few of his friends might be interested in seeing it.

O. M. Gale
Special Assistant

McElroy Neil

TALK BY SECRETARY OF DEFENSE NEIL McELROY
AT THE NATIONAL PRESS CLUB
WASHINGTON, D. C.
THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 1958

I want to congratulate the National Press Club on its having reached its fiftieth anniversary. In the uncertain world we live in, that is indeed an accomplishment, and I compliment your officers and members, past and present, on having achieved it. I hope you will continue for many more years to provide this excellent forum and to render the many other services that have made this the outstanding group of its kind in the world.

When my predecessor, Mr. Charles Wilson, appeared before you just two years ago, the title of his talk was "Ivory Soap's Not Good Enough." He was referring to the purity of the product which, as the makers have been pointing out with becoming modesty but nevertheless with insistence for something over seventy years, falls fifty-six hundredths of one per cent short of perfection. I can tell you that the makers of Ivory Soap agree with Mr. Wilson's statement that it is not good enough and are constantly working to improve it. Of course, Charlie might have used the illustration to point out that, with respect to the country's defense, anything short of optimum must be subject to examination and the search for improvement. It is in that spirit that we have approached the question of improving the organization of the country's military establishment.

This subject was officially opened, as you will recall, with the President's State of the Union message on January 9, and immediately it moved into a high priority position. At that time the President pointed to certain aspects of the defense organization that needed improving, stated that we were studying possible organizational changes, and set down certain objectives which should be sought as a result of these changes.

Very soon thereafter a panel of consultants was formed to study with me the existing organization centered in and symbolized by the Pentagon, to see where it had structural or functional shortcomings, and to advise me on improvements that might be made. It was understood from the start that the decision on what to recommend to the President would have to be mine. It was recognized that unanimity on all points would be highly unlikely and that the group would function rather as a study and discussion group than as one which would prepare a report or itself submit formal recommendations.

This group consisted of the present and two previous Chairmen of the Joint Chiefs of Staff -- General Twining, Admiral Arthur W. Radford, and General Omar Bradley; William C. Foster, former Deputy Secretary of Defense; Nelson Rockefeller, chairman of the President's Advisory Committee on Government Reorganization; General Alfred Gruenther when his previous commitments enabled him to join us; and, as a full-time Special Assistant to lay out the study program, organize the project and keep us all working hard, as well as adding his own most valuable counsel, Charles A. Coolidge, former Assistant Secretary of Defense, who in a very short time won the name by which he was called thereafter: Mr. Whip. I believe you will agree that this group of consultants consists of individuals who are about as free of political or service bias as any group of experienced and knowledgeable people could be.

We sought the views of a great many highly qualified individuals, including, of course, the Service Secretaries and the Chiefs of Staff, but including also former Secretaries and Deputy Secretaries of Defense, commanders of the unified and specified commands, military officers and civilians with a close knowledge of the workings of the department and views on the subject. These were interviewed by the panel, usually by personal interview but sometimes by letter when a personal discussion was impracticable.

The group met with great frequency, and I cannot speak too highly of the hard work and thought and time these men gave to the project. There were some differences of opinion, but the important thing is that the various views were clearly expressed, and debated until the pros and cons were clear, so that in reaching my recommendations, I knew what issues were involved, and what the alternatives were. While I am confident that each member of the panel would have ways in which he would change the details of my final recommendation to the President, I am equally confident that they believe the final proposal is a sound one.

The President worked with us in the development of the proposal, attending one of our meetings at the Pentagon, discussing many of its fundamental principles with us in smaller groups, and advising us of his own thinking as it progressed. It is not surprising, then, that his message to Congress last week embodied all of the important features of the recommendation which had been made to him, although it should be clearly understood that the proposals the President has made are his own and derive much of their strength from the vitality of expression that reflects his own convictions in these matters.

I imagine that many of the questions you may ask me later will have to do with the reorganization plan, and so that we can all start from the same place, I think it might be well for me to outline briefly the major proposals and some of the reasons for them.

The proposed changes would clear command channels so that orders will proceed directly to unified commands from the Commander-in-Chief and the Secretary of Defense through the Joint Chiefs of Staff which would add an operations section for this purpose. As we go into a period when a potential enemy may have operational long range missiles in substantial quantities, our reaction time must be measured in minutes instead of hours. I am informed that in every way this nation has fought in the last century, we have had to change our military organization after war has started. We no longer have time in which to change command lines or to shift from a peacetime to a wartime organization. Any such shift must be made now. Under the new recommendation, orders would go from the President as Commander-in-Chief to the Secretary of Defense, through the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the unified command without the intermediate step which now interposes one of the departments as executive agent between the Commander-in-Chief and the Unified Commander.

The organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff will be strengthened to provide the President and the Secretary of Defense with the professional assistance they must have for strategic planning and for the operational direction of our combat commands. The present Joint Staff is handicapped by a rather cumbersome committee system which acts on documents before they are reviewed by the Joint Chiefs themselves. This committee system is being eliminated and an integrated Operations Division will be added to the Joint Staff to provide the operational assistance necessary for the strategic direction of the unified commands. The important matters now constantly requiring the attention of the members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff demand so much of their time that they must be permitted to delegate major portions of their service responsibilities to their Vice Chiefs. By this action the Chiefs can give the majority of their time to their responsibilities as Joint Chiefs of Staff, which would constitute their principal function.

The three military departments would of course be continued as the major operating divisions within the Department of Defense to perform the vast and important management, budgeting, research, personnel administration, training and logistic functions of the Department. Their responsibility would encompass many and complex activities that support the unified commands.

Another and very essential point in the recommendation is the establishment of a Director of Defense Research and Engineering, to strengthen the research function of the Department and avoid overlapping and duplication. It is hard to overstate the importance of research to the future security of our nation. The development of a weapons system of the future is costly in dollars and in highly trained personnel. The Defense Department directly or indirectly uses 50% of the top scientists in the country. It is imperative that this large program be guided and controlled in a way which will use these resources with maximum efficiency. Most of the research would continue to be done within the departments as at present; but all research and engineering in the Department of Defense would be supervised by the Director of Defense Research and Engineering acting for the Secretary.

The proposed reorganization would also make clearer the authority of the Secretary of Defense. The National Security Act gives the Secretary "direction, authority and control" over his entire department. But at the same time this law provides that the military departments are to be "separately administered" by their respective Secretaries. The President has recommended eliminating the provisions prescribing separate administration of the military departments as a means of reducing needless argument which adds to the difficulty of administering the Department.

He has also asked that the Secretary of Defense strengthen the department supervision over the activities of the various military departments in the fields of Legislative Liaison and Public Affairs to remove some of the present tendencies toward confusion, overlapping of effort, and a public impression of undesirable interservice rivalry.

The proposal also seeks greater flexibility in money matters "both among and within the military departments." We will not suggest that Congress appropriate large sums of money to the Secretary of Defense for him to distribute as he sees fit; our objective is simply to have reasonable flexibility which will permit us, in a time of sudden technological breakthroughs and rapid shifts in priorities, to transfer funds from less insistent projects to more vital ones. It would be our expectation that the percentage of total funds for which the Department of Defense might request transfer would be a minor percentage of the total. Moreover, whatever transfer authority is granted would be used only under a system of notification to the appropriate Committees of Congress.

These are the principal points emphasized by the President's message to Congress. Some of them require legislation and we are now in the process of developing it. We hope to have the necessary legislation before Congress shortly after it reconvenes next week. We have great respect for the knowledge and experience in these matters possessed by many members of Congress as well as for their impressive zeal and sincerity on matters pertaining to the nation's defense. We look forward, therefore, to discussing these matters with them and are confident that constructive legislation will result.

Before leaving this subject let me mention a few of the things which the proposed reorganization plan does not do:

It does not set up a single chief of staff; the present Joint Chiefs of Staff will continue to serve as a corporate body as staff assisting the Secretary of Defense and advising the President.

It does not set up the Secretary of Defense as a czar or dictator; his existing authority will be merely clarified and he will be given modest flexibility in money matters.

It does not contemplate abolition of the traditional Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marines; the President is most emphatic on that point.

It does not set up a Prussian-German-type General Staff.

I have dwelt at considerable length on the main features of the reorganization proposal but I suspect this will be a primary subject of conversation in Washington and elsewhere for some weeks to come. I felt, therefore, that it deserved the largest share of my time before you.

I would like also to mention briefly the additions to our present defense program which we are seeking in our supplemental Fiscal 1959 appropriation request. I have on a number of occasions told Congress that I would not hesitate to come before them to seek additional funds for defense when in my judgment it was in the nation's interest to do so. The appropriations for military programs are planned 18 months or more before some of the money will be spent. It is hard to predict with accuracy how far along we will be in a particular development program, how successful a testing program will prove, what our precise needs and opportunities will be a year or more later. If the importance of a particular weapons system grows and we decide to put more money into it we look very hard at our current expenditures to see if the development of this weapon will not permit us to reduce expenditures in some other area. A good deal of the money comes from such sources. But it has proved necessary to seek supplementary appropriations this year in addition to the regular budget.

The proposal before the House Appropriations Committee at present provides for a continuation of the production of B-52's and the KC-135 refueling tankers which constitute the heavy bomber component of our important Strategic Air Command. It provides for accelerated development of the NIKE-ZEUS anti-ballistic missile system, a weapon of great importance as we face the threat of long range missiles which must be detected and destroyed in a matter of minutes.

The request would also permit further acceleration of the POLARIS program. This, as you know, is the weapons system which provides for the underwater launching of solid propellant ballistic missiles from submarines. We regard it as one of our most promising programs for deterrence.

In view of the great Soviet submarine capability, defense against anti-submarine warfare is one of our primary concerns. The supplementary appropriation includes funds for use in this area, primarily for research for improving our knowledge and competence in the detection of submarines.

Funds are included also for research and development of a solid propellant ICBM, and for acceleration of the TITAN ICBM. Another missile provided with additional funds is the GAM-77, more colorfully known as the Hound-dog, an air-to-surface missile carried by the B-52 which will enable our SAC bombers to launch their weapons hundreds of miles from a hostile target and thus avoid the major concentration of the defenses of that target.

To assist with the research, development and testing of such missiles as these, funds are provided for the improvement and further instrumentation of the Pacific missile range.

Another area covered is Army modernization, to provide advanced weapons and equipment to Army commands to replace obsolescent weapons of various types. These include new anti-tank weapons, Honest John atomic adaptation kits, battlefield radar kits, improved reconnaissance systems, communications and equipment provided to increase mobility.

Finally, the Advanced Research Projects Agency would be provided with funds for a variety of projects involving the program of reconnaissance satellites and space explorations.

There are other matters connected with defense which are of great importance and current interest. One, for example, would be the Revised Pay bill which has now passed the House and is awaiting Senate action. It emphasizes the principles of the Cordiner plan and we believe would make a major contribution in an area of vital importance -- the attracting and retaining of highly qualified personnel in greater numbers.

However, I believe our remaining time might better be used by letting you select the subjects rather than myself. I will welcome the opportunity to answer your questions to the extent that I can on any of the matters which fall within my general responsibilities. The magnitude as well as the importance of our defense program make it everybody's business. Public understanding of the problems and issues involved is most important. Many of you perform a vital role in informing the public, stimulating them to intelligent thought. All of you are knowledgeable and articulate and whether or not you always agree with what we are doing at the Pentagon, your informed opinions can be extremely helpful in maintaining informed public interest.

I want to thank you again, for giving me this opportunity to discuss some of these matters with you.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Murrow, Mr. Aaron, Mr. Zousmer

from: Mr. Ommerle

July 14, 1958

PERSON TO PERSON is now scheduled to return to the air September 26th instead of September 12th.

HARRY G. OMMERLE

HGO:ejp

cc: Mr. Hylan, Mr. Fagan

Rosanto Rosar
Business

CBS TELEVISION

A Division of Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

485 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 22, N.Y. • PLAZA 1-2345

WILLIAM H. HYLAN
Vice President of Sales Administration

June 20, 1958

Mr. Francis C. Barton, Jr.
Lennen & Newell, Inc.
380 Madison Avenue
New York 17, New York

Dear Frank:

I am sorry that I have been unable to get back to you sooner on the matter of Ed Murrow's product participation when P. Lorillard co-sponsors PERSON TO PERSON. The delay has been caused by the serious consideration of all aspects of the problems presented in the sixth paragraph of your June 13 order letter.

Ed is, of course, very happy at the impending Lorillard sponsorship, and has every desire to co-operate in the effective use of the program to promote the sale of Kent cigarettes. As I informed Nick some time ago, Ed has consistently maintained a policy against doing commercial lead-ins on this program. However, when he smokes or shows a cigarette pack on camera during the program, it will, of course, be the sponsoring brand.

The matter of what Ed does off-the-air in his private life is somewhat more complex. He feels that to be forced by contract to accept your stipulation completely would compromise his personal integrity.

It could very well be that Kent or another Lorillard cigarette may be so to his liking that he would adopt it as a matter of preference. In any event, he is sincere in his desire not to cause Lorillard any embarrassment and for that reason will carry his cigarettes in a case so as to avoid any undesirable publicity.

The foregoing gives you a favorable answer to most of your question, Frank, and I hope the forthright explanation as to Mr. Murrow's position on the last point will be understood and accepted by our mutual client.

Sincerely,

WH

WH:mjn

bcc: Messrs. Cowan, Murrow, Dawson, Coleman, Fagan.

Person to Person.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Messrs. Aaron & Zousmer cc: Mr. Murrow

from: Mr. Omnerle

June 11, 1958

What would you think of a PERSON TO PERSON SHOW combining visits to Mervyn LeRoy and Buddy Adler?

As the head of Twentieth Century Fox, Buddy Adler is pretty hot news right now with, I understand, LIFE, TIME and NEWSWEEK giving him a big break in July.

Mervyn LeRoy's "NO TIME FOR SERGEANTS" is setting all-time records at the Music Hall right now.

If you are interested in pursuing this, I would appreciate your letting me know.

HARRY G. OMNERLE

HGO:ejp

565

PTP Bus.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Tom Dawson cc: E. R. Murrow

from: Jesse Zousmer

May 30, 1958

If and when the problem of changing the closing format of PERSON TO PERSON comes up again you might be interested in these figures which we had drawn up for us a few months ago.

They are based on the Nielsen National report for November-December 1957. The figures compare Average Audience Ratings for PERSON TO PERSON with a combined average of 7 other shows (What's My Line?, Studio One, U.S. Steel, Playhouse 90, Suspicion, Jane Wyman, Your Hit Parade).

In the 10:30 to 11 segment the PERSON TO PERSON rating was 22.7 against 16.8 for the 7 program average.

In the last 2 minutes our rating was 19.5 vs. 14.0.

The figures also show that our ratio of the last 2 minutes over the complete program was 85% vs. 83% for the 7 program average.

If one can accept any rating figures as reliable these would seem to indicate that the last 2 minutes of PERSON TO PERSON hold up at a higher level than for any of the other shows in the same time period.

If and when the "sponsors" start putting the pressure on you I wish you would arrange to talk to me and Mr. Aaron for a few minutes.

J. Z.

nic

553

P. to P. Bus.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. R. Murrow cc: J. Aaron

from: J. Zousmer

May 29, 1958

I had a call from Jack Bailhe from Grant Agency this morning. He told me local florist in Kilgore, Texas very good friend of Cliburns' -- knows they love flowers -- particularly red carnations -- thinks it would be great idea to have carnations in apartment -- and let them talk briefly about love of flowers.

Then said Bailhe: "What can I tell Gordon Conn?" (Advertising Manager for FTD). I told Bailhe to tell Conn "to go to hell". I also told Bailhe that, as he very well knows, we always have flowers in the house and that just because Sophia Loren said she loved flowers, we felt no compulsion to try to direct every guest into a flower plug.

J. Z.

jk

203

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E.R.M.

from: J. Zousmer

May 20, 1958

I've solved the Huntington Hartford mystery. Seems he sent a cable to London (we're trying trace it).

Problem is this: he felt that we were peeved because he ruled out the boat visit. I told him we were. He felt we should have done him from his home. I told him the deal was the boat and his lawyers were getting in our hair and we don't like lawyers.

So he wanted to lunch to explain everything.

I spoke with him for about a half hour...very decent guy...now agrees to do the show from the boat in the fall. Turns out he was embarrassed by his riches. Felt that to show off the boat after he had just dropped a load of dough on his Jane Eyre production might have started something.

Anyhow - we are friends. And he most anxious cement it with lunch, even on the boat.

Can we squeeze him in some early-in-the-week lunch?

J. Z.

m T W

Wed June 11. Pierre

Sure any day

CBS RADIO

Office Communication

to: Messrs. Aaron & Zousmer cc: Mr. Murrow

from: Mr. Seward

April 30, 1958

I attended a Dutch Treat luncheon yesterday and sat near Cleveland Amory. After the luncheon, during which he and I discussed his PROPER BOSTONIANS, LAST RESORTS and an opus now being written -- WHO KILLED SOCIETY -- I had the feeling that he would provide a very interesting conversation in a PERSON TO PERSON interview.

J.M.S.

1137

Person to Person,

National Library Week–March 16-22, 1958

"FOR A BETTER-READ, BETTER-INFORMED AMERICA"

Sponsored by the American Library Association and National Book Committee, Inc.

ADDRESS

National Library Week • 24 West 40th Street, New York 18 • WIsconsin 7-1616

STEERING COMMITTEE

HAROLD K. GUINZBURG
Chairman
President, The Viking Press, Inc.

DAVID H. CLIFT
Vice Chairman
Executive Secretary
American Library Assn.

THEODORE WALLER
Vice Chairman
Vice President, School and Library Division
Grolier Society, Inc.

BERNARD BARNES
Vice President
Time, Inc.

DOUGLAS M. BLACK
President
Doubleday & Company

GILBERT W. CHAPMAN
President
The Yale & Towne Mfg. Co.

WARD CHENEY
Secretary-Treasurer
National Book Committee, Inc.

MARCHETTE CHUTE
Biographer

LOUIS G. COWAN
Vice President
Columbia Broadcasting System

JOHN FISCHER
Editor
Harper's Magazine

ROBERT E. KENYON, JR.
President
Magazine Publishers Assn., Inc.

DAN LACY
Managing Director
American Book Publishers
Council, Inc.

WILLIAM I. NICHOLS
Editor and Publisher
This Week Magazine

NORMAN H. STROUSE
President
J. Walter Thompson Company

* * * * *

JOHN S. ROBLING
Director

JANET BALDWIN
Publicity

LEIGH CHAMBERLAIN Promotion

VIRGINIA H. MATHEWS
Field Organization

April 30, 1958

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Thank you for your excellent support of the first National Library Week on PERSON TO PERSON March 7th. Reports from all parts of the country, including the official evaluations from state committees, show that it was a resounding success. New interest in libraries and reading have been stirred in communities all over America.

We will send you a complete official report as soon as it is published. In the meantime, we wish to acknowledge your cooperation which made an invaluable contribution to the success of this public service program.

The National Book Committee, in response to the tremendous demand from state citizen committees, has decided to continue this program in 1959, in cooperation with the American Library Association.

Sincerely yours,

John S. Robling

John S. Robling

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y.

JSR.mr
cc: Mr. Jesse Zousmer

Personal to Person for your files?

April 23, 1958

Dear Mr. Stein:

Many thanks for your cordial letter of April 1.

My colleagues on PERSON TO PERSON and I are finding our association with the members of FTD a most pleasurable one.

Sincerely yours,

S/ERM

Mr. Victor Stein
359 Sutter Street
San Francisco, California

mcc

Albert O. Stein
Flowers
359 SUTTER STREET / SAN FRANCISCO
DOUGLAS-2-5544
Victor Stein

April 1, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I have long been an admirer of you and Person to Person. Needless to say, as a member of FTD, I am pleased that we are associated.

As a Past President I have been closely identified with our advertising program and have been an advocate of television as the best media.

Please know that I am extremely gratified and pleased with your presentation and am confident that the desired results will surpass our expectations.

Sincerely

Victor Stein

Victor Stein

VS/a

P2P

March 20, 1958

Dear Mrs. Seaman:

Thank you for your letter of February 24th and for your suggestion that we interview young Barton Weber on PERSON TO PERSON.

I will take up this suggestion with my colleagues, and if we decide we can do anything about it, we will certainly let you know.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Charles Seaman, Sr.
Three Oakwood Drive
Belleville, Illinois

mac

gave c.c. + Mrs S's letter to P to P pte P. Ben.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Ralph Comperts cc: E. R. Murrow

from: Jesse Zousmer

March 19, 1958

Regarding your suggestion that we prepare to replace Ken Utt for 4 weeks (2 for "Tale of Two Cities" and 2 for his vacation.).

I am informed that his days on "Tale of Two Cities" will mean only that he will arrive in our studio on March 28 a little later than usual -- at about 9 p.m. -- but still in time to do the show.

I have also discovered that Utt does not plan to vacation until after PERSON TO PERSON is off the air for the summer.

J. Zousmer

P. to P. Bus

CBS TELEVISION

A Division of Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

485 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 22, NEW YORK · PLAZA 1-2345

MERLE S. JONES
President

March 17, 1958

Mr. John L. Bodette
General Manager
Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association
200 Lafayette Building
Detroit 26, Michigan

Dear John:

I was so pleased to learn from your recent letter that your associates feel as they do about F.T.D. sponsoring PERSON TO PERSON.

As I told you at the time we worked out this arrangement, I believe this is a perfect combination of product and program. All of us at CBS Television wish you and your organization continued success.

I am sending a copy of this correspondence to Ed Murrow, as I know he will be delighted to learn of the reaction of your associates.

Sincerely,

MSJ

MSJ:nk
cc: Messrs. Cowan
Hylan
Murrow

Seldes, Gilbert

March 5, 1958

Dear Gilbert:

I am distressed that you are aggrieved. My only suggestion is that if you do not desire a candid answer, then do not pose questions in what you choose to call "a semi-public place."

I suggest we terminate this correspondence since I doubt that it will be of any major interest to historians and suspect that it reflects no considerable credit upon either of us.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Gilbert Seldes
127 East 57 Street
New York, New York

mce

~~25 W 53 St.~~
127 E 57 St.

125e57
NYC 22
Mar 1

Dear Ed:

For the record:

When I wrote you yesterday, I did not have the text of the paragraph which offended you in front of me and based my answer on the quote from it contained in the letter written to me by your colleagues.

I have looked at the text. The theme is stated in the first line, the operative word is "formula." That is what I am writing about. I did not think it necessary to repeat the word later.

I suggest to you that if I criticized the isolation booth on a quiz show I would not be implying motives to the producer.

Also I remind you that my request for a recording was made in connection with an enterprise of the Fund for Adult Education. It would have been possible for you to send the tape directly to the Fund and thereby prevent me from making any use of it whatever.

Because I had criticized the formula of your program, you said in a semi-public place, in front of a group of people including men with whom I work and with whom I couldn't work if my integrity was in doubt, that you couldn't be sure what use I would make of your recording. My own feeling--that this was said in jest--was not shared by them. Your implication was that I was dishonorable.

It seems to me that, between us, I have the better right to be aggrieved.

Everything essential I said about your program repeated what I had said in The Public Arts. After that book, dedicated in part to yourself, was published, you said to me that it made you re-examine your own work. Your words were, in effect, "I have to get up from behind my desk and go round and look at the person who's been sitting there." It was the most flattering thing ever said to me about my work --but more than that, it seemed to me to indicate something rather great about you. Something I persist in thinking you possess.

Faithfully yours,

Gilbert

Edward R. Murrow, Esq.

Gilbert Seldes

Ed/Pt

125e57
nyc 22
feb 26

Dear Mr Zousmer
Dear Mr Aaron

It's nice of you to attribute my remarks about Person to Person to a temporary state of being out of sorts. But the brief note you read in The Saturday Review only repeated what I had written in The Public Arts--a book dedicated in part to Edward R. Murrow.

I'm sorry that your letter didn't reach me a little earlier, but there are people on your side and one of the most effective of them has written a letter of reproof to SR which is being printed with my reply in the issue out next Tuesday.

It would be useless for me to recapitulate here the argument I make there. One point, scantily made in print, I can make to you : of course I didn't mean that you tried--or could--reduce the whole of your roster to nonentities. But I have to stick by my own experience : I've never seen one person on the program (except Krishna Menon) who came off as an impressive or interesting human being and (this is in the reply) every guest I've myself known has been from 25 to 50% less of a human being, a total person, than I've known him or her to be.

I think the drive and emphasis of your program tends to make people trivial. I do not think that you two and Ed have a low concept of humanity, but that you've let your program get out of hand--or possibly that the formula and the mechanics are wrong.

And you will not, never, nohow, shame me out of saying so. Morris Ernst, the defender whose letter is being printed, implies that I'm not a good critic. I am a good critic.

Re-reading your letter I am troubled by your reference to "a speaking acquaintance with only one member" of your staff. The only man I know on P-tp-P is Ed and if you like I'll show signed letters from him indicating something more than a speaking acquaintance.

Faithfully yours,

Gilbert Seldes

Seldes.

125e57
nyc 22
feb 27

Dear Ed:

I was of course aware of an undertone of displeasure in our brief conversation at the Century Club yesterday but the one thing I felt sure was not seriously meant was the imputation that I would make any use, beyond the one I described to you, of the recording I had asked you to make. I still can't believe it although you have put it in writing.

And I have to take this in a context you do not yet know--the attack I've been forced to make on Person to Person in reply to Morris Ernst's letter--which will appear in the next issue of The Saturday Review.

It is not agreeable to me to dislike anything you do because, as you know, I have a superlative opinion of the best things you do. As I note in the new SR piece I've called you the conscience of the industry. But I have my own professional conscience and must say what I believe. I believe P-to-P is not only a bad program, but one which lowers the standards for others--precisely because you are doing it.

I do not find any attribution of motives in the brief paragraph I wrote. I find a judgment on the effect of the program and a judgment on the concepts behind it. The only motives I can think of in connection with any TV program which some people might consider unworthy are the desire to be popular and the desire to make money. I approve of both of these. I do not approve of all the methods by which these ends are achieved. It is the degree of intelligence behind the program I challenge and, as I wrote to your colleagues, I think you have been betrayed by your mechanisms.

You have yourself, in conversation with me, contrasted the seriousness of See it Now with the lightness of P-to-P. In your interview with Pete Martin you indicated that other people--you mentioned your wife--once had a low opinion of the program. They have changed their minds, I have not. I do not think this goes beyond the bounds of legitimate criticism.

I am profoundly disturbed by your imputation that I would act dishonorably in regard to you. Even assuming that I have been intemperate, I have given you no cause to think so. And nothing you do or don't do will alter my judgment that you are one of a tiny handful of people who can, and do, bring honor to your profession.

Faithfully yours,

Gilbert

Gilbert Seldes

Edward R. Murrow, Esq.

February 25, 1958

Personal

Dear Gilbert:

I would prefer not to do the recording you request.

Never have I raised my voice in public about any criticism of programs with which I am connected. I am not now about to do so. However, I am obliged to tell you privately that in your piece on PERSON TO PERSON you attributed motives to my colleagues and myself that went far beyond the bounds of legitimate criticism.

Your language was so intemperate that I cannot be sure what use you would make of any recording I might produce.

Sincerely,

Mr. Gilbert Seldes
125 East 57 Street
New York 22, New York

fc

30 January 1958

Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York City

Dear Ed:

I am taking out after you again and before my totally ill-informed and uncalled for attack on you appears in print I think I better remind you that you promised to record for me some excerpts from your talk at Brandeis. I am enclosing the text with those pages marked which I would most like to have in your own voice.

This would be preceded by one of two statements, the choice being yours. One; I would say that the following is a recording made by the most thoughtful of all broadcasters expressing his misgivings about some of the present trends in the business--with a few additional uncomplimentary remarks about yourself and identification of the occasion when the remarks were originally made, and, two, you could do this yourself saying what is perfectly true "This is Edward R. Murrow" and proceding to say that I had asked you to record a portion of your remarks, etc.

I figure that somewhere around C.B.S. the facilities for recording could be made available to you. You will be in good company because Frank Stanton has also agreed to put something on tape for me. In case you have forgotten, the recording will be used at sessions of discussion groups under the auspices of the Fund for Adult Education.

I was glad to see that your Marian Anderson program was so well received because I thought it was as absorbing as it was important.

Faithfully yours,

Gilbert Seldes

125 E. 57 St.
New York City 22.

* a Seldesian error heard the remark: "He's the one who really started me reading", or, "He taught me to doubt", or "That's the one who really stretched my horizon". I can only add that my own small part in this operation has given me more satisfaction than anything I have ever done.

As I understand it, this Award that I am to receive is in the general area of the Humanities. In radio and television circles that's a pretty high-brow term. And yet the mass media must be concerned with it. It was Joseph Wood Krutch who said: "The humanities as opposed to the sciences are concerned with whatever is important to man but cannot be measured and is not susceptible to valid experiment." So radio and television must concern themselves with the Humanities, unless they chose to limit themselves to the function of entertainment. Television is growing so fast that those in charge of it have hardly time to administer it well, let alone to think of its place in civilization. If these instruments are to survive, they must strengthen and affirm the values that are the essence of our civilization. This being true, it is not enough to entertain the greatest numbers; there also must be full appreciation of our historic heritage, wise understanding of our institutions and traditions, familiarity with our classics in literature and the arts, and persistent attention to our ethical principles. I am well aware that the bulk of the money that pays for television and radio comes from a relatively small number of corporations. Hence the thinking of the executives in these corporations will have a profound influence on what happens in television and radio. And that is saying that they will greatly influence and could possibly decide the course of our civilization. And it is insisting that they cannot abdicate this responsibility by assigning it to an advertising agency.

We now know that our civilization can be snuffed out overnight. We know that while we ourselves did not create it, we ourselves can lose it. It is committed to us. We also know that we can save ourselves from nuclear destruction by "buying" a different civilization, one that does not include our values of freedom, or cherish like ours the dignity of the individual. We know we are not making this bargain. We value our civilization. So we begin to know that we must value it if we are not to lose it. But if we are going to survive as a nation and a civilization we must do so consciously. This means that the mass media must pay more attention to the humanities. The Humanist is one who cares, and is preoccupied with what is worth caring about. Another characteristic of the humanist is that he is preoccupied with the mystery of personality. People for him are always persons, and in these days that often makes him lonely. Preoccupation with science turns persons into people - a statistic on a chart - tendencies and "characteristics symbolized by curves neatly drawn on graphs." The Humanist is concerned not with manipulation but with understanding. He is interested not only in events but in character.

All too often in radio and television audiences are conceived and treated as people, not as persons. Quantitative response is consequently made the measure of quality. There is a willingness, and indeed eagerness to answer the questions, What? and How? But not enough attention is paid to the Why?

T.S. Eliot said: "Teach us to care and not to care. Teach us to sit still." It might be helpful if those who control television and radio would sit still for a bit and attempt to discover what it is they care about. They have great belief in the power and future of their instruments. But all true belief is rooted in doubt, and there is not enough doubt in high places in the field of mass communications. There is a disposition to take us for what we are, and that in turn is likely to keep us where we are. If these devices are to be used in an effort to entertain all of the people all of the time, then we have come perilously close to discovering the real opiate of the people. If in dealing with events we concentrate on what and how, and ignore the why, then we are not really searching for anything.

Our commercial television and radio systems appear to be the alternative to state-operated and financed communications. By and large we have freer speech, more information than any state-operated system. We have vastly more money to spend. The system is practically universal. It is, for the individual, both a privilege and a peril. And it is, for those who finance the system, and those who select the programs, a responsibility in the field of communications never before borne by such a small group of men and corporations. I think it was Bernard Shaw who said: "You must get what you want, or you will come to want what you get."

Albert Einstein Award
May 5, 1957

You have done me great honor, and as Shakespeare said: "Beggar that I am, I am even poor in thanks."

To have his name linked, however remotely, with that of Professor Einstein is honor enough for any reporter. "A hundred times every day I remind myself that my inner and outer life are based on the labors of other men, living and dead. And that I must exert myself in order to give in the same measure as I have received and am still receiving." Those words were Albert Einstein's, but he spoke, I think, for every worthy man and woman who deals with information in the mass media. To him a disinterested love for facts was not enough. He had to care about the bearing of those facts on hopes, fears and destiny. He realized that fear, bigotry and intolerance will not command the land unless most of us are silent accomplices.

By freedom he understood, "Social conditions of such a kind that the expression of opinions and assertions about general and particular matters of knowledge, will not involve dangers or serious disadvantages for him who expresses them. He believed in what might be called "a reign of reason" which most of us have carelessly enjoyed without buttressing its foundations.

Professor Einstein would, I think, have agree with Milton who said: "If the waters of truth flow not in a perpetual progression they sicken into a muddy pool of conformity and tradition." He was conscious of the truth of what Lord Acton wrote in 1877: "There are in our day many educated men who think it right to persecute." There are indeed many men in our day who so believe.

Perhaps you will permit me a personal digression in order to apologize for my lack of formal attire. It is not due to persecution or lack of a dinner jacket, but rather to the fact that I have but just come from a television program where such clothing would have been inappropriate. I am without embarrassment and seek refuge in another quotation from Professor Einstein:

Seldes, Gilbert
Post Herald
Jan. 8.
Seldes

equally as large. He should fly across northwest Nebraska over the Sand Hills region to see heads of beef on the hoof.

"Time permitting, he should stay long enough in Yellowstone Park to see its more spectacular offerings. He should stand among the Redwoods in California. He must go to the Top of the Mark in San Francisco; see both Bay bridges; and visit Golden Gate Park.

"If it could be arranged, he should eat a meal with the lumbermen in a lumber camp in the Pacific Northwest and fish for salmon at the mouth of Juan de Fuca Strait. He might land a king salmon.

"For pure scenic splendor, he might take the Coastal Drive down to Los Angeles, but the road is narrow and the way is long. He must see Los Angeles from the air, however, both at night and in the light of a clear day. He must be escorted through Paramount Studios or one as extensive; be present to watch Jack Benny's Sunday night show when Jack is broadcasting; meet a couple of the older M.C.'s such as Groucho Marx or Walter O'Keefe. Visit the Farmers' Market. Disneyland? No! He would be addle-headed.

"His return swing across the nation should include a breather at Hoover Dam; a look into Grand Canyon to reckon his own stature in the world. He could visit the Great Salt Lake and the endless salt flats surrounding it. He should have a couple of whiffs of the air in Arizona and New Mexico, if only briefly when the plane stops.

"He must see a ranch in Texas; a field of oil-wells; eat in New Orleans; note the moss-hung trees of the old Southland; and go on to Florida for deep-sea fishing and a gander at their hotels. For sheer novelty, he might sail back to New York on a banana boat, touching at ports along the way thus viewing the docks and the dockworkers.

"This is a quick trip. If he had more time, he could go through the Big Smokies, see the Ozarks in summer and the Minnesota woods in the autumn; and our Niagara Falls. He might visit Boston, Richmond, and Philadelphia, where our history began. He might have one look at Detroit and an automobile assembly line; one ride in an Edsel.

"His head would probably be swimming without having attended a football game or a race-track; but he would have a picture of a way of life and a few natural and man-made wonders to fill his soul for the rest of its natural time.

"This is sort of love. I am sorry."

I'm not. —F Surrey.

TV AND RADIO

Notes from a Wheel-Chair

IT IS an established fact that people like me who fracture their ankles (on New Year's Eve it happened) see more television than anyone else. Some of the things they see are unusual.

•• A few weeks ago the formula of Edward R. Murrow's "Person to Person" was, as always, pulverizing some people into nonentities when the incredible happened. Urged—more exactly chuckled—into activity by Mr. Murrow, a man helped his wife into a fur coat and she went out to the terrace of their penthouse and began pointing out the sights. A droning noise was heard—I thought, at first, I was snoring. Then the woman said, "That's a plane up there" and Mr. Murrow replied, "I can hear it."

Now, it isn't sensible to suppose that the program arranged for the plane to be overhead at that moment, so we arrive at these conclusions:

1. That people on "Person to Person" are capable of independent observation and unplanned remarks.

2. That Mr. Murrow knows this.

Adding 1 and 2 together we come to

3. The reduction of individuals to nobodies on "Person to Person" is not inevitable. It is intentional, calculated, and indicates a low and contemptuous estimate of human values.

The Edward R. Murrow mentioned above is not to be confused with the man of the same name who is co-producer and star of "See It Now." One of them is an impostor.

•• Year after year "Omnibus" gets an award for being the best educational program on the air, and once at least Alistair Cooke expressed as much surprise as gratitude in his acceptance. I would say that it is an entertainment program using cultural materials and would say that, as it gives information and plays with ideas, it does educate. I would say this with greater assurance and happiness if "Omnibus" hadn't produced a whatnot publicized as a lighthearted report on suburbia which was wrong-headed in conception and disastrous in execution. Except for some archly presented introductions, nothing in the program was germane to the announced subject; and except for Bert Lahr's familiar, but immortal, answer to "What Do We Chop, When We Chop a Tree?" nothing was first class.

Like Mr. Murrow, the producers of "Omnibus" stand for intelligence and responsibility—responsibility toward the medium in which they work. Others have the God-given right to be second-rate. Not they.

•• A third responsible producing group is The Theatre Guild, which creates the U.S. Steel Program. I know nothing of the arrangements between the Guild and the actual sponsor of the show, but external evidence indicates that the kind of independence Murrow had when Alcoa sponsored "See It Now" is not given to the Guild. The programs have varied from good to indifferent. It is a pleasure to report on one that was excellent: "The Bromley Touch." It takes courage to tackle any New Yorker story by Edward Newhouse, and this one was peculiarly prickly. It was concerned with the cult of success and the milieu chosen was the dead center of the cult: the publicity racket.

•• In the same week "Playhouse 90" used another New Yorker story, Irwin Shaw's "The Eighty-Yard Run," which in a way reversed the theme. Here we had the adolescent hero who lived on his fame and then on his wife and was finally driven to live off himself, to do what he really wanted to do: be a football coach at his college. The whole thing was astonishingly consistent: nothing in it seemed true. I would say that for the wife of the perpetual boy-hero a love affair was a psychological necessity, but it was turned into nothing more than a dramatic device. I didn't believe a word of it, or in the reconciliation either. (I understand that the play did not faithfully follow the original story. I assume, then, that Mr. Shaw surrendered all his rights to the producers. He is in good company: Somerset Maugham and Ernest Hemingway do it, too.)

•• Some time ago I predicted that Hans Christian Andersen or the Brothers Grimm would win the Peabody Award for the best original stories of the year. If there was anything snooty in that idea, the utterly ravishing appearance of Claire Bloom in "Beauty and the Beast" makes me apologize for it and to put in nomination for special distinction the name of Joseph Schrank, who made the loving adaptation of the story.

—Gilbert Seldes

Prod. Bus. Pto P.

YOUNG & RUBICAM, INC.

Advertising

NEW YORK · CHICAGO · DETROIT · SAN FRANCISCO · LOS ANGELES · HOLLYWOOD · MONTREAL · TORONTO
LONDON · MEXICO CITY · FRANKFURT · SAN JUAN · CARACAS

NEW YORK 17 · 285 Madison Avenue

February 25, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Ave.
New York City

Dear Ed:

You will probably recall that Jesse Zousmer mentioned to you a project that we would like very much to present to you. It is a proposal made by our vice-president in charge of TV promotion, Harry Rauch.

Briefly, it would provide for a cultural exchange between PERSON TO PERSON and the Soviet Union, to be planned under the new State Department arrangements in this matter. While we are not as yet positively recommending the plan to you, we should very much like to have the opportunity of showing you our presentation on the subject. Harry Rauch has conducted other international projects of this type and is enthusiastic over the possibilities of this plan. The plan has been discussed with our LIFE client who wishes us to pursue the discussion to determine your reaction to the idea, and to see whether it is a plan that we jointly might want to undertake. Rauch and I would appreciate having the chance to discuss this with you at your earliest opportunity. Harry will be out of town next Tuesday and Wednesday, but aside from that, I'm sure we could fit a meeting to your convenience.

Sincerely yours,

Richard Dana

Richard Dana

m

Personal Person

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication to John Aaron

from Edward R. Murrow

February 25, 1958

This is all news to me. I know nothing about it.

fc

E.R.M.

per Gibbons

Personal Person

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: John Day cc: John Aaron from: Ed Murrow February 10, 1958

I don't know your attitude towards post-mortems, but the failure to put an announcement of the launching of "Explorer" on PERSON TO PERSON was, to say the least, unfortunate.

The attached is, I think, self-explanatory.

fe E.R.M.

(Dictated but not signed by Mr. Murrow)

Ed:

Re the "Explorer" announcement of last Friday --

Jim Burke called from TV News around five and said there was a possibility it might go up during P to P and how could be handle it if this happened.

I told him:

1. We didn't want the net to break in without your knowing what it was they were announcing

2. In answer to his question of how to get the info to you, I said the best & easiest spots on the show were while you were off-camera during the commercials: at the opening, middle & close & I gave him rough times when the commercials came & when it would be easiest for you to see the copy

3. At his request, I gave him our studio number & it was my understanding(but apparently not his) that we would be called if "Explorer" went up during P to P whether it coincided with the off-camera commercials or not

4. No one called and the first we knew of the announcement was when we went off the air at 11.

On Monday, I asked Burke why we hadn't been called. He said since the middle commercial came at roughly 10:43:30-10:45:00 and the "Explorer" announcement cleared at roughly 10:48:00 he understood from me that there was no way to get this information to you and on the air.

When I repeated that I had mentioned the commercials as the best places to communicate with you but certainly not the only ones, he said this was not his understanding.

When I asked if this was so, then why did we bother giving him our studio number, he said nothing.

ja

Prog. Bus. P.P.

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: Mr. Grossman cc: Mr. Zousmer from: Mr. Murrow February 10, 1958

I have signed the attached budget and assume that the interior furnishings or decorations or whatever you call them will be at least as useful and tasteful as the ones in the present PERSON TO PERSON office.

fc E.R.M.

P. to P. Bus.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. R. Murrow

from: Jesse Zousmer

February 6, 1958

The attached new budget for moving the PERSON TO PERSON offices is $2,930 higher than the one you previously approved.

I recommend that you approve this one with a note to Grossman saying that we expect the "decorations" to be at least as useful as the ones in the present PERSON TO PERSON offices.

As for the details the new budget provides for:

A. $110 to be saved on the acoustical ceiling

B. $200 for sprinkler work

C. $140 for masonry work and new door

D. An extra $390 for contingencies

E. $700 for new furniture (2 couches, 1 corner table) There was no furniture aside from the stuff now on the floor provided for in the old budget

F. Drapes for 2 offices - $500

G. The "electrical" costs have been increased by $355 for "receptacles"for air conditioning and window units

H. The "construction" costs have been increased $900. Although there is no additional explanation of new work we assume this provides for carpentry comparable to what we have here.

J.Z.

Coleman Merritt

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Robert Wood

from: Merritt H. Coleman

cc: Messrs. Murrow, Zurich,
Rosen,
Mrs. Rupprecht

January 31, 1958

PERSON TO PERSON

Mr. Murrow has approved the delayed broadcast use of the above captioned program series on a sustaining basis over stations KTVA, Anchorage, KTVF, Fairbanks and KINY, Juneau, Alaska under our Extended Program Service Plan.

Mr. Zurich advises that the network advertisers, at this time, have no interest in sponsoring the program in this area.

Will you please follow through retaining our usual recapture rights on behalf of network advertiser.

MHC/ec

Jim

Personal Person

January 13, 1958

Dear Jim:

Here is Dave Schoenbrun's book. It is the best of recent vintage.

I think you will find that Barry Gillis of the MANCHESTER GUARDIAN can give you some information on "Django", and also Claude Luther, who now has his own band somewhere on the Left Bank.

The visit the other night was great fun.

My love to your bride.

Sincerely,

Mr. James Jones
133 East 67th Street
New York, New York

fo

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. Murrow

from: J. Zousmer

Jan. 9

Here's Dave's book. We can send it over to Jim Jones -- as you promised -- via Dave Moore.

Do you want to give him the names you discussed as possible sources on "Django"? I remember you mentioned a Manchester Guardian correspondent and some other guy.

J. Z.

50

Personal Person

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Murrow cc: Messrs. Jones, Hoag

from: Mr. Hylan

December 11, 1957

Our short meeting with representatives of the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association and representatives of the Grant Agency has been scheduled for 5:30 p.m. today in the 19th Floor Dining Room.

Those present will be: Joe Hines, member of the Board of Directors and Chairman of the Sales and Advertising Committee; John Bodette, General Manager of the F.T.D.A.; Jack Baihle, Account Executive at Grant; and Paul Bradley, Vice President in Charge of Radio and Television.

WH

WILLIAM H. HYLAN

WHH:mjw

Prog. Bus. P.P.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Paul Rosen

from: John Aaron

cc: E. R. Murrow, J. Seward

November 5, 1957

You may recall that immediately upon the return of PERSON TO PERSON this September, Jesse and I sent you a memo which covered, among other things, the peculiar problem of budget approval for Christmas presents - something we instituted with great success five years ago and have continued ever since.

To the best of my recollection, I have called you at least a dozen times about this matter and on one occasion indicated that Ed wanted us to go ahead with the Christmas gifts whether we got a formal answer from you or not. I know that you have repeatedly tried to get some "action" upstairs and consequently this note should not be taken to suggest we are blaming you for the delay.

But, as you know, time is running out on us, and with close to 2,000 mailings, we simply can't handle the job if we wait any longer. Since we're convinced that continuing the Christmas project is an essential part of the PERSON TO PERSON operation and in the best interests of the show, we are going ahead with the idea and trust you will advise all concerned.

J. A.

Prog. Bus. P

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: Mr. Seward

from: Mr. Murrow

November 1, 1957

As you know, we occasionally make commitments for PERSON TO PERSON guests as much as a year in advance. I assume this is acceptable for us to continue this practice next year.

I suggest that if the program is to continue we ought to start negotiations for the continuation of Zousmer's and Aaron's services for next year.

fe

E.R.M.

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: Mr. Seward

from: Mr. Murrow

November 1, 1957

As you know, we occasionally make commitments for PERSON TO PERSON guests as much as a year in advance. I assume this is acceptable for us to continue this practice next year.

I suggest that if the program is to continue we ought to start negotiations for the continuation of Zousmer's and Aaron's services for next year.

fc

E.R.M.

Personal Person

OCTOBER 8, 1957.

PRESS

COLUMBIA LONDON

COLLINGWOOD FROM MURROW IF OPPORTUNITY AFFORDS HOW ABOUT ASKING JOCK WHITNEY IF HE WOULD LIKE PERSON TO PERSON APPEARANCE WHILE HERE STOP ITS HIGH TIME AMERICANS A LITTLE BETTER ACQUAINTED THEIR AMBASSADOR STOP YOUR RADIO TELEVISION STUFF BEEN REALLY DISTINGUISHED

REGARDS

BURKE

CHARGE TO: 202-550-32

Personal Person

September 16, 1957

Dear General Twining:

I had a conversation with a couple of your aids about the possibility of our making an electronic visit to you and Mrs. Twining some Friday evening and they encouraged me to think that it might be possible.

Would Friday, November 8th, the eve of Armistice Day or December 6th, just before the Pearl Harbor anniversary be agreeable to you.

If possible, I would be delighted to come down to Washington to visit you or your aids about content. If we are invited I shall try to behave as a guest, or at least as an Air Force parasite should.

Sincerely yours,

General Nathan F. Twining
Chief of Staff
U.S. Air Force
Washington, D.C.

fe

(cc: John Aaron)

NX77

(FOR PM'S THURSDAY SEPT. 12) '57

(TV-RADIO)

BY WILLIAM EWALD

UNITED PRESS STAFF CORRESPONDENT

NEW YORK, SEPT. 12.--(UP)--TELEVISION SEEMS TO BE HEADED THE WAY OF THE TUNA FISH -- YOU CAN'T HARDLY GET IT NO MORE EXCEPT IN CANS.

LIVE TV HAS LOST THE BATTLE THIS SEASON TO FILMED TV -- ABOUT 60 PER CENT OF OUR NETWORK PRIME TIME SHOWS ARE BEING SHOT ON CELLULOID AND PRESERVED IN TINS. WHAT'S MORE, MOST CITIZE FS OF THE TV INDUSTRY SEEM TO FEEL THE TREND CAN'T BE STOPPED -- THAT FILMED FARE MEANS NOT ONLY BETTER SHOWS TECHNICALLY, BUT MORE PROFITS SINCE

CELLULOID AND PRESERVED IN TINS. WHAT'S MORE, MOST CITIZENS OF THE TV INDUSTRY SEEM TO FEEL THE TREND CAN'T BE STOPPED -- THAT FILMED FARE MEANS NOT ONLY BETTER SHOWS TECHNICALLY, BUT MORE PROFITS SINCE THE FILM CAN BE SHOWN OVER AND OVER.

AT LEAST TWO PRODUCERS, HOWEVER, BELIEVE THE TREND IS GOING TO BE REVERSED. JESSE ZOUSMER AND JOHN AARON, WHO TURN OUT ED MURROW'S "PERSON TO PERSON," THINK THAT TV'S FUTURE LIES IN LIVE PROGRAMMING.

"THE TROUBLE IS THAT MANY PEOPLE IN THE INDUSTRY HAVEN'T EVEN TRIED TO THINK THROUGH THE MOST FUNDAMENTAL QUESTION -- WHAT IS TV ALL ABOUT?" SAID ZOUSMER TODAY. "IT ISN'T MOVIES. MOVIES ARE ANOTHER MEDIUM. AND SHOWING A MOVIE ON TV DOESN'T CHANGE THE FACT IT'S A MOVIE AND NOT TV.

"IF YOU LOOK AT YOUR TOP 10 MONTH AFTER MONTH, YOU'LL FIND THAT LIVE SHOWS ARE THE MOST POPULAR -- 'WHAT'S MY LINE,' ED SULLIVAN AND THE '$64,000 QUESTION' AND '$64,000 CHALLENGE.' 'I LOVE LUCY' IS ABOUT THE ONLY STEADY EXCEPTION. WHY? BECAUSE PEOPLE LIKE LIVE TV. THEY LIKE THE FEELING OF SEEING SOMETHING HAPPENING IN FRONT OF THEM.

"THE MOST EXCITING MOMENTS IN TV HAVE ALL COME FROM LIVE SHOWS -- THE KEFAUVER HEARINGS, 'PETER PAN,' THE POLITICAL CONVENTIONS. DO YOU REMEMBER THE EXCITEMENT WHEN JACKIE GLEASON BROKE HIS LEG ON TV? IT HAD AN IMPACT ON PEOPLE BECAUSE THEY SAW IT HAPPENING RIGHT IN FRONT OF THEM."

"PERSON TO PERSON," WHICH STARTS ITS FIFTH SEASON ON CBS-TV TOMORROW, IS A STRIKING EXAMPLE OF THE STIR LIVE TV CAN GENERATE, POINTED OUT AARON.

"WE'VE HAD MORE FLUFFS ON OUR SHOW THAN WE CAN COUNT," SAID AARON. "WE HAD EVA GABOR STUCK IN A DOOR FOR 40 SECONDS AND ED SULLIVAN'S DOG BARKING THROUGH A SHOW. BERT LAHR BACKED INTO A CLOSET, AND ON ONE SHOW WE PICKED UP POLICE CALLS BY MISTAKE ON OUR LINES.

"MRS. HARRY TRUMAN MADE A REMARK ABOUT A DIRTY ASHTRAY ONE OF OUR CREW HAD LEFT. AND REMEMBER THE NIGHT MRS. PAT WEAVER'S DRESS CAME OPENED IN THE BACK BY MISTAKE? IT WAS TERRIBLY UNFORTUNATE AND I'M SURE WE FELT WORSE ABOUT IT THAN SHE DID, BUT IT SURE STIRRED UP TALK.

"PEOPLE WOULD RESENT THESE KIND OF FLUFFS ON A FILMED SHOW -- THEY'D CALL THEM SLOPPY EDITING. BUT ON LIVE TV, THEY LOVE IT."

ZOUSMER AND AARON ARE SO CONVINCED OF TV'S FUTURE AS A LIVE MEDIUM, THAT THEY'RE WHIPPING UP ANOTHER LIVE SHOW. "WE FEEL WHAT WE'VE DONE WITH PEOPLE ON 'PERSON TO PERSON' WE CAN DO WITH PLACES," SAID ZOUSMER." 'WIDE WIDE WORLD' HAS TRIED IT, BUT NOT TOO SUCCESSFULLY BECAUSE THE SHOW NEVER REALLY GIVES YOU THE FEELING OF STANDING THERE. YOU ALWAYS FEEL LOOKING ON FROM OUTSIDE.

"FILM TV IS TAKING OVER NOW. NO DOUBT ABOUT IT. BUT AHEAD LIES LIVE TV. THAT'S BECAUSE IT SHOWS PEOPLE WHAT THEY'RE INTERESTED IN -- OTHER PEOPLE. IT CAN PROVIDE MORE EXCITEMENT FOR THE WATCHER THAN BEING A PEEPING TOM. MORE EVEN THAN PULLING THE SHADES UP. IT'S LIKE TAKING THE WHOLE WINDOW OUT."

DL1049A9/11

Let's also ask re Cole Porter FR, Spec. on FR.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Messrs. Aaron and Zousmer

from: Paul A. Rosen

September 3, 1957

As of this date, it is expected that the PERSON TO PERSON broadcast now scheduled for May 16, 1958, will be pre-empted for the purpose of presenting another program.

Will you please plan accordingly; should there be any change in this, or should other dates be added, I will advise you.

P. A. R.

PAR:jr

Person to Person

Aug. 21, 1957

ERM:

John Aaron has advised me that you're going to make contact with Brownell and Twining for "P to P," and asked me to check Lew Shollenberger on best approaches.

Shollenberger advises

(a) Brownell won't be back in U.S. until next week,

(b) a close aide says Twining will be tremendously busy this week, and that best procedure would be a brief, introductory note of warning written to him this week, followed by a phone call next week.

john horn

Act

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: EDWARD R. MURROW - PERSON TO PERSON

from: L. W. Werle

Date 6/27/57

In accordance with company policy that all travel advances should be accounted for within 30 days, the following advances, according to our records, are still open and are now past due. Would you please render the accounting immediately.

If there are any questions, in connection with these advances, kindly call Wilbur Goldberg on Ext. 554.

Date of Advance	Amount	Purpose
✓ 11/2/56	$1,000.00
✓ 12/14/56	500.00
2/8/57	500.00
4/5/57	500.00

all accounted for.

LW/vr

L. W. Werle

P to P
Broadway
Bhalms

CBS TELEVISION

A Division of Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

485 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 22, NEW YORK • PLAZA 1-2345

June 7, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
580 Park Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

We refer to the employment agreement between you and us dated January 1, 1957.

Please be advised that the PERSON TO PERSON programs will not be broadcast during the ten (10) weeks' period commencing 11:59 P.M. on June 28, 1957.

Very truly yours,

CBS TELEVISION
A division of Columbia
Broadcasting System, Inc.

By M. Pearson

PMA:FH

Person to Person

MARVIN DRAGER

Public relations

424 MADISON AVENUE
NEW YORK 17, N. Y.
MURRAY HILL 8-1078

May 28, 1957

Dear Ed:

Just a word of sincere thanks for having Guy Mitchell on the Show.

As always, it was a great pleasure for me to work with you again.

Sincerely,

Marvin

Mr. Ed Murrow
"Person to Person"
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y.

MD:AA

Person to Person

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
UNITED STATES PENITENTIARY
ALCATRAZ, CALIFORNIA

May 17, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Person-to-Person
Columbia Broadcasting Company
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Since our appearance on your show May 3, 1957 I have planned to write you to let you know how we enjoyed the entire production and just today we have received the film of the show forwarded by air freight from New York. This is very kind of you and we want you to know it will always be a very highly prized memento of our appearance on your show.

The direction and assistance given us by Jesse Zousmer and Bob Sammon are deeply appreciated. They know the business and saved us from many mistakes. Also it was a pleasure to have them with us for the preparation and actual show. Your skillful handling of the show made it much simpler for both of us. The many favorable comments and messages we have received point up clearly that this is a business of highly skilled experts as we could have made many serious blunders without your assistance.

We will enjoy to the fullest a re-run of the show and want you to know we enjoyed every minute of our part and deeply appreciate the gift of film.

With kind regards and best wishes for your future.

Sincerely,

Paul Madigan
P. J. MADIGAN
Warden

Person to Person

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. Murrow

from: J. Zousmer

May 22, 1957

As a reminder - if you feel there's a fighting chance, we would be delighted to have Jonas Salk and Co. in September or October.

Also, next time anyone upstairs sells you on the efficiency of the west coast tape operation you might let them know that Bob Sammon and I saw both the Madigan and Clark tape jobs at point of origination. They were very much inferior to the kines we see here on Mondays.

Jez

50

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: E. Murrow, J. Aaron

from: J. Zousmer

May 1, 1957

If the Y & R pressure for a change in commercials becomes more intense during my short absence I offer you this rather conclusive ammunition.

A memo from Murrow to Hylan dated May 25, 1956, starts this way: "regarding the proposed purchase of PERSON TO PERSON by Time and Life, there will be no change of any kind in the format or time allocation for commercials."

J.Z.

30

PtP

CBS TELEVISION

A Division of Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

485 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 22, N.Y. • PLAZA 1-2345

May 1, 1957

Mr. Richard Dana
Young & Rubicam, Inc.
285 Madison Avenue
New York 17, New York

Dear Dick:

Following our conversation this morning regarding PERSON TO PERSON and the placement of commercials and cross plugs, I again met with Messrs. Murrow, Aaron and Zousmer to double check the clarity of our understanding.

My statement to you in my letter of April twenty-fourth that we could not move the cross plug up in the show so that it preceded Mr. Murrow's announcement of next week's guests was again emphatically confirmed.

In this connection, it is our conviction that it is Mr. Murrow's announcement of the up-coming guests that, more than any other single factor, induces our viewers to tune in the following week. To run the risk of their tuning off prior to this announcement would, in our opinion, be a grave mistake.

Neither Mr. Murrow nor ourselves have any objection to your combining the 30-second third commercial with the 30-second cross plug provided the resultant 60-second announcement comes after Mr. Murrow has announced next week's guests and has said "Good Night and Good Luck." In other words, the 60-second announcement would be followed only by an announcer reading the credits.

I am sorry that there has been confusion in the past about this set-up, but I trust that this will set things straight.

Sincerely,

HGO

HARRY G. OSSENBLE

HGO:ejp

cc: Messrs. Robinson, Dawson, Hoag

Messrs. Murrow, Aaron, Zousmer

PtP

CBS TELEVISION

A Division of Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

485 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 22, N.Y. • PLAZA 1-2345

April 24, 1957

Mr. Richard Dana
Young & Rubicam, Inc.
285 Madison Avenue
New York 17, New York

Dear Dick:

Because Hubbell Robinson is in California, your letter of April twenty-second was referred to me.

As your letter indicated, we will accept PANTOMIME QUIZ during the ten summer weeks PERSON TO PERSON is off the air.

I am afraid, however, that there is a misunderstanding about your suggested new commercial format on PERSON TO PERSON. Your suggestion of the sixty-second cross plug being advanced into the show is not acceptable. The cross plug must come after Mr. Murrow's announcement of next week's guests. In other words, it must stay where it is.

I don't mean to sound abrupt or dogmatic, but this is a matter that we have discussed very carefully, and one about which we have a pretty firm conviction.

Very truly yours,

HARRY G. OSGERLE

HGOsajp

cc: Messrs. Robinson, Dawson, Hoag
Messrs. Murrow, Aaron, Zousmer

YOUNG & RUBICAM, INC.

Advertising

NEW YORK · CHICAGO · DETROIT · SAN FRANCISCO · LOS ANGELES · HOLLYWOOD · MONTREAL · TORONTO · MEXICO CITY · LONDON

NEW YORK 17 · 285 Madison Avenue

April 22, 1957

Mr. Hubbell Robinson
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Hubbell:

This is to confirm our recent conversation with respect to "Person to Person" summer plans.

According to my understanding, CBS would be agreeable to our programming "Pantomime Quiz" during the ten summer weeks of "Person to Person" replacement. You realize that we are currently negotiating renewal terms for "Person to Person" and that the ten summer weeks would be part of a re-negotiated, overall "Person to Person" agreement. We are also, at the moment, negotiating with MCA with respect to terms for "Pantomime Quiz".

Also, I understood you to say that CBS and Mr. Murrow would be entirely agreeable to our new commercial format suggestion; namely, to be a 30-90-60-second format with the 60-second crossplug advanced somewhat into the show, prior to Mr. Murrow's telling the viewers about next week's show. It is now, as you say, a matter that is up to the agencies and clients involved.

Yours very truly,

Richard Dunn

RD/km

Mr. D — Please circulate

P to P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Murrow

cc: Messrs. Harrison, Rosen, Seward

from: Hubbell Robinson

March 26, 1957

Your memorandum of March 19th, outlining procedure for next season's operation of PERSON TO PERSON, seems sensible enough.

I'd be grateful if Mr. Rosen would prepare a budget so that Mr. Harrison and I may approve it and pass it on to Mr. Murrow as quickly as possible.

HR

50

Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. P to P F. 502

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

To

From Dr. Stanton

Station Mr. Murrow

March 12, 1957

We normally answer such communications by saying that we have a huge backlog of excellent and interesting suggestions, that we schedule guests on the program considerable time in advance, and try to maintain some sort of balance both geographically and professionally, and we will keep your suggestion on file.

E.R.M.

P to P guest suggestion

rh

Person to Person

February 27, 1957

Dear Al:

I am just back from a quick trip to England, and must tell you that the comments about one, General Gruenther, by both the Labor and Conservative lads would have warmed your heart; I was proud to claim your acquaintance.

I am deeply distressed to hear that Mrs. Gruenther has the shingles. It is, I think, the most loathsome disease I have ever encountered, for I had it myself when I came back from the Berlin Airlift. Do please give her my best wishes. I do hope we will be able to visit you as planned on March 15th, but certainly have no desire to use this electronic device to add to Mrs. Gruenther's discomfort.

As ever yours,

General Alfred Gruenther
President
The American National Red Cross
Washington, D.C.

rh

2

THE AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS
WASHINGTON, D. C.

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

February 18, 1957

Dear Ed -

As you know, the Gruenthers are going to "Person - to Person" with you on March 15th.

You should know that Mrs Gruenther has had the Shingles since early November. She has improved greatly during the past few weeks, but she is still in considerable discomfort at times. I am giving this information so that you will know that there is an outside chance that we might be forced to cancel that appearance.

Since I have raised a doubt, I now plan to phone your office on March 1st to give you a status report as of that date. I think the odds are about 3 to 1 that everything will be OK, but I know how much trouble you go to with the program. Hence the warning.

All my best

Al Gruenther

P to P

MUrray Hill 7-1600

NEW YORK HEART ASSOCIATION, INC.
AND HEART FUND

485 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 17, N. Y.

CARL WHITMORE, Chairman of the Board
DR. A. WILBUR DURYEE, President
DR. JERE W. LORD, JR., First Vice President
DR. J. HAMILTON CRAWFORD, Vice President
MRS. PRESTON DAVIE, Vice President
DR. WILLIAM GOLDRING, Vice President
WILLIAM C. LANGLEY, Vice President
LAWRENCE C. MARSHALL, Treasurer
DR. CHARLES A. R. CONNOR, Secretary
DONALD G. PRICE, Executive Director
DR. D. F. MILAM, Medical Director
GEORGE HINGERS, Assistant Treasurer

February 26, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 17, N.Y.

Dear Ed:

Just a little bit late, may I say thanks for that wonderful program in which you interviewed Gladys Swarthout and Frank Chapman. The plug for Heart could not have been more effective. You cannot imagine how telling it was to be represented by so articulate and gracious a beneficiary of heart research as Miss Swarthout. The entire interview was conducted with your usual great skill. We are the gainers.

Thanks to you and all your associates.

Best regards.

Sincerely,

Will

A. Wilbur Duryee, M.D.
President

AWD:es

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

JANET S. BALDWIN, M.D.
ADOLPH R. BERGER, M.D.
KATHARINE DODGE BROWNELL, M.D.
J. SCOTT BUTTERWORTH, M.D.
HERBERT CHASIS, M.D.
EDWARD P. CHILDS, M.D.
CHARLES A. R. CONNOR, M.D.
J. HAMILTON CRAWFORD, M.D.
ARTHUR C. DeCRAFF, M.D.
CLARENCE E. de la CHAPELLE, M.D.
FRANCIS R. DIEUAIDE, M.D.
A. WILBUR DURYEE, M.D.
LUDWIG W. EICHNA, M.D.
HENRY FEARON, M.D.
M. IRENE FERRER, M.D.
HARRY GOLD, M.D.
WILLIAM GOLDRING, M.D.
GEORGE H. HUMPHREYS, II, M.D.
JOHN H. KEATING, M.D.
CHARLES E. KOSSMANN, M.D.
ROBERT L. LEVY, M.D.
JERE W. LORD, JR., M.D.
E. HUGH LUCKEY, M.D.
ARTHUR M. MASTER, M.D.
EDWIN P. MAYNARD, JR., M.D.
MARSH McCALL, M.D.
BERNARD S. OPPENHEIMER, M.D.
HAROLD E. B. PARDEE, M.D.
GEORGE A. PERERA, M.D.
NORMAN PLUMMER, M.D.
CHARLES A. POINDEXTER, M.D.
DANIEL PORTE, M.D.
GERALD H. PRATT, M.D.
LEO PRICE, M.D.
DICKINSON W. RICHARDS, JR., M.D.
MILTON B. ROSENBLUTH, M.D.
IRVING R. ROTH, M.D.
WILSON G. SMILLIE, M.D.
J. MURRAY STEELE, M.D.
HAROLD J. STEWART, M.D.
ARTHUR S. W. TOUROFF, M.D.
HARRY E. UNGERLEIDER, M.D.
ROBERT F. WATSON, M.D.
GEORGE WHEATLEY, M.D.
CHARLES H. WHEELER, M.D.
MAY G. WILSON, M.D.
IRVING S. WRIGHT, M.D.

HULBERT S. ALDRICH
CARL J. AUSTRIAN ARTHUR BAER
RICHARD E. BERLIN
MRS. CHARLES A. BERNS
MRS. CHARLES A. BLACKWELL
EDWIN FOSTER BLAIR
JOHN T. CAHILL
ROBERT M. CATHARINE
FRANCIS T. CHRISTY
MAX A. COHEN
JOHN A. COLEMAN
ROBERT H. CRAFT
HOWARD S. CULLMAN
JOHN P. CUNNINGHAM
CHARLES G. CUSHING
MRS. PRESTON DAVIE
HON. THOMAS E. DEWEY
ALBERT DORNE
JAMES A. FARLEY
FRANK M. FOLSOM
JOSEPH GIMMA
LOUIS HOLLANDER
RUSSELL H. HUGHES
MAXWELL A. KRIENDLER
WILLIAM C. LANGLEY
LAWRENCE C. MARSHALL
DAVID H. MARX
PAUL MONTGOMERY
RAY D. MURPHY
LUCIEN E. OLIVER
ROSS REID
HENRY ROSE
MRS. JACOB J. ROSENBLUM
MRS. WALTER T. SHIRLEY
MRS. LYON SLATER
ED SULLIVAN
WALTER C. TEAGLE
HOMER A. VILAS
LOWELL P. WEICKER
CARL WHITMORE
MRS. HARRY A. WOODRUFF
WILLIAM ZECKENDORF

Person to Person

E. R. MURROW

February 26, 1957

Dear Howard Cowan:

It was good to hear from you again. I do recall our meeting in London.

Who knows what kitchen or bathroom we will visit in the next few months! Maybe the best thing would be to tell your principals to look at it tentatively each week; they are likely to see a stove or two of some kind, maybe even a gas one.

As ever yours,

Mr. Howard Cowan, Director
Public Affairs
Public Service Company of Oklahoma
Tulsa 2, Oklahoma

rh
bc: Messrs. Aaron & Zousmer ✓

Ed - You want us to answer this? Joe

PUBLIC SERVICE COMPANY OF OKLAHOMA

GENERAL OFFICES

TULSA 2, OKLAHOMA

February 22, 1957

HA! Let someone else answer on Joe's (gosh!) time

Mr. Ed Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York City, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Public Service Company of Oklahoma, an electric utility, is an alternate sponsor of your Person to Person show, with Time-Life magazine, on KOTV in Tulsa. We originally contracted for a 26-weeks sponsorship which will expire in May. We have had a favorable response to Person to Person and chances are good for renewal of the contract. I have in mind one extra fillip that will help me cinch the renewal, higher on up, and it's possible that you or your staff might be of help.

It occurred to me that plans for the show during March, April or May conceivably might include a peek into somebody's kitchen where an electric range or some such appliance strayed into the background--just that, nothing more. If such be the case, could I receive enough notice to make sure the Proper People are handcuffed to a chair in front of a TV set, so's I can make the Proper Pitch? Anything you can do in this direction for our mutual benefit will be appreciated.

The years have probably erased the memory, but our paths crossed in London during the World War II years. I was a war correspondent with AP and was thrown together more with your two top hands, Charles Collingwood and Bill Downs. I resigned as editor of the McAlester, Oklahoma, News-Capital last summer to become director of public affairs for Public Service.

Cordially,

Howard Cowan

Howard Cowan, Director
Public Affairs

HC:ed

P to P

January 25, 1957

Dear Mr. Croke:

Thanks for your controversial letter. You may be interested to know that Mrs. Murrow did exactly what you suggested she should do, although in a fashion less gracious than the one you implied. I shall try to do better in the future. Thanks again for writing.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. C. C. Croke
509 Ogden
Denver 18, Colorado

rh

Card

509 OGDEN
DENVER 18, COLORADO

JAN 22 1957

Dear Ed Murrow —

CONTROVERSIAL

is a four syllable word — when you speak the word (as you did on the Jackie Robinson show tonight) it comes out:

CON-TRO-VER-SI-AL —
(1) (2) (3) (4) 5

There is no such word in our language Ed — Take a squint at your desk dictionary —

It's a wonder Mrs Murrow does not knock your block off for butchering that good four (not five) syllable word —

I never miss C to C and see it now — I enjoy them both —

With warm regard and deep admiration —

Norton

Ed/FYI

Reply

No/Save

THE CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY

TERMINAL TOWER · CLEVELAND 1, OHIO

CYRUS S. EATON
CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

January 14, 1957

2

Dear Ed:

This is just a small cross section of the voluminous "fan mail" that I am still receiving as a result of your Person to Person visit by T. V. to Acadia Farms.

I hope you enjoyed your trip to the Far East. Sometime when I am in New York, I shall hope for an opportunity to hear your impressions of that part of the world at first-hand.

With all good wishes,

Sincerely yours,

Cyrus Eaton

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Person To Person
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

CE:rmb

Enclosures

United Mine Workers of America

OFFICE OF
THE PRESIDENT

TELEPHONE
METROPOLITAN 8-0530

UNITED MINE WORKERS' BUILDING
Washington 5, D.C.

December 17, 1956

DEC 21 1956

Mr. Cyrus S. Eaton
Chairman of the Board
Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company
Terminal Tower
Cleveland 1, Ohio

Dear Mr. Eaton:

I was fortunate enough to see you in a personal interview with Ed Morrow last Friday night on television. It was very good. I thought at the time that the world had lost the services of a great Thespian when you decided to become a financier.

Sincerely yours,

John L. Lewis

Ltr

Every American is a shareholder in the Hall of Fame

HALL OF FAME: NEW YORK UNIVERSITY

53 WASHINGTON SQUARE SOUTH • NEW YORK 12, N.Y.

Telephone: SPRING 7-9250

RALPH W. SOCKMAN
Director

~~DERWIN A. STONE~~ ~~Curator~~

December 21, 1956

Dear Mr. Eaton:

May I send my hearty congratulations on your splendid TV appearance last Friday night. Your friends of the Hall of Fame were delighted to observe the wide range of your interests and the clear insights which were revealed in your telecast. The qualities which you so ably designated make us proud to realize how valuable you are to our College of Electors.

May I wish for you all the solid satisfactions of the Holiday Season and the New Year.

Cordially,

Ralph W. Sockman

Mr. Cyrus S. Eaton
2000 Terminal Tower
Cleveland 1, Ohio

RWS:mld

THE CINCINNATI ENQUIRER

FOUNDED APRIL 10, 1841

One of the World's Greatest Newspapers

ROGER H. FERGER
PRESIDENT AND PUBLISHER

Dear Mr. Eaton:

Your performance on television list Friday night proved to the great TV audience that you have still another talent - histrionics! Your poise was magnificent and your message stimulating. - - And, I thought you got in some very dignified albeit effective commercials for C & O and Steep Rock.

Most of all, I was deeply gratified that it was arranged for you to make the closest thing possible to a personal appearance before millions of people right in their own livingrooms. It was a significant piece of public relations and exposed people in all walks of life to your sound philosophy and constructive thinking. In my judgment, it could not have happened to a more deserving member of our small group of American leaders.

All good wishes -

Sincerely,

Mr. Cyrus S. Eaton,
Chairman,
Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Co.,
Terminal Tower,
Cleveland 1, Ohio

December 17, 1956

THE TORONTO-DOMINION BANK

TORONTO, CANADA 19th December, 1956

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. Cyrus S. Eaton,
Chairman of the Board,
The Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co.,
Terminal Tower,
Cleveland 1, Ohio.

Dear Mr. Eaton:

Thank you for your thoughtful letter of the 17th instant. I feel honoured that you took time out of your busy life to read the remarks delivered to the Bank's shareholders.

I was visiting the home of Mr. A.T. Lambert, our General Manager, on Friday evening last and had the pleasure of watching Ed Murrow's interview with you. We and our wives liked your surroundings, the grandchildren, and your remarks in response to the questions asked of you.

With every good wish for Christmas and the New Year, I am

Yours sincerely,

A.E. Ames

Room 5600
30 Rockefeller Plaza
New York 20, N. Y.

DEC 24 1956

December 17, 1956

Mr. Cyrus S. Eaton, Chairman
The Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company
3600 Terminal Tower
Cleveland 1, Ohio

Dear Cyrus:

Hazel and I saw the Ed Morrow show and want to congratulate you on your fine television performance.

It was a grand show and we enjoyed every minute of it.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Bob

Robert W. Purcell

RWPurcell
ab

Financial adviser to Rockefeller brothers.

VICTOR B. COOK
70 PINE STREET
NEW YORK 5, N.Y.

December 17, 1956

Mr. Cyrus S. Eaton
Terminal Tower
Cleveland 1, Ohio.

Dear Mr. Eaton:

Congratulations upon your television success.

May I assume that you will now add the Moving Picture Industry to your many interests? It was a fine constructive contribution to our way of life and I enjoyed it thoroughly.

Yours sincerely,

VBC:ACR

Senior Partner, Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane.

DEC 31 1956

230 PARK AVENUE
NEW YORK

December 26, 1956

Dear Mr. Eaton:

I just want to tell you how excited Alice and I were as we sat in front of our television set and saw you interviewed by Ed Murrow.

The show was well done and you appeared entirely at ease, just as though it were a completely commonplace thing for you to have a national TV audience in your home every night of the week!

My warm regards.

Sincerely,

Tom

Mr. Cyrus S. Eaton
Chairman of the Board
The Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company
Terminal Tower
Cleveland 1, Ohio

Thomas J. Deegan, Jr.
wc

Vice President, New York Central Railroad

DEC 24 1956

Labor's Non-Partisan League

1435 K STREET, NORTHWEST
Washington 5, D.C.

JOHN L. LEWIS, CHAIRMAN
[redacted]
ROBERT E. HOWE, DIRECTOR

TELEPHONE
DISTRICT 7-4327

December 18, 1956

Mr. Cyrus Eaton
Terminal Tower
Cleveland 13, Ohio

Dear Mr. Eaton:

Through the press we learned of your scheduled appearance on the Ed Murrow program last Friday evening. My office staff and I were very much interested and made a point of watching you that evening on TV. One and all, we enjoyed seeing you and hearing you talk and wish to congratulate you on your performance.

Sincerely yours,

Robert E. Howe

Robert E. Howe

REH/c

Association of American Colleges • 726 JACKSON PLACE, N. W. • Washington 6, D. C.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS, 1956-57

President ARTHUR G. COONS
President, Occidental College

Vice President J. OLLIE EDMUNDS
President, Stetson University

Treasurer WILLIAM W. WHITEHOUSE
President, Albion College

Executive Director
THEODORE A. DISTLER

Past President JOSEPH R. N. MAXWELL
President, Boston College

FRANK H. SPARKS
Chairman, Board of Trustees, Wabash College

G. D. HUMPHREY
President, University of Wyoming

DAVID A. LOCKMILLER
President, University of Chattanooga

VINCENT A. MCQUADE
President, Merrimack College

December 21, 1956

Mr. Cyrus S. Eaton, Sr.
Terminal Tower Bldg.
Cleveland, Ohio

Dear Mr. Eaton:

Mrs. Distler and I were delighted and pleased the other evening to see and hear you on Ed Murrow's "Person to Person" program. We want you to know that you are both photogenic, and that the entire performance was up to professional standards!

We enjoyed so much this television visit to your Ohio home, and it brought back many pleasant memories of your gracious hospitality at Pugwash. If ever you should decide to leave the world of finance and become a TV actor, you can have the endorsement of the entire Distler family.

With this letter go our warmest personal regards, and our very good wishes for a joyful Christmas and a happy and prosperous New Year.

Sincerely,

Theodore A. Distler

Theodore A. Distler

TAD/bp

ISLAND CREEK COAL COMPANY

R. E. SALVATI
PRESIDENT

HUNTINGTON
WEST VIRGINIA

December 21, 1956

Mr. Cyrus S. Eaton
Terminal Tower
Cleveland, Ohio

Dear Mr. Eaton:

I had the pleasure of seeing you on "Person to Person" just a week ago today. I want you to know that Bea and I got a big kick out of it because of being at your home and knowing you so well. You did a wonderful job in answering the questions and particularly your reference to the transportation of coal and ore was very timely. Since you were unable to see yourself, I want to say that you had better look out because I am sure you will be offered a movie contract.

Bea joins me in sending our best regards.

Sincerely yours,

Raymond

R. E. Salvati,
President

RES:cs

UNIVERSITY OF MIAMI
CORAL GABLES 46, FLORIDA

OFFICE OF
THE PRESIDENT

December 17, 1956

Mr. Cyrus Eaton
Chairman of the Board
The Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Co.
Terminal Tower
Cleveland 1, Ohio

Dear Mr. Eaton:

Last week we had the pleasure of seeing you on television with Ed Murrow and I just wanted to tell you how much my wife and I enjoyed your program.

You had been so nice to us at Pugwash and, though we did not get to meet you there, we naturally felt that we knew you.

It was good to see your grandchildren and we enjoyed thoroughly "Troubadour". My wife insists that he reminds her of our black cocker spaniel, and says she would like to see the two of them together. Your life has certainly been an inspiration to every youth and young man in America.

With best wishes for the Holiday Season.

Sincerely yours,

Jay F. W. Pearson

JFWP/rlw

Class of Service
This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

WESTERN UNION
TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

(50).

SYMBOLS
DL = Day Letter
NL = Night Letter
LT = International Letter Telegram

The time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

CTB010 PA023

P NKB636 DH NL==TDNK PEAPACK NJER 1==

CYRUS S EATON=
ACADIA FARMS NORTHFIELD OHIO=

1956 DEC 15 AM 7 33

CONGRATULATIONS ON A MAGNIFICENT TELEVISION APPEARANCE STOP WE ALL GREATLY ENJOYED YOUR STIMULATING ENTHUSIASM=
:DAVID I MACKIE EASTERN RAILROAD=

Chairman, Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference.

THE COMPANY WILL A

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
5801 ELLIS AVENUE
CHICAGO 37 · ILLINOIS

GEORGE H. WATKINS
Vice-President—Development

December 19, 1956

Mr. Cyrus Eaton
Terminal Tower
Cleveland 13, Ohio

Dear Mr. Eaton:

A belated note to tell you how much I enjoyed your appearance on Murrow's show the other evening. I thought the entire show an excellent one.

My warm best greetings for Christmas and the New Year.

Sincerely yours,

George

763-55

CTA325

CT LLF348 CGN NL PD=CINCINNATI OHIO 14=

CYRUS EATON=

NORTHFIELD OHIO VIA CLEVE=

ENJOYED THE GRANDCHILDREN THE GRAND CHAMPION BUT YOU WERE THE GRANDEST OF ALL CONGRATULATIONS AND BEST WISHES FOR MANY MORE YEARS IN THE OLD SHACK=

ROBERT S MARX=.

BY WESTERN UNION

Judge Marx is Senior Partner of Nichols, Wood, Marx & Giner, one of Cincinnati's leading law firms.

Director of Schenley Industries, Inc., and other corporations.

Emery, Bird, Thayer

KANSAS CITY 6, MISSOURI

HERBERT H. WILSON
PRESIDENT

December 19, 1956

Mr. Cyrus Eaton
Chairman of the Board
The Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company
Terminal Tower
Cleveland 1, Ohio

Dear Mr. Eaton:

I listened to your television program on Person to Person on December 14, and you surely looked and acted very natural. I think the program was quite interesting. I did not know you had so many grandchildren.

You must have a beautiful place at your farm in Northfield, Seeing that prize steer you showed reminds me that we have of course the American Royal Live Stock and Horse Show here every October, and I think it would be wonderful if you would exhibit some of your animals here sometime. And why don't you make it a point to be here during the American Royal next year? We really have a wonderful show, both Live Stock and Horse Show.

I hope you and your family have a very Happy, Healthful Christmas and New Year.

Yours sincerely,

Herbert H. Wilson

HHW/pb

MILTON V. FREEMAN
1229 NINETEENTH STREET, N. W.
WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

December 17, 1956

DEC 19 1956

Dear Mr. Eaton,

I want to congratulate you on your impressive performance on Ed Murrow's program.

I thought you would be interested in the interesting group that was assembled at my home to see the program. The guests of particular interest to you included Judge Arnold, Walt Cloke and Milton Kroll. I felt that the passage of time and repentance had permitted the admission of the sinners Kroll and Cloke to the charmed circle of your admirers.

Sincerely,

Milton V. Freeman

Mr. Cyrus S. Eaton
Terminal Tower
Cleveland 1, Ohio

The Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Company

Offices 14th Floor Union Commerce Building

Cleveland 14, Ohio

MARINE DEPARTMENT
H. L. GOBEILLE
VICE PRESIDENT
W. F. RAPPRICH
MANAGER
J. L. MORTON
ASSISTANT MANAGER

December 17, 1956

DEC 18 1956

Mr. Cyrus S. Eaton
2310 Terminal Tower
Cleveland 13, Ohio

Dear Mr. Eaton:

Congratulations on your excellent TV performance last Friday night! Mrs. Gobeille and I listened with a great deal of interest and we both felt very proud to know you.

Sincerely,

Goby

WILLIAM GRAY PURCELL, ARCHITECT, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

DEC 24 1956

NO REPLY PLEASE

(YOU COULDN'T ANSWER ALL OF US 30 MILLION)

Mr Eaton --

Our family greatly enjoyed having you in our evening room ~

My English wife said
"So fine a face ~ a quality person!"

Sister Dorothy thought it good to meet a widely useful man not taken up with possessions.

Enclosed for you a poem some music and some good prose
by one (among other things) who was a partner of Cyrus McCormick ~

WHAT A POWER FOR GOOD
IN THIS NATION IS EDWARD MURROW ~

DIRECTOR — RET'D.
ALEXANDER BROTHERS
PHILADELPHIA

Member of the American Institute of Architects. Registered Architect, Illinois and Oregon.

3201 BARHITE STREET, ZONE 8; TELEPHONE SYCAMORE 6-672

THE UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI
SCHOOL OF EDUCATION UNIVERSITY, MISSISSIPPI

December 19, 1956

Mr. Cyrus Eaton
Northfield
Ohio

Dear Mr. Eaton:

Your statement on Ed Murrow's television program concerning the lack of understanding now prevalent in the public's mind in relation to businessmen was in complete agreement with an opinion I have held for some time.

In general, the information prepared and distributed by industry for educational purposes is excellent, but I am firmly convinced it does not create interest in industry at the most opportune time in the student's educational life. Since most individuals reach a peak of curiosity during their formative years in the elementary school, more educational material prepared by industry should be written for the nine, ten, and eleven year old child.

Therefore, the story of your life written for elementary children would create interest in a great leader of industry, develop a lasting belief in free enterprise, and develop greater understanding of the role of industry in our American way of life. In addition, it would supply schools with a valuable source of supplementary materials. If this proposal interests you, I would appreciate the opportunity to develop such material.

Sincerely,

A. W. Scrivner
Associate Professor of Education

AWS/bfm

SCRANTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE
CHAMBER OF COMMERCE BUILDING
SCRANTON 1, PA.

H. J. CONNOLLY
PRESIDENT

December 19, 1956

Mr. Cyrus S. Eaton
Acadia Farms
Northfield, Ohio

Dear Mr. Eaton:

I would like to express my pleasure over your remarks on the Edward R. Murrow "Person to Person" program recently, concerning the future of the coal industry.

Scranton, Pennsylvania, while currently engaged in an industrial development program designed to build a firm economic foundation based on diversified industry, nevertheless achieved its original greatness from the vast and rich deposits of anthracite found here.

While the decline of the coal industry gave rise to the problems leading to the birth of the now famed "Scranton Plan" of industrial development, the coal industry, much smaller than in former years, is still a very important part of our local economy.

New developments in the use of coal and coal products have, of course, been publicized and heralded as meaning much to the industry's future. However, it meant a great deal to those of us who are associated in one way or another with the coal industry to hear you list it as one of those areas in which the future looks bright.

Sincerely yours,

H. J. Connolly

H. J. Connolly
President

HJC:ag

DEC 21 1956

COLGATE UNIVERSITY
HAMILTON, NEW YORK

THE PRESIDENT'S ROOM

18 December 1956

Dear Mr. Eaton:

I happened to be visiting my parents in Plainfield the other day when you appeared with Ed Murrow on the television screen. My father, who is over eighty and has been a banker for two-thirds of a century, was particularly interested in hearing your part of the discussion and seeing you again. He said it recalled the time prior to World War I when, as a vice president of the old Farmers Loan and Trust, he received you and Charlie Eaton and made you a loan of $5,000. He added, with a smile, that he had never had any occasion to regret it.

May this Christmas be a merry one for all the Eatons.

Faithfully yours,

Everett Case

Everett Case

Mr. Cyrus S. Eaton, Sr.
Terminal Tower
Cleveland 13, Ohio

The Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Company

Ore Mining Department

G. J. HOLT, GENERAL MANAGER
J. S. WESTWATER, MANAGER, MICHIGAN MINES
S. W. SUNDEEN, MANAGER, ORE DEVELOPMENT
J. D. PRESTON, MANAGER, ELECTRIC POWER

ISHPEMING, MICHIGAN December 26, 1956

DEC 28 1956

Mr. Cyrus Eaton, Sr.,
Terminal Tower
Cleveland, Ohio

Dear Mr. Eaton:-

I was extremely sorry not to be able to hear your talk on television, since this was not broadcast on our local station and we had no means of enjoying it here.

You may perhaps recall meeting my daughter Madeline who was with us on a picnic at Michigamme, and who has since married and is living in Los Angeles. Madeline wrote us an interesting note stating she was fortunate enough to be tuned in to a station in Los Angeles where she now lives and heard the entire talk and said it was extremely interesting. It would have given us the utmost pleasure to have been able to tune in, however, we are accessible only to the one station.

With kindest wishes for the New Year, I remain,

Sincerely

General Manager

GJH:DP

WESTERN RESERVE UNIVERSITY
CLEVELAND 6, OHIO

DEPARTMENT OF POLITICAL SCIENCE

December 21, 1956

DEC 22 1956

Mr. Cyrus Eaton
Acadia Farms
Northfield, Ohio

Dear Mr. Eaton:

Please pardon the intrusion into the privacy of your home, but I did thoroughly enjoy the expressions of your personal philosophy and practical living as presented over Ed Murrow's "Person-to-Person" program last week.

A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to you and yours.

Sincerely,

Al Hotz

Alfred J. Hotz
Professor of Political Science

AJH:mek

DEC 17 1956

CLASS OF SERVICE

This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

WESTERN UNION

TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

SYMBOLS

DL = Day Letter

NL = Night Letter

LT = International Letter Telegram

1201

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

CTA093 KA011

K LLB010 NL PD=KANSAS CITY MO 14=

DEC 15 AM 2 57

CYRUS EATON=

CHAIRMAN CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RR TERMINAL BLDG CLEVE=

WE ENJOYED HAVING YOU IN OUR OWN HOME TONIGHT CHATTING WITH ED MURROW YOUR TALK WAS AN INSPIRATION FOR ALL GOOD AMERICANS WITH BEST REGARDS=

HARRY AND CLIFF=.

Mr. Cliff C. Jones - President, R. B. Jones & Sons., Inc., Kansas City, Mo.
Director, Kansas City Power & Light Company.

DEC 2 4 1956

Palo Alto, California
December 14, 1956

Mr. Cyrus Eaton
%Otis Trust Co.
Cleveland, Ohio

Dear Mr. Eaton,

I desire to compliment you on your fine performance and appearance on my TV screen at 7:30 P.M., the Person to Person program, CBS, our channel 5. Several of my friends liked the broadcast very much and it was especially pleasing to me in that it recalled events of a time before World War 1, in western Iowa, when you and Mr. Abbott purchased the stock of the Avoca Electric Light and Power Co. and merged it into the Continental Gas and Electric Corporation.

As I was manager at Avoca at that time, and later worked for the Continental as manager of properties; I recall you very clearly despite my 83 years. I was pleased to note your retention of personal appearance, the firm tone of your voice and your continued interest in the human things of life, the home, the children and the animals.

I have been living, retired, health good and fairly active. Mrs. T. and I live by ourselves, have one son here, Loren Torry, now a partner in the C.P. firm of Ernst and Ernst of San Francisco. My other son, Volta, the little boy who had infantile paralysis when I lived in Avoca is now TV director in charge of pgrograms for the M.I.T. at Cambridge, Mass. He is the former editor of Popular Science monthly.

I really enjoyed your program and it brought to mind old friends with whom I have been out of contact for years: Frank Brooks, Beohner, Harvey, Abbott, Lee and many others.

Yours truly, W A Torry

W. A. Torry
640 Fulton St.
Palo Alto, Calif.

JOHN A. AARON

Ed -
F-11 -
Some excerpts from the recent mail re Godfrey -
Don

Quotes from well-known personalities about appearances on "Person to Person." Reaction from viewers about ERM being replaced by Arthur Godfrey.

PERSON TO PERSON

ERE:
EST LETTER EXCERPTS: 2/26/59 Aaron, John must say that I had quite a happy mail as the result of being on the program nd the adventure turns out to be one of the durable satisfactions of my life".

ct 15, 1956) Sincerely yours, JOSEPH N. WELCH t was agreat pleasure to be with you last night and our heartfelt thanks to u all for making it so pleasant and exciting for us."

Dec 9, 1955) Very Sincerely, Jane du Pont t was an experience we all enjoyed very much....."

arch 6, 1957) Sincerely Yours, Garrison H. Davidson (Maj. Gen.)
Supt. of West Point

e were glad to have you in our home...." Ralph Bunche arch 16 1954)

t has certainly given us a great respect for all that goes on behind the mes for TV....." Mrs. Barbara H. Sherrill (Bishop) (Jan 10, 1958)

e evening will long be remembered and the recollection of it will give us easure always." Mrs. (Gov) Meyner (Dec 31, 1957)

f any of us doubted the power of Television, we have been forced to change our ws, for we've been receiving telegrams and letters from friends we haven't n in more than 40 years. They come out of the woodwork in all directions!"
ly 10, 1957) Arthur G. Nielsen

rs. Nimitz and I enjoyed being your guests". Adm. C. W. Nimitz (2/23/57) e recently returned from a visit to California and while on our trip we were nstantly amazed at the number of people who came up to us on the streets, n the train, in the swimming pool, restaurants, etc., telling us they d seen us on your program. (Sen.) Herbert H. Lehman (3/25/57)

(MORE)

EXCERPTS: 2.

"Could Annalee and I insert here a word for your wonderful crew: such efficient, kindly, understanding people are rarely come by....
What a wonderful show to run!" Clifton Fadiman (12/1/56)

"How could it help but be good with your own personality there in the room with me." Richard L. Simon (Oct 19, 1953)

"We had such fun being with you Friday Night---everyone was so nice---friendly and helpful...." Jinx (no date but word Monday)

"Thank You! Thank You!', Thank You!!! and one and all -----! You coming to visit at our house has brought us many hours (at least two days) of the greatest kind of happiness-----"I completely loved just plain doing it---"
Mary Martin (May 4th ?)

"We have had so many congratulatory letters and wires, it is quite exciting". Susan E. Wagner (Mayor) 6/9/54)
"....I thoroghly enjoyed Operation-Person-To-Person...." Fannie Hurst 6/19/54
"We were deluged with complimentary letters this morning, which speaks well for the popularity of your program." Eugene Ormandy (Oct 11, 1954)

"Believe me it was a delight!" Patrice Munsel (January 26th) ???
"...the most rewarding experience I have ever enjoyed". Mrs. C. W. Bay 1/27/58
"It was a pleasant and indeed most interesting and I must add, extraordinary experience and --- I did have fun ! Your boys who worked with me were just terrific. Fred Astaire June 11, ?

(MORE)

EXCERPTS, 3.

"Mrs. Burton and I cannot express too strongly our appreciation of your granting us the opportunity for a Person-To-Person interview on Friday, November 7. The whole matter was so cordially arranged and conducted that it was a pleasure to have a part in it." Justice Burton (11/12/58)

"We enjoyed being on the show tremendously. The reaction has been heartwarming...." Russel Crouse (11/22/58)

"Solange and myself cannot refrain from telling you again of our delight in having been included in your distinguished programme "Person to Person". ...We have been literally inundated by telephone calls, telegrams and letters.....".Yousef Karsh (1 /12/ 59)

"We want to thank you for having us on your show. It has made us so important". Russell Patterson (11/3/58)

"I am still receiving letters, and I am so happy that I was able to have you come into my ~~xxxxx~~ home". Louella Parsons 11/25/58

"I want you to know what a delightful pleasure it was to be on your "Person To Person" show from our living room Friday night. Your easy, natural manner put us entirely at ease and made the experience one we will long remember." Ivy Baker Priest 12/22/58

"I shall always remember with the greatest sense of pride that I ~~xx~~ once had the opportunity to be interviewed on the PERSON TO PERSON program by you, as did the rest of the family". Norman Vincent Peale 1/6/59

(MORE)

EXCERPTS, 4.

"Everywhere I go these days, I meet members of "THE PERSON TO PERSON CLUB", and we have wonderful conversations comparing experiences and sharing pleasant memories of our television meetings with you." Burr Tillstrom (12/29/58)

"I wanted to write this letter in longhand so I could tell you personally how we enjoyed being on"Person To Person"...Harold Russell 11/3/55

Aaron, John

7

Godfrey Excerpts, 1.

"Just one more instance of the down grading of TV shows...."

(and from same letter)

We can't imagine any advertiser except someone with an inferior product choosing to use this dissolute boar, and I use this spelling advisedly this time. for he hogs every program with his meaningless chatter, using much better talent merely as preps."

".....replacing him with Windy Arthur Godfrey. With his ~~xxxx~~ flair for the limelight and slow drawly way of talking the people will never have a chance to say anything about themselves."

"He is slovenly in dress, manner and speech and is not above smut. He is the SUPreme Egotist. We never buy anything he recommends."

"Mr. Godfrey may own a lot of CBS stock (rumors) but must we be subjected to his brand of broadcasting on a high level show? He should be ashamed of his recent remarks to the Press, in reference to the people who have appeared on Person to Person."

"....my reaction was - they must be kidding!

(from same note) You cannot seriously believe that the audience which is attracted to anything at all Ed Murrow does will be satisfied with that crashing bore, Arthur Godfrey?"

AE

Pro P greats, Andrews, Eleanor Steber

ELEANOR STEBER

119 WEST 57th STREET, NEW YORK 19, N. Y.

March 25, 1959

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting Company
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

It is difficult for me to tell you the very great pleasure that my husband and I had visiting with you on Person-To-Person last Friday night. I can truthfully say that it was one of the outstanding experiences of my career.

The roses which you so kindly sent were indeed lovely, and grace our home even today.

Again, many thanks, and we are looking forward to the opportunity of a closer association when our plans for the World Tour of 1961 materialize.

With kindest regards,

Sincerely yours,

Eleanor Steber Andrews

Eleanor Steber Andrews

ESA:ag

To Ed Murrow
with greetings from The girl you
Most cordially Eleanor Steber.

Barkley, Jane

Mr. M,

Johnny has been working on this with Mr. Barkley's secretary. We have sent them a kinescope and will arrange the showing when the secretary gives Johnny a time and date convenient to the Barkley's.

dm

April 8, 1952

Ask Fred if we have set up a showing for them?

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Although the Vice President thanked you yesterday over the telephone for the lovely orchids which you sent to me, I still wish to tell you myself how much I appreciated them. They were unusually beautiful ones and I had great pleasure in wearing them after the broadcast to a reception which we attended.

I do hope that we shall have the pleasure of seeing the film of the show in the very near future. Perhaps I should not say this, but all the time I was sitting there yesterday I felt that my husband was doing as "smooth" a job as could have been expected from a seasoned actor! I know he would like to see for himself just how the show went, and I am sure that he will be as pleased with it as I was.

With renewed thanks for your thoughtfulness,

I am

Most sincerely,

Jane R. Barkley

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
c/o Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, New York

P.P. Guests
Block, Herbert L.

The Washington Post
AND Times Herald
1515 L STREET, N.W. WASHINGTON 5, D.C. REPUBLIC 7-1234

HERBERT L. BLOCK

July 3, 1957

Dear Ed:

I just want to thank you and Mrs. Murrow for a delightful TV visit. It was nice of you to have me on the program, and it was awfully good to see you again in New York.

The Tito program was beautiful! Also, your recent speech on a steady diet of entertainment programs being a potential opiate of the people continues to reverberate --- as it certainly should.

Best to yourself and Fred,

Herb

HB:cdt

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Caniff, Milton

MILTON CANIFF

May Eighth 1959

Dear Ed...

I was very pleased and interested to have your message of 5 May about the summer season of plays Charlie Hill will present at the Mount Kisco Playhouse, beginning June 30th.

Since we participate in the program offered by our local theatre, the Tappan Zee Playhouse in Nyack, N. Y., we will not be wandering across the river, but we are very happy to know of Charlie's new venture and certainly will pass the good word along to friends in this and that area.

Thanks so much for your thought of us.

Very best wishes, always...

Sincerely,

Milton

New City
Rockland County
New York

Caniff, Milton

March 7, 1956

Dear Milt:

I don't know whether Casey has written to you yet, but he is laboring at it. In any event, he has had your sketch framed and is going to hang it in his room, which is more than he has ever been disposed to do with any previous drawing. I enjoyed the visit enormously and apparently the viewers did too.

As ever yours,

Mr. Milton Caniff
Top Ridge
South Mountain Road
New City, New York

rh

MILTON CANIFF

February 23, 1956

Dear Ed:

The experience of being on your PERSON TO PERSON was unforgetable. The impact of that single show on all types of viewers was greater than any other guest shot I ever did.

The 'Boarding House Reach' thing seemed to create the stir we hoped it might. Your crew was just as good as it had been touted...so that it all totals up to a fine excursion (for me) into another medium.

Thanks for asking me.

Cordially,

Milton

Milton Caniff

New City
New York

Carter, John

MRS. JOHN CARTER
2706 THIRTY-SIXTH STREET, N. W.
WASHINGTON 7, D. C.

Noane, 13 Feb.

Goodness, to. I just finished writing Janet to congratulate you on being the subject of the most lively profile the N. Yorker has had for years, when I pick up my Post & see that I must congratulate you again on the TV awards. I think you owe it to your friends to stop being so distinguished & give them a minute or two to recoup between honours. But I do think it impressive, though not surprising for you to enter a new field & immediately top all the top gangs. I hope you are pleased — I know Janet must be proud & delighted, as are all your friends, including

Yours, true

In the Nation's Capital.

Carter, John

P to P.
F4I
Wm.

BRITISH EMBASSY
WASHINGTON

December 17, 1953

File

Dear Ed

Many thanks for your letter of December 11, which would have been acknowledged before only that I have been laid up with a poisonous cold. The cheque you have sent is a most generous one and will undoubtedly sweeten the Christmas holidays for all those members of the Ambassador's staff who lent a hand with the preparations for the T.V. programme - and their dismantling.

The kinescope has just arrived. Many thanks for that also. I am much looking forward to having a look at it myself for the bits I didn't see behind the camera.

Merry Christmas from us both

Jake

John Carter

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York, N.Y.

A

Carter, John

December 11, 1953

Dear ~~John~~ JAKE:

Herewith a small check for "The British Embassy Christmas Gratuity Fund." It seems little enough in view of the magnificent cooperation given us by the Ambassador's household staff.

We have received much favorable comment on the program and hope you had as much fun doing it as we did. Very many thanks to you for helping us to get the thing set up.

Best regards,

Mr. John Carter
British Embassy
Washington 8, D.C.

rh

Kay:

We have ordered..pronto.. a check for $100 for "The ~~Ambassadorsm~~ British E mbassy Christmas Gratuity Fund." The idea is to avoid social security numbers etc and get it to them before xmas. Will you do, or will you suggest to ERM' a letter to Makins or Carter to be enclosed with check when its received.

mt... many thanks

jz

Carter, John

December 15, 1953

Dear Jake:

The kinescope of the program on which the Ambassador appeared has already been sent out and should reach you almost as soon as this letter. I hope you will enjoy seeing it and trust that Sir Roger will feel that the cameras did him justice. As I told you in a previous note, we received much favorable comment on the program.

The television set was intended as a small present for the Ambassador. If it does not function properly, just let us know and we will send an engineer around to fix it.

Best regards.

As ever,

Mr. John Carter
The British Embassy
Washington, D.C.

rh

BRITISH EMBASSY
WASHINGTON

December 10, 1953

Dear Ed

Your people have not been around to take away the T.V. set which you kindly arranged to have installed in the Embassy so that the Ambassador's guests and household could watch the programme on November 27. I expect it has just been overlooked; but I thought I would let you know privately that if it continued to be overlooked until after the Christmas holidays, when all the children will be at home, it would be a popular move!

I wish you and Janet would think of making a leisurely visit to Washington sometime, with no T.V. or radio programmes to distract you, so that we and your many other friends here might have the chance of a proper gossip.

Yours ever

John Carter

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York, N.Y.

P.S. Jesse Zousmer promised to send us a Kinescope of the programme, which I hope may be on the way soon.

BRITISH EMBASSY
WASHINGTON

December 1, 1953

Dear Ed

As I was myself hanging about behind the cameras during most of Friday night's broadcast, I shall have to wait until the promised kinescope reaches us to see the programme properly. But I have already heard the comments of a number of people who did see it and the general impression seems to have been extremely favourable. There was apparently some fuzziness of outline on a good many local sets, especially in the earlier part of the programme, but I daresay that was a local phenomenon. The more hardened viewers also seem to agree that the latter part of the programme, when Sir Roger was in his study, was more effective than the earlier; but I realise fully, having watched the preparations, how difficult it is to handle grouping and movements, and I hope your shrewd expectation that the "popular" features at the beginning would catch and hold the audience's interest would be justified by your own reports, since, after all, what the Ambassador and I were mostly interested in was their attending to such serious things as he had to say.

Thank you for all the trouble which you and your colleagues took over this programme. I hope you thought it worth while: I certainly did.

Yours ever

Jake

John Carter
Assistant to H.M. Ambassador

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York, N.Y.

Nov. 5

Mr. M,

Jesse says he had a conversation this morning with Jack Aisen, their Radio-TV man...he'll tell you about it.

dmcd

Carter, John

British Embassy,

Washington 8, D.C.

Dear Ed

I was sorry to miss you in New York last week, for time is getting on and we need to know as soon as possible your plans and requirements for the Person to Person show in the Embassy on November 27.

Unless you expect to be in Washington within the next few days, which would give you a chance of looking over the physical possibilities on the spot, will you give me a ring or let me have by return as much detail as you can.

I understand that the programme itself is between 10.30 and 11.0 p.m., but we need to know:

(1) How long will be needed for setting up paraphernalia and rehearsing the act?

(2) How extensively you want to range throughout the Embassy?

(3) How many members of the Ambassador's family or staff would be involved?

Apart from the fact that, as you know, this date co-incides with the conference of H.M.Consuls in Washington, the Ambassador and Lady Makins have to consider some house guests and I would like to be able to let Their Excellencies know as soon as possible just what they are in for.

Yours ever

Jake

John Carter.

P to P. Guests
Clark, Wilbur

March 19, 1958

Dear Wilbur:

It was most thoughtful of you and Toni to send me the wire.

I am still hoping to pay you a visit sometime next summer. Meanwhile don't forget to let us know when next you are in town.

As ever yours,

Mr. Wilbur Clark
The Desert Inn
Las Vegas, Nevada

fc

763-37

Congratulations

1958 MAR 13 PM 7 39

NA295 CGN PD=FAX LAS VEGAS NEV 13 345PM PST=

EDWARD R MURROW=PERSONAL DLY

485 MADISON AVE=

CONGRATULATIONS ON YOUR TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY AS A NEWSCASTER AND AS TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF MAKING PEOPLE HAPPY= MANY GOOD WISHES=

TONI AND WILBUR CLARK=

BY WESTERN UNION

Guest P.P.

October 9, 1957

Dear Wilbur:

I am not the churlish ungrateful bastard you must think me to be. The fact is that your wonderful present arrived while I was on holiday and I just plain forgot to write and say you my thanks.

Another reason for the delay is that I have not yet developed sufficient courage or aplomb to carry the money clip, because it would be vulgar to extract anything less than thousand dollar bills from such a piece of equipment.

Do let us know when you are going to be in town again.

Sincerely,

Mr. Wilbur Clark
Desert Inn
Las Vegas, Nevada

fc

Crosby, Bing

January 10, 1955

Dear Bing:

I see by the papers that the New York critics enjoyed "Country Girl" ... thus taking me off that 3400-mile plug and hook.

And in case you missed it, "Variety" thought you and Mary Margaret gave us the best PERSON TO PERSON we've ever done. The Mug thought "Murrow was almost a stooge, so articulate and spontaneously vocal were his vis-a-vis."

The boys in the shop were unduly impressed because one of the rating systems marked their efforts with a place in the first ten television shows ... for the first time.

In all, it was the beginning of a good December.

I offer you my thanks for a fine job. I hope our crew didn't permanently dis-joint your attractive home.

And next time you're out this way ... you call the shot again.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Bing Crosby
594 South Mapleton
Holmby Hills, California

rh

Dear Bing:

I see by the papers that the New York critics enjoyed "Country Girl"...thus taking me off that 3400-mile plug and hook.

And in case you missed it, "Variety" thought you and Mary Margaret gave us the best "Person to Person" we've ever done. The Mug thought "Nurse" was almost a stooge, so articulate and spontaneously vocal were his vis-a-vis."

The boys in the shop were unduly impressed because one of the ratings systems marked their efforts with a place in the first ten television shows...for the first time.

In all it was the beginning of a good December.

I offer you my thanks for a fine job. I hope our crew didn't permanently disjoint your attractive home.

And next time you're out this way..you call the shot again.

Crouse, Russel
(P to P guests)

November 19, 1958

Dear Anna and Russel:

I must tell you that I have made visits "in person" that have been less relaxing and enjoyable than the electronic one on Friday night. It is on occasions like that that television can be real fun, if for no other reason than that it gives a few million viewers an opportunity to meet civilized people who also appear to be enjoying themselves. Thank you again.

Sincerely yours,

ERM:skh

Mr. and Mrs. Russel Crouse
151 East 61st Street
New York 21, N.Y.

HOWARD LINDSAY RUSSEL CROUSE

151 EAST 61st STREET • NEW YORK 21, N. Y.

PHONE TEMPLETON 8-6322

November 15, 1958.

Dear Ed:

In the after-it's-over calm and with the fear of tripping over cables or knocking over mikes removed, we want to thank you and to tell you what a joy it was to be with you on "Person To Person" last night.

Your remote-control calm took over at just the right moment to soothe jangled nerves and the many telephone calls we've had indicate that at least we didn't disgrace you, which makes us happy.

May we say, too, that we have never come in contact with a staff and crew so efficient, so patient and so downright charming as yours.

Again thanks and we hope that some day you and Mrs. Murrow ~~and~~ will make an in-person-to-person visit to our home.

Sincerely,

Howard

+

Russel

Cummings, Bob

January 9, 1958

Dear Bob:

Many thanks for your cordial letter.

I thoroughly enjoyed my visit with you and your delightful family on PERSON TO PERSON, and I am glad to hear that you all found it a pleasant experience.

My best wishes to all of you for the new year!

Cordially,

Mr. Bob Cummings
1060 Laurel Way
Beverly Hills, California

mec

BOB CUMMINGS
1060 LAUREL WAY
BEVERLY HILLS, CALIFORNIA

December 30, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
c/o Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Ed:

Mary, the children, and I thoroughly enjoyed our visit with you. Thank you for inviting us. We've heard so many nice things about our appearance on your show from all over the country -- I'm sure your high rating is nevertheless under rated -- literally everyone sees your show!

May we congratulate you on the efficiency, courtesy and general excellence of your staff, crew -- in fact everyone with whom we came in contact connected with your show made the whole thing a happy and pleasant experience. It was a pleasure having you (collectively) visit us en masse in our home.

Mary and I thoroughly enjoyed your review of the Big News of '57 yesterday. Congratulations!

Happy New Year

Cordially,

Bob

BOB CUMMINGS

C:fs

George de Mille, Agnes
Pto Pguest

November 25, 1958

Dear Agnes:

You did talk more than most interviewees, for the very good reason that you had more to say. I was for once rather proud to be working in this medium and that doesn't happen very often. Janet and I would love to come and break a chair with you, at your convenience.

As ever yours,

ERM:skh

Miss Agnes George de Mille
25 East 9th Street
New York 3, N.Y.

AGNES GEORGE DE MILLE Private
25 East 9th St. New York 3

November 17th, 1958

Mr. Ed Murrow
c/o C.B.S. T.V.
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Dear Ed Murrow:

I want to tell you how excited Jonathon and I were to participate in the show the other night. I never took part in anything more expertly run off. The men left the house cleaner than they found it. In fact, if they would come back each week, I think I might get the reputation ~~of~~ being a good housekeeper. Jonathon was popeyed with the doings in the trucks, and so was I, as much as I was permitted to be. Would you thank everybody, involved for their ~~excellence~~ expertise and courtesy.

I have been told by many people that I talked more than most interviewees on your program. I'm not sure this is good.

You told me that I would hear from a great many unexpected people. The first call the next morning was from Marian Anderson. Jonathon came screaming into the bedroom with ~~my~~ the news and when I had hung up, he said, "Well, you can't go higher than that, can you?" - and you can't.

Some day would you and Mrs. Murrow really come to our house? I'll let you sit on the breakaway chairs.

Sincerely,

Agnes

GR 3-3024

P. & P. Gen. I de Seversky, Alexander P.

April 10, 1958

Dear Major de Seversky:

More power to your typewriter.

As ever yours,

Major Alexander P. de Seversky
30 Rockefeller Plaza
New York 20, New York

fc

ALEXANDER P. DE SEVERSKY
30 ROCKEFELLER PLAZA
NEW YORK 20, N.Y.

19 March 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Enclosed you will find my article in THIS WEEK magazine, which will appear throughout the country next Sunday. Since the editorial comments allude to my previous articles, I enclose these also.

The main theme of the current article is Limited Wars, and I touch only briefly upon such matters as the possibility of defense against the atomic bomb and reorganization of our national defense establishment. I am, therefore, also sending you a copy of my statement before the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee, the PAGEANT condensation of my speech before the Armed Forces Communications and Electronics Association, as well as a column syndicated by the North American Newspaper Alliance in which I deal more fully with the absurdity of our present national defense establishment.

The editorial response to my recent stand is extremely voluminous and favorable, and it looks as though I am beginning to make a dent in the Washington conservatism and complacency.

Sincerely yours,

Alexander P. de Seversky

encls:
TW articles (3)
SPS statement
Pageant reprint NANA reprint

APdeS;esf

A HILLMAN PUBLICATION

PAGEANT

MARCH 35¢
1958

BY MAJOR ALEXANDER de SEVERSKY

So That This Nation Shall Not Perish...

A grim warning to America from one of the world's most distinguished experts on air power:

"America now has its last chance . . . the question is will we have the wisdom to make certain fundamental changes in our defense setup. If not, within three years our country may lie in ruin. One out of every three of you who read these lines may be dead, and the other two enslaved."

This is a condensation of an address delivered by Major Alexander P. de Seversky before the Armed Forces Communications and Electronics Association on October 23, 1957.

So That This Nation Shall Not Perish...

BY MAJOR ALEXANDER de SEVERSKY

■ ON SEPTEMBER 24 of last year, President Eisenhower announced, "The United States is maintaining the most powerful military establishment in our peacetime history."

That is correct in the abstract. We have the most powerful military establishment in our peacetime history. But by the same token, never in our history, whether at war or in peace, have we been so weak in relation to our potential enemy.

This is the truth, and the American people ought to know it —and know it quickly—if we are to survive.

The world is in great danger.

Geographically we are divided into East and West; ideologically into Communism and Capitalism; technologically, economically and militarily into two opposite camps, one dependent upon the U.S.A., the other upon the U.S.S.R. Under the impact of a cold war, these two opposing masses acquire an ever greater energy potential, and it is only a matter of time before an explosion occurs. National defense, therefore, must be uppermost in our minds.

Everybody agrees that free people must be invincibly strong, yet there is no agreement as to how we should achieve that strength.

Copyright 1958, Hillman Periodicals, Inc.

The earliest official reaction to the sputnik was to dismiss it, not only as a useless scientific trick, but as the greatest Soviet blunder. Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams, in a talk in San Francisco, said that our purpose is not to rack up a high score in a basketball game played in outer space. And another Presidential Assistant, Clarence B. Randall, last October 21 dismissed Russia's earth satellite as a silly bauble. All this might have been hilariously funny if it had not been so tragic. Let us hope that the presence of Dr. James R. Killian, as Presidential Assistant for Science and Technology, will restore dignity to the White House entourage, so that the President is no longer compromised in the eyes of the world in the realm of science.

HOW LAUGHABLE some of our bureaucratic and complacent responses to the potential enemy's scientific achievements must have seemed to the rest of the world—particularly our criticism of Russia for combining its satellite and missile development into a single effort.

But the proof of the pudding is in the eating. The enemy at the time had both the intercontinental ballistic missile and the satellite. They are still ahead of us, and their rate of progress is still superior to ours. Unless fundamental and radical changes are made in our national defense setup, within three years Russia could be so far ahead that we would not stand a chance.

How, then, can we help ourselves?

The first thing Congress must do is to repeal the Unification of Forces Act which, as passed by Congress in 1947 and amended in 1949, contains the seeds of military disaster.

A new military establishment must be created which is attuned to the technological realities of our time.

No matter how widely we pool the creative talents of the nations of the West, they will come to naught unless and until we have a correct organization to take full advantage of our very real creative genius.

No one doubts any longer that militarily and technologically we are far behind the U.S.S.R. Is it because of a dearth of scientific and engineering talent? Or lack of production know-how? Of course not. We are still the greatest industrial power on earth. With 650,000 scientists and engineers in our midst, as of today we lead Russia by 25 per cent in the technological brain power pool, though they are catching up with us dangerously fast.

The reason we have reached a state of military inferiority vis-a-vis Russia is that our scientific genius is condemned by military orthodoxy to labor within the confines of an outmoded, fallacious framework.

Our current inferiority is not scientific, but strategic and tactical. It is extremely important for us to understand clearly that the word "inferior" refers to the military characteristics of our weapons and not to their engineering properties.

Instead of developing a new strategy that takes full advantage of the new technology, we are trying to cram the new technology into the old strategic bag. We waste our industrial know-how, our scientific and engineering talents—the most precious commodity we possess—on all sorts of irrelevant military projects. We are still perfecting de luxe invasion barges, and the rest of the paraphernalia of super-amphib-

AIR POWER'S PROPHET

Major Alexander P. de Seversky, currently Special Consultant to the Chief of Staff, USAF, has spent a lifetime studying airplanes and air power. Born in Tiflis, Russia, in 1894, he downed 13 German planes in World War I as a Russian flier. He was visiting the United States on an aviation commission just as the Russian Revolution commenced in 1917 and saw no reason to return to his native country.

In the 20s he became consultant to General Billy Mitchell and designed a bomb sight of such accuracy that the Air Corps called it the "best in the world." Later he worked with long-range pursuit planes, both in the front office and in the air. He was that rare combination of executive and test pilot. A major in the U. S. Army Air Corps Reserve, de Seversky was the founder and president of the Seversky Aircraft Corporation, now Republic. In 1939, in recognition of his 25 years of contributions to aviation, he was awarded the Harmon Trophy.

It is in the past two decades that Major de Seversky has become an infallible oracle in matters dealing with air power and his country's national defense. In 1939, Charles Lindbergh informed the world that England would not last more than two weeks in a war with Nazi Germany. De Seversky maintained that the RAF could not be defeated and that England would not be invaded. De Seversky was right, as events later proved.

His provocative books, Victory Through Air Power (1942) and Air Power: Key to Survival (1950), were aimed at alerting the nation to a crisis, first in war, then in peace.

In recent years, de Seversky has continued to assess the military situation with uncanny accuracy.

In 1947 he said: "In a future war the 'guns' will be long-range air-power striking at the enemy's heartland . . ."

In 1949 he said: "It is not the stockpile of atomic bombs that will decide the issue, but superior means of delivery."

In 1955 he said: "The whole military philosophy must be changed, or we shall forever trail the rest of the world, not only in conventional aircraft, but in intercontinental ballistic missiles and even in man-made earth satellite development."

The accompanying article reflects his latest warnings to the nation.

ious task forces. We are lavishing billions on all sorts of contraptions designed for ground warfare, full of electronic ingenuity and scientific wizardry, from infra-red kitchens, booby traps and obsolete tanks to "low-performance" combat aviation for the Army. These are all frozen assets that can be used only if and when the air war is won.

And think of Naval task forces: They cost us five billion dollars a throw, and are built around strategically obsolete aircraft carriers capable of launching only a handful of aircraft and missiles that are inadequate to defend their own task force, much less to attack the Eurasian land mass against fantastic odds.

The transformation of a conventionally propelled surface Navy into an atomic Navy has no strategic significance. The new 80,000-ton, giant economy size atomic aircraft carrier will be sunk just as swiftly as its smaller version if it ventures within striking range of enemy air power which, by the time of its commission, will be global. Like the battleships at Pearl Harbor, these new

Pageant

535 Fifth Avenue
New York 17, New York
MUrray Hill 2-7700

EDITORS NOTE

The brief biographical sketch of Major de Seversky which accompanies his article, "So That This Nation Shall Not Perish," should include the following information.

Major de Seversky arrived in the United States in 1918, after suffering arduous experiences during both Russian revolutions. He was appointed a member of the Russian Naval Aviation Mission to the United States by the Russian provisional government in the summer of 1917, but was retained on combat duty as Chief of the Fighter Force by the Commander of the Baltic Sea Fleet. After the Communists came into power and concluded a separate peace treaty with Germany, Major de Seversky left Russia, escaping via Siberia to America. On arrival in this country in March of 1918, he offered his services to the United States government and was employed as aeronautical engineer and test pilot by the U.S. War Department.

ships of the line will be at the bottom of the ocean before they know they are at war.

Russia has no overseas bases, and yet she does not spend billions on floating islands. She pours these billions, instead, into ballistic missiles and long-range Strategic Air Command.

It may well startle you to learn that, in spite of all the lip service the Government pays to it, our Air Force does not get the lion's share of the national defense budget. It is an optical illusion, a numbers racket pure and simple.

Out of 17½ billion dollars of current Air Force appropriations, I figure that 4 billion dollars are being spent by the Air Force on tactical aviation, troop carrier command, transports and cargo planes that will be useful only if we fight a full-fledged ground war. And that can never be fought unless a major global air war is won first.

Therefore, those 4 billion dollars should actually be on the Army side of the ledger, leaving the Air Force holding the bag with only 13½ billion—exactly what the Army gets, because to the Army's original 9½ billion we must add the Air Force's 4 billion—which makes 13½ billion dollars, even Steven. The Navy is supposed to get only 11½ billion dollars, but if to this we add all the direct and indirect national effort in the field of atomic energy to convert our Navy into an atomic Navy, it probably is getting the benefit of the same figure—namely 13½ billion dollars.

So we go blissfully along, developing three separate strategies and dividing the appropriation pie as evenly as possible; and with that goes division of available scientific talent, both domestic and foreign-born, on a sort of "catch-as-catch-can" basis. We are building in every direction, trying to be strong everywhere, scattering our scientific and industrial effort over the entire spectrum of weapons from de luxe invasion barges to sputniks. As a result we are weak everywhere, and, by default, are surrendering to the enemy our military technological leadership in the decisive field of aerial warfare.

The excuse for such profligate strategy is that we may be called upon to fight limited wars all over the face of the earth. This is unsound. Such little wars, whether fought with bayonets or atomic shells and bullets, or even atomic BB shots, can never be decisive. Whether our ground forces fight on camelback or mules, or in tanks or "low-performance aircraft" as General Maxwell Taylor advocates, they can never alter by one iota the power relations between the main protagonists.

KOREA AND SUEZ are proof that little wars will always end precisely where they started, the status quo prevailing, unless they explode into a major atomic conflagration.

Our Navy is about 90 per cent Air Force, and wants to project its power through the air and space above by planes and missiles. Our Army likewise clamors for its own independent aviation service in order to project its power through the air and space above with planes and missiles.

It is ridiculous for three separate agencies to fight the same air war with the same weapons, namely planes, missiles or manned vehicles.

The time is long overdue for us to integrate our three services into one single military force, with one uniform, one promotion list and a single staff. The new establishment must be, for all practical purposes, a congenial Department of the Air, in which we have a Bureau of Ships, a Bureau of Ground Forces, and bureaus of other auxiliary units.

Despite the fact that Russia acquired the atomic bomb in 1949; exploded the first hydrogen bomb in November 1955, six months ahead of us; overtook us in production of intercontinental jet bombers; went into production of intermediate range ballistic missiles (at a time when we had none); and was well on the way to developing the intercontinental ballistic missile—all of which, in effect, readjusted the international power relation to the advantage of Communism and to the detriment of the free world—then-Secretary of Defense Wilson, commenting on the 1957 budget, found it possible to state, "Nothing has occurred in the international situation during the past year (1956-57) which would indicate the necessity for any major changes in these policies and concepts."

The fundamental changes in our policies and concepts were even then long overdue; but complacency prevailed because the American people did not have the facts. They were ignorant of the disastrous road they were traveling through the smugness of our leadership. It took the Soviet sputnik to open their eyes and arouse them to action.

Only the American people can make the necessary changes in time, by bringing pressure on their representatives in Congress.

It is inconceivable that two opposing and irreconcilable ideologies can be expected to live in peace and blissful coexistence while at the same time arming to the teeth in the greatest weapons race the world has ever known. An eventual military showdown seems all the more probable when one side has openly vowed to enslave the world and the other side is equally determined to retain its freedom.

WHAT MUST be our course? We cannot overtake Russia in long range jet aircraft or ballistic missiles. The best we can do is to equal their capabilities, and live in constant dread of nuclear attack.

But fortunately for us, that balance will not last forever. Therein lies our opportunity to gain once more the upper hand. Throughout history, the advent of each new weapon seemed at first to provide an unimpeded offensive means for its possessor. But eventually and inevitably an appropriate defensive was developed, and the offense-defense balance was restored.

The nuclear warhead is no exception. Its devastating power will be curbed by the difficulty of its delivery to the target.

Each war differs radically from the preceding conflict. World War I was static, characterized by trench warfare. World War II on the other hand, with its motorized equipment and air power, was highly dynamic and mobile. The next war will differ from the last by again becoming static, a paradox since it will be fought at hypersonic speeds. The strategic picture will be like that of two immobile fortresses, shooting it out with long-range weapons.

With the ballistic missile a reality, the maximum in offensive power has been reached. It is only natural, therefore, that the scientific energies and resources of ourselves and our potential enemy will be channeled automatically into the defensive effort.

In developing this defensive capacity, I maintain that we must be guided by several fundamental assumptions: One—we must recognize that speed per se is no longer a defensive feature of offense. No matter how fast a missile streaks through the air or space, it can be stopped. Stop the means of delivery, and what it carries no longer matters. The second fundamental to recognize is that in a short time the range of detection of airborne vehicles by various scientific means will be extended clear around the globe. The surprise attack will be impossible, unless one side is fast asleep.

AND THIS IS where America has its greatest—perhaps its last—chance.

This chance lies in developing a highly efficient interception system through our overall superior electronic combat power. In addition to our technological leadership in these related sciences, our country is uniquely equipped for this kind of warfare. I have always been convinced of this.

Although Russia has made vast technological advances, its standard of living has not improved appreciably. On the other hand, the United States has greatly expanded its telephone, telegraph, ticker tape, teletype and microwave facilities—to mention only a few. This highly efficient communications web—the indispensable ingredient of an effective defense complex—is already in existence. Representing hundreds of billions in investment, it is the product of our free enterprise and industrial civilization. It would be a Gargantuan task for any government, no matter how autocratic, to create a similar complex, even with slave labor, and have it operational by the time of maximum danger three years from now.

Don't misunderstand me. I do not advocate an electronic Maginot Line, nor do I advocate defensive strategy, because the military principle that only offense can win a war is as true today as it has been through the ages.

What I am trying to clarify is that modern defense consists of combat interception by planes, missiles, and nuclear warheads the moment the enemy is airborne 5000 miles away. It is a continuous electronic battle. Likewise, the offense will have to fight its way to the target the moment it is airborne for attack. Both offense and defense are an integral part of the overall battle for command of the air, the space above. and the electronic right of way.

It is clear that our first objective is to create a long-range striking force—ballistic, rocket-driven and airborne—operating directly from this continent, since overseas bases are no longer tenable. In order to reach the enemy's vital targets, such a striking force must possess superior countermeasures for neutralizing enemy defenses. Second, we must have a defensive force on our continent that has superior counter-countermeasures to decimate the enemy's attacking force. This is the only area in which we, as a society, still have a clear edge of superiority over the U.S.S.R.

The only real piece of military propaganda which has come from Russia recently is Khrushchev's statement that jet bombers are already museum pieces. I am sure he knows better, and made the statement with his tongue in his cheek. With Soviet long-range bombers coming off the production line at a rate 400 per cent greater than ours, Khrushchev's outburst might have been a cunning ruse: For while we strain every effort to achieve parity with the U.S.S.R. on the ICBM by sometime in 1961, we may be forced to do so at the expense of our Strategic Air Command in being. Meanwhile Russia may attack us at any time before that date, and smother us like a cloud of locusts.

We must never forget the way we smothered Germany with wave after wave of our ten-year-old crates such as the B-17 and B-24, in spite of Hitler's V-1s, V-2s, jet aircraft, rocket interceptors and other scientific novelties. Therefore our program must be as follows:

One: Our jet-propelled Strategic Air Command must be quadrupled. Its sustained range must be increased and its survival in any initial surprise attack by the enemy must be assured. The production of intercontinental bombers must be a 7-day, 3-shift operation.

Two: We must intensify our ballistic missile effort to achieve parity with the U.S.S.R. in the shortest possible time.

Three: Finally, we must also exert maximum effort to create the most efficient Continental Air Defense through expansion of our communications, electronics and guided missile production, extension of our early warning system and, above all. the rapid development of anti-missile missiles for interception of the ICBM through the method of collision.

But we can never accomplish all this as long as we adhere to the "misguided attempt" to maintain conventional forces that have no longer a legitimate mission and are kept only through inertia, sentiment and tradition.

I respect and admire tradition. I value the importance of esprit de corps. But when these fine heritages interfere with human progress and threaten our very security, I feel that we must have the moral courage to relegate them to the nostalgic past and to make the necessary fundamental changes in our military setup.

The question is whether we will have the wisdom to make that move now — as a product of logic — or whether it will be forced upon us by devastating events, in which case the change may come too late: Within three years our country may be enslaved by a hostile ideology, or it may lie in ruin, and one out of every three of you who read these lines may be dead. ■■

March 23, 1958

For your information and file.
Cordially,
Alexander P. de Seversky

This Week
MAGAZINE

Major Alexander P. de Seversky (above) writes a forecast and a warning:

No More Limited Wars! ... Page 8

Has Joanne Woodward talked herself out of an Oscar? ... Page 10

A FORECAST AND A WARNING:

No More

United Press

Air Force

KOREA: This was "limited war," fought with conventional weapons. Today Russian and U.S. arsenals are being stocked with long-range nuclear missiles like the Air Force Atlas (right). With such weapons in existence, is a limited war possible, the author asks?

THIS WEEK presents Major de Seversky's views on this critical subject because we feel they will contribute to fuller public understanding of the issue of America's defense. Recently we published two other points of view: Admiral Arleigh Burke's "Has The H-Bomb Sunk Our Navy?" and scientist Dr. Edward Teller's "We Must Win The H-War Before It Starts."

See Front Cover

"Little" Wars!

By Major ALEXANDER P. de SEVERSKY

A noted expert who foretold many of the great developments of the Air Age now makes an important prediction for the Space Age

Once again I am greatly concerned lest the United States make a tragic mistake in its military policy. We are watching the most confusing debate in history on our national defense.

Yet this is clear: We will not achieve the military strength we need to survive until our defense planners grasp one central fact. It is that unless we take leave of our strategic senses America will never again have to fight a limited war. I make this prediction because the logic against small wars, though little understood, is overwhelming.

I know that this statement will be challenged repeatedly. Protests may be even stronger than those made against three previous forecasts I made in THIS WEEK. But all three predictions have proved accurate. Now lets turn to prediction No. 4: No More Little Wars.

It has been argued that the United States and the USSR, are locked in a nuclear stalemate. Now that we have proved our ability to launch satellites, this deadlock has been extended into outer space. It has been concluded, therefore, that nuclear war is too horrible to contemplate and that both sides will try to resolve the issue by fighting limited wars. The case for America fighting such wars has already been well stated in the press, in the Rockefeller Report and before Congress. I disagree. It is my conviction that it would be fatal to base our over-all strategy on this concept. To explain my reasoning, I must first define the terms "total war" and "limited war."

TOTAL WAR is one fought primarily between the United States and the USSR in which each side makes a supreme effort to destroy completely the other's capacity to fight and in which any and all nuclear weapons are utilized.

LIMITED WAR is one in which the forces of Communism and the United States may be involved but it originates in territory other than Russia's, America's or their allies. Neither side has any intention of letting the conflict spread to its homeland and each side believes that its objective can be accomplished by a limited investment of manpower and weapons. As part of this concept, some people assume (falsely, I believe) that each side would confine itself to conventional pre-atomic weapons, as was the case in Korea, Indo-China and Suez.

I am convinced that:

1. We cannot win a limited war fought with traditional forces, regardless of whether conventional or nuclear weapons are used.
2. We can make limited war impossible if we make clear to the world that we possess a retaliatory force with the strategic scope and tactical flexibility to crush aggression and so preserve the global status quo.
3. We can generate a great economic abundance to share with the rest of the world by concentrating on a single deterrent force, and thereby we can prove that freedom is dynamic and beneficent.

The average American may ask why it is necessary for him to be concerned with military theories. My answer is this: as long as our strategists see the need to prepare for little wars they will urge expenditures for an endless variety of weapons and limited-war forces to wage all kinds of action, all over the world. Thus our money and industrial and scientific effort will be wasted on all sorts of hardware and secondary projects, from invasion barges to aircraft carriers. This, in turn, is bound to bring unbearable taxes, rationing, price controls and other distasteful features of a regimented society.

If we continue to scatter our energies, we will be unable to maintain the twin essentials to our survival as a free nation: (1) the overwhelming deterrent strength which alone can prevent all-out war, plus (2) a healthy, expanding civilian economy.

Little Wars Bring Bankruptcy

The logic of geography and the recent development of fantastically efficient atomic weapons mean that continued participation in little wars would, in time, bring us close to bankruptcy. Let me elaborate:

A glance at the globe will show that America is thousands of miles away from most of the world's trouble spots while Russia and her satellites are within easy —— Continued on page 36

SEVERSKY'S THREE PREDICTIONS

On three occasions Major de Seversky has issued vital warnings in THIS WEEK. Each time his prediction has proved all too correct. Here's his record:

1949: Trans-oceanic air war

"The most crucial fact to which we must adjust our minds, and the sooner the better, is this: From now on, trans-oceanic, inter-hemispheric air war is possible. . . " From "This Map Can Save America," February 13, 1949.

1954: Loss of the arms race

"The American people must be aware that 'the great deterrent' — our atomic superiority — is passing into enemy hands, not because of the enemy's increasing stockpile of nuclear weapons but because he is acquiring superior means of delivery." From "Lindbergh Is Wrong Again," December 12, 1954.

1955: The earth satellite

"The whole military philosophy must be changed, or we shall forever trail the rest of the world, not only in conventional aircraft, but in intercontinental ballistic missiles and even in man-made earth satellite development." From "Don't Let Censorship Destroy Us," September 18, 1955

Kill bathroom odors fast with Colgate's new Florient

Makes air smell flower-fresh

One Spray of Colgate's new Florient instant-action Air Deodorant quickly kills unpleasant household odors — cooking, smoking, bathroom, pets, musty closets, baby's room, and sick room. Get it at your grocery or drug store. Be sure to keep an extra Florient handy in the kitchen.

No Wick • No Wait • No Waste

Stop That Itch

Very first use of soothing, cooling liquid D.D.D. Prescription positively relieves raging itch — caused by eczema, rashes, scalp irritation, chafing—other itch troubles. Greaseless, stainless. 45¢ trial bottle must satisfy or money back. Don't suffer. Ask your druggist for D. D. D. PRESCRIPTION.

Mary's DISMAL PERIODIC PAIN

Menstruation is natural and necessary but menstrual suffering is not. Just take a Midol tablet, Mary, and go your way in comfort. Midol brings faster relief from menstrual pain—it relieves cramps, eases headache and chases the "blues."

Mary's BRIGHT WITH MIDOL

Continued from page 9

Small Nations Can't Survive A-War

reach of most of them. Remember that in the Korean War it took nine American divisions transported by a colossal sea- and air-lift to hold the Chinese and North Koreans at bay. And troops from several other nations fought beside us under the UN flag. In any future little war, we would need not just nine divisions, but 90 or more, plus vastly multiplied transport facilities, because we would meet superbly-equipped Soviet forces supported by aviation that is at least equal to ours.

For Russia is far stronger in conventional forces than we are. This massive totalitarian state is able to commit more of her national resources and vast manpower for limited warfare than the United States.

The Soviet Margin

The Soviet Union has an estimated four and a half million men under arms compared to our two and a half million, and her Navy has more than 450 modern submarines while we have less than 150. Her margin in tanks and jet air transport is just about as great.

Pentagon officials often point to this disparity as an argument for increasing our surface forces. I take just the opposite view: we are under no compulsion to have a large standing army just because Russia is doing so. The United States has no political satellites to police. We operate from a friendly base and have no fear of our neighboring states, Canada and Mexico.

Thus geography, population and economics all argue against conventional little wars. There is also the strong probability that any future "limited" war would be fought with nuclear weapons. For atomic explosives are now both versatile and deadly. Some can obliterate a wide area, while others can be confined to a pinpoint target. Since nuclear weapons are standard equipment in both Russia's and America's military arsenals, there is strong likelihood that they would be used in any future struggle.

That is why the distinction made by limited-war adherents between nuclear forces and conventional forces is out of date. So, let's not kid ourselves by assuming that any future local outbreak would be waged only with World War II weapons.

Furthermore, if atomic bombs are employed, the small nations involved are bound to be wiped out. Once this tragic possibility is understood, any uncommitted country may well realize that becoming a pawn for Russia's aggressive designs means national suicide.

But, even if started, a little war can only remain confined with the tacit consent of Russia and the United States. This, of course, would produce a stalemate, as was the case in Korea. Only, unlike Korea, since both sides possess equally efficient military technology, the cost would be enormous to both sides in human life.

The very same technology which makes total war between equally matched protagonists suicidal makes a nuclear limited war idiotic.

The only other possibility is that such a deadlock —— Continued on next page

Better than aspirin even with buffering for

TENSE NERVOUS HEADACHES

Nervous tension headaches need the special relief Anacin® gives. Here's why Anacin is better than aspirin, even with buffering added. Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, Anacin contains not just one but a combination of medically proven ingredients. Anacin acts to (1) relieve pain, (2) calm nerves — leave you relaxed, (3) fight depression... and Anacin Tablets do not upset the stomach.

3 out of 4 doctors recommend the ingredients of ANACIN

Kellogg's

ALL-BRAN

BREAKING AMERICA'S LAXATIVE DRUG HABIT

When he's ready for college... will college be ready for him?

If you want to know what the college crisis means to you, write for a FREE BOOKLET to: Higher Education, 6 East 45th Street, New York 17, N. Y.

"Night Cough" racking your nerves?

Cough all night? Wake up worn out? Herb discovery checks coughs of colds without codeine so you sleep.

If "Night Cough" is shattering your sleep and nerves (your family's too) here's quick blessed relief. PERTUSSIN with herbal Thymol not only soothes coughs of colds or flu, but it also loosens phlegm. Contains no habit-forming codeine—you sleep naturally. That's why so many doctors have prescribed PERTUSSIN for young and old. Good tasting. Commended by Parents' Magazine. Get...

PERTUSSIN

Continued from preceding page

One Boss: Air, Space, Missiles

would explode into all-out war — which brings us right back to my primary conclusion that this is the only kind of war for which the United States must prepare.

It is clear to me that Russia has already sensed this new power relationship. That is why she desisted from further inciting Turkey and Syria against each other. Since then, she has continued demobilizing her conventional forces (although they are still far larger than those in the U.S.). She has diverted that manpower toward increasing her strength in total war and broadening her industrial capacity to forge the tools of economic war.

What should our solution be? There are several answers: To meet the immediate danger, we must drastically cut back our land and sea forces while increasing our main retaliatory strength — the Strategic Air Command. To achieve a unity of command and split-second reaction to attack, all present offensive forces on land and on sea which employ planes or missiles should be immediately put under the operational control of SAC.

If Russia should take leave of her senses, this is the only way that the U.S. can nip in the bud any aggression and retain its over-all retaliatory power.

Short-Range Measure

But this can only be a short-range, stop-gap measure. For the long run, much more fundamental changes in our national defense must be made. Plans to reorganize the three services are now being studied. But none of them goes far enough.

The time is long overdue for us to integrate our three services into one single military force, with one uniform, one promotion list and a single staff. The new establishment must be, for all practical purposes, a congenial Department of Air and Space in which we have a Bureau of Naval Forces, a Bureau of Ground Forces and bureaus of other auxiliary units.

The outcry that the creation of a single staff headed by a single chief smacks of totalitarianism is utterly unwarranted. Such an organization in a dictatorship is one thing; the same organization working under the President and the Secretary of Defense, and under the control of Congress, is quite another.

We Must Press For Change

The changes I have outlined cannot come from the Pentagon. Even though some of our top military leaders individually see their logic and timeliness, they are too regimented to speak out on questions of over-all policy without fear of censure. There is only one source from which the necessary changes can come and that is the American people bringing pressure on their representatives in Congress.

Of course, building up our air, space and missile strength under an integrated single service is not all that we must do. For the Communists are equally adept at taking over uncommitted areas by covert aggression — through infiltration and subversion. To resist this process, we, in turn, must use all our skills and intelligence in propaganda, diplomacy and in economic aid.

But it is primarily up to our allies to prevent the spread of Communist infiltration, as distinct from all-out war. NATO troops, perhaps under UN direction, can police trouble spots and stiffen the will of those nations threatened by Communists. Meanwhile we can concentrate on our deterrent strength. We can mobilize our entire military effort toward building up a vast arsenal of a great variety of nuclear weapons as well as planes and missiles to deliver them swiftly to any kind of target anywhere in the world.

We Can Lead The World

Our strategists must give up the misguided attempt to prepare for both small and big wars by creating two separate and distinct types of forces. This plan would exhaust our manpower and eventually lead us down the road to bankruptcy.

But if we concentrate on the major job, then the $40 billion already proposed in the coming year for military expenditures is sufficient for us to lead the world in both the offensive and defensive weapons needed to keep Communism in check.

I believe that we are still the greatest industrial nation on earth and with 650,000 scientists and engineers in our midst, we have a greater pool of creative brainpower than the Communists. But we need courage too.

Above all, we need the moral courage to abandon the traditions, no matter how noble, which stand in the way of progress and the security of our nation. Then we can be invincibly strong for the forseeable future. We can further increase our already high standard of living and have plenty to share with the rest of the world. Short of war, the world-wide economic struggle is bound to end in the collapse of the inferior ideology.

And if, in desperation, the Russians resort to force, our superior strength and capacity in the only field that counts — nuclear offense and defense — will minimize the ravages of such a war.

I am confident that freedom will triumph over slavery. I have unbounded faith in the collective wisdom of the American people. Once they understand the futility of limited wars, they will select the right course: a strategy that will provide us with a realistic offense and defense that is in tune with the technology of our times.

I mean by this an overwhelming nuclear deterrent force that can check Communism anywhere, in all its forms, by swift action through air and space directly from this continent. Also, an insuperable electronic nuclear defense that can decimate the enemy should he dare to attack us. — The End

Don't Scratch that

New wonder healing aid relieves intense itch in seconds —fights further infection!

● Doctors warn that scratching may cause infection. But with new antiseptic Nozain you can now relieve itch in seconds and so resist that dangerous urge to scratch! New greaseless Nozain —made by Noxzema—works 3 ways at once to bring relief:
1—It's anesthetic! Relieves pain of itch in seconds!
2—It's antiseptic! Fights germs. Helps prevent spread of itch!
3—It's medicated! Soothes irritation. Speeds up healing!

Nozain is ideal for cuts, scrapes, burns, severe sunburn. Great for children. 75¢ and $1.25 a tube. Get satisfying relief . . . or return unused portion for full refund.

Satisfaction guaranteed by Noxzema.

NOW YOU CAN JOIN SPARKY'S FIRE DEPARTMENT!

As a member of Sparky's Fire Department, you will receive an official inspector's badge, a membership card and a complete inspector's manual to help you prevent fires in your home.

To become a member of Sparky's Fire Department, just send 25¢ in coin, stamps or money order to Sparky's Fire Department, a non-profit project of the National Fire Protection Association.

SPARKY'S FIRE DEPARTMENT
Box 32
Boston 1, Mass.

NFPA

New!
BAYER® NASAL SPRAY
WITH NEO-SYNEPHRINE®

Offers greater protection against spread of infection than any other nasal spray — because it comes in containers of different colors — blue, green and brown — so everyone in the family can have his own! That's why Bayer Nasal Spray is

As personal as your toothbrush!

It contains wonder-working Neo-Synephrine, and gives almost instant relief from nasal congestion—relief that lasts for hours! Bayer Nasal Spray sweeps away stuffiness . . . dries up runny nose . . . relieves head cold miseries . . . has you breathing freely again—that fast! Get it soon!

59¢ ea. | 2 for 98¢

DIAPER RASH
Diaparene Ointment
DIAPARENE

"Regular ever since!"

Is constipation, caused by lack of bulk, giving you trouble? Wilson F. Burnham of Worcester, Mass., writes: "Years ago I was quite irregular, so I decided to try All-Bran. I have had the best of daily regularity since." Kellogg's All-Bran is the natural way to keep regular without habit-forming laxative drugs. Try Kellogg's All-Bran, the original whole bran cereal that has already helped millions.

Kellogg's ALL-BRAN

This Week
MAGAZINE

MAGAZINE SECTION · DECEMBER 12 1954

For your information and file.
Cordially,
Alexander P. de Seversky

CHRISTMAS EARRINGS: DECORATIVE AND TIMELY. SEE FASHION FIND, PAGE 24

LINDBERGH

Major Alexander P. de Seversky Tells

WHY LINDBERGH IS WRONG ...Page 12

DE SEVERSKY

CLAUD HUSTON

MAJOR ALEXANDER P. de SEVERSKY began his flying career during World War I in Czarist Russia. Had 57 combat missions and shot down 13 enemy planes. Arrived in America in 1918. Became test pilot and aeronautical engineer for the U.S. Government. Founded Seversky Aircraft Corporation, now Republic. Invented many flying devices and designed first cantilever, all-metal high-speed fighter. In World War II was consultant to the War Department, later represented the Secretary of War at Bikini A-bomb tests. His "Victory Through Air Power" and "Air Power: Key To Survival" are texts in most military colleges; he lectures at Air War, Air Command and Staff Colleges of the U.S. Air University

"LINDBERGH IS

By Major Alexander P. de Seversky

Author of "Air Power: Key To Survival"

Thirteen years ago Lindbergh thought the Nazi air force invincible. Today he says there is "no defense" in atomic war. An outspoken expert, who took issue with him before, does so even more sharply this time

BRIG. GEN. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH remains today, as I described him 13 years ago, "a shining symbol of American aviation achievement." His Lone Eagle conquest of the Atlantic a generation ago established a glamorous legend of boundless courage that has stood the test of time.

Lindbergh's skill as an airman is as far beyond question as his patriotism and integrity. But aviation skill, no matter how great, does not in itself guarantee a grasp of military facts. It is no comfortable thing for a fellow airman to take issue with his opinions and judgments. I venture to do so, as I did back in 1941, reluctantly and only out of a deep concern for the security and survival of our country.

In any case, it happens that Lindbergh has been wrong, dangerously wrong, on basic concepts of national security at critical junctures in our history. His personal prestige gives his views exceptional weight in public opinion and sometimes even on official planning levels. Misleading guideposts set up by lesser men can be ignored, but Lindbergh's have to be appraised without inhibitions.

In the year before Pearl Harbor, America was seeking answers to pressing strategic questions. Those offered by Lindbergh seemed to me so deeply mistaken that I felt compelled to refute them, in an article entitled, "Why Lindbergh Is Wrong." History has left little room for doubt that my criticism at that time was justified.

Search for a Solution

TODAY America once more gropes for a strategic solution. Decisions are being shaped that may spell life or death not only for this country but for the whole free world. Again Lindbergh, in a spirit of patriotic dedication, has come forward with a set of answers, embodied in an article in the "Saturday Evening Post" of July 17, 1954. And again his advice seems to me so perilously wrong that, if followed, it would assure us defeat and disaster.

Before I examine his current military judgments, I must indicate the nature of his errors on the eve of America's entry into the last war. His present thinking has much in common with those past mistakes. Then as now, he showed a tendency to sell science short and to yield to a kind of enveloping defeatism that distorted his vision.

On January 23, 1941, Lindbergh was asked in Congress: "But you do not believe that England and the United States together could defeat Germany?" He answered, "I think it is improbable, sir." He was wrong.

He constantly insisted that the German Air Force was invincible. He was wrong.

He maintained that the United States, by reason of geography, was absolutely safe from attack in "any predictable future." He was wrong.

True, in a speech in Oklahoma City on August 29, 1941, he stated: "In some future generation, fifty or a hundred or a thousand years from now, the United States may be as vulnerable to attack from Europe as England is today."

But he fell wide of the mark by from 40 to 990 years. And his estimate was typical of his curious lack of faith in the potentials of aeronautical science.

So much for past errors. Now, how does General Lindbergh assess our strategic position under present conditions and what does he recommend as "Our Best Chance To Survive" — the title of his recent article? His views can, I think, be reduced to three basic though overlapping propositions:

"No Defense." His central conviction, from which flow most of his recommendations, is that "there is no longer such a thing as adequate defense." From the extreme position that the United States could not "in the predictable future" be attacked, he has now swung, in one decade, to the opposite extreme: that the U. S. cannot be defended.

"Hundreds of Bases." Having arbitrarily waived effective defense, he urges that we rely primarily on prodigious offensive strength, immensely dispersed on many hundreds of air bases. Presumably, Lindbergh refers to bases abroad as well as at home.

Balanced Forces. Though he envisions a decisive air war on a colossal scale, to be fought by a "prodigious Air Force," he insists, in addition, on "a strong Army, a strong Navy and strong allies." In fact he goes along docilely with the current Pentagon strategy of balanced forces which virtually all airmen vigorously reject as profligate and self-defeating.

Let's study the merits of these three propositions.

1. "No Defense"

Lindbergh erects his entire edifice of argument on the assumption that effective defense must be ruled out. "The most elaborate defensive network we can devise," he asserts, "would intercept only a fraction of modern enemy aircraft launched in a determined attack on this country." "The hydrogen bomb and the supersonic missile have eliminated defensive security on the surface of the earth."

I am convinced that he is mistaken. I dare predict that, unless we arbitrarily discard the potentials of defense under the hypnotic spell of bad advice, only a fraction of the enemy's aircraft will get through. While the damage inflicted by that fraction will be tragically large, it will not paralyze the defending nation and the losses sustained by the enemy in the process can decisively sap his offensive vitality.

WRONG AGAIN!"

To those who have studied military history it is axiomatic that the advantage of offense over defense is a brief and transitory condition. Always and inevitably, the threat produced an adequate answer which in time even tipped the scales to give a no less temporary superiority to defense.

Before World War II, Lindbergh was saying that there was no defense against air attack. Yet the British Air Force, aided by radar, inflicted intolerable losses on Hitler's air armada and staved off invasion. Lindbergh failed to realize — and we shall see that he repeats this failure in the context of 1954 — that the balance between offense and defense shifts continually.

I see nothing in the present state of technology to indicate a dead end.

Nuclear weapons in themselves are utterly useless unless they are delivered to the right target at the right time. Stop the means of delivery, eliminate the carrier and what it carries ceases to matter. After all, it makes no difference what kind of explosive you can't deliver.

To prevent delivery, science and technology have already given us an array of devices which, if properly deployed on an adequate scale, may prevent any airplane not especially equipped to deal with them from penetrating or surviving in hostile air. Indeed, unless the planes carry countering devices of elaborate complexity and scope, a 100 per cent rate of "kills" becomes realistic.

LINDY is still "a shining symbol"

As for rockets: I refuse to share Lindbergh's defeatist attitude on Intercontinental Ballistic Missiles (IBM). He laments: "In the near future, our potential enemies will have atomic warheads in long-range rockets which travel faster than a rifle's bullet. These we do not know how to intercept at all."

The truth would be less distressing if he had made it clear that the missiles we cannot intercept do not yet exist. Many imponderables remain to be resolved before the IBM is a reality and by that time science will also have provided a defense against it.

Those who insist that Continental air defense is too costly have not thought the problem through. Defense always was and always will be cheaper than offense. For every dollar we put into a scientific roadblock in the enemy's path, he has to spend at least two for airborne countermeasures. The more effective our active defense is, the more complicated, difficult and costly becomes the enemy's offensive effort.

By the same token, if we have no genuine defense, we simplify the enemy's problem. In effect we give him the right of way in our skies as a present. Even if it were true that under some circumstances countermeasures can make a detecting and warning system ineffective, it would not justify failure to provide the best such system we can.

Those who think that the strategic air offensive will be a simple trucking proposition with insignificant losses do not grasp the nature of modern air war. Once confronted with a well-integrated scientific defense in depth, the offensive air force will have to fight every inch of the way to the target. In spite of supersonic speeds, nuclear weapons and electronic devices, the Climactic Air Battle for command of the air, as defined by the air-power thesis, is still the order of the day.

The side that achieves freedom of access to the target and denies that freedom to the enemy will prevail.

Today we have reached the stage where for all practical purposes both sides have enough nuclear weapons and aircraft to destroy each other's ability to make war. The offensive power of the belligerents is thus equal. From this point forward superior defensive power — the ability to destroy the invading force at an insupportable rate — becomes decisive and a True Deterrent. Since a superior defense rests on superior technological skills, we can prepare ourselves to face the challenge of the future with confidence.

2. "Hundreds of Bases"

This brings us to the second point. The concept of "defensive security" outlined above is offhandedly dismissed by Lindbergh as impractical. Instead of our rising and meeting the attack of the enemy in combat, through active defense, he proposes that we seek a solution in passive defense through a widespread dispersal of our military strength.

He calls for a "fleet in being of the most modern aircraft . . . scattered over hundreds of bases, over too many for an enemy to paralyze with a single blow."

He would, in effect, provide so many targets that the attacker would be exhausted in the attempt to destroy them. As he pictures it, the enemy, as the first act of war, wipes out our industry, at least 100 of our cities, our military establishment and most of our Strategic Air Force and its bases — in short, he wipes out America.

But some bases would be left over, and from these widely scattered and detached points, the remnants of our Strategic Air Force would rise to "devastate his own [the enemy] country." This is Lindbergh's formula to give America "the indestructible power to destroy." However, he fails to see that his plan would accord the enemy the same power — and the privilege to use it first.

I cannot buy that sort of "defense." Nor should the nation whose oblivion is recklessly conceded in advance.

Lindbergh's plan rests solely on the hope of "discouraging aggression." Should that hope fail, he accepts the annihilation of the United States as practically unavoidable. Rarely in military discussion has naked defeatism been so abjectly acknowledged and rarely, fortunately, has it been so unjustified.

In the last war, bases close to the enemy country made some sense because of the short range and limited destructive power of existing aircraft. In the next war they will become untenable. Being within a short distance of the enemy's entire air potential — his long- and short-range aircraft alike — these bases will be struck with H-bombs delivered by supersonic aircraft and within minutes will be nothing but vast gaping craters.

Continued on next page

THE GREAT DEBATE OF 1955

This article — the most important we have published in many years — forecasts the Great Debate of 1955. Recent news developments make it abundantly clear that Russia is now our equal in ability to carry out an atomic attack. In this situation, what should America's policy be? General Lindbergh has recently stated his view. Here, Major de Seversky presents a counterproposal which deserves the attention of every thinking American.

RED THREAT: The "T-37" can carry Russia's H-bomb

EDGEWORTH-HOLIDAY

...will make his dreams come true!

Give the gift of perfect taste to the Man-In-Your Life. Give a full pound tin of Edgeworth—or Holiday, America's finest pipe tobaccos—a Christmas tradition for generations. He'll be as grateful as you were thoughtful!

EDGEWORTH

America's Finest Pipe Tobacco — A choice blend of straight white burleys for unmatched flavor...always cool smoking...always fresh tasting. Edgeworth has been famous among pipe smokers for over 50 years.

HOLIDAY

America's Favorite Pipe Mixture—A delightful mixture of 5 world famous tobaccos. Holiday smells good! Holiday smokes good! It's the one mixture that's perfect for steady smoking.

Gifts in Perfect Taste

Edgeworth and Holiday 8-ounce and 16-ounce tins are handsomely boxed in gay Christmas Wrap with space for special greetings.

Get Christmas wrap Edgeworth and Holiday for him today!

ALWAYS FRESH FOR FINEST FLAVOR!

LARUS & BROTHER COMPANY, Inc., Richmond, Virginia — FINE TOBACCOS SINCE 1877

DE SEVERSKY CONTINUED

"THE ADVANTAGE OF OFFENSE OVER DEFENSE IS BRIEF"

To me it is inconceivable that anyone can think that in this age of nuclear weapons and supersonic speeds Russia can be contained by a chain of air bases erected virtually in her own back yard, as air power reckons distances.

Instead of containing the U.S.S.R., we are delivering to her our military strength piecemeal.

Only on our own continent, under the shield of our vast defensive potential, do bases today make sense. They must, of course, be dispersed throughout our continent, but dispersal beyond a certain point will not give us protection. Excessive dispersal, whether of military or industrial objectives, can be a handicap. Germany's experience proved in the last war that it creates an intolerable strain on transport and supply lines, which in turn themselves provide profitable targets for the enemy.

A mass of scattered worldwide bases, moreover, would be the surest way to bankrupt America. The acquisition, construction and equipment of each base will cost from scores of millions to hundreds of millions, depending on size. The many "hundreds of bases" Lindbergh envisages will cost us a few hundred billions of dollars, particularly if we include the surface forces required for their maintenance and supply across thousands of miles of ocean, plus the extortion money we must pay, in some instances, for the privilege of using foreign soil.

Even at that, in most cases we cannot use them for our atomic weapons without specific permission from the landlord.

Every time we establish a defenseless overseas base, at immense cost in national effort, Russia to checkmate our move has only to assign a plane and a hydrogen bomb for its destruction. Even if she were forced to match base for base, she would be establishing them on her own continent, under the shield of her home defensive complex.

So it is clear that we must stop pouring good money after bad into useless real estate all over the world and must divert those funds into the defense of the continental United States and Canada. England as a base is the only exception because it is creating an effective air defense derived from its own industrial power.

But such real-estate developments as those in the jungles of Asia and the deserts of Africa, on the soil of many nations — some friendly, some indifferent and some subject to local sabotage or political defection — provide weak reeds indeed for a nation that has deliberately chosen to leave itself exposed to the furies of nuclear offensive. The whole thing, despite its eminent auspices, is a sorry phantasmagoria of despair.

3. Balanced Forces

But that is not all. Besides a maze of bases and the "prodigious air force" deployed on them, General Lindbergh recommends that we maintain "a strong Army, a strong Navy and strong allies." He merely asserts this, without explaining his reasons. But he does not try to explain what these armies, navies and strong allies will be doing while Soviet Russia, as he himself predicts, pounds us into a pulp across the North Pole.

So if all this is true, where do we go from here? What possible path can we follow to find true security for the United States in these perilous times? Lindbergh points a way — but dimly — when he says that we should maintain a research and development program "that will improve the effectiveness of our future weapons."

Certainly no one will quarrel with him on this score. It is as obvious as saying that a man ought to breathe to live. But it means little unless we prescribe the scope and direction of the effort.

America is fed up with high-minded generalities from high places. It yearns for clear and concrete plans and solutions geared to atomic warfare at supersonic speeds. Such plans should provide for an immediate crash program for air delivery and air defense.

WIDE WORLD

ALERT: Within minutes of radar detection, jet fighters can hit enemy bombers

WEAPONS

INTERNATIONAL

A-bomb and H-bomb represent terrific offensive power — if they're delivered on the target

DELIVERY

BOEING

Intercontinental bombers like B-52 (above) can fly 6,000 miles. Russia's version is in production

DEFENSE

PIX

But new devices, including rocket missiles, make approach to target by bomber enormously difficult

We had a wartime research and development crash program on atomic weapons called the Manhattan Project. It accomplished a miracle. Yet we failed to develop a similar crash program — an all-out effort to provide all the necessary funds and talent to build aircraft which would guarantee the delivery of those weapons. Small wonder that Russia, with its new long-range bombers, has seized the lead in means of delivery. Already many hundreds of Red six-engine turboprop bombers are poised on northern Siberian bases within striking range of the industrial heart of America. And even more powerful Soviet long-range jet bombers — the T-37's — are being delivered to the Russian Air Force. From available data it appears those bombers are capable of supersonic speeds over the target.

Yet our Air Force was arbitrarily chained primarily to medium-range bombers that are ineffective unless the enemy permits our use of bases in his own back yard. In spite of the fact that Russia already can bomb us without intermediary bases, our military masterminds still insist that there is "no such animal" as a truly intercontinental bomber and that overseas bases are, therefore, indispensable.

Striking Force

THE American people must be aware that "the great deterrent" — our atomic superiority—is passing into enemy hands, not because of the enemy's increasing stockpile of nuclear weapons but because he is acquiring superior means of delivery. Unless we make a supreme effort, we are doomed. Just run-of-the-mill research and development is not enough.

We must immediately bring into being a crash program to give our nation a truly long-range striking Air Force that has the capacity to destroy the enemy directly from the continental source of its industrial origin, from home bases inaccessible to Russia's insuperable army and overwhelming, massive short-range air force; from this hemisphere that has all the necessary strategic materials to support our war machine and economy.

At the same time a similar program must be rushed through for Continental Air Defense, to intercept and destroy the enemy's means of delivery. Certainly we can well afford the 25 billion dollars that has been estimated as the capital cost of that vital program.

Both the striking and defensive Air Forces are of strategic significance. Both are designed to act as a deterrent and, in war, to gain command of the air through air battle, and preclude the atomic destruction of civilization.

Such a program, aiming at the preservation of America and the defeat of the enemy through destruction in battle, will cost a fraction of Lindbergh's program of passive defense that forfeits America and aims to defeat the enemy through exhaustion in destroying the prodigious number of American targets.

Our Tradition

ONLY by adhering to American tradition to stand up and fight while defending ourselves at all times can we be sure that the indestructible power to destroy that Lindbergh alludes to is possessed by our side alone.

Only thus can we be invincibly strong and yet remain a free and unregimented people and maintain the high standards of living from which our very strength flows. The End

9500 SKIN TESTS PROVE . . .

Palmolive Soap Is Mildest! Better for Complexion Care!

BETTER THAN ANY LEADING TOILET SOAP ...FLOATING SOAP...EVEN COLD CREAM!

Skin specialists agree: Milder cleansing is better for your complexion! A mild soap means less irritation . . . more gentle cleansing . . . softer, smoother skin. Palmolive brings you all these benefits because it's the mildest of them all. That's why no other leading soap or cold cream gets skin thoroughly clean as gently as Palmolive!

So change today to Palmolive's Beauty Plan . . . gently massage Palmolive's 100% mild, pure lather onto your skin for 60 seconds, 3 times a day. Rinse; pat dry. In 14 days or less, see if you don't have softer, smoother, brighter skin—that Schoolgirl Complexion Look! You'll find that Palmolive Soap is the mildest of them all—far better for complexion care!

LOOK AT THE FACTS—PROVED BY 9500 SKIN TESTS

Palmolive Is Proved
Milder Than Any Other Leading Floating Soap or Toilet Soap!

Palmolive Is Proved
Milder Than Leading White Floating Soaps or Toilet Soaps!

Palmolive Is Proved
Even Milder Than America's Leading Cold Cream!

de Seversky Says Satellites, Missiles Belong To Air Force

Sees Space Natural Domain Of Younger Service in Sputnik Age

EDITOR'S NOTE: Maj. Alexander De Seversky is one of the world's most distinguished airmen. His achievements as a pilot, inventor and aircraft designer stand as milestones in the progress of man's conquest of the air. In far-seeing arguments for air power, such as his book "Victory Through Air Power," he has profoundly influenced this generation. Now a consultant to the Air Force and a lecturer at the Air War College in Montgomery, Ala., Major De Seversky is again speaking out forcefully for a reorganization of our defense establishment in line with the realities of the space age.

By MAJ. ALEXANDER De SEVERSKY
North American Newspaper Alliance

To "reorganize the structure of the defense establishment," as recommended by the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee, is the crux of the problem of our national survival.

This is the key point of the committee's 17 recommendations for improving our military posture. Without it, I am afraid, the others would produce nothing but an amorphous stockpile of military hardware.

To appropriate money is a simple matter; to accelerate production is easy; but to effect a basic reorganization of our military setup that cuts across the tradition, habit and inertia which have, for so many years, plagued our national defense establishment is going to be a gargantuan task

The general excuse for not making the necessary basic changes, as well as for the cautious attitude displayed by our government and legislature in their approach to the reoganization of our military setup, is that "something new has been added" to our arsenal in the way of missiles and sputniks. These supposedly play havoc with our current military concepts, and consequently there is no easy answer to the problem.

In his State of the Union speech, the President stated, "the advent of revolutionary new devices . . . creates new difficulties, reminiscent of those attending the advent of the airplane half a century ago. Some of the important new weapons which technology has produced do not fit into any existing service pattern. They cut across all services, involve all services, and transcend all services. . . . in some instances they defy classification according to branch of service.

I agree that the airplane did create new difficulties in the defense area half a century ago because it opened the space above the surface of the earth as the most efficient medium for carrying destruction to the enemy. The Air Force was created as a separate arm of our national defense to exploit this third dimension which was to become decisive in modern warfare.

No Ceiling

There is no actual ceiling to the atmosphere, it does not end abruptly at some layer, beyond which is outer space. One fades into the other gradually over hundreds of miles of altitude. Man has already flown four times faster than a bullet, faster than a 16-inch shell, and faster than some ballistic missiles. With rocket propulsion, the weapons of the Air Force no longer depend on the atmosphere for sustenance and propulsion, and are in fact space vehicles. The sky is no longer the limit.

The space above is the natural domain of the Air Force. And since air power is space power, supersonic vehicles, missiles and satellites do not revolutionize warfare. They are simply more efficient weapons of air and space power.

I am compelled to disagree with the President that these new weapons transcend all services. They logically belong to the Air Force, which has for years prepared itself to wield these new instruments of war. The Air Force is not wedded to aircraft. It is a tri-dimensional military force that, because of its philosophy, has the organization and skill to keep abreast of space technology.

Try Leapfrog

Sheared of their former strategic significance, the elder services are trying to leapfrog over the Air Force into space to escape strategic unemployment. The Navy took charge of the Vanguard project in order to be the first to stake a claim in space with a token six-inch "moon." The Army developed its Jupiter-C, coveting the ambition of launching the first manned satellites to assert itself as a space power. In doing these things, the elder services are actually deserting their primary missions on land and sea.

Khaki Sputniks

It is ridiculous that these forces are both trying to become space forces. How confusing it will be if the space around our planet is infested by silver sputniks of the Air Force, golden sputniks of the Navy, and Khaki sputniks of the Army, all orbiting around in uncoordinated motion in all directions, under the control of three different heads who refuse to speak the same language.

The constructive and logical move by the Air Force to get us out of our space confusion has been frustrated recently by the Defense Department. On Dec. 11, 1957, the Air Force established a directorate of astronautics for the purpose of handling such projects as earth satellites, space reconnaissance, space platforms, and other related projects. The establishment of this directorate was promptly vetoed by Undersecretary of Defense Donald Quarles, unquestionably under the pressure of the other services who were anxious to get into the act.

Worse than that, a special agency is now being proposed in the Defense Department to handle such a project outside of the services (and therefore outside the Air Force), which guarantees that the whole effort will be strategically sterile.

In order for weapons to fulfill their purpose, they must be the product of a definite strategic concept, backed by the ground support of dedicated men who possess the necessary military and technological skill to carry out the mission.

Regardless whether a ballistic missile is viewed as a supersonic vehicle of the Air Force or simply as long-range artillery, the fact remains that all these vehicles—ballistics or guided, manned or unmanned, whether for offense or defense—intermingle in the selfsame space.

The air ocean and its endless outer space extension are one and indivisible, and should be controlled by a single, homogenous force under a single command.

Latest Move

The latest move, to split anti-missile defense between the Army and the Air Force, is utterly illogical. The Air Force is supposed to detect the oncoming missile, to find out electronically where it is, where it came from and where it is going, and pass this information along to the Army, whereupon the Army starts its own electronic chain reaction to dispatch anti-missile missiles accurately and in time for interception. No procedure could be conceived to emasculate more effectively America's defense capability.

All this brings us back to the conclusion that the present distribution of military missions is made, not on the basis of capability and the unique skills of each service, but for political expediency and to keep apparent peace in the family.

No juggling around of our three military services, their respective missions and weapons systems within the framework of the present unification act will stave off disaster. The unification law of 1947 must be repealed. The principles upon which it was founded must be repudiated. There is only one solution to our current predicament—the complete intergration of our three services into one single military force, with one uniform, one promotion list and a single staff. The new establishment must be, for all practical purposes, a congenial department of the air and space, in which there would be a bureau of naval forces, a bureau of ground forces, and bureaus of other auxiliary units.

Only when it is clearly understood that air power is space power will everything automatically fall into place: we will be on the right track toward the creation of a new military establishment which is attuned to the technology of our times.

Statement by Alexander P. de Seversky
Aeronautical Consultant
Before the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee
Washington, D.C., January 20, 1958.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee:

Although I was summoned by your counsel on short notice, and it is therefore physically impossible for me to submit to you a comprehensive memorandum, I am nonetheless grateful for this opportunity to present my views. In order to use a minimum of your valuable time, I shall confine my remarks primarily to those areas of the Hearing where I find myself in disagreement with the testimony heretofore submitted. But I hope that the questions asked by your counsel and the members of the committee will bring out some of the details which are, in certain cases, just as important as a broad assessment of the problem.

1. Defense Establishment.

a) Rockefeller Report.

To me it is heartening that at last a public debate on our national defense is under way. I hope this debate will not be confined alone to Washington but will be joined in in every hamlet in the United States. Tactics and weapons are the province of the expert; but broad national policy in the area of security, like any national policy that affects the entire nation, is the province of the people. It is primarily the product of logic and wisdom. Furthermore, strategy cannot be kept secret. It is evident from the size and allocation of appropriations and from the country's industrial effort. A free society cannot win a war by deception or surprise. Our strength must be inherent, and obvious to all.

It is encouraging to me, therefore, that such a distinguished group of people, under the leadership of Mr. Rockefeller, has devoted its time and energy to analyzing the current defects in our military posture. However, I consider the group's findings - though an important contribution to over-all debate - merely an opinion.

To start with, the group's analysis of the deficiencies of our present military establishment is correct. It is identical, not only in scope but in some instances even in language, to my own analysis which was published eight years ago in my book, AIR POWER - KEY TO SURVIVAL. A copy of this book was sent at the time to every member of the Congress, and a copy of the relevant chapter, entitled "Our National Defense Establishment", it attached to my statement.

Incidentally, the Rockefeller Committee is greatly concerned with our lead time in production of weapons, the lag between a concept and its reduction to operational status. I am more concerned with our intellectual lead time, which I am afraid is at the root of all our present trouble. Eight years ago I tried to warn the Congress and the American people that the Unification Act of 1947, as amended in 1949, was, quote, "neither fish, flesh nor fowl, and will never project a single strategy for victory"; that we were, and I quote again, "proceeding to create three separate strategic forces, each demanding the largest possible share of our security potential - which amounts to a guarantee that none of them will attain the magnitude and concentration for victory"; that the Act attempts "to perpetuate by law the strategy and tactics of World War II"; and that "we are opening ourselves to the confusion that existed at Pearl Harbor, only this time on a global scale and prescribed by law."

In other words, I warned that because of a fallacious setup there was a danger that our defense program would develop a disease that would threaten the very life of our nation. Now, eight years later, when the disease has become malignant and apparent to all, the Rockefeller Report belatedly explains how the malady was contracted. But instead of offering the bold and skilful surgery required to remove the growth and restore the patient to health and vigor, the commission prescribes a conglomeration of medicine-man potions that will only prolong the agony. The cure is even worse than the disease. Under the beguiling claim that their proposal will achieve the right kind of military strength which is compatible with a healthy economy, the commission offers the same strategy of profligacy - of building everything and anything that comes to mind: the same old tired dish of defunct strategy of balanced forces, served to the Congress and to the people smothered in a new rich sauce of limited warfare.

In the short time available to me I naturally cannot go into a complete analysis of the Rockefeller Report. But I hold myself in readiness to assist this Committee in any way possible should they desire to analyze the Report in detail.

In order to support my criticism, however, I find it necessary to allude to at least a few of the report's recommendations.

For example, it states that we have, quote, "a superior industrial base and production know-how" which will "enable us to assign high priority to a greater variety of projects than the U.S.S.R." This simply is not true. Whatever margin we may have in this respect is erased by the appalling disadvantages of geography and the dearth of American manpower. We cannot support a family of strategic plans. Whatever industrial capacity and manpower we possess, we must commit to a decisive force operating in a decisive medium. We can afford only one strategic plan. Anything else is a product of compromise. And I have stated time and time again that in the formulation of a correct strategy "there can be no genuine compromise. The correct answer cannot be obtained by averaging opposing viewpoints, any more than surgeons, failing to agree on a diagnosis, can settle the issue by operating on some in-between part of the anatomy. A strategy is either right or wrong - and we can't risk being wrong."

The report's proposal that we organize our operational military force into unified commands makes sense. But the composition of some of the commands proposed is utterly unsound. As an example I would like to refer to their recommendation that a limited war command be created. This alone would demand the biggest Army, the biggest Navy, the biggest Air Force, the biggest Marine Corps, the biggest everything - a defense department in itself. It is bound to absorb such a huge portion of our national defense effort that it will forever preclude the maintenance of an adequate retaliatory force - our Strategic Air and Space Command.

As a part of this fallacious concept, the report recommends that the Army should be allowed to develop and operate transport aircraft in order to move its forces swiftly to the combat zone. To allow the Army to develop its own air transport is just as illogical as to allow the Army to develop its own sea transport and merchant marine. Such a recommendation is an intellectual regression in an attempt to turn back the clock of progress.

Every tyro knows that such transport can never reach the battle area unless its passage is guaranteed by air superiority. But such air superiority is tabooed by the limited minds of limited war advocates: we must not even attempt to achieve air superiority, they declare, since to do so we would have to hit the enemy's air power at its source and that would provoke a total war. Thus, in limited warfare, they want us to fight an air war without air superiority; a surface war with inferior manpower without a chance of scoring a decision; and to lose our supporting Navy without even attempting to neutralize the source of attack. The whole thing is preposterous.

I want to put myself on record that the era of limited, or so-called little wars, has come to an end - unless we take leave of our strategic senses. No man in his right mind could think a limited war can be won by us with conventional forces without the use of nuclear weapons. The same unique state of today's military technology which makes total war idiotic makes a nuclear limited war idiotic also.

Further expansion of Communism cannot be accomplished through overt aggression. The limited war advocates concede that our deterrent force is "useful in preventing or stifling limited wars", but they insist that we must not use it, that we must preserve it as a whole for total war. And then they proceed to recommend creation of a separate Limited War Command, instead of expanding our Strategic Air Command so that its size, flexibility and nuclear power can nip any aggression in the bud and yet it can retain its overwhelming retaliatory power. Any further expansion of Communism from now on can be accomplished only through covert aggression, which means subversion and infiltration by political and economic means.

Limited war, like total war, is self-defeating. In any case, it can be fought only with the consent of both belligerents and is, for that reason, bound to end in a stalemate. No advantage, military or political, can be gained by such a war. At best these wars are a reconnaissance in force, useful to gain some knowledge of the enemy's capabilities and his political intentions, with the inevitable result of disclosing our own hand. Korea and Suez are proof that limited wars will always end precisely where they started, the status quo prevailing, unless they explode into a major conflagration which, under the existing balance of nuclear terror, would mean the complete annihilation of both belligerents.

It is clear to me that Russia has already sensed this new power relation. That is why she desisted from further inciting Turkey and Syria against each other. Since then, she has further demobilized her conventional forces, diverting that manpower toward increasing her strength in total war and broadening her industrial capacity to forge the tools of economic war.

One more fallacy contained in the report will suffice:

According to the report, the services will continue to remain separate entities. The officers must develop the understanding, loyalty and esprit de corps of their distinctive branch. But when, after thirty or forty years of dedicated service, the Defense Department pins another star on their shoulders -- presto! they become ambidextrous or even triphibious, utterly detached from their innermost convictions and philosophy, and instantaneously acquire a broad, over-all view which supposedly transcends the service boundaries. This is a good psychic trick if you can do it. That recommendation alone threatens to destroy totally the morale of our Armed Forces.

The fallacies of this report, I am convinced, stem from the fact that it represents a compromise on the uncompromising views of individual members of a large committee, where each member's opinions are influenced by so-called "enlightened self-interest". I feel certain that each member of this distinguished body individually could offer much better and much more comprehensive recommendations.

b) Fundamentals of a new Defense Establishment.

In his State of the Union message, President Eisenhower, among other things, stated as follows, and I quote, "The advent of revolutionary new devices...creates new difficulties, reminiscent of those attending the advent of the aeroplane half a century ago. Some of the important new weapons which technology has produced do not fit into any existing service pattern. They cut across all services, involve all services, and transcend all services... In some instances they defy classification according to the branch of service."

I agree that the aeroplane did create new difficulties in the defense area half a century ago because it opened the space above the surface of the earth as the most efficient medium for carrying destruction to the enemy. The Air Force was created to exploit this third dimension, as another arm of our national defense. Since then, man has flown four times faster than a bullet, faster than a 16-inch shell, and faster than some ballistic missiles. With rocket propulsion, the weapons of the Air Force no longer depend on the atmosphere for sustenance and propulsion. The sky is no longer the limit. The space above is the natural domain of the Air Force. And, since air power is space power, supersonic vehicles, missiles and satellites do not revolutionize warfare. They are simply more efficient weapons of air and space power. I am compelled to disagree with the President that these new weapons transcend all services. They logically belong to the Air Force, which has for years prepared itself to wield these new instruments of war. The Air Force is not wedded to aircraft. It is a tri-dimensional military force that has the organization and the skill to keep abreast of space technology.

Sheared of their former strategic significance, the elder services have tried to leapfrog over the Air Force into space to acquire a new strategic role. The Navy maneuvered to take charge of the Vanguard project in order to be the first to stake a claim in space with a token six-inch 'moon'. The Army developed its Jupiter-C, coveting the ambition of launching the first manned satellites and thus constricting the Air Force to the thin layer of the atmosphere. In doing these things, the elder services are actually deserting their primary missions on land and sea. It is ridiculous that these forces are both trying to become space forces. How confusing it will be if the space around our planet is infested by silver sputniks of the Air Force, golden sputniks of the Navy, and khaki sputniks of the Army, all orbiting around in uncoordinated motion in all directions, under the control of three different heads who refuse to speak the same language.

The present defense establishment is a product of World War II mentality. It presupposes that any future war will be fought with the same methods of balanced forces strategy that were used in the last conflict. The Unification Act freezes for all time the roles and missions performed by our Armed Forces in the last war. To brand the military services' rivalry "disgraceful", as Dr. Vannevar Bush did recently before your committee, is certainly ungenerous toward the military men involved. The fact is that each of them is patriotically defending his innermost convictions. Right or wrong, some of them deeply believe in every fallacy they preach. What is disgraceful is thatwe still keep on the books the defense law which leaves military men no choice but to bicker and compromise on the questions that involve our very survival.

In any future war, no military force will be able to survive on the surface of the earth. The Army will have to go underground, the Air Force will have to remain airborne, and the Navy will have to go underwater. It would end down below anyway in case of hostilities, so why not plan it that way in advance to obtain the maximum strategic capability - particularly now, when the submarine has become the new capital ship of the modern Navy. All these forces will be able to return to the surface of the earth only after the question of who controls the air and space above has been resolved. And that decision will be gained by the Air Force, wielding a well-coordinated and perfectly timed offense with planes, missiles and, if necessary, satellites.

Eight years ago I recommended that "we have one genuinely integrated department of one military force in conformity with one definite strategy", and that "when the people, having weighed all the pertinent facts, decide what the strategy shall be", the innocuous position of Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff shall be replaced by that of "a military chief vested with power of decision" to carry out that basic strategy. "Then," I wrote, "genuine integration, singleness of purpose, and unity of command will be achieved." Today I am more than ever convinced that I am right.

The outcries that such a direct line of authority, when the chief of a single staff makes the necessary decisions, smacks of totalitarianism and creates a military Solomon, as Admiral Burke lamented, are utterly unwarranted. Such an organization in a totalitarian state, under the orders of a dictator, is one thing: the same organization, working under the President, the Secretary of Defense, and control of the Congress, is quite another. To deny that in a democracy a single man can have authority and responsibility is to invite anarchy - and that is exactly what we have witnessed in our national defense during the past ten years.

The inexorable progress of technology has already made our Navy about 90 per cent air force. It wants to project its power through the air and space above by planes and missiles. The Army likewise clamors for its own independent aviation service in order to project its power through the air and space above with planes and missiles.

It is ridiculous for three separate agencies to fight the same air war with the same weapons, namely planes, missiles, supersonic manned vehicles or satellites. The time is long overdue for us to integrate our three services into one single military force, with one uniform, one promotion list and a single staff. The new establishment must be, for all practical purposes, a congenial Department of the Air and Space, in which we have a Bureau of Ships, a Bureau of Ground Forces, and bureaus of other auxiliary units.

The changes I propose cannot come from the Pentagon. Even though some of our top military leaders individually see their wisdom and timeliness, as a group they are entirely too regimented under the present setup to make such recommendations with impunity.

There is only one source from which the necessary changes can come, and that is the American people, bringing pressure on their representatives in Congress. But they cannot act unless they are brought to realize the dangers inherent in our present military system. The current national debate on the subject of our defense and foreign policy is the only road to survival.

The President, in his State of the Union speech, promised in the near future to recommend some definite plans for the reorganization of our military establishment. But I must submit that the recent actions of the Administration, in my opinion, only add to the confusion. The very fact that we are now compelled to appoint a number of czars and pile one super official on top of another proves that there is something wrong with our approach to the problem.

The presence of Dr. Killian in the White House is all to the good. It will enable the President to be correctly informed in scientific matters. But unfortunately there has been no clear cut definition of the relationship among Dr. Killian, Secretary of Defense McElroy and Mr. Holaday, Assistant Secretary in charge of missiles, whose powers have been elevated and made equal to those of the Secretary of Defense himself.

The situation is further complicated by the statement that if a new important weapon is conceived, another powerful executive with extraordinary authority will be appointed to handle it. We had difficulties with three separate services headed by one Secretary of Defense. How confusing it will be with three services working under half a dozen of what amount to equally powerful Secretaries.

The creation of an Advance Research Project Agency will not solve the problem. The latest move, to split anti-missile defense between the Army and the Air Force defies comprehension. The Air Force is already vested with the air defense of our country. General Partridge, an airman, is Commander in Chief of over-all continental defense. Regardless whether a ballistic missile is viewed as a supersonic vehicle of the Air Force or simply as long-range artillery, the fact remains that all these vehicles - ballistic and guided, manned or unmanned, whether for offense or defense - operate in the self-same space. The air ocean and its endless outer space extension are one and indivisible, and should be controlled by a single, homogeneous force - and that, as I have already stated, is the Air Force. Instead of fragmenting our effort, General Medaris and the Redstone arsenal must be bodily - with all personnel - transferred to the Air Force, or at least the Air Force must have complete operational control over that establishment. Once this is done and a single agency is vested with responsibility, it must be left alone. The fewer czars, the fewer coordinators, the faster we will get along with the job.

More money for defense alone is not enough. The whole philosophy, the whole approach to our national defense effort must be changed if we are to regain our military superiority.

2. Active Air Defense in Total War.

Throughout history, the advent of each new weapon seemed at first to provide an unimpeded offensive means for its possessor.

But eventually and inevitably an appropriate defensive was developed, and the offense-defense balance was restored.

The nuclear warhead is no exception. Its devastating power will ultimately be balanced by the difficulty of its delivery to the target. Each war differs radically from the preceding conflict. World War I was static, characterized by trench warfare. World War II, on the other hand, with its motorized equipment and air power, was highly dynamic and mobile. The next war will differ from the last by again becoming static, a paradox in view of the fact that it will be fought at hypersonic speeds. The strategic picture will be notunlike that of two immobile fortresses, shooting it out with long-range weapons.

With the ballistic missile a reality, the maximum in offensive power has been reached. Everything else is anticlimactic because the time element of attack has increased. It is only natural, therefore, that the scientific energies and resources of the protagonists will be channelled automatically into the defensive effort. The present atomic stalemate is bound to evolve into the centuries-old balance of power, when the destruction of the military force of one side can be accomplished only through a protracted attrition inflicted on the enemy by the forces of the other side. When the offensive capabilities of the belligerents are equal, the defense becomes decisive.

In developing this defensive capacity, I maintain that we must be guided by several fundamental assumptions: One - we must recognize that speed per se is no longer a defensive feature of offense. No matter how fast a missile streaks through the air or space, it can be stopped. Stop the means of delivery, and what it carries no longer matters. The second fundamental to recognize is that in a short time the range of detection of airborne vehicles by various scientific means will expand throughout the entire circumference of the globe. The surprise attack will be impossible, unless one side is fast asleep. Thus penetration will depend, not on speed and not on surprise, but on the ability to counter-measure the energy impulses of the defense. Once we reach that stage, it will be not a physiological or technological, but purely tactical decision whether a robot or a human mind must guide the vehicle. In general, robots are too logical. Their reaction is predictable; they are easier to intercept. It will take human intuition and power of choice to baffle and outwit the defense. That is why I am convinced that, for any predictable time, the hypersonic, manned vehicle will be the decisive weapon in any future war.

It is true that a robot can be perfected to duplicate the reactions of the human brain. But such a device will be enormously complicated and costly. That is why I maintain that the true push-button war, though a scientific possibility, is an economic absurdity.

In summing up, it is clear that our country is uniquely equipped for this kind of warfare. I have always been convinced of this.

Although Russia has made vast technological advances, its standard of living has not improved appreciably. On the other hand, the United States has greatly expanded its telephone, telegraph, ticker tape, teletype and microwave facilities - to mention only a few. This highly efficient communications web - the indispensable ingredient of an effective defense complex - is already in existence. Representing hundreds of billions in investment, it is the product of our free enterprise and industrial civilization. It would be a Gargantuan task for any government, no matter how autocratic, to create a similar complex, even with slave labor, and have it operational by the time of maximum danger three years from now.

Don't misunderstand me. I do not advocate an electronic Maginot Line, nor do I advocate defensive strategy, because the military principle that only offense can win a war is as true today as it has been through the ages.

What I am trying to clarify is that modern defense consists of combat interception by planes, missiles, and nuclear warheads the moment the enemy is airborne five thousand miles away. It is a continuous electronic battle. Likewise, the offense will have to fight its way to the target the moment it is airborne for attack. Both offense and defense are an integral part of the over-all battle for command of the air, the space above, and the electronic right of way.

3. NATO.

To consider NATO as a shield force for the free world is militarily unsound. It is still a trip-wire, a mustard plaster applied to the Russian Bear's anatomy. Its only value is to divide Russian military potential so the Soviets cannot concentrate their entire resources on the destruction of America. Russia has been in production of IRBMs for nearly two years. These are already operational, and she has them in great quantity. Every base and every strategic NATO point on the Eurasian continent is already zeroed by these missiles and could be wiped out instantaneously and simultaneously. Therefore, NATO's survival is guaranteed only by the deterrent power of our Strategic Air Command our Sword of Damocles, complimented by the British bomber command. The true shield, therefore, is not the continental NATO forces, but the United States Continental Air Defense, which makes it difficult for the enemy to impair our capacity to unsheath the sword. The western allies must understand that anything that weakens our shield and blunts our sword must be ruled out. If NATO's continental forces are maintained at our expense, we are compelled to divide our over-all potential just as much as Russia. And, because of our geographical disadvantage and our limited manpower, such a division could prove fatal.

If NATO is to contribute to the strength of the free world, our friends overseas must generate their own forces and weapons primarily by their own effort. Only then can the western alliance achieve superiority over the Communist bloc. The notion that we make ourselves stronger by expanding the balanced forces of our allies as a part of over-all western strength for total war is a fallacy. An alliance built on such premises is no longer tenable. The reluctance of some NATO countries to accept our intermediate range ballistic missiles is understandable. It would be imprudent for us to put IRBMs on the soil of continental Europe without first having intercontinental ballistic missiles in being and operational, which would make the Strategic Air Command a double-edged Sword of Damocles.

4. Submarines.

I recognize a submarine firing a ballistic missile as a very potent weapon. But to endeavor to match the number of Russian submarines is not necessarily logical. This force must be developed in accordance with our own strategic requirements. We must not forget that Russia's industrial complex is deep within its land mass, whereas ours, and that of our allies, is deployed along the shoreline. It has been estimated that as much as 80 per cent of our industrial capacity, therefore, is within reach of Russian submarines. Basically, any expansion in efficiency of submarine warfare favors the enemy, not us. Therefore, I feel that we must exert our utmost scientific effort to solve the problem of detection and surveillance of these submergibles. We must endeavor to achieve a scientific breakthrough, and make water transparent, figuratively speaking. Deprived of its natural concealment, the submarine will become a helpless target of air power. Thus the best way to deal with this Russian menace is to nullify the gigantic effort which the U.S.S.R. is devoting to this form of attack.

5. Budget.

The proposed national defense budget for Fiscal Year 1959 is a breakaway from the division of military appropriations more or less equally among the three sister services. I want only to bring to the attention of this committee the fact that the Air Force and the Navy are receiving identical amounts of $18,008,000,000. Unless this is a fantastic coincidence, bordering on the miraculous, such equal division of funds represents a jurisdictional agreement and cannot possibly be a product of realistic strategic requirements.

6. Aircraft Carriers.

I am of the opinion that the super aircraft carriers designed for strategic attack upon the mainland of the U.S.S.R. are an unnecessary drain on our economy. I have dealt with this question on many occasions, and my views in this respect are well known.

I would simply like to add that the transformation of a conventionally propelled surface Navy into an atomic Navy, though a technological improvement, has no strategic significance. The new 80,000-ton, giant economy size atomic aircraft carrier will be sunk just as swiftly as its smaller version if it ventures within striking range of enemy air power which, by the time of its commission, will be global. This surface Navy, designed to project our air and missile power via slow-moving, man-made, floating islands is nothing but a costly yet feeble attempt to compete with the Strategic Air Command's direct and swift intercontinental capability. Yet this senseless, purely jurisdictional dispute absorbs a vital portion of our creative minds and scientific effort. Like the battleships at Pearl Harbor, these new ships of the line will be at the bottom of the ocean before they know they are at war.

One of our Strategic Air Command bases today contains, on an average, 45 strategic bombers. Equipped with two nuclear weapons each, the planes of this one base alone can deliver a damaging blow to our potential enemy. Suppose the commander of this base were to go before Congress and ask for five billion dollars for its defense. He probably would be sent to Walter Reed Hospital for mental observation. Yet the Navy builds a floating base that can launch only a handful of aircraft and missiles that are inadequate to defend their own task force, much less to attack the Eurasian land mass against fantastic odds, and then proceeds to spend five billion dollars for the protection of this floating base by a task force.

I recommend that the entire concept of strategic aircraft carriers be thoroughly reappraised by our Congress before any more money is appropriated for them.

7. Strategic Air Command.

While fundamental changes in our national defense are being debated in the Congress, we must recognize that, in any future war, the decision will be scored only by our retaliatory striking force. Therefore, all offensive forces in being, of air, land, and sea, which employ planes and missiles as weapons systems, must be put immediately under the operational control of the Commander in Chief of the Strategic Air Command.

In view of the rapid increase in the electronic defense capability of the U.S.S.R., with the corresponding increase in the rate of attrition of our offensive forces the size of our Strategic Air Command should be quadrupled. The production of intercontinental bombers must become a 7-day, 3-shift operation until such time as the B-52 and the B-58 are superseded by newer types.

8. Civil Defense.

The recommendations for civil defense contained in the Rockefeller Report are almost identical in scope and language to those made in my book, AIR POWER - KEY TO SURVIVAL, in the chapter entitled "Defense in the Atomic Age". Therefore I do not think it is necessary for me to take the committee's time to go into the matter in detail.

9. Satellite and Space Projects.

On December 11, 1957, the Air Force established a Directorate of Astronautics for the purpose of handling such projects as earth satellites, space reconnaissance, space platforms, and other related projects. The establishment of this directorate was promptly vetoed by Under Secretary of Defense Donald Quarles. My supposition is that the underlying reason for this action was the reconciliation of similar programs by the Army and the Navy.

As a compromise, a special agency is now being proposed for the Defense Department so that these projects can be handled outside the services.

I consider this extremely unfortunate. It will only complicate and retard the exploitation of space for our national security. I must repeat that space is the domain of the Air Force, which should be given the necessary funds and the authority to proceed and then left alone to do the job. This would be the fastest way to accomplish this important objective.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion I would like to state that, to those who cannot, or refuse to, see the necessity of a drastic change in our military setup, the current demands of the military seem impossible to satisfy. As a result, there is a tendency to emulate totalitarian practices in various degrees. Thus, Secretary of State Dulles recommended that we ought to "give up some of our marginal freedoms". I am convinced that he is wrong. To me, it has long been crystal clear that in any modern human conflict, when one nation's total physical and human resources are pitched against another's, the entire populace can act in unison only under the compulsion of total regimentation or under the inspiration of total freedom. Our nation's trouble today is that we find ourselves half regimented and half free since, among other things, freedom means the right of the people to have access to the facts.

There are certain panicky souls who chide the American people for extravagant living, for riding in "two-toned convertibles".

Others recommend that we tighten our belts and reduce our standard of living. These are also dangerous notions. We have no right to demand sacrifices from our people as long as our military effort is only about 50 per cent efficient.

We can never demonstrate to the world the superiority of a free society unless we can prove our ability to be invincibly strong and yet maintain the high standard of living from which our very strength flows. If, in order to match Russian strength, we have to reduce the American mode of living to that of the Russian peasant or Chinese coolie, we will have nothing to offer.

We are still the greatest industrial nation on earth. With 650,000 scientists and engineers in our midst, we still have a greater creative brain power pool than the Russians.

But we can never achieve our national aims unless we get rid of all the forces that have no longer a legitimate mission, and are only kept through inertia, sentiment or tradition. I respect and admire tradition. I value the importance of esprit de corps. But when these fine heritages interfere with human progress and threaten our very security, I feel that we must have the moral courage to relegate them to the nostalgic past and to make the necessary fundamental changes in our military setup. The question is whether we will have the wisdom to make that move now, as a product of logic, or whether it will be forced upon us by the march of events, in which case the change may come too late.

---0---

P to P guest Corres
Fairbanks, Doug Jr

April 23, 1958

Dear Mary Lee:

Many thanks for your gracious note. It was a great pleasure to visit you and Doug on the program, and I can assure you that your fears about your own appearance are entirely groundless.

It is most kind of you to suggest a dinner party while I am in London. Unfortunately, I do not yet know on what dates I shall be there. I will let you know as soon as possible.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.
Hotel Blackstone
50 East 58 Street
New York, New York

mmc

P.P - Guests
Draper, Dorothy

RECEIVED
1957 MAY 20 PM 5:17
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

WU017 PD

NEW YORK NY MAY 20 156PME

ED MURROW

CBS

JUST LEARNED ON MY RETURN FROM GREEN BRIER TODAY THAT THE LOVELY RED ROSES WHICH ARRIVED BEFORE THE SHOW WERE FROM YOU A THOUSAND THANKS I REALLY ENJOYED BEING ON YOUR SHOW SOME TIME THAT YOU ARE FREE I SHOULD LOVE TO HAVE YOU AND MRS MURROW FOR COCKTAILS AT MY APARTMENT

DOROTHY DRAPER

402P..

HOTEL BLACKSTONE
50 EAST 58TH STREET
NEW YORK 22, N.Y.

Dear Ed -

How very kind of you to send me the red roses. They were lovely, warming, and your thought is greatly appreciated.

I hope I didn't disgrace you - I felt like a middle-aged whingeing fool!!! I'd never really know how other's felt - But it was painless, you were easy, kind, and reassuring - Thank you.

If you will give me a list of people for dinner in London, I will contact them and say you would like to see them - love will be there by May 10 – The house is organized so we don't have to worry about that – if I could get the list now, (or soon) I could have my secretary call them soon – People get involved in London, as you know. We can have 16 for dinner –

Again thanks –

Mary Lee

Monday

P. to P. Guests

PHONE
CIRCLE 6-1000

CABLE ADDRESS
"WANEWAR"

WARNER BROS
PICTURES, INC.
666 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK 19, N. Y.

Blackstone Hotel
50 East 58th Street
New York 22, New York

April 19, 1958

Mr. Ed Murrow
CBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Ed:

Many thanks indeed for the copy of FOREIGN RELATIONS. I do agree that this is one of the best in a long time.

Yours, aye,

Douglas Fairbanks

P to P guests
Fitzgerald, John D

Public Relations Counselors

A DIVISION OF WILLIS S. MARTIN CO., INC.

535 W. WAYNE STREET
FORT WAYNE, INDIANA
ANTHONY 6233

November 13, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

f

Dear Ed:

Just a short note to tell you how much Ruth and I enjoyed visiting with you last Friday evening. It was extremely interesting to witness the "Person to Person" telecast from the control room. However, I agree with you that I am not entirely clear just how it is done.

I do not know how soon we will be back but I will drop you a note ahead of time when the next trip materializes.

My very kindest remembrances to Janet.

Cordially yours,

Fitz

John D. Fitzgerald

JDF/rs

P to P guests
Fuller, Alfred.

December 5, 1958

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred C. Fuller
The Fuller Brush Company
Hartford 15, Conn.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Fuller:

Thank you both for your nice letters. Everyone agrees that your performance on PERSON TO PERSON was excellent and we are most grateful to you for your hospitality.

Sincerely yours,

THE FULLER BRUSH COMPANY

HARTFORD 15, CONNECTICUT

ALFRED C. FULLER
CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

December 2, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
C. B. S. Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

The great experience of appearing on "Person to Person" is now a matter of history. Mrs. Fuller and I agree that it was really a great experience. One other thing to which we both agree, however it may have appeared to your T. V. audience, we didn't appear rehearsed or trained for the part and certainly did not feel professional.

We witnessed an example of perfect coordination and the most courteous and careful consideration on the part of all those who took care of the technical and other aspects of this job at our house at 32 Colony Road. I would like to commend you particularly on our experience with Charles Hill and Chuck Romine. We had our first conference with these men Monday before the broadcast. I am not particularly adept at an "Off the cuff" interview of this sort. The actual coaching by Chuck began about 5:00 O'clock Friday, the day of the program. I am quite certain we might have had more difficulty but for the skill in which he instructed us for the program.

In observing all of the details and technical requirements in setting up for the program, one is very conscious of the highly specialized and intricate knowledge which it requires. No disturbance to the house occurred excepting between the arrival of the studio van at 3:00 P.M. and its dismantlement after the program, and the house was left in its usual good order.

We both hope that the program came up to the standard expected and feel it was a distinct honor to be with you on "Person to Person."

Sincerely yours,

Alfred C. Fuller

ACF:vr

PtP

December 2nd

My dear Mr. Murrow:-

Now that some of the "tumult and the shouting" have died down following our appearance on your Person to Person show last week, I should like to tell you how much we appreciated the manner in which it was all handled by your very efficient and considerate staff.

When the idea was first presented to me, I must confess my reaction was violently negative - as you yourself said, it is an invasion of one's privacy, and having been brought up in the conservative British tradition of the "Englishman's house being his castle", I wanted no part of being exposed to the view of millions of curious people. After meeting Mr. Hill and Mr. Romine, and chatting so pleasantly and informally with you in New York, however, I had a different feeling about it, and now that it is all over, I can truthfully say that I found it an interesting and stimulating experience.

Needless to say, the four Fuller grandchildren loved every minute of it, and your kindly and gracious manner put them quite at their ease - they will have a vivid memory of the occasion for the rest of their lives.

We were interested to hear you say you had been in Nova Scotia, and hope if you ever get there again you will let us know - we spend our summers in Yarmouth, and feel it is one of the few remaining unspoiled places left, where one can be completely relaxed.

Many thanks for the lovely flowers, which arrived at the height of all the excitement - I did not realize until the following day that you had sent them.

My kindest regards to Mr. Hill and Mr. Romine (those skillful soothers of fluttery females), and all the rest of your CBS team, and my best wishes to you for continued success in all your undertakings.

Very sincerely yours,

Primrose Fuller

P&P

JOHN A. AARON

Ed –

F+1 –

See you at it today for drinks with Fuller

Jan

PERSON TO PERSON

Original 'Fuller Brush Man' Traces 50-Year Climb of Noted Firm

Direct Selling Called Infantry of Marketing

On the American scene there are probably few terms more familiar than "the Fuller Brush man" and few households unacquainted with some form of the Fuller brush. In response to an invitation from The Christian Science Monitor, Alfred C. Fuller, founder and chairman of the board of the Fuller Brush Company, has written a series of four articles setting forth his reflections on 50 years of direct selling and what this method of retailing has meant not only to his own company but to the American public at large. This is the first article.

By Alfred C. Fuller
Founder and chairman of board, the Fuller Brush Company
Written for The Christian Science Monitor

Hartford, Conn.

Many columns of space have been published in recent years about the Fuller Brush dealer, the Fuller Brush Company, and me. Much of this vast lineage has been extravagant in its praise and particularly effusive in its crediting to me personally extreme talents for salesmanship, business sense, and even clairvoyance.

I insist at the beginning of my comments on 50 years of direct selling on setting straight the record on this score. The facts are simply these. It was my good fortune some 51 years ago, through the offices of a benign Providence, to be placed in concert with an opportunity. My assets at the time were a few hundred cautiously saved dollars, a farm boyhood that recognized hard work as a virtue, and a desperate need to make a living.

These basic ingredients were leavened through the years with plain common sense which directed me to enlist the aid of many others in the venture and to reward them as realistically as possible, encouraging them thereby to continue the formula to its logical and happy present state.

Alfred C. Fuller
Founder and chairman of the board of the Fuller Brush Company.

There is one statement of principle I phrased many years ago which sums up the philosophy of management upon which I have operated through the years. I am proud of it:

"With equal opportunity to all people engaged in the transaction, a business must succeed."

Big Year Ahead

This year, 1957, the Fuller Brush Company will sell some $100,000,000 worth of brushes, brooms, mops, cleaners, polishes, cosmetics, vitamins, and machines to housewives, schools, hospitals, offices, and factories throughout the United States and Canada and in many nations of the free world. The company will buy many millions of dollars worth of raw materials from America's and the world's markets. Nearly 10,000 individuals — dealers, factory workers, office people, managers, and warehouse employees, will earn better than average livings for themselves and their families.

It is a far cry from accomplishments like these back to the circumstances in the spring of 1906 when it all started. Life was simpler in those days, and many of us in nostalgic moments, secure in the creature comforts of today, sometimes refer to them as "the good old days." Though I have enjoyed living through the "good old days" at the beginnings of the Fuller Brush Company, I'm sure most of the pleasure has come from the achievement of having actually survived them to experience the greater pleasures of today.

The fortunes of the Fuller Brush Company are an interesting parallel to the fortunes of the nation's homemakers. Indeed, this is true of much of the nation's economy. But a chronology of our products is a remarkable reflection of the progressive emancipation of the housewife from the drudgery of the early days to the comparative ease of housekeeping she enjoys in this modern day.

Made Own Brushes

The brushes I twisted in those first days and carried to the homes of the people in Somerville, Mass., were good brushes. I personally made sure of that. They were fine brushes and helped the housewives of that era to do their housework better and faster.

My brushes were so good, however, and lasted so long that it forced me to extend my territory rapidly to find new customers and launched the first phase of the development of the Fuller Brush Company, which I like to call the early expansion stage. It was this basic need for new customers that actually organized the company. Thus, within a few months of starting the business, my time was about equally divided among manufacturing the products, selling them, and recruiting dealers to carry on.

I soon learned to depend on people. Since by the very nature of the activity, supervision was at best a remote possibility, my common sense directed me to the best solution of the dilemma. Consciously or not, the Golden Rule applied. In the factory, small as it was, and in the field, scattered though it was, the individuals simply had to do their work honestly and conscientiously or the whole project was doomed. Somehow I knew that if I truly depended upon them, fairly rewarded them, and sincerely considered them an integral part of the venture, they in turn would cooperate to our common benefit. I am convinced the accomplishments of the past half century would not have been possible without that mutual confidence.

Difficult Days

Looking back over these many years to the early days of the business, one is tempted to gloss over the difficult times. Providentially they gather about them an aura of enchantment that I could not recognize while living through them. They were difficult days much of the time. Long hours, decisions that had to be made without the benefit of experience, capital too short to keep pace with the needs of rapid expansion. Frequently I had to decide how little I might need of available funds to live on; how little of available funds the business would need. Frequently we both got along on less than we thought we might, but what the business allowed me for living money it exacted in extra hours.

Of one fact I am particularly glad in this connection. Despite the demands on my time to be in the factory producing and in the office managing, I always made time to be out in the field where I was convinced the key to success existed. In the beginning I spent half my road time selling to finance the trip and to learn the market; the other half I spent recruiting good men to continue the selling. All through my years of management in the business I have arranged to devote a major portion of my time to the field and its problems. It is gratifying to see that my son, A. Howard Fuller, president of the Fuller Brush Company, and my younger son, Avard E. Fuller, vice-president, continue to spend much of their business time in the same manner.

Great Strides Forward

Their concentration in this area of the business, the key area, is largely responsible for the great strides forward the company has made since they have assumed important posts in the management of the business. I know they both intend to follow this concentration on sales as a matter of policy.

Direct selling in 1906 was considered a method of merchandising considerably wanting in respectability. Fortunately, my life on the farm in Nova Scotia, while it fitted me well for the hard and discouraging work I was called upon to perform, hardly equipped me to be discriminating in the kind of work I was willing to do. Frankly, I was unaware that calling on the homes of my neighbors seemed undignified to others. On the contrary, I had supposed that neighborliness was something of a virtue, particularly if in the course of the calling I brought them something useful, of better quality than they were accustomed to, at a price that was attractive.

Since I was completely in charge of the products I sold—the design, workmanship, and the price— I was never wanting in confidence concerning them. At no time did I consider myself a super salesman. I was sure from the beginning that the success I met at the doors of my customers was caused by an honest approach, a neat but unassuming attitude, and a product that would stand the test of use in every way for which it was intended. It was on this conviction that I was able to convinced other men to try the business.

Direct Selling Retained

There were occasions through the years, however, in which I was sorely urged to abandon direct selling for the routine methods of merchandising through retail outlets. Some of my closest and most intimate advisors practically pleaded with me to concentrate on the design and manufacture of brushes to the exclusion of the direct-to-customer sale—this at a time when the company had grown to substantial stature and was well equipped for such a major change in policy.

I consider my firm and final decision to stay with direct selling one of the crucial points in my business career. The continued success of the company since then, the noted success other companies have made in this field since then, indeed the interest many major retailers are lately showing in direct selling, endorse my decision of many years ago. Direct selling is the infantry of marketing. It is basic selling and in no small way responsible for building much of our nation's lofty standard of living. I am happy to have contributed something to it.

If these are the practical justifications of my decision for direct selling, there are other justifications equally if not more pleasant upon which to reflect. The many fine men and women who have been attracted by the opportunity the Fuller Brush Company has offered through the years, who have prospered happily, whose families have been given benefits possibly denied them under other circumstances—they represent less tangible but nonetheless real justifications.

Leaders Given Opportunity

Particularly I refer to the hundreds of fine people who have progressed in the company from dealerships to great positions of responsibility in the management of the business. It is rare in our company to find a manager who has not risen through the ranks to his present high position. And this is as true in the office and factory as it is in the field organization.

Less particularly, but just as proudly, I refer to the many leaders of business, government, religion, and the arts of our nation who have gone on from their early experience as Fuller Brush men to great attainments in their later careers. To name but a few of these legions of fine men would be a disservice to many of them space will not permit me to name. But suffice it to state that I note with satisfaction the earnestness with which they refer from their high estates today to their early training as a Fuller Brush man. Almost daily one reads of successful men in many walks of life who sincerely credit direct selling, yes, Fuller experience, in their early days, as background for much of their later accomplishments.

Half Century of Recollections

These, then, are some of my reflections on 50 years of direct selling. They are, perhaps, the more personal reflections. I hasten to record them early in this series simply to get them stated so that other things I will have to say and other comments I intend to make will be understood in the proper context.

It has been said that I am shy. Actually I am not, and my public activities over the years will bear it out. But one naturally tends to protect himself when he is the subject of so much printed, filmed, and spoken material. Objectively, I welcome the prestige it reflects to the benefit of the company and my associates; personally I feel the line should be drawn short of making me an institution.

Some years ago at a rather dignified public affair, I was seated next to a fine-looking man several decades my senior. Learning my name was Fuller and that I was connected with the noted company bearing that name, he proceeded to tell me that as a young boy playing at his mother's knee, he remembered calls of the Fuller Brush man at his home. I didn't have the heart to puncture his tale at that time, but I'm sure he had me mixed up with the famed Yankee peddler whose traditions I'm happy to have helped perpetuate.

Air View of Fuller Brush Company Plant in Hartford, Conn.

Investment Firm Informs Travelers

A Window on Wall Street

By Vartanig G. Vartan
Special Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

New York

Brokerage firms are meeting the public better than halfway these days. They are happy to give lectures, send out literature, and answer questions on the stock market.

An excellent way to meet the public, of course, is to go where the crowds exist. With this in mind, the United States' largest brokerage house opened an outpost one year ago in the midst of the swirling crowds of Grand Central Station.

Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane stationed its "Investment Information Center" at the eastern end of the railroad station's concourse and put out the welcome mat for the public.

"Some 700,000 people use Grand Central every day," a Merrill Lynch spokesman said. "They include commuters, passengers to all points out of the country, and workers in the area."

What's the reaction of this premium group of passers-by to the investment center? An official of the brokerage firm describes it as "really spectacular."

No Buying or Selling

The center was set up for informational and educational purposes. It is not an office for buying and selling stocks. However, the center has brought in many new accounts to Merrill Lynch, including that of a millionaire who previously had not owned a share of stock.

Last December an office worker strolled into the center during her lunch hour. As the 1,000,000th visitor, she became the surprised—and delighted—recipient of five shares of common stock in American Machine & Foundry Company, which at that time held a company display in one half of the center's 1,250 square feet.

Every two months, Merrill Lynch invites an outstanding concern to share the space at the center. The present exhibitor is Reynolds Metals Company, which last year produced 27.5 per cent of all aluminum in the United States and rang up sales of $400,000,000.

The Reynolds display shows aluminum in its various forms —extruded, welded, powdered, drawn, and anodized to different colors. "In making aluminum," the company points out, "Reynolds consumes enough electricity each day to supply a city the size of New York."

Aluminum Display

At frequent lectures during the day a Reynolds expert tells the public how to use aluminum in the home. (Sample use: making aluminum window screens.)

A map pinpoints the location of various Reynolds plants in this country. And a wall display gives graphic proof of how aluminum is used to package corn-bread mix for housewives and to provide the curtain walls of office buildings for businessmen.

Across from the Reynolds exhibit, account executives of Merrill Lynch are on hand to answer the queries of would-be investors, train catchers, and commuters on their way to the office.

At lunch hour as many as 200 persons may visit the center at one time.

The visitors may come up with unexpected questions, Merrill Lynch reports. These can range from "Is there a USO around here?" to "Does a free market for gold exist anywhere in the world?"

Shortly after Merrill Lynch opened its center on March 1, 1956, it accommodated a rather unusual request by changing a quarter for a young man in a big hurry. He explained to the account executive that he needed to telephone the lost-and-found department to try and locate his wife who had missed the subway train at 14th Street.

Requests From Afar

People evidently remember their visits to the investment information center. Some requests for stock information have come from as far away as Europe and Latin America.

The public is invited to take pamphlets at the center such as, "How to Invest," "About This Stock and Bond Business," "The Monthly Investment Plan —And How It Works"), as well as to ask questions.

Added investment aids are found in eye-catching displays explaining the part stock ownership plays in the nation's economy.

First of the company exhibits was provided by International Business Machines Corporation, which even moved a transistor-powered electronic computer into the center. In a fraction of a second, the computer gave the dividends and current market value of a $500 annual investment for any year since 1929 in selected securities.

Today, the center stands beneath a row of huge Eastman Kodak snapshots in color. And a scant 60 paces away, in case passers-by want to know the time of their train, is located the concourse's landmark—the railroad information booth.

Industry • Finance

Market Tipster Cuts Planet Ties

By the Associated Press

New York

It's all right, a court ruled here, for an astrologer to make stock market forecasts based on his readings of the stars and planets.

But when he mixes in his own economic analysis of the way the market is behaving, it amounts to fraud.

The state supreme court permanently banned "Zolar," publisher of Zolar's Astrology Magazine, from trying to forecast the stock market on the basis of his own analysis of stock market reports.

"Zolar" agreed to refrain in the future, but contended he had committed no fraud. The action was brought by the state attorney general's office.

"Zolar," otherwise known as Bruce King, contends the movements of the stars and planets affect such stocks as General Motors, American Tel & Tel, United States Steel, and General Electric.

Mr. King said he went into the astrology business after going broke in 1932 as a securities broker in Los Angeles.

Squeeze Nips Youngstown Metal Firms

By George R. Reiss
Special to The Christian Science Monitor

Youngstown, Ohio

The once-thriving aluminum-working business in the Youngstown area, considered a hub of that business, is being trapped in a two-way squeeze.

A long-smoldering feud between the primary aluminum producers and the small aluminum-working firms has been brought into the open. The small firms charge that the primary producers are their suppliers, also their competitors.

Executives of some aluminum-working firms, declaring that they are being held to contracts by the primary producers to take certain quantities of aluminum billets monthly at certain prices, charge both the independent aluminum extruders and the big primary firms are cutting prices so low that they suffer big losses.

"So we can't lock up our plants, send our employees home, and take a long vacation until business gets better," said a local executive. "The stuff keeps coming in and we've got to pay for it and either use it now or hire storage space for it."

Boom in Youngstown

Youngstown once was considered a major aluminum-working district. It started in prewar days when a Youngstown firm began producing aluminum trim. During the war other aluminum firms supplied the aircraft industry. After the war, persons who had been trained in the prewar plant, went into the business, building new plants.

Youngstown engineering companies began building aluminum extruding presses which squeeze aluminum from billets into various shapes, just as one might squeeze toothpaste from a tube. Carl Gangloff, secretary of the Greater Youngstown Area Foundation, estimates there were about 75 aluminum-working firms, including the extruders and fabricators, who made a wide variety of products ranging from chairs, storm windows and doors, jalousies, ladders, TV antennae, decorative trim and other products.

Some of these have moved South, apparently attracted by lower wages and other advantages. One firm which opened after the war in a back-street garage was absorbed by a national firm for a price reported at 10 million dollars.

Huge Profits Reaped

Some aluminum producers made huge profits. It was a current joke that business was considered bad when a top aluminum executive cut himself down to one new Cadillac a year instead of two. However, high wages and increasing competition caught up with some firms.

One manager said that the current trouble started when aluminum became more plentiful recently. Some primary aluminum producers, which operate extruding plants on the side, invaded the Florida market, and began price cutting.

One aluminum extruding firm, Calex Corporation, and its sister company, Campbell Sash Works —the two are operated by four brothers—recently shut down for a week, bought airline tickets for the entire work force of over 50, and took them to Florida for a vacation at an exclusive Miami Beach hotel. It had done the same the year before.

"But this will be the last time for that," said Steve Stavich, president of Calex, "unless business gets a lot better and quickly."

Meany Sees Drive To Hamper Unions

By the Associated Press

Washington

George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO has expressed fear certain employer groups will seize on Senate Rackets Committee disclosures to urge legislation to "hamstring" labor unions.

Mr. Meany said the AFL-CIO will fight any such federal or state legislation but will support "any legislation necessary" to help run labor unions honestly and to safeguard union funds.

Mr. Meany spoke to some 2,500 delegates attending a March legislative conference of the AFL-CIO building and construction trades department.

"We're going to have a drive for legislation spurred by people who express a hypocritical concern for purity in organized labor," the AFL-CIO chief forecast. "They will use the hearings as a cover-up for legislation aimed at putting trade unions out of business.

Business Horizons

By Igor Oganesoff
Special Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Tokyo

Until very recently, the mention of nuclear energy to most Japanese would evoke a disturbed look and a skeptical shake of the head. Memories of Hiroshima, Nagasaki, and the 1954 H-bomb dusting of Japanese fishermen off Bikini lay too near the surface.

Today, thanks to the spectacular progress made abroad in harnessing nuclear power for peaceful uses, this Japanese preoccupation with the destructive force of the atom rapidly is giving way to a growing interest in its application to Japan's industrial needs.

One of these needs is additional cheap electric power to keep pace with the soaring industrial and consumer demand. Hydroelectric power, dependent on rainfall, is highly erratic. Thermal power often requires the import of coal to supplement Japan's meager supplies, and oil which Japan does not produce. Despite new power plant construction, demand rapidly is outdistancing supply. Government officials feel that the only long-term solution lies in atomic power plants.

* * *

The Japanese are eager to build up their technical competence in this new field to the point where they can develop original research. However, their objective is broader than mere domestic requirements. Ultimately, export-conscious Japan hopes to build domestically designed power reactors to sell to less-advanced nations.

These considerations have led the Japanese Government to accelerate a program to develop atomic energy. The nation's budget for nuclear research has been nearly tripled from last year's 3.6 billion yen (10 million dollars) to 9 billion yen (25 million dollars) in 1957.

In June, Japan's first nuclear reactor, imported from the United States and installed by the Japan Atomic Energy Research Institute, will begin operation. This 50 kw. water boiler will serve experimental purposes. About a year later, another experimental reactor, an American CP-5, will be completed.

By late 1959, the institute hopes to have a completely Japan-designed and constructed reactor using natural uranium and heavy water. At about the same time, an American swimming-pool type reactor will be set up for university study.

* * *

Next will come the installation of a Calder Hall demonstration power reactor of 100,000-to-150,000 kilowatts, purchased from England. While no contract has been concluded, Japan is likely to place the order within the next several months. This unit, of course, will be the first to feed nuclear power into the electric power network for industrial and home use, presumably by 1962.

Finally, the current program calls for the construction of a Japanese-designed, breeder-type reactor for experimental use by 1963. Officials say that in view of Japan's shortage of atomic fuels, this reactor offers the most promise since it produces its own fuel. If their research proves successful, Japanese nuclear scientists hope to have a full-size, breeder-type power reactor completed 15 years from now.

All this is the government program. In addition, private industry is going ahead also with various research projects centering on electric power production but extending also to application of nuclear power to ocean-going tankers and freighters.

The next few years undoubtedly will see Japan straining mightily to catch up in a new branch of science previously known to this country only by its annihilative power.

Tractor Announced By Allis-Chalmers

By the Associated Press

Milwaukee

The Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Company announced that it is bringing out a new low-line, high-crop clearance, three-plow tractor which it describes as a new concept in tractors.

This 4,000-pound tractor, to be known as Model D-14, was said by the company to have been designed to give farmers the conveniences of a low-profile unit, easy to get on and off, without any sacrifice of high clearance necessary for row-crop work. Cultivating clearance is as much as with high-wheel row-crop tractors.

The D-14 has a new power-control system, called the power director, which permits on-the-go shifting to high or low range, providing eight forward speeds. Power steering is optional. A new roll-shift front axle changes the spacing of the front wheels for row widths, meeting an increasing need due to great diversification of crops on individual farms.

The Business Day

Prices dipped in slow trading on the stock market early this afternoon. Leading issues showed losses from fractions to around a point, while a few selected stocks gained. This marked the third straight session in which there has been a trend toward the downside, though there was no particular selling pressure apparent. Lower output in the steel industry with prospects of a further drop, a new Middle-East crisis and mixed business reports were said to be contributors to the cautious attitude. Contrary to the trend, Chrysler and American Motors were in good demand. Prices on the American Stock Exchange were mixed in moderate trading.

Debate on proposed revision of the nation's banking laws has begun in a plan to streamline and clarify these laws—the first since 1935. Under a lengthy 251-page bill, changes would include stricter controls over bank mergers and over payment of dividends by national banks would be set up, as well as broadening loan powers of banks in business and construction fields. Cumulative voting by stockholders for bank directors would become permissive rather than mandatory, and national banks would be allowed to issue preferred stock under government supervision. Senator Robertson (D) of Virginia, chief sponsor of the bill, said it "is supported by an overwhelming majority of those in the banking and financial business field and I am convinced that its passage would serve the best interests of our nation and its citizens."

The 72-billion-dollar budget for fiscal 1958 is said to be "too big for the long-term best interests of the country" by W. Randolph Burgess, Undersecretary of the Treasury. He told the annual savings and mortgage division of the American Bankers Association that taxing the people in such amounts slows economic progress. Pressure groups urging expenditures on the federal government and defense spending are largely responsible for the ponderous size of the budget, he said. He further stated that the percentage of Americans associated with some pressure group of this sort would probably be "a shocking thing."

Financier Louis E. Wolfson and his wife were said by George Romney, president of American Motors, to have become probably the largest two stockholders in that firm. Mr. Wolfson said he and his family now own 350,000 of the 5,670,430 shares outstanding. He said he would make no attempt to gain control of the firm by a proxy fight, but would make "certain suggestions" which might "call for a trimming, paring, and pruning of certain unprofitable operations and possibly an expansion of others."

New Japanese Budget Tops $3-Billion Mark

By the Associated Press

Tokyo

The lower house of the Diet (Parliament) approved a proposed 1,137,400,000,000 yen ($3,160,000,000) 1957 national budget. Approval also is expected in the upper house well before April 1, start of the new fiscal year.

The budget is $286,000,000 higher than expenditures during the current fiscal year. It includes substantial cuts in personal taxes.

FT. LAUDERDALE, FLA.
For Mutual Fund Investments
Consult
ARTHUR S. PENTLAND
ROMAN & JOHNSON
312 East Las Olas Boulevard
Telephone JA 3-6586

WHEN AND WHERE TO DEPOSIT YOUR SAVINGS
In the Mutual Savings Banks of Massachusetts
Operated under strict Massachusetts banking laws. There are no stockholders. All dividends go to depositors. Interest begins on dates listed.
If more convenient you may
BANK BY MAIL
BOSTON, MASS.

Boston Five Cents Savings Bank	Mar. 15
Charlestown Savings Bank	Mar. 15
Dorchester Savings Bank	Mar. 15
East Boston Savings Bank	Mar. 15
Eliot Savings Bank	Mar. 15
Wildey Savings Bank	Mar. 15
Franklin Savings Bank	Apr. 1
Massachusetts Savings Bank	Apr. 1
Boston Penny Savings Bank	Apr. 10
Home Savings Bank	Apr. 10
Union Savings Bank	Apr. 10
Warren Institution for Savings	Apr. 10

Other Massachusetts Savings Banks

Beverly Savings Bank	Mar. 15
East Cambridge Savings Bank	Mar. 15
Melrose Savings Bank	Mar. 15
Stoneham Savings Bank	Mar. 29
Arlington Five Cents Savings Bank	Apr. 1
Rockland Savings Bank	Apr. 1
Somerville Savings Bank	Apr. 1
Cambridgeport Savings Bank	Apr. 10
North Avenue Savings Bank	Apr. 10

ELECTRICAL CABLE DISTRIBUTORS
HENRY A. STOUT COMPANY
Electrical Cable Specialists
Domestic and Foreign Inquiries Solicited
855 W. North Avenue
Pittsburgh 33, Pa.
Telephone CEdar 1-6312
STOUT EXPORT, INC.
Cable Address: Stoutx Pittsburgh

The Warwick
LOCUST AT 17th
PHILADELPHIA
DOORWAY TO HOSPITALITY
A Kirkeby Hotel
See Your Travel Agent or
Teletype PH 376
Convenient Auto Parking Facilities

Advertisement

HOW A BELLHOP'S BONER HELPED ME EARN $15,000
By a Wall Street Journal Subscriber

One time on a business trip I got to the hotel late at night. The only room I could get was an expensive suite. Next morning the bellhop handed me a copy of The Wall Street Journal by mistake. "Some rich guy must have had this room," I said to myself.

Well, I looked at The Journal. For the first time in my life I began to understand why some men get ahead while others stay behind. I learned about the far-reaching changes taking place in America. I found out about new inventions, new industries and new ways of doing business that are helping ambitious men earn money. I sent $20 for a year's subscription to The Wall Street Journal and, believe me, it has paid off. Last year my income was $15,000.

This story is typical. If you think The Wall Street Journal is just for millionaires, you are WRONG! The Journal is a wonderful aid to salaried men making $7,000 to $20,000 a year. It is valuable to owners of small businesses. It can be of priceless benefit to ambitious young men who want to earn more money.

The Wall Street Journal is the complete business DAILY. Has largest staff of writers on business and finance. The only business paper served by all four big press associations. It costs $20 a year, but you can get a Trial Subscription for three months for $6. Just tear out this ad and attach check for $6 and mail. Or tell us to bill you. Address: The Wall Street Journal, 44 Broad St., New York 4, N. Y. CSM-3-13

Incorporated Investors
Established 1925
A mutual fund invested in a list of securities selected for possible GROWTH of CAPITAL and INCOME in the years ahead.
INVESTING for FUTURE INCOME?
INVESTING for CURRENT INCOME?
Incorporated Income Fund
A mutual fund whose first objective is to return as LARGE CURRENT INCOME as may be obtained without undue risk of principal.
THE PARKER CORPORATION, 200 Berkeley St., Boston, Mass.
Please send a Prospectus on ☐ Incorporated Investors
☐ Incorporated Income Fund
Name
Address
City

Fuller Brush Firm Sees Stirring Challenge in Next 50 Years

Patterns of Progress Keyed to Era of Peace

After setting forth his reflections on 50 years of successful merchandising through the direct selling method, Alfred C. Fuller, founder and chairman of the board of the Fuller Brush Company, gives his views on the outlook and opportunities ahead. This is the fourth and last of a series written in response to an invitation from The Christian Science Monitor.

By Alfred C. Fuller
Founder and Chairman of the Board, the Fuller Brush Company
Written for The Christian Science Monitor

Karsh

A. Howard Fuller
President of the Fuller Brush Company.

Hartford, Conn.

I have said that accomplishments of the past are of value only to the extent that they prepare us for the future. This realization occurred to me many years ago, perhaps first when I recruited the second Fuller Brush Man. It was because I knew from my own experience that my brushes would sell that I was able to convince other men to join me in the business.

Is it over-simplification to apply the same reasoning to tomorrow? I think not. The last 50 years have seen the Fuller Brush Company and many others come into being, prosper and grow. The years have brought all kinds of influences to bear . . . years of plenty and years of scarcity; confident times and times of fear. But through them all there has been a single positive undercurrent of progress. What had been learned yesterday was put to work to make today better for the experience, and today's experience in turn guided us to the solutions for tomorrow's problems.

Distances Shrink

At no point in the past was I ever concerned for the opportunity of the future. I am not concerned today.

A very gratifying reward of success is confidence. Confidence has a wonderful capacity to sow itself; and being sown, to flourish. It may be felt that my condence is a rationalized fact, born of the security which it is my good fortune to have attained. I think otherwise. The confidence I feel comes from recognition of the elements themselves.

Business never had better circumstances in which to flourish than it has now. Our own rapidly expanding economy is still far from saturating a more rapidly growing consuming public. Add to this the shrinking distances in the world, the improving communications, the growing awareness of peoples in darker places than ours that better things are possible for them.

It has been a fairly recent opportunity of mine to travel the various countries of our South and Central American neighbors and the isles of the Caribbean. A few years ago I enjoyed a trip throughout the vast reaches of Africa and into the Arab lands of the Mediterranean. To see these places and to talk with these people is to know surely that there is ample room for us and for them to prosper beyond our wildest dreams in the years to come.

Opportunities Beckon

Progress has a bountiful pattern for making obsolete the past. The wonders of this day—the plastics, nuclear power, the searching mind itself—will just as certainly lead to bigger and better things for our children as electricity, the internal combustion engine, and the searching mind of man in our lifetime have led to bigger and better things for us.

And the future is not all to be measured in material wealth. Peace is bound to become the established manner of man. What unimagined advances in the arts, the sciences, in philosophy will be unfolded in the years to come! How much good remains to be done right here in our own land of plenty and how much more in the less developed areas of the world. A tremendous wealth in opportunity abounds everywhere.

Many millions of people in the world have yet to learn even the rudiments of modern living. There are tremendous resources for good in nature still to be tapped. Natural science is only on the threshold of its ultimate, despite the magnificent advances it already has made. Education, learning, and the arts—all too few of the world's people are yet granted the opportunities to taste of these in anything like adequate amounts.

With all that has been done there remains an infinitely greater job to do. The more the people; the more the ideas. It is a practically perpetual cycle.

Initiative Demanded

Despite the encumbrances that today's laws impose on individuality, every bit of opportunity exists today that existed at the beginning of the century. It is no more difficult, and it is no easier to start a business today than it was 50 years ago. It requires the same amount of personal initiative, the same daring, the same devotion to plain and simple hard work. Perhaps this kind of ingredient presents the problem.

Security is the general goal of today's thinking. Undoubtedly born of the vagaries of the past—the depressions, the poverty, the circumstances of the strong dictating to the weak—security seems to have lulled many of our millions into a state of lethargy. They prefer the certainty of mediocrity to the uncertainty of exploration. They prefer the company of the herd to the lonesomeness of individuality. They overbuy the strength of unity to the exclusion of freedom and liberty.

But, as they have in every age, men of spirit emerge from the group to lead and to chart new courses. They are men of vision who temper their vision with the twin virtues of good sense and hard work. They are free men who mortgage their personal security for accomplishment, who exchange the relaxation of mediocrity for the exhilaration of contributing to the greater good.

Emphasis on Tomorrow

Fortunately for mankind today and tomorrow, these men of spirit abound in every society, in every calling, and in ever-increasing numbers. The extensions of opportunity to learn in our growing numbers of schools are encouraging the development of men of spirit. Introductions of the newer visual and audio aids to education cover more ground and do it better than the older forms of pedagogy. Mass communications continue the educational process over longer periods of time to greater numbers of people.

Opportunity is far from finished. It has hardly begun.

These, then are some of my reflections on 50 years in business. It is impossible to cover all of my thoughts in such random writings, but I seriously want to convey a basic one.

As we at Fuller approached our 50th anniversary last year, we drew up some rather elaborate plans for celebrating the occasion. They were good plans, replete with all sorts of means to capitalize on the accomplishments. Reviewing them, however, we felt that altogether too much emphasis was being placed on what had happened. Of far greater importance is the future and how we intend to pursue it. Conseouently, our observance of the milestone was modest. The next 50 years will be the really interesting Fuller years.

Industry • Finance

West Germans Fight Price Rise

By J. Emlyn Williams
Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Bonn, Germany

The West German Federal Government intends to maintain stable prices even if this demands the use of "brute force," according to Prof. Ludwig Erhard, Minister for Economic Affairs, who nowadays is making many outspoken comments on the necessity for checking promptly developments which could threaten the continuance of the present prosperity.

Such a statement naturally sounds strange in view of West Germany's economic strength and the stability of its currency, which for all practical purposes is convertible. And, it should be added at once, this is not a question of any serious collapse, simply a warning against possible creeping inflation.

Moderation Urged

The press has referred to increased prices of many essential commodities during the past few months. But things came to a head with the present apprehension that the price of bread is likely to be increased by two to three pfennigs per kilogram. This causes even more than ordinary concern to the government since federal elections are due next September and the issue can play a part in the election campaign.

Professor Erhard strongly urged both employers and employed to exercise moderation. If not, then he threatens to adopt stronger measures to check the inflationary trend. What measures these will be is still undivulged. Some press comments (not the opposition alone) are demanding more than "platonic statements." Presumably Professor Erhard's measures will include credit restrictions, elimination of customs barriers to increase imports of special goods and so on.

Wage-Price Spiral

In the case of bread, one possibility is to grant further flour subsidies. This subsidy now amounts to 45,000,000 marks (over $1,000,000) annually. The government could also increase imports of grain and drastically reduce customs duties. Since, writes the Stuttgarter Nachrichten, agricultural receives for 1957, under the so-called Green plan, some 2,600,000,000 marks from the public, the latter is entitled to expect stable food prices.

How to check the so-called wage-price spiral is, however, the main problem. Professor Erhard appealed March 11 in Hamburg to both the trade unions and the employers' associations to act moderately in matters of wages and prices. This is likely to be harder than hitherto in the case of the trade unions. They are determined to obtain for workers a greater share in the profits of industry than hitherto. In fact the three months' strike of metalworkers in Schleswig-Holstein, which ended a few weeks ago, is seen by many observers as ending a truce between management and labor in industry.

The average Ruhr steel worker today earns about $35 a week, from which some 14 per cent is deducted for social security, and so on. This does not leave him much for luxuries when one remembers present costs—for example, coffee costs about $4 a pound, etc.

Social Democrat opposition spokesmen criticize the government's price policy and hold Minister Erhard responsible for the rise in living costs of about 14 per cent since 1950. But both government opposition parties are largely responsible for this scare about rising prices.

Politics Enters

During the past few months political considerations have largely influenced economic issues. To gain popular favor, one party has supported increases in grants from public funds for various sections of the community such as old-age pensioners, etc.

The other party, even though realizing the consequences are harmful to the national economy, accepts them rather than risk losing election votes. Much could be avoided if German politicians were less generous with national funds.

The federal budget for 1956-1957, according to reports here, are likely to show a heavy deficit due to larger government allocations. The currency must face monthly increases in purchasing power of about 600,000,000 marks monthly through increased pensions, and so on.

Hydraulic Dredge Cultivates and Harvests Oysters at Eureka, Calif.

Oyster Farm

Pacific Firm Tills Sea Bed

By Jessie Ash Arndt
Woman's Editor of The Christian Science Monitor

South Bend, Wash.

Oysters are a crop out here, seeded with spat (baby oysters) from Japan, cultivated, sometimes transplanted by waterborne machinery, and then harvested and shipped fresh, frozen, or canned throughout the country.

A substantial increase in oyster production on this coast is forecast for this year, with a peak yield within the next five years. Much of this increase will come from the plantings in Humboldt Bay, Eureka, Calif., by the Coast Oyster Company with headquarters here. Verne Hayes, Coast Oyster president, was in Japan in January buying seed for Humboldt Bay and Willapa Harbor here. He makes such trips several times a year.

Coast Oyster, which in 1956 produced more than half a million gallons of oysters, and is one of the largest producers in the country, is only 11 years old. Mr. Hayes, whose family was in the oyster business in Bay City, Ore., decided to strike out for himself when he was still in his 20's. He located at South Bend, Wash., and began buying and selling fresh oysters. Then he started his own oyster-opening house.

In 1946 the Coast Oyster Company was established and the consolidation of small companies into this large operation has continued since. Members of the company credit Mr. Hayes with the vision and ability which have been responsible for the remarkable growth of the business.

The company holds exclusive rights to a dredge invented by Rupert H. Bailey of Seattle and put in operation in Willapa Harbor two years ago. This facilitates the transplanting of yearling oysters from the original planting grounds to the fattening grounds, which, of course, are at a premium, breaking the are at a premium. Breaking the as it does, this dredge effects an important saving in labor costs.

Growth Laid to Grounds

It also is used to harvest the oysters and performs both operations more efficiently with less damage to the oysters than was possible by former methods. A second dredge of this type has recently been completed at Eureka at a cost of $70,000. The second dredge has been in operation about five months.

Seed planted in April, 1955, in Eureka—a new oyster bed but one which was proven as a favorable location before the planting—developed to market size in a year. The crop was being processed through the new cannery at Eureka in the spring of 1956.

This phenomenal growth was laid to the fact that the grounds were new and also that the food provided by the movement of the water was just right. Usually 3 to 3½ years are required for the growth of an oyster to marketable size.

In addition to the rapid success of the Eureka grounds, Coast Oyster had a spawning last season in Willapa Harbor such as occurs only once in about 20 years. Conditions were just right, the water temperature warm enough, so that the 40,000 lines the company had out, with about 80 shells to the line, had about 1,200 oyster spat to the shell. The spat floats around for about ten days and then settles on the shell where it remains for the rest of its existence.

Big Yield Promised

The shells were loaded onto 30 trucks and trailers and hauled like cord wood to Eureka, arriving there in 24 hours, before they dried out. Out of the close to three billion spat there is probably one to 2 per cent survival of the baby oysters; but this small percentage promises a tremendous yield. These oysters are now growing in the beds at Eureka.

When the seed is brought from Japan, it is carried on the decks of ships and must be watered with sea water twice daily to keep it from drying out.

Many families in the oyster business in Japan are now dependent on the market Pacific Coast growers provide. Coast Oyster Company which has close to 250,000 acres of oyster beds, brought about 38,000 cases of spat last year, and the Pacific Coast Oyster Growers' Association which includes about 50 growers in Washington as well as a few in Canada, Oregon, and California, bought 42,000 cases for the seeding of their grounds.

The independent growers sell fresh oysters. Packers beside Coast Oyster Company are Weigardt Brothers of Nahcotta, Wash., Bendiksen Company, of Ocean Park, Wash., which cans oysters, and the Hilton Seafoods Company, of Seattle which processes canned oyster stew.

Marginal Lands "Farmed"

Forty per cent of Coast Oyster Company's production goes to British Columbia Packers, Ltd., one of the largest salmon packers in North America. The firm added oysters in 1956. The rest of the production goes to Van Camp Seafood Company and is packed under the Willa Point and Chicken of the Sea label. A plastic top for the cans of fresh oysters is a recent innovation, replacing the heavier and breakable glass bottles in which they were formerly packed.

Coast has two shucking or opening plants on Puget Sound, two at Gray's Harbor, Wash., two at Wilalpa Harbor, one at Drake's Estera north of San Francisco, and a cannery at Willapa Harbor as well as at Eureka.

The company is planting seed to produce in excess of a million gallons a year and must stay three years ahead of sales. Marginal lands, formerly held simply to protect the oyster beds from encroachment, now are used for planting because of the comparative ease with which the young oysters may be transplanted to fattening grounds by the hydraulic dredge. This forces down a jet of water at an angle which lifts the shells and breaks them apart as they are carried on a conveyor to the barge. The barge takes them to the new location.

The shell clusters must be broken and spread either with the dredge or by hand at low tide, otherwise many oysters are crowded and lost just as are young plants where they are too thickly planted. Oyster beds are located 10 minutes' to an hour's distance from shore. The oyster must be where the shell will not sink into the mud; where the oyster is not exposed during low tide so that it would be cooked by the sun in summer; where winter storm's will not wash it away; and in land where food is brought in by the movement of the water.

In addition to Mr. Hayes, whose home is in Aberdeen, Wash., officers of the Coast Oyster Company are Ward C. Kumm, of Seattle, vice-president, and Dori Halldorson, of South Bend, secretary and treasurer. Van Camps Seafoods Company and British Columbia Packers, Ltd., are stockholders in the company.

U.S. Set to Unload General Aniline

A Window on Wall Street

By Vartanig G. Vartan
Special Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

New York

General Aniline & Film Corporation, the biggest foreign firm seized by the United States during World War II, finally is going up for sale.

The Justice Department, through its Office of Alien Property, will open bids on May 15 in Washington for this huge chemical and dyestuff maker with assets totaling $160,000,000.

On the selling block goes 75 per cent of the company's no-par common A stock and $1 par value common B shares. The successful bidder must take all this stock in a single package.

Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., has stipulated that the offering is open only to American citizens. Such a step, he explained, "is to assure the continued operation of this important business by private American enterprise."

Back in 1942 the United States took over 97 per cent of General Aniline under the Trading With the Enemy Act.

Out of a total of some $500,000,000 worth of foreign properties seized by the United States during the war, only a handful remains in government hands. The sale of General Aniline to the highest bidder has been stalled by almost a decade of lawsuits.

Control Disputed

The government seized General Aniline's stock on grounds that the concern was controlled by the enemy. Interhandel Corporation, a Swiss holding company formerly known as I. G. Chemie, has sought since 1948 to win back control of General Aniline.

However, the United States has held that Interhandel was only a front for the I. G. Farben cartel, the foremost German producer of chemical and allied products.

A federal district court dismissed the Interhandel claim in 1955 and the Supreme Court later refused to review the ruling. But earlier this year, Interhandel, contending it is entitled to recover the seized assets, again sought court action for its claim.

The legal moves even have reached diplomatic levels. The State Department in January turned down Switzerland's request that the General Aniline case be submitted to international arbitration.

Just where does General Aniline today fit into the American chemical picture? It ranks as a leading producer of coal tar dyes and intermediates. Its Ansco Division ranks second only to Eastman Kodak as a maker of photographic equipment.

Income Climbs

Moreover, General Aniline owns around 3,200 patents. Its output of chemicals includes detergents, tanning agents, and mildew preventatives. Another division makes sensitizing paper and cellulose acetate films, as well as printing machines.

General Aniline's latest financial report, covering the first 10 months of 1956, shows that sales rose to $108,000,000 from the 1955 period $100,000,000. At the same time, net income climbed to the $4,000,000 mark from $3,400,000.

The United States Government, which has supervised the operation of General Aniline since 1942, is anxious to turn the company back to private ownership. This is the approach it has taken to other foreign firms seized in wartime.

For example, in 1952, common stock of Schering Corporation was sold in the interests of the United States to a banking group for $29,000,000. This sale also was subject to restrictions which limited future ownership to qualified American nationals.

In mid-1956 the government disposed of its remaining 8 per cent interest in Rohm & Haas Company, another chemical producer. It received $34,400,000 from an underwriting syndicate which paid $428.25 a share and then offered the stock to the public at $440 per share.

Expansion Expected

The return of General Aniline's control to private industry could signal a period of greater expansion for the company and increased sales of its products. Even so, the firm's net worth has tripled during its 15 years under United States control.

In preparing to offer the General Aniline stock for bidding, the Justice Department followed the customary channel of filing a registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission and giving out a prospectus of the stock it plans to sell.

Specifically, the offering covers 426,988 shares of the 540,894 common A shares and 1,537,500 of the 2,050,000 common B shares held by the government.

The government is holding back 25 per cent of its stock in order to meet the claims of individual shareholders in the chemical company.

(An estimated 52,000 shares of General Aniline stock currently are held by the public.)

Shareholders Sue

At the same time, suits have been filed by 2,500 individual stockholders of Interhandel. These shareholders, claiming they were not enemies of the United States during the war, seek a proportionate part of the stock now held by the United States.

Who will be the successful buyer in the competitive bidding for 75 per cent of General Aniline's stock? The purchaser still remains to be selected, of course. But if the pattern of alien property sales holds true, it can be expected that a syndicate of underwriters will buy the stock for reoffering to the American public.

Trinidad's Original Name

Trinidad, an island off the coast of Venezuela, was first named Iere, "Land of the Hummingbird." It was discovered by Columbus in 1498.

Diversity Benefits Reaped by Jobber

By Phil Elderkin
Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Worcester, Mass.

One of the things management wrestles with almost constantly these days is whether to make it or buy it. However, the right answer is not only extremely important to business, intent on holding costs down, but also to the thousands of job shops in the United States.

When manufacturers decide to buy parts from outside suppliers, the job shop thrives. When it doesn't—well, the answer is pretty obvious and the job shop falls on hard times. In short, a jobber has no control over his market and is constantly operating under the possibility that his best customer suddenly may decide to make his own parts.

Machinery Cost Factor

Actually, there probably aren't more than a handful of good reasons why a manufacturer goes outside his own company for certain parts. Usually it's because he can buy the part cheaper than he can make it. But he may also go outside to get the benefit of a supplier's specialized facilities, because of a lack of plant space, or to take care of sudden market demands.

The latter is especially true during boom times, when new machinery not only costs more but is also more difficult to get. Most manufacturers would rather make use of a jobber's machinery, probably already paid for or at least partly written off, than to buy new equipment at peak prices. The point is that whichever way management decides to turn, the job shop is affected.

Fresh Deal Pursued

Business Week summed up the situation rather neatly a couple of years ago, using the Worcester Pressed Steel Company of Worcester, Mass., as an example. It seems that Westinghouse had bought stamped steel tops from Presteel for nearly 25 years. These tops were shipped over the road to Westinghouse's Springfield, Mass., plant, which makes drinking fountains and stamps out parts for other products similar to those made at Presteel.

It was a neat arrangement all around and was worth roughly $100,000 a year to the Worcester firm. Suddenly Westinghouse decided to shift some of its Springfield production to Columbus, Ohio, (actually it gave Presteel about four months' notice) leaving a vast number of idle presses behind. Eventually Westinghouse put these machines to work on items previously made at Presteel, gradually forcing the Worcester concern out of the picture.

It was the kind of thing that had happened to Presteel before and would probably happen again. Presteel didn't panic, it was too experienced for that, but it did start looking for a way to protect itself. Maybe solution is a better word. At any rate, when it did decide what to do, it not only moved swiftly but boldly.

Presteel went out and bought the HiPac Corporation of Hillside, N.J. (hired its top brass) and moved the business to Worcester. HiPac makes small, high-pressure gas cylinders and release mechanisms, similar to those used to inflate rubber rescue crafts and the like. It was the case of an old company buying out a very new one.

According to Presteel's sales manager, John E. King, it took about three years of hard plugging to pump enough new ideas and know-how into HiPac to make it a going concern. But a year ago Presteel's HiPac division accounted for 25 per cent of the firm's total business. There is every indication that HiPac will grab off an even greater percentage in 1957.

Several lush government contracts practically assure HiPac a place in the business sun well into 1958, according to Mr. King, and there is comparatively little around in the way of competition. Yet Presteel still thinks of itself as a job shop and probably always will.

Carter C. Higgins, the firm's president, regards the purchase of HiPac as one of the best moves his company has ever made. Currently Presteel is negotiating for the purchase of another young firm, although Mr. Higgins isn't ready to announce anything just yet. "We're still in the paper stage," he said.

However, both Messrs. Higgins and King feel that to survive the job shop must diversify into other fields in order to gain economic protection in hard times. Normally Presteel employs about 300, although during World War II the firm reached a manpower peak of roughly 900.

From here it looks as though Presteel has made its point—that the jobber, properly diversified and with an alert sales staff, isn't in such a bad spot after all.

Adult Schooling Popular

More than 5 million persons are attending adult-education classes in West Germany this year.

Income Tax 'Do's' Assist Tabulators

The Ides of March serve as a reminder that there's just one month left in which to file federal income tax returns. The deadline is April 15, 1957.

Here are a few do's which will help both you and the Internal Revenue folks who have to examine returns:

1. Be sure to enclose W-2 forms with your return.

2. Be sure to sign your return.

3. If it's a joint return, be sure that both you and your wife (or husband) sign it.

4. Be sure the wages you report are in agreement with the amounts shown on your W-2 forms.

5. Check your arithmetic.

6. If you don't type your returns, watch that your handwriting is legible.

These do's may seem so obvious as to need no repeating. Yet it is neglect in watching these points that gives the Internal Revenue Service the most trouble, especially with regard to refunds.

"All of these things," Frank J. Cavanagh, District Director of the Internal Revenue Service at Boston, pointed out, "challenge the accuracy of the reports, and the service won't make any refunds until they have been verified."

And here's a final don't: Don't wait until the last minute to file your return. Take time to do it carefully.

USMC
UNITED SHOE MACHINERY CORPORATION
207th Consecutive Quarterly Dividend
The Directors have declared a dividend of 37½ cents per share on the Preferred stock They have also declared a dividend of 62½ cents per share, and a special dividend of 50 cents per share, on the Common stock. The dividends on both Preferred and Common stock are payable May 1, 1957 to stockholders of record April 3, 1957.
WALLACE M. KEMP, Treasurer
March 13, 1957

Interested in RETIREMENT PLANS?
Before you buy, see QES
Copy on request
No obligations
Jason E. Stone, Jr.
585 Boylston Street CO 7-7010
Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co.
BOSTON 16, MASS.

IT&T
DIVIDEND No. 72
The Board of Directors today authorized the payment on April 15, 1957, of 45 cents per share to stockholders of record March 22, 1957.
O. C. BUCHANAN Treasurer
March 13, 1957
INTERNATIONAL TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH CORPORATION
67 Broad St., New York 4, N. Y.
Electronics and Telecommunication

1st Mortgage Loans
ON HOMES, BUSINESS AND INDUSTRIAL PROPERTIES
We Represent Private and Institutional Clients (Borrowers and Lenders) From Coast to Coast
WE MAKE NO PERSONAL SOLICITATIONS TRUST DEEDS BOUGHT AND SOLD
WM. B. HOLT
MORTGAGE LOANS
SINCE 1930
1609 N. BUSH STREET • SANTA ANA, CALIF.
KIMBERLY. 3-7118
Correspondents in Los Angeles, San Francisco, New York, Chicago

SAVE — INVEST
Buy Co-operative Bank Shares
Now paying 4% per year on Serial Shares—3% on Paid-up Certificates.
Every Account Insured in Full Under State Banking Laws
Your money always available
CHARTERED 1877
CAMPELLO CO-OPERATIVE BANK
1090 Main St., Brockton, Mass.

820 N. Main St. Cor. Oak St. Brockton 38, Mass.
CURRENT DIVIDEND 3% per annum
Dividends Paid from 1st on Accounts Opened Before the 10th of the Month
All accounts insured up to $10,000
Assets over $13,500,000
MONTELLO FEDERAL SAVINGS & LOAN ASSOCIATION

New England Gas and Electric Association
PREFERRED AND COMMON DIVIDENDS NOS. 40
The Trustees have declared a quarterly dividend of $1.12½ per share on the 4½% CUMULATIVE CONVERTIBLE PREFERRED SHARES of the Association payable April 1, 1957, and a regular quarterly dividend of twenty-five cents (25¢) per share on the COMMON SHARES of the Association payable April 15, 1957. Both dividends are payable to shareholders of record at the close of business March 28, 1957.
H. C. MOORE, JR., Treasurer
March 14, 1957

PILGRIM TRUST COMPANY
PROGRESS
Our progress is wrapped up in the progress and profit of our thousands of customers — individual, partnership, corporate and trustee. We invite you to make it our business to help you, too, to greater progress and profit.
31 Milk Street, Boston
Member Federal Reserve System
Member Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Fuller Brush Progress Keyed to Energetic Direct-Selling Dealers

Home Display Puts Buyer at Ease

In the third article of a series on the Fuller Brush Company, written at the request of The Christian Science Monitor, Alfred C. Fuller, founder and chairman of the board, describes the role which the dealer has played in the company's successful development of direct selling.

By Alfred C. Fuller
Founder and Chairman of the Board of the Fuller Brush Company
Written for The Christian Science Monitor

Hartford, Conn.

Among all of the pleasures of reminiscing on 50 and more years of business, I think there is no more gratifying accomplishment I can point to than the parallel accomplishment of the Fuller Brush dealer. If the company has come far, he has come farther. If we in the management of the business should be honored for building strong, the Fuller Brush man should be doubly so honored for having taken such avid and energetic advantages of good opportunity.

It is actually the Fuller dealers, thousands upon thousands of them through the years, who have made the greatest contribution to our success. It is they who have actually made the calls and caused the results. It is they who have demonstrated the significant opportunity direct selling offers any and every qualified man to take his place in the business life of the nation. It is they who have shown the determination and the individuality to make selling a personal and positive contribution to a better world.

Selling is essential to our expanding economy. Only selling can possibly consume the tremendously increasing productivity of our industrial complex. Only selling can convince the millions of consumers to use more, to raise their standards of living, to make markets for the world's manifold fruits . . . yesterday, today, and tomorrow.

New Items Offered

Back in the beginning of the Fuller Brush man's career, the usual outlet for consumer merchandise was the small town's general store or the big city's emporium. Here the merchandise was almost hidden from the customer's eye. It was neatly shelved or discreetly displayed. The manager of the store based his buying judgment on what his customers had bought in the past. The storekeeper felt no urge to introduce new kinds of items because he had no reason to believe he could sell them.

The direct seller, however, based his business not on competing with his town's shopkeeper, but rather by selling the people of his community new and different merchandise than that offered in the store. The people on whom I myself called in the early days of this business generally had no idea that a brush could be made in so many fashions to do so many things better. The key to my selling success was not a good, rounded stock of staple items; it was a varied and new assortment of different items that had to be demonstrated to be sold.

Demonstration makes the difference. It provides the personality of the sale. It puts the product and its benefits graphically before the buyer . . . right in her hand, as a matter of fact . . . at a time when her attention is shared with no other preoccupation.

There is another unique contribution the direct seller makes to the basic sale. The store strives by every means to build traffic into its place of business where the display can be seen and the atmosphere of the sale can be established. Direct selling is traffic in reverse.

The Fuller dealer goes to the people and brings his wares to them. This adds comfort and convenience to the other benefits or direct selling, but it adds more than that. It adds the positive factor of aggressiveness, the very kind of element that has opened the prairies to man's greater good; the kind of spirit that carved free people a home in the wilderness that was America a comparatively short time ago.

Attainments on Record

If I cast the Fuller dealer and his fellow direct sellers in a dramatic role, perhaps I will be excused for my enthusiasm. But to have experienced his growth in stature so intimately is to credit him with signal accomplishment. His attainments are a matter of record.

It is estimated that his efforts last year accounted for some two billions of dollars of business. Significant for those who might consider this an encroachment on the nation's retailers is the fact that this is only about 2 per cent of the total retailing volume. And more significant still is the additional fact that very much of this two billions of dollars consists of business the retailer would not have gotten anyhow.

Indeed, though direct selling is largely responsible for having built the broad modern demand for brushes, vacuum cleaners, fine hosiery, cosmetics, safety razors, and encyclopedias—to name but a few—stores today sell far more of these items than do all the direct selling companies combined.

We do not raid the market; we build it!

Since I know him so well, I honor the Fuller dealer particularly for the contributions he has made and is still making to American business. I have known him through the years as the strong kind of individual that makes the most out of the opportunity offered him.

Strong Character

His is the kind of character that marks a man with respect. In an age that encourages the herd instincts in man he goes his own way to meet the challenge alone. In an era that unhappily entices man to secure mediocrity, he dares to establish himself as his own boss in his own business with far greater security of his own making.

He builds his home and raises his family; he takes his part in community affairs as other men do. But is able to do it better and contribute much more to the greater good because he adds responsibility to the normal accomplishments. He can stand on his own feet. He learns that one benefits in direct proportion to his investment. The harder he works, the better his reward should be; the more positive and constructive his thinking, the more and better his benefit.

The Fuller dealer is not the insistent extrovert the cartoonist is so generous to draw. He is as often retiring and shy as he is self-confident and outgoing. He is more often serious and dedicated than he is carefree and superficial.

If the Fuller dealer is frequently caricatured on stage and screen and printed page, it is in the spirit that Uncle Sam is caricatured. He has become a symbol of something good, of something familiar and hopeful, of something we all recognize as desirable.

It was this general idea that Fred Allen once put across in his inimitable manner on coast-to-coast radio when he said, "Fulton gave us the steamboat; Marconi gave us the wireless; and Fuller gave us the brush!"

Mr. Allen was not talking about me. He was referring to his local Fuller Brush dealer.

Frederick Bradley
Millions of Fuller's Handy Brushes Come Off This Machine

Tax-Exempt Bond Yields are now near 20-Year Highs

If you are in the middle or upper tax bracket, we believe you should carefully consider tax-exempt bonds. They now offer you the opportunity to acquire tax-free income at the most attractive level in years.

Many bonds issued by cities, states and public authorities currently yield as much as 4%, and this income, unlike the income from most securities, is entirely exempt by law from Federal income taxation. Moreover, for owners residing in the state of the bond's origin, this income is often free of state income taxes as well. The many advantages of tax-exempt bonds are explained in our booklet, "Tax-Exempt Bonds for Tax-Free Income." Just write or call for Booklet SM5.

HORNBLOWER & WEEKS

75 Federal Street, Boston 10, Mass.
Telephone: LIberty 2-7500

908 Hospital Trust Bldg.
Providence 3, R. I.
DExter 1-7600

8 Foster Street
Worcester 8, Mass.
PLeasant 6-2464

Members Principal Stock and Commodity Exchanges

BOSTON NEW YORK CHICAGO DETROIT CLEVELAND PHILADELPHIA PROVIDENCE PORTLAND BANGOR PEORIA ROCKFORD CHARLOTTE WORCESTER MEMPHIS DALLAS

H&W EST. 1888

'Pennsy' to Run On Daylight Time

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia

Daylight saving time has toppled one more citadel of resistance: The Pennsylvania Railroad announced that it will put its entire passenger system on the "fast" time this spring on a one-year trial basis.

Interstate public transportation has long resisted the annual change-over to daylight time, which involves setting clocks ahead one hour.

J. Benton Jones, vice-president in charge of passenger sales and services, in announcing the PRR's decision to follow the trend of the times, declared:

"With widespread use of daylight time from spring until fall in the area we serve, we have decided to adopt this as our basic time in the 1957 season."

Synthetic Fibers Multiply Rapidly

By Henry Lesesne
Special Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Charlotte, N. C.

Productive capacity for the non-cellulosic fibers is not only growing at a fantastic rate, but the number and categories of such fibers multiply rapidly—so much so, in fact, that before the public scarcely becomes familiar with existing ones, there are others on the horizon, or even being readied for big-scale production.

Chemical fiber plan construction, representing a very large capital investment, is the one big growth area in the whole textile and textile-related picture. The major part of the expansion in production facilities involves the ever-increasing family of acrylics and the nylons.

It was du Pont's nylon which started the parade of non-cellulosic fibers. Nylon marked the beginning, in fact, of an era when the chemists ceased trying to imitate a cocoon. "Artificial silk," as rayon was known in the beginning, wasn't a synthetic in the strict sense, since it has at natural cellulose base.

Synthetic Proteins

Into the non-cellulosics category fall all kinds of chemical or man-made fibers—nylons, the acrylics, sarans, glass fibers, polyesters, polyethyenes, and the like. And now there's B. F. Goodrich Chemical Company's new experiment fiber, Darlan, which has a dinitrile base.

Still in a relatively early research stage is a new family of chemical fibers, intriguing and potentially important—synthetic protein fibers, formed from long chains of animo acids. Only one of the new postwar fibers of any consequence made in part from a natural protein is Virginia-Carolina Chemical Company's Vicara. It is produced from zein, a protein of corn.

Several large companies now are reported to be interested in research to develop fibers from synthetic proteins.

Authorities in the chemical fiber field such as Dr. Frank J. Soday, head of the research division of Chemstrand Corporation, foresee noncellulosic fiber output spiraling to at least four billion pounds a year probably before 1975. Presently it is about 400 million pounds annually.

Huge Plant Rises

These fibers are not developed or put into commercial production hastily. For instance, American Cyanamid Company is building a huge plant near Pensacola, Fla., expected to be ready in mid-1958, for full-scale commercial production of its acrylic fiber, Creslan.

But 10 years of research and pilot plant development preceded that step.

After five years of research Dow Chemical Company has recently perfected a man-made fiber it has named Zefran and which it plans to manufacture at a large plant to be built near Lee Hall, Va., on the James River. A company spokesman says the new synthetic can best be described as being in the category of a nitrile alloy.

It took seven years' effort of studying "giant" molecules — structures of tiny organic molecules linked end to end to form what the chemists call polymers —to provide even the chemical foundation of nylon.

An investment of 27 million dollars and the cumulative efforts of some 230 chemists and engineers were represented in the first commercial production of nylon at Seaford, Del., in 1939.

Nylon is generally thought of as being the first synthetic. It was — from the standpoint of commercial availability or introduction. In its basic chemistry, however, another du Pont noncellulosic fiber, Dacron, is actually older.

Dacron is classed as a polyester fiber rather than an acrylic and is made from a polymer of ethylene glycol and terephthalic acid. It is an outgrowth of the research of du Pont's Dr. Wallace Carothers, who worked on polyesters before he turned his attention to polyamides and the ultimate discovery of nylon.

Commercial production of Dacron, first produced experimentally under the name of Fiber V, did not start until 1953, at a big plant near Kinston, N.C.

To the family of acrylic fibers, whose base is the amazingly versatile petrochemical known as acrylonitrile, belong du Pont's Orlon, Chemstrand's Acrilan, Union Carbide and Carbon's Dynel, and Cyanamid's Creslan.

Presently du Pont is building at Waynesboro, Va., a new plant, scheduled for completion late in 1957, to produce Orlon staple and tow. Rated at 40 million pounds annually, it will bring total capacity for Orlon staple and tow to above 100 million pounds a year. Du Pont's first plant for Orlon staple went into production at Camden, S.C., in mid-1952.

Experiments Pushed

Researchers constantly are experimenting with procedures designed to change the physical and chemical characteristics of acrylic and vinyl fibers. And nylon, the first non-cellulosic fiber, has become something of a generic term.

Since its first commercial nylon yarn was spun, du Pont has increased its nylon production many times over and now is building another huge nylon plant at Richmond, Va. A few years ago it licensed both Chemstrand and American Enka Company to manufacture it.

Chemstrand is doubling capacity of its nylon facilities built at Pensacola, Fla., a few years ago, and the new plant addition makes it the largest nylon manufacturing unit in the world. American Enka, a major producer of high-tenacity rayon yarns, is in the midst of building large-scale nylon production facilities near Enka, N.C.

Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, with large facilities in Virginia, has introduced in the last two years a number of Caprolan nylon heavy yarns under processes developed independently by its own research.

Capacity Increases

Worldwide there is a comparable rise in non-cellulosic fiber capacity. Incidentally, Chemstrand, Ltd., wholly owned subsidiary of Chemstrand Corporation of Decatur, Ala., is building at Coleraine in Northern Ireland a plant for making its Acrilan that will cost 10 million dollars in the first phase of construction.

Virtually all United States chemical fiber production is in the Southeast, a region which also accounts for about 80 per cent of the nation's cotton textile production and about the same proportion of rayon and acetate textile output.

The primary reason for this, other than proximity to the textile mills, is that acrylonitrile, base of the acrylics, and adipic acid, used in making nylon, both come mainly from the fastest growing chemical empire in the world along the Texas-Louisiana coasts.

Industry • Finance

Church Construction Up

By Religious News Service

Washington

Church construction set a February record of $65,000,000, the Departments of Commerce and Labor reported. This was an increase of $10,000,000 over the February, 1956, figure. In the first two months of 1957 church construction ran 18 per cent ahead of the same period last year when an all-time high was established.

European Market: What About Cotton?

By Philip Whitcomb
Special Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Frankfurt

The pure white light of the New Europe is inevitably—and usefully—being broken by the prism of practicality into as many separate colors as there are separate industries.

The thousand officials and economists who have been studying Euro-market plans and free trade areas during the last few years sometimes feel that the prism of application is even producing as many colors as there are separate companies affected. To make the point clear, a specific example must be taken; available here in Frankfurt is that of the German cotton industry's federation.

Germany, being one of the six nations, will find itself within the new Euromarket customs wall as soon as treaties have been signed and ratified and the 12- or 15-year process of integration is under way.

The first question the German cotton industries ask themselves is in fact the same as that being asked by all other Euromarket industries which must import their raw materials from outside. Will the new wall make cotton cost more, make buying terms more difficult, or make it harder to get exactly the grade and kind needed?

Import Duties?

In theory, an import duty might be placed on all cotton coming into Euromarket because one member, Italy, does at present collect a duty on imported raw cotton. Fortunately the conception of increasing freedom, inherent in the Euromarket idea, seems certain to triumph on this point. The Euromarket wall will probably offer no barrier to incoming raw cotton.

A second possibility springs from the new principle that relations between Euromarket members and their overseas areas are to be favored. For example, France has been attempting, particularly during and since the blockade of 1940-1944 to develop its own African source of cotton. It might conceivably ask that Euromarket preference be given to raw cotton from member nations' overseas areas. So far it has not done so. If the request is made, it will come from government economists, and not from the French cotton trade itself, but the possibility exists.

Nor have the Belgians asked for any such preferences. Belgium, in spite of its Congo interests, supports the German cotton trade in opposition to any such regulation. German cotton men, in particular, demand the right to buy any cotton from anywhere without any restriction.

The figures of Germany's cotton imports during the last two years show how such freedom would give full play to supply and demand, producing a situation utterly unlike the canalized flow sought by the planners.

U.S. Policy Hit

United States sales of raw cotton to Germany in the 12-month season from August, 1955, to July, 1956, totaled 91,000 bales. This was a period in which United States export controls made it difficult for Germans to get exactly what they wanted, and during which the uncertainty as to future United States price policy made buyers more than cautious.

But when the United States price policy became known German sales rose again. During the six months of the following season from August, 1956, to January, 1957, Germany bought United States cotton at the rate of more than 800,000 bales a year.

The German cotton trade in general has had a low opinion of the United States Government policy of paying the farmer more or less similarly for all kinds and grades of cotton. The German buyer prefers that the grower be influenced by the needs and price offers of the actual user.

The fact that complete freedom on the German side in the buying of raw cotton, and increased freedom on the United States side in its export, has brought the United States share of Germany's world purchases up to 72 per cent, close to the prewar 80 per cent, is cited by German cotton men as proof of the advantages of absolutely free trade in raw cotton—though countries which have failed to sell raw cotton to Germany in the last six months may not fully agree.

Yet all countries gain in the end, according to the Germans. A textile industry free to choose kind and grade, and to negotiate for price, will become stronger and will therefore buy more raw cotton from all over the world. And growers who are obliged to meet the needs of the textile mill, rather than the program of some local economist, will in the end do far more business.

Easier Market

Sales constitute the other side of the cotton problem. The cotton mills of each of the six nations will have an open and easier market in all the other five. But will their competitive power in world markets diminish in proportion? On this point the opinion of German cotton mill men is definite.

Within the six nations, no one will be crushed; all will gain, they say. Some inefficient mills may be converted to other purposes. Most of those which remain will begin to concentrate on what they do best, so that instead of a large number of mills each offering too many lines, the Euromarket textile producers will consist of mills each of which will become unbeatable in its own specialty. Thus, the entire array, like a sort of textile orchestra, will provide a complete line of products enabling it to satisfy home users, and also to operate effectively in all the open markets of the world.

Throughout the six nations the breaking down of the Euromarket plan into its separate parts, affecting each separate industry and company, is proceeding full blast. This process has brought out one odd point: hitherto it has been the theorists who offered simplicity of conception, and the individual industries and businessmen who offered endless complications. Now that Euromarket is about to be born, it is the businessmen who find simple solutions of practical problems, and the official economists who offer complicated formulas.

Even Explained, We Don't Get It

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

Minneapolis

Just how much is 72 billion dollars—the proposed federal budget for the coming fiscal year—in understandable terms?

According to the family economics bureau of Northwestern National Life Insurance Company, 72 billion dollars would make a stack of $10 bills 410 miles high.

It would pay the combined wages of a million manufacturing workers, at present average wage rates, for 17 years.

It is nearly two and one-half times our farmers' total cash receipts for all the produce of American agriculture in 1956.

It is approximately twice as much as the United States Government spent for World War I.

It is more than one-fifth of our present national income.

It is $1,100 per American worker.

It is $1,700 per American family.

Spending 72 billion dollars in a year means spending $137,000 a minute for 24 hours a day for seven days a week for 52 weeks.

The Business Day

Prices became narrowly mixed early this afternoon after some profit-taking pushed the recent advance back. Gains and losses of leading issues were from fractions to a point in both directions. No group showed any particular pressure. The market continued yesterday's rise at its opening, but the pace slowed and prices gradually dropped. Shell Transport & Trading, the most active stock, dropped about a point. Gulf Oil and Douglas Aircraft showed gains of around a point. Prices were higher in active trading on the American Stock Exchange with Faraday Uranium, Northspan Uranium, Central Explorers, Stanrock Uranium, and Peruvian Oils & Minerals among gainers.

Thorough investigation and study of national monetary and credit policies by the House Banking Committee has been recommended by the House Rules Committee. If approved by the House, the recommendation rejects President Eisenhower's request that he be authorized to appoint a commission to carry on such study.

Public offering of $20,000,000 Dresser Industries, Inc., 4⅛ per cent Subordinated Debentures due March 1, 1977 (convertible into common stock of the company until March 1, 1967) is being made by an underwriting group headed by Blyth & Co., Inc. The debentures are priced at 100 per cent and accrued interest to yield 4.125 per cent to maturity, with a conversion price of $55 per share of common stock based on principal amount of debentures.

A record 37½ billion dollars is expected to be spent by American businessmen on new plants and equipment in 1957. According to a survey by the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Commerce Department, the continued upward trend is 6½ per cent or 2 billion dollars above expenditures of 1956, but considerably below the 22 per cent increase of 1956 over 1955. Rising prices are considered to be the cause for at least half of this year's increase.

A more flexible interest rate on Federal Housing Administration mortgages has been called for by builder William J. Levitt. He told a mortgage and savings conference by the American Bankers Association that a "more realistic and competitive" interest rate on government-insured FHA loans would revive the building industry and save home buyers substantial amounts of money. He said flexible rates might mean temporary increases over the present fixed 5 per cent, but "elimination of the hidden discount" would offset this increase in savings to home buyers.

USMC

UNITED SHOE MACHINERY CORPORATION

207th Consecutive Quarterly Dividend

The Directors have declared a dividend of 37½ cents per share on the Preferred stock. They have also declared a dividend of 62½ cents per share, and a special dividend of 50 cents per share, on the Common stock. The dividends on both Preferred and Common stock are payable May 1, 1957 to stockholders of record April 3, 1957.

WALLACE M. KEMP,
March 13, 1957 Treasurer

BANK SATURDAYS
at Manchester Trust Co.
MEMBER F.D.I.C.
893 MAIN STREET and 15 NORTH MAIN STREET • MANCHESTER, CONN.
9 A. M. to 12 NOON

To Create An Estate Early In Life, Purchase Life Insurance

Most young men starting their careers recognize the value of life insurance as a means of creating or increasing an estate.

Of equal importance is the planning of the distribution of that insurance to obtain the maximum usefulness from it for the protection of your heirs. In many cases, the options offered by the insurance companies themselves provide adequate protection. Frequently, however, it is preferable to have a more flexible arrangement to meet unforeseeable conditions and needs.

In such cases, a Life Insurance Trust, created to receive the proceeds of your policies, can contain the discretionary provisions you desire. Other property may be added to such a trust, and it may eventually become the principal means of managing and distributing your property.

In the perfection of an estate plan suited to your particular situation, we offer our experience in administering estates and trusts to you, in cooperation with your lawyer and insurance counselor. A talk with our officers will incur no obligation.

The New England Trust Company
Incorporated 1869
135 DEVONSHIRE STREET
Back Bay Branch: 99 Newbury St., Boston, Mass.
Member of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation

Fuller Brush Line Expansion N

Research Advances Traced by Founder

In the second of a series of articles on the Fuller Brush Company, Alfred C. Fuller, founder and chairman of the board of this widely known and highly successful direct selling concern, traces the development of products during its 50 years of operation. The articles were written in response to an invitation from The Christian Science Monitor.

By Alfred C. Fuller
Founder and chairman of board, the Fuller Brush Company
Written for The Christian Science Monitor

Hartford, Conn.

Having treated in my previous remarks the more personal of my reflections on a half century of direct selling, I undertake this portion with greater confidence. This discussion concerns itself with the more tangible, perhaps the more historical circumstances of the development of the Fuller Brush Company as traced through the expansion of products and services offered by the Fuller dealer.

In the beginning the Fuller product line was a simple one. It consisted of twisted-in-wire brushes. I could manufacture myself from the elementary raw materials I understood, on the primitive twisting machine in which I had invested the goodly sum of $15. The raw materials included about $65 worth of bristle, wire, and handles. My sister permitted me to use a corner of her basement as a factory.

Tight Twisting Demanded

Here I fashioned quite a variety of brushes for which I knew there was a good market. There were bath brushes, clothes brushes, hand brushes, and floor brushes. In fact I was willing and able to manufacture almost any kind of brush my customers wanted. Of one thing I was particular. My brushes had to be tightly twisted and evenly trimmed. They had to be properly stiff or soft as the use warranted. I never hesitated to scrap a brush that wouldn't stand my own severe inspection, and I willingly replaced the few faulty brushes that got by me and into my customers' hands. That has been a Fuller policy all through the years.

Quality Control Sought

Interesting to note, this twist-in-wire construction is still a major type of brush in the Fuller line, and even in the factory at Hartford, we run a battery of hand twisters remarkably like the one I first used but with power replacing the hand crank. The years have contributed wonderful automatic machinery for twisting brushes, and these modern machines carry the bulk of the production load. The automatic-made brushes are perhaps superior in quality to the hand-made brushes in many respects because the human variations are eliminated, but I frequently walk through the shop to admire the skill and dexterity the hand twisters still demonstrate, and I share with them pride in the craft.

It was a natural development as the business grew and prospered—as the Fuller Brush Man became more widely known and more readily welcomed—to add to his line other types of products in the same general category as the twisted-in-wire brushes. Brooms, mops, and tufted brushes found their way into the line. These newer additions presented something of a problem to us at the time.

Simply to buy them from an available manufacturer and resell them to our dealers left much to be desired. This hardly fitted with our success formula. We wanted to control the quality ourselves; we wanted the designs to be uniquely superior to what the market offered in general. We wanted the price to be consistent with what the world was coming to recognize as "Fuller quality" . . . not a hackneyed phrase, by the way, but a genuine hallmark representing honest high standards.

Research Efforts Pushed

The solution to the problem was found in endless search for additional superior products. When we found a source that would meet our rigid specifications, we would negotiate arrangements of supply that would assure not only the exclusive rights to a particular product, but the necessary practical controls that would make that merchandise truly a Fuller product.

Inevitably, when the power of the Fuller dealers' salesmanship got behind the Fullerized product, demands rose so sharply that we were absorbing the total output of the factory. From here it was simply good business to join forces for our mutual benefit. To some extent the developing Fuller factory was composed of several smaller factories.

Many times, despite our tireless search, we could not find dependable outside manufacturing sources for our new products. Here is where Fuller research came into play and from it have come some of our noted products of today. Fullergript is one. Developed by Fuller engineers, Fullergript presented to the market a new type of brush construction. The brush material—fiber, bristle, wire, synthetic materials of many types—is firmly and continuously bound between a wire core and a metal strip specially formed to hold the parts permanently in a nonshredding grip. The strip brush may be cut into pieces of varying lengths. It can be formed into a limitless variety of shapes, or it can be produced in a continuous strip of indefinite length to be wound on cores, spiraled, or coiled for any use the ingenious mind of man can contrive.

If the twisted-in-wire brush is "all brush but the handle," the Fuller-gript brush qualifies as a new tool in the complex that is modern manufacturing. Long before Fullergript became a fact, we were marketing special heavy-duty versions of the Fuller brush for industry. These industrial products have been sold direct to the user by the Fuller industrial representatives since their introduction in the early 1920's — much as the household brushes have been directly sold by the famed Fuller dealer.

Tool as Well as Brush

It was with the introduction of the perfected Fullergript in 1930, however, that power brushing became a significant factor in our business. Because of its nature, Fullergript becomes as much a manufacturing tool as it is a brush. Automation demands unique applications of the ancient art of brushing: Fullergript and its recent counterparts in the brush manufacturing industry make those applications possible. There are tremendous varieties of applications of power brushes in modern industry, literally thousands . . . too many for us to list here. Suffice it to say the applications range from such diverse tasks as cleaning fresh-laid eggs to scrubbing steel sheets as they emerge from the annealing ovens; from dressing the threads in a textile mill to sealing throttle slots in aircraft from the inadvertent jamming of the controls by an errant pencil from the pilot's pocket.

Fullanchor, our most recent brush development, is comparatively new to the market and promises a similar advancement in the art of power wheel brushing, since it qualifies as a machine tool and is capable of performance speeds that keep pace with the requirements of modern automation.

How many kinds of brushes have we and do we make? I cannot even estimate accurately the number. It isn't important here except to demonstrate that we have come far from the first days of the company when I personally made them all and sold them all myself.

Chemical Products Added

But it is remarkable to point out that brushes are not our only products. I have said that I consider the early days of the business the early expansion stage. Perhaps I can classify the more recent years as the diverse development stage of the business.

Just as I learned so early in my brush selling experience that individual Fuller brushes lasted too long to make a permanent business locally, our later dealers found that there was a limit eventually to the variety of brushes they could sell to a customer. We then looked around and decided our dealers needed merchandise their customers would use up in the normal course of their housekeeping. Hence was born the Fuller line of waxes, polishes, cleaners, and similar chemical aids to the nation's homemakers. This broadening market was added to our business in the late 1930's, and it has been growing steadily ever since until it now accounts for an important part of our volume. Few weeks pass these days in which we don't find something new and better to add to our growing line of household chemicals. Our researchers look constantly for new and better additions to the chemical line.

Progress begets new materials the housewife must keep clean; natural scientists discover new and better means to help them do the job; our researchers develop products we can sell to the housewife which endear her to us and us to her. It is a generous and happy cycle that bids fair to repeat itself again and again. Yesterday it was waxes like Fullustre that shine without buffing; today it is the silicones that discourage soiling, and aerosols that redouble the effectiveness of materials; tomorrow it might be isotopes, the magnificent promises of the Atomic Age.

Cosmetics Introduced

But the diverse development stage isn't over at Fuller, and it isn't over anywhere else in business.

In the course of the recent world war, when scarcity of supplies made the manufacture of Fuller brushes and other Fuller products for unessential purposes an impossibility, though the Fuller factory proved a busy and important part of the arsenal of democracy, the Fuller Brush Dealer himself was reduced drastically in numbers and even more drastically in the merchandise he had to sell. It was during this period that cosmetics in a small way provided the means to keep the dealer going and a semblance of a selling organization intact.

So well did our limited corps of dealers do with cosmetics that, in 1948 my son, Howard Fuller, who had by this time taken over the active management of the business as president, launched the Cosmetics Division of the company which today accounts for a significant part of our dealers' volume.

The late war contributed another noteworthy variation in the Fuller product. Through the years we had found it necessary to build an ever enlarging machine shop. Many of our brush manufacturing machines had to be designed and built by our own development people. To build them in the first place and to maintain them after they were built and operating, the machine shop grew until in its own right it became an integral part of our factory. This fact stood the company in good stead with the coming of the war and made possible an even greater contribution to the causes of peace. Many a factory in our environs made use of our machine shop facilities, particularly the aircraft industry.

Vast Potential Seen

Since that time our shop has continued to make its facilities available to our neighboring manufacturers, while at the same time, it has been geared specifically to the manufacture of special power brushing machines. This particular chapter in the Fuller Brush Story is just beginning to unfold. The potential is great, and the additional diversity it offers is an attractive mystery of the future.

With the diversity of the company's products today we are limited only by the scope of our imagination.

Frequently I have said that any product in general demand in most of the homes of the people is a potential Fuller product. I can add only this: When eventually it bears the Fuller Brush Company name, it will be the best of its kind on the market.

In the next portion of my remarks on the Fuller Brush Company, there are some things I want to say about the Fuller dealer himself.

He's a favorite of mine.

Edward Saxe

Fuller's Familiar Handy Brush in Production

Here brush receives its handle and starts on its way to the housewife.

Industry • Finance

California Boosts PTA

California has the largest state membership in the Parents and Teachers Association in the United States with 1,529,756. Ohio is second with 657,829.

AFFILIATED FUND
A Common Stock Investment Fund
Investment objectives of this Fund are possible long-term capital and income growth for its shareholders.
Ask your investment dealer for a free Booklet-Prospectus descriptive of Affiliated Fund, or write to:
LORD, ABBETT & CO.
63 Wall Street, New York 5
Gentlemen: Please send me a free Booklet-Prospectus on Affiliated Fund.
Address.....
City and State.....

IMMEDIATE DELIVERY!
AIR OR HYDRAULIC CYLINDERS
Real help for engineers and designers who want fast delivery of cylinders. We can ship cylinders from our complete line — any bore size, any stroke, any mount — in 24 hours or less. Get in touch with CARTER today, for the cylinders you need tomorrow. SEND FOR COMPLETE CATALOGS.
ORDER BY PHONE—Any hour, day or night, call Chicago SA 1-7184. TELETYPE—LSNG, Ill 1110
CARTER
Carter Controls, Inc.
7800 Sanders Road, Lansing, Illinois
(Chicago Suburb)

IT PAYS 3 WAYS
SAFETY AVAILABILITY RETURN
FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK SYSTEM MEMBER
FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN INSURANCE CORPORATION INSURED
To Invest Your Savings with Dakalb County Federal Savings and Loan Association
Legal for Trust Funds
101 E. Ponce de Leon Avenue
Decatur, Ga.
1246 Glenwood Avenue, S. E.
Atlanta, Ga.

Scudder, Stevens & Clark Common Stock Fund, Inc.
S
Prospectus on request:
10 Post Office Square
Boston 9, Massachusetts

REGULAR QUARTERLY DIVIDEND
The Board of Directors has declared this day
COMMON STOCK DIVIDEND NO. 91
This is a regular quarterly dividend of 25¢ PER SHARE payable on May 15, 1957, to holders of record at close of business April 3, 1957.
H. Edwin Olson
Vice-President and Secretary
March 7, 1957
THE COLUMBIA GAS SYSTEM, INC.
COLUMBIA GAS SYSTEM

Interested in RETIREMENT PLANS?
Before you buy, see
QES
Copy on request
No obligations
Jason E. Stone, Jr.
585 Boylston Street CO 7-7010
Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co.
BOSTON 16, MASS.

CONCORD NATIONAL BANK
Concord, New Hampshire
Serving the Granite State
Resources over $20,000,000.
EDGAR C. HIRST, Honorary Chairman of the Board
I. REED GOURLEY, Chairman of the Board and Trust Officer
PHILIP H. BUTTERFIELD, President
JOHN W. CARTER, JR., Vice President and Cashier

Pro P Guests
Goldberg, Rube

March 17, 1959

Dear Rube:

Occasionally this curious instrument of television is used in a fashion that is mature, adult and altogether enjoyable.

Thanks to you and Irma, that's what happened on the occasion of our visit to your home and we are all grateful.

Thanks for your gracious letter. I will, as you suggest, regard it as purely personal.

As ever yours,

Mr. Rube Goldberg
88 Central Park West
New York, New York

ERM:jmi

Pro P Guest Corres

RUBE GOLDBERG

rated by
A & 3

88 Central Park West
New York 23 N.Y.
Mar.7,1958

Dear Ed:

First, Irma and myself would like to express our appreciation of your gentle treatment of us on your show. From all reports it came off beautifully and, strangely enough, it gave us a spiritual uplift.

And, secondly, I would like to say I was deeply impressed with your stature as an artist and a gentlemen when you mentioned the Journal-American in the face of those irresponsible attacks by Pegler, Sokolsky and O'Brian. I am sure that their derisive writings are inspired by a small-minded attempt at sensationalism. Your bigness in ignoring them automatically cuts them down to the size of some of the midgets in my inventions.

I hope that the fruitful contemplation you will be allowed on your long-delayed vacation will help you rise to even greater heights both professionally and personally.

Again Irma and I thank you and all the fine men who surround you.

Happy voyage.

sincerely

Rube Goldberg

Person to Person
Gould, Chester

May 3, 1957

Dear Chester:

Very many thanks for sending me the drawing.

I find it a very pleasant memento of the extremely enjoyable visit we had on PERSON TO PERSON with you and your family.

Thanks again for the thought.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Chester Gould
R.R. #3
Woodstock, Illinois

fc

Ed –
We sent her a wire re new Baby
JS

Guests
Granger, Jean
Oct 30

Thank You

Dear Mr Murrow.
Thank you so much for your very kind wishes. - Naturally
Jimmy & I are just tickled pink.
Hope to see you again in the near future.

Sincerely
Jean S. Stanger

Hammond, Caleb

December 5, 1957

Dear Bud:

Please forgive the long delay in writing you this little note.

I want to thank you for the beautiful Atlas. It is quite handy and I'll probably be referring to it quite frequently.

With all best wishes to you and your family.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Caleb Hammond
61 Woodland Road
Maplewood, New Jersey

mcc

Guests
Kennedy, Ethel
P2P

HICKORY HILL
MC LEAN
VIRGINIA

Dear Mr Murrow —

A million thanks for your wonderful telegram

Please though — must we really wait til the staircase is all filled out before you'll come see us? That only means twelve more children to go —

It would be so much simpler if just next time

HICKORY HILL
MC LEAN
VIRGINIA

you're in Washington - you'd just drop by - only this time please bring Mrs Murrow and leave your equipment behind - It seems to me everyone who enters our house now, tripping over trains and toy elephants remarks that the house certainly didn't look this way over television.

Thanks again for your thought of welcome for our new little baby -

Appreciatively -

Jackie Kennedy

Edel

P2P guests
Knight, Frances G.

May 16, 1938

Dear Miss Knight:

Many thanks for your nice letter of May 14th and for sending me the Lyle Wilson column and a copy of the basic form letter that you have devised to answer the many inquiries you are getting about what the ladies should take on a trip.

We feel a little guilty that our visit with you added so considerably to what must already have been a large volume of correspondence and can only admire the good humor and resourceful way in which you deal with it.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Miss Frances G. Knight
Director
Passport Office
Department of State
Washington, D. C.

mcc

ADDRESS OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS TO
THE SECRETARY OF STATE
WASHINGTON 25, D. C.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE
WASHINGTON

May 14, 1958

Dear Mr. Murrow:

With further reference to your visit with us, I thought you would be interested to learn that scores of letters are pouring in from women all over the country asking me how to pack a suitcase, what to take on a trip, and other miscellaneous questions as to what "travel cosmetics" do I use - what kind of crush-proof dresses - what make lingerie, ad infinitum.

I've devised a basic form letter which is adapted to each inquiry as it is answered, and am enclosing a copy for your amusement. Also thought you might be interested in the enclosed column by Lyle Wilson which appeared in the papers while I was down in Florida.

Don't forget to let us know whenever you get down this way. We would like to see you in person. With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Frances G. Knight

Frances G. Knight
Director, Passport Office

Enclosures:

1. Form Letter.
2. Clipping of Lyle Wilson Column.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York 22, New York.

ADDRESS OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS TO
THE SECRETARY OF STATE
WASHINGTON 25, D. C.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE
WASHINGTON

Dear _____

Thank you very much for your kind letter of _____ which arrived during my absence from the Office. I returned today and hasten to reply to your inquiry about packing a suitcase.

I limit myself to one suitcase whether it is for a long or short trip. For a short trip, I take a small overnight case, and for a long trip I use a 24-inch suitcase as shown on the Person-to-Person television program. I have gone round the world with one 27-inch suitcase and have not been inconvenienced by lack of clothes or essentials. Nor has it been too heavy to handle myself. However, each person must pack and travel in accordance with his or her needs.

Packing for a long trip takes careful planning and coordination. About one week prior to making a trip, I set out my suitcase and start putting things into it which I consider essential, such as toothbrush, toothpaste, comb, manicure set, small flashlight, travel alarm clock, cosmetic kit, and so forth. The cosmetic kit is packed to carry a supply of cosmetics for whatever period of time I am away from home. This includes face powder, lipstick, an all-purpose face cream, a deodorant, liquid shampoo containers (each container holds enough for one shampoo) a tube of quick-lather soap for use in hard water, and other small aids to good grooming. I always take a reasonable supply of cleansing tissues instead of handkerchiefs.

I wear one set of lingerie and pack one set, both made of a drip-dry fabric. I allow nothing to interfere with a nightly schedule of doing my laundry. For this purpose, I take a tablespoonful of a detergent soap powder and seal it in a small envelope, allowing one envelope for each washing while on my trip. I have never been anywhere in the world where this routine has not been feasible. I also pack a combination pajama-robe-slipper set made of a drip-dry fabric.

I take

I take considerable time in selecting my wardrobe. I plan my dresses, hats and shoes around one basic color and get variations and accents from colorful accessories. Dark dresses, of course, are more practical for travelling than light dresses. For winter travel I prefer knits (wool or cotton) which do not wrinkle, and for summer travel I take the miracle fabrics like orlon, nylon and dacron in both suits and dresses. I always take an extra skirt which can be worn with the jacket of the suit in which I travel, thus giving me an extra suit arrangement. It is very simple to pack three or four dresses in a suitcase, providing they are not bouffant and fussy. I am partial to drip-dry sweaters and blouses which can be made dressy with scarves or beaded collars. I usually take two sweaters and two blouses. I take two pairs of shoes in addition to the pair in which I travel. I put my stockings, belts and gloves in the shoes to conserve space.

I take two or three hats which are crush-proof and which compliment the suit and dresses. I find it very useful to take along a dressy light wool stole to be used in lieu of an evening jacket. I also take three or four colorful scarves to brighten up and change the appearance of my dresses. I try to take gloves to match the scarves and hats. Matching accessories such as scarves, gloves and hats are very important when travelling because they can make a dress or suit look like a completely different costume. I also carry a combination raincoat and hat with rainboots to match. These usually come in sets and can be folded neatly into a plastic bag. Sometimes, I take a folding umbrella instead.

If you stick to the washable fabrics you can always feel fresh and clean during your travels. I usually take a small travel iron which is convertible for use in electric outlets in foreign countries, and a small, compact sewing kit for emergency repairs.

I carry a reversible topcoat and a spacious travelling handbag. The latter holds a small jewelry case, my identification papers, tickets and passport, and a small cosmetic kit for freshening-up purposes. Other personal items, such as a solid perfume, sunglasses, eyeglasses, pills, a rainhood and compact pair of rainboots, etc. can be placed in the handbag.

All these items fit into one suitcase if properly packed. Of course, some people need different combinations of clothes. But from long experience, I find that most people overpack and find that they have more things with them than they can use.

There are very few places in the world today where you cannot purchase cleansing tissue or soap or a brush and comb or any of the items

the items which may break or be mislaid in the course of your travels. It is not necessary to be overburdened with extras. The only extra which is advisable would be eyeglasses should you need them. Writing paper and cards are available in most hotels. So are towels.

I hope this answers your inquiry. If I can help you in any other way, please do not hesitate to write again.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Frances G. Knight
Director, Passport Office

THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS, FRIDAY, MAY 2, 1958

A Cheer for Miss Knight

By Lyle C. Wilson

THERE isn't much good news going these days, so how would it be to hear a word of cheer from Miss Frances G. Knight?

Miss Knight is the director of the Passport Office of the Department of State. She succeeded the fabulous Mrs. Ruth B. Shipley who was a civil servant of great charm and stature in the Federal hierarchy.

The good word from Miss Knight is that she has revamped the methods and modernized the equipment of the Passport Office to the considerable relief and convenience of the U. S. taxpayer. The Government's General Service Administration estimated that these savings last year amounted to $386,000 which is not a great sum when posed against the multi-billion dollar spending which appears now to have been saddled on the taxpayers until the end of time.

Neither is it hay, however, and the conserved sum looks even more attractive by reason of Miss Knight's informal explanation that additional savings were obtained because the Passport Office averaged an increase of 5.5 per cent in work productivity per employe in 1957.

Moreover, Miss Knight expects her employes to absorb a 5 per cent additional increase in their workload during the next two years.

News of such administrative economies is scarce here in Washington despite assurances from the top executive officials that waste shall be wrung from the operations of the Government. The top brass either does not mean it, or the top bras is unable to plug the comparatively small leaks as Miss Knight plugged that one in her office.

While she was about it, Miss Knight modernized and improved the conditions under which the citizens can obtain a passport. For example, the citizen applying for a passport no longer need be accompanied by a witness to testify to his identity. And, if he desires, the citizen may pay his passport fee by personal check.

The Passport Office now will accept for identification purposes about what a bank would accept in cashing a check, such as driver's license or a Government security pass. Miss Knight explained that anyone who would fraudulently apply for a passport would not hesitate to produce a phony witness, so why clutter the counters and corridors of passport issuing agencies with two persons for each passport involved.

Miss Knight's methods have reduced from many weeks to 4½ days the time necessary to issue a passport.

Of personal checks, she contended that if the Government accepts them for income tax payments it also should be willing to take them in payment for a passport fee.

Miss Knight's reforms and modernization of the Passport Office make a lot of sense. A taxpayer might think it a good idea to expose other agencies of Government to Miss Knight, especially any in which the productivity per employe has diminished instead of increased.

This bold and efficient woman is even trying to improve passport pictures; promoting the idea that they should be relaxed and happy, smiling portraits. To that end, she permits color photos and reports that her program to make passport pictures look like something other than rogue's gallery shots is coming along "fine."

CHANNEL CHUCKLES

BY BIL KEANE

4-20 1958, The Register and Tribune Syndicate

"Can we change that interview from TV to radio?"

"He makes a list of all the p

I presume you saw this?

"Ed Murrow is visiting us a

"I got rid of the old magazines and settled for old movies."

e products I'm to buy."

s on Friday night!"

McHugh, Keith

NEW YORK TELEPHONE COMPANY

140 WEST STREET

NEW YORK 7, N.Y.

KEITH S. McHUGH
PRESIDENT

June 15, 1954.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

PTP.

You are a nice guy to take the trouble to send me a telegram about the job our folks did for you in your telecast last Friday night. I got a kick out of your message and so will they, and I will make sure that they see it.

Best regards.

Sincerely,

Keith S McHugh

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Meadows, Audrey
Jr

Pro P

7

Thank You

MAR 31 1959

Dear Ed,

Many, many thanks for letting me sit in your chair Friday night. It was a great privilege for me. Jesse and Johnny and all the other boys in your office really knocked themselves out to make me happy and comfortable while doing your show.

Gratefully Audrey

P. to P. Guests
Mitchell, Jan

April 10, 1958

Dear Jan:

You are a generous and thoughtful man.

I shall wear the cuff links with memories of a most pleasant visit.

As ever yours,

Mr. Jan Mitchell
817 Fifth Avenue
New York, New York

fc

817 5th Ave.

Jan Mitchell

Dear Ed:

Hope this little token of my esteem will give you much pleasure.

Jan

Da Guests
✓

JAN MITCHELL

March 25, 1958

Dear Ed:

I am overwhelmed by the magnificent response to last Friday's show. I have been deluged with phone calls, wires and letters from every part of the country, all of which have been most complimentary. It is very gratifying.

This varied and spontaneous acceptance is, of course, nothing new to you after all your many successful shows, however, I would like you to know what an exhilarating and memorable experience it was for me. I am still marvelling at the teamwork and efficiency with which the staff works. I thoroughly enjoyed doing the show and am so pleased you invited me.

Please do call me when you return from Washington so that I may plan an evening for you and your family here at Lüchow's. I look forward to seeing you soon.

Sincerely

Jan

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Pro P Guests.

NOTE: Story attached on Sen. Richard L. Neuberger talk at Medical Journalism Awards luncheon.

H.M.

FOR: ALBERT AND MARY LASKER FOUNDATION
New York 17, N. Y.

FROM: Harold Mantell
139 East 57 St. NYC 22 EL 5-4533

FOR RELEASE: After 2 P.M., Thursday, April 30, 1959

New York, April 30 -- Four Albert Lasker Medical Journalism Awards were given today for distinguished reporting of major developments in medical research and public health programs during 1958.

Reports on progress and problems in heart disease, mental illness, narcotics addiction and planned parenthood were chosen as the year's outstanding examples of medical journalism among the nation's newspapers, magazines and radio-television stations. They were the 10th annual Awards for medical reporting conferred by the Albert and Mary Lasker Foundation.

The Awards were presented at a luncheon in the Sheraton-East Hotel to a newspaper reporter, a magazine writer, a daily network television program and a television writer-director.

The recipients of the 1958 Awards were:

Newspapers - Joseph Kahn, The New York Post, for a series of articles on the "Controversy Over Contraceptive Counselling in New York Municipal Hospitals," published from May to October, 1958.

Magazines - Francis Bello, Fortune Magazine, for his article, "The Murderous Riddle of Coronary Disease," published in September, 1958.

Radio-Television - "Today," for its day-to-day coverage over the National Broadcasting Company Television Network of the significant events in public health and medical research during 1958, including its notable mental health program on the Central Islip State Hospital, New York, October 8th, 1958.

Radio-Television - Al Wasserman, Special Citation, for his two programs on "The Addicted" in "The Twentieth Century" series, Columbia Broadcasting System Television Network, November 30 and December 7, 1958.

Each winner received $2,500, an illuminated scroll and a silver statuette of the Winged Victory of Samothrace, symbolizing in this instance, victory over death and disease.

(more)

Senator Richard L. Neuberger, D., Oregon, a leading advocate of medical research legislation and a recovered cancer patient, was the principal speaker. Dr. Howard A. Rusk, associate editor, The New York Times, was luncheon chairman.

Joseph Kahn, winner in the newspaper field, was cited by the Awards Committee "for a notable example of journalistic enterprise in lifting the shadows of medical complacency and public confusion obscuring a subject of primary concern to New York City and the entire world; for patient, persistent investigation and exposure of the "unwritten ban" against therapeutic contraceptive practices in New York City hospitals and other agencies; for overcoming a barrier of indifference, evasion and hostility in developing his story without distorting the human facts of this health controversy; and, finally, for a pioneering contribution to the advancement of contraceptive counselling throughout the United States through his fearless reporting in the best traditions of public health education by the American press."

Francis Bello, winner in the magazine field, was cited for a comprehensive and illuminating report on the present status of our knowledge concerning coronary heart disease and its underlying affliction, arteriosclerosis, the number one killer in America today; for a masterful examination of the relation to heart attacks and strokes of these suspect factors: heredity, obesity, overweight, high blood pressure, lack of exercise, elevated blood cholesterol and excessive smoking; and, finally, for an unusual example of creative journalism in assembling and integrating into a meaningful report the diverse and seemingly contradictory research aspects of the nation's most crucial disease problem."

"Today," winner in the radio-television field, was selected "for presenting to a vast network audience regularly in vivid and meaningful forms the problems and progress of health and medical research in this country; for motivating public understanding and attitudes in vitally needed new directions by program emphasis on special areas such as mental health; for an excellent exposition of the "Open Door" mental hospital philosophy as exemplified in the visit by Dave Garroway to Central Islip Hospital; and, finally, for illustrating the primary concern of the National Broadcasting Company for expanding the scope and influence of medical reporting through ingenious employment of the direct and immediate techniques of television."

Al Wasserman was honored "for revealing in unprecedented television terms the social and medical significance of a "hidden" public health problem, narcotics addiction; for his artistry and extraordinary creativity in depicting the interaction of the addict with his environment, including the community, the law, the family and the hospital; for offering a striking example in these two programs of the television medium's unique ability to inform and educate national audiences on the pressing problems of medicine and health through candid examination with camera and microphone; and, finally, as writer-director, epitomizing the development of individual craftsmanship made possible by the encouragement of the enlightened Public Affairs Department of CBS News."

(more)

Mr. Wasserman is the first television journalist to be honored twice with the Lasker Award. He previously received a 1956 Award for his program on mental illness, "Out of Darkness," presented over the CBS Network.

The annual Albert Lasker Medical Journalism Awards were inaugurated in 1949 to encourage the writing and publication in general newspapers and national magazines of outstanding articles on public health and medical research. This category was broadened in 1956 to include radio-television broadcasting.

The Foundation seeks to recognize journalism that contributes to a better public understanding of current medical research or highlights public health programs affecting those diseases which are the main cause of death or disability; especially heart disease, cancer, mental illnesses, arthritis, blindness and neurological diseases.

The advisory committee for the 1958 Awards included Dr. C. P. Rhoads, director, Sloan-Kettering Institute for Cancer Research, New York; Dr. Marcus D. Kogel, dean, Albert Einstein College of Medicine and former commissioner of hospitals, New York City; Edward K. Thompson, managing editor, Life Magazine; James Monahan, senior editor, The Reader's Digest, and previous Medical Journalism Award winner; and Mrs. Allmon Fordyce, vice president, Albert and Mary Lasker Foundation.

# #

P&P Guests
Parrish, Wayne W.

April 28, 1958

Dear Wayne:

Thanks for your kind note.

We have heard nothing but good words resulting from the visit. It was a rare combination to find two interesting people as well as a delightful and unique house.

One commercial note will amuse you: The Florist Telegraph Delivery Association were delighted and overjoyed with your interior garden. We, of course, took full credit and told them we planned it that way!

Please say our thanks again to your gracious wife who took time off to send us a note before taking off for Jupiter Island.

As ever yours,

Mr. Wayne W. Parrish
American Aviation Publications
1001 Vermont Avenue, N.W.
Washington 5, D.C.

fc

American Aviation Publications

1001 VERMONT AVENUE, NORTHWEST, WASHINGTON 5, D. C., U. S. A.

Telephone STerling 3-5400 • Cable AMERAV

Executive Office

April 21, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS-TV
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

I'm addressing you as Ed because by the time I got through that stint the other night I felt as though I had known you for a long time.

Frances and I were deeply honored to appear on your show. We are fully aware that this is a distinction that falls to very few people and we are thusly grateful.

It was a completely new experience for us both. Frances had been on "To Tell the Truth" some time back, but that was hardly a try-out for a production like Person-To-Person.

I can vouch for one thing: I have a new and healthy respect for TV on two counts. One is the enormous amount of work that can be put into a 15-minute segment. The other is the vast coverage of TV. Guess I've kept my nose so much in the printed word in a specialized phase of industry that I never really focussed on what a truly nationwide audience amounts to.

Your telegram some weeks ago said the program might even turn out to be fun. On looking back I concur. I've been far, far more nervous facing some tough audiences before making speeches.

The program is going to have one tangible result: my friends tell me I've got to take off 15 pounds. I'm setting aside June for this job.

Our house was a labor of love - we laid it out, didn't have an architect, dealt directly with a builder. So it was a pleasure to be able to show it off to so many people.

As for your gang - all I can say is they earn their money and they were mighty swell all the way through.

My wife is en route to our new Florida refuge on Jupiter Island at Hobe Sound, a dream spot. She needs a rest. But she adds her thanks to mine for an unforgettable experience.

Sincerely,

Wayne W. Parrish

js

ADDRESS OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS TO
THE SECRETARY OF STATE
WASHINGTON 25, D. C.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE
WASHINGTON

April 21, 1958

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Thank you for your reassuring conversation and good wishes. I am afraid the confusion in the house threw me off balance. I was conscious of the batteries dangling around my knees, and was generally tired from knocking myself out at the Office. So far, I've had mixed reactions from official and unofficial Washington. People expected me to discuss some of the amusing things that happen in the Passport Office and tell about the letters we receive and how I work with Congress, etc., etc. Others expected me to talk about some of our experiences overseas. My staff expected me to talk about the $5,000,000 we will bring into the Treasury this year, and how we all love to hear that cash register ring up the $10 fees! Over a dozen people called me to say they had expected me to reveal how I changed the decor of the Passport Agencies and introduced color into the furnishings, etc. As you probably know from experience, everyone gets into the act, and if we were to please them all you would have had an hour's show on your hands!

I am glad I am leaving town for a couple of weeks. I'm being haunted by women who tell me that in my packing I left out bouffant dresses - that I didn't have sufficient cosmetics, that I didn't mention manicure sets, wave sets, etc., etc. The fact is that I don't take all these things with me. What I packed in that suitcase would see me through a month's travelling overseas, but I am afraid I'm in for a lot of discussion on omissions.

Of course, Wayne could have talked for another twenty minutes on missiles and rockets and air travel in general.

Well, when I

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York 22, New York.

Well, when I get back from a brief vacation, I hope you will visit Washington in person, and give me an opportunity to take you through the Passport Office and show you our "new look". We also would like to have you visit our home and see the interesting and unusual items collected from all over the world.

Thank you for the beautiful roses. I arranged them in crystal floor vases, which I hope you saw on the screen. They were very lovely.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Frances G. Knight
per JR

Frances G. Knight
Director, Passport Office

(dictated but not read)

Guest Cones
Petrillo James

October 29, 1953

Dear Jimmy:

I thought the program we did with you worked out very well and I certainly enjoyed it. The kinescope of the show is on its way to you now so you will be able to see yourself.

Many thanks again for all your cooperation.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. James Petrillo
860 North Lake Shore Drive
Chicago, Illinois

rh

CIrcle 5-8100

Roberts, Joseph L.

INTERNATIONAL BOXING CLUB
OF NEW YORK, Inc.
304 WEST 50th STREET
Madison Sq. Garden Bldg.
NEW YORK 19, N. Y.

JAMES D. NORRIS
President

June 3,1954

Dear Ed:

Thanx for the double header yesterday--lunch and the radio broadcast.

Sincerely,

Joe

Joseph L.Roberts

MR
GR

Pto P. Quest
Roebling Mary

Dear Ed,
How thoughtful you were to send me such a beautiful & good luck bouquet. Enjoyed it to the last petal. As possible

Pure Water Sewer Pipe

It was a privilege to work with you and your very fine staff.

We hope our paths will cross again in the near future. Meanwhile

Best wishes,

Mary Zoebling

P to P Guests
F
Rusk, Dr Howard

March 23, 1959

My dear Howard:

Occasionally I have the feeling that television realizes just a little bit of its potential, and certainly I had that feeling after our electronic visit to your home.

It is not very often that one is permitted to take pride in what television does, but in this case I am proud to have had a small part in the program.

I am off to Europe for a couple of weeks, but will hope to propose myself for lunch one day after my return.

Again, thanks.

Sincerely yours,

Howard A. Rusk, M. D.
Director
Institute of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation
400 East 34th Street
New York 16, New York

ERM:jmi

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY-BELLEVUE MEDICAL CENTER
OF NEW YORK UNIVERSITY
DEPARTMENT OF PHYSICAL MEDICINE AND REHABILITATION

INSTITUTE OF PHYSICAL MEDICINE AND REHABILITATION
400 EAST 34TH STREET
NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

MURRAY HILL 6-1842

March 2, 1959

My dear Ed,

What a privilege it was to be on "Person-to-Person" last Friday. All of us enjoyed it but I think it meant more to my mother and to our patients all over the United States than anyone else.

We have been receiving letters and 'phone calls constantly since from every corner of the country.

I shall never forget, nor cease to be grateful, for your closing words on the closed circuit. It meant more to me than I can ever tell you.

Don't forget your promise that you will come down to the Institute for luncheon one day and really see our people. You can't really know what the program is until you see them "person-to-person".

Again, my deepest gratitude for the opportunity to tell our story to the country and for the great sensitivity with which you directed our sights.

Faithfully yours,

Howard A. Rusk, M.D.
Director.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Russell, Jane

Jane Russell

No Ans.

March 6, 1956

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

Both Robert and I enjoyed so much working with you on the Person To Person show last Friday.

Our sincere thanks and appreciation to your CBS crew for their fine cooperation and to you for making our appearance on the show such a pleasant one.

Sincerely,

Jane

Guests

Mrs. Maxwell D. Taylor

Dear Mr. Murrow,

May I tell you once more how much I enjoyed the beautiful American Beauty roses from you? They made the house look even more festive!

I have a new respect for the painstaking work that goes into the preparations of a first-rate TV program after witnessing and participating in "Person to Person" last night!

Best wishes in your future programs —

Cordially,

Lydia N. Taylor

October 29th —

P2P
Guest Comes.
Wilkie, Mrs Wendell

EDWARD R. MURROW
485 MADISON AVENUE
NEW YORK 22, N.Y.

March 19, 1958

Dear Mrs. Willkie:

Very many thanks for your letter. It was a very great pleasure to have you on our program, and I hope you didn't find it too much of an ordeal.

Thank you for your suggestion of Sam Pryors and Mrs. Robert Low Bacon as possible future guests on PERSON TO PERSON. We seem to be pretty well committed for the remainder of the season, but can perhaps go to them later on.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Wendell Willkie
20 East 76 Street
New York 21, New York

mcc

gave Mrs W's letter to PtoP

Pto P Guests
Williams, Edward Bennett

April 22, 1958

Dear Ed:

The female who sent you the epistle sounds like an interesting client. Why don't you see that justice is done - that truth shall triumph and this miserable Murrow be incarcerated!

As ever,

Mr. Edward Bennett Williams
1000 Hill Building
Washington 6, D.C.

fs

Law Offices
Edward Bennett Williams
1000 Hill Building
Washington 6, D.C.
METROPOLITAN 8-6565

EDWARD BENNETT WILLIAMS
EDWARD T. CHEYFITZ
THOMAS A. WADDEN, JR.
CHARLES P. MULDOON
AGNES A. NEILL
VINCENT J. FULLER

COUNSEL
JOHN W. GUIDER
COLMAN B. STEIN

March 31, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

As I told you the other night on "Person to Person", I get all kinds of mail. I thought this one would have particular interest for you if you can spend five minutes to wade through it. Why don't you leave this poor girl alone?

With warmest regards, I am,

Sincerely,

Edward Bennett Williams

3-26-58

Mr Edward Bennett Williams
Tulip Hill,
Maryland

Sir:

Sometime ago I wanted to write you after a T V appearance but I didn't know where and then you were on March 14th and I knew you would be deluged with mail but you did say you answered your mail so I am going to ask for your advise.

I wish I could ask you as an attorney representing me but that I cannot afford so I am asking you as a person very interested in Civil Rights.

I am not a writer I can only hope this letter will be clear but you know that sometimes there is an incident that is so different that it happens once in a long, long time. I am sure that Edward R Murrow told you something of it but I am going to expose him and his radio and T V friends as sneaky, slanderous pathological liars or else people who are deliberately ~~f~~ branding my little daughter and me for some infamous reason.

Here is the true story that I would repeat under oath in court if necessary ———

Many, many months before Eisenhower's nomination I was already working for it and it must have been pretty good work because it came to the attention of quite a few politicians. The only gain I had out of it was a "thank you" letter from Eisenhower and that it brought me to Murrow's warped attention. He let it be known in a sneaky double talking way that no one could be mistaken that it was meant for me - I think you yourself know that now.

I went to New York after the nomination and contacted Mr Murrow and asked for an interview and it was arranged that I should be there at a broadcast - I thought after I could talk to him and tell him the slanderous gossip he was spreading all over the country were lies and I could tell him the truth and he would be man enough to stop. He refused to talk to me after the broadcast.

The next evening, even more emphatically, he repeated the lies - namely - that my father was part "nigger". And he kept on repeating the lie over and over until it reached the point where "niggers" where trying to pick me up on the street and called me every filthy name under the sun because I was supposed to be "passing" although up to that time I never knew the word was used in that way. I couldnt get work because he made me out to be one of the worst tramps in New York or anywhere else for that matter.

I finally had photostatic copies of my Mother's, Father's and my birthcertificates made and sent them to him - they were all from Korpona, Austria-Hungary now Krupina, Czechoslovakia my father had been in the Hungarian army and had had a Cabinetmakers shop before coming to America. I also sent him birthcertificate for my little daughter.

He thought and still does that it is funny when niggers annoy us and I can't get work. The more insults Murrow heaped on us, the more radio and TV shows got in on the game because it was good for niggers business. If you will check, you'll find out that Murrow was financially and career wise almost on the rocks - after he started connecting us with niggers Amoco even put out a map showing nigger hotels and motels.

According to Murrow I've been pregnant 23 times in the last 5 years - 4 times with niggers - it's so bad the authorities almost took action against me - I stink, he pronounces worship and warship - whores ship (and stresses the slanderous words in such a way nobody can mistake them) I'm fat, dirty, dumb, mentally unbalanced, etc etc every thing and practically any thing so he can feel important. I've been in every jail and institution in the country. Because my daughter had her picture taken with a Birthday cake and there was a short movie on epilepsy he deliberately stresses "out fit" - when I transfered her from a pedatrician to a regular doctor - our family doctor actually thought I was trying to hide the fact that she had fits. Outside of colds she couldnt be healthier.

Last Friday when Murrow had his program - he stressed - the drunken son of a black - Smith - Christine's father's name is Smith. Murrow has a bunch of sneaks who keep track of practically every word, motion or move we make and that way by the grapevine everyone in Cleveland knows he is insulting us or others on radio and T.V. For instance one day I bought a bottle of pickles - a program came along with "no matter how many pickles there are the scum always rises to the top" what came before and after definitely stamped us.

This unwelcome publicity has brought these classic insults -

My daughter and I walking down a street a nigger walking towards us opening the zipper on his pants

A nigger child asking me for money - when I told him to ask his people - his Mother (in a drug store) came over and said "You wouldn't give the boy a dime but our men are good enough to sleep with.

Or a nigger trying to pick me up - when I refused - he said "I was only white trash - but I was only passing and I nigger would marry me but white men wouldnt spit at me

I could tell you dozens of such incidents please dont forget this has been going on for years and since Murrow and others keep on repeating the lies, every body believes them because I don't stop them.

But how? I've already written to CBS, ABC and NBC networks - I sent them all photostatic copies of our birthcertificates - gave them complete details of my background - told them I intended to sue for invasion of privacy, continual ridicule and threats, criminal libel and robbing us of our white heritage.

Murrow said no attorney would take a case against him he was too important and besides he had the judge a case like this would be tried by on his Person to Person.

As if all this wasn't enough in Jan '55 I had a temporary position with the Cleveland Engineering Society at a time when they had a campaign to raise funds. Murrow has a habit of making a connection between any man who comes into a room I'm working in or even if I have to discuss any business with a man. Due to lack of room 3 other girls and I had to work in the Auditorium here. At noon while we went to lunch movie and slides of jobs were shown to Engineers but a nigger janitor set up the projector. Although I had not said one word to the nigger as we always have believed in segregation Murrow immediately started connecting me with him. I couldn't begin telling you the insults I had to take. The nigger really thought I was interested in him. One day when I came back from lunch a nigger magazine called "Hue" was on my desk opened at a page on prostitution of white women in nigger camps down South. Every body here now believes that I did that. I have never been in what is known as the real South and I never lived away from home until after the war!

There also was a nigger cleaning woman there she was somkind of female minister - she would pick-up trash in a big bag from the Ward Baking Co - so Murrow started the lie that I was a ward of this nigger woman - thes lie is also believed here even by nigger judges and lawyers.

Mr Williams I swear on my child's life I have never socially or personally talked to a nigger. I have never even seen nigger entertainment except on TV.

Murrow has connected me with a man who had 6 children in one place - naturally I was fired another time with a man whose wife was having her fourth child - she had me fired. I couldnt tell how many jobs I lost on account of him - even 2 places where people said I was connected with a Communist. If a nigger stands near me at a bus stop - he immediately mentions it - Murrow knows every move I make - he even knew what time of the month it was.

The more things he would mention the ~~the~~ more and filthier lies were made up - it seems that everybody wants to hear their lie on the air bigger and rottener. I wrote Murrow a thousand times about what the results were and begged him to stop.

He has made me the cities clown, top tramp and idiot and I haven't done a thing. In the last 13 years the only man I've been out with is my daughters father Major Herman Lee Smith he was born in Roanoke, Va - I assume you he is 100%, white - I knew it but I deliberately checked. Murrow connects me with celebrities I have never known - they in turn are insulted and then they start throwing insults. The other night one of Murrows friend had a little discourse on "an officer and private trying to get rid of a crow" - meaning my daughters father and the nigger janitor.

I have all our birthcertificates - I have my daughters - I went to a Catholic school (I am not Catholic) I was Valedictorian at graduation - proving I was not a delinquent.

My daughter gets A & B grades - she horse back rides, roller skates beautifully, ice skates and is taking tap dancing lessons. She wants to get into the entertainment field - the possibilities were good before but now - no decent person even wants to know us - I had an opportunity to get in as an extra - what now with radio and TV spreading that filth - if anyone tries to be friendly they are ridiculed.

In school the children call my daughter nigger and tell her no remarks from niggers. We had to stop going to a roller rink because the children wouldn't skate with her - one girl in school started a club of children that didnt want my daughter there because she is a nigger. Does she look like a child being raised to be a maid?

There must be someway I can stop radio and TV from using us to incite rabble - and so we can sue for the insults we have taken. I have been stoned on our street and beat up because Murrow incited the people against me. Need I tell you what people think of white women who go out with niggers - he's made me nothing but nigger bait for anyone who has wanted it TV, radio, business and politicians.

I have been in lower courts no one has gotts enough to do anything. Can the niggers and nigger crazy whites - steal a white person heritage for their use.

When I was in New York Murrow used to personally follow me around town - if I went to a movie, he'd be there, if a went for a walk he would show up - he'd even take a cab and ride ahead, get off so he could walk towards me. I never knew where he would show up. I suppose you know he promised me work - that is a lie - because - I tried to see him twice - he told me to ask my friends who had money - I put in an application with the CBS for an office job nothing - after I left N.Y. in his double talk and if you check with anyone you will find it true he even promised to marry me. He is married and I cannot plan my future on promises that are made in double talk on radio and TV. I have no future - he's made me the biggest tramp in history and I've never talked to the man.

Yes there is more but you can be sure Mr Williams - if - and that I dare not hope you would take the case to sue Murrow and CBS or if you could recommend someone - I would be only too happy to tell everything because what I've done is really like nothing compared to the filth that has been heaped on me.

If my publicity value is so high and you know that promotion and publicity are a Legal Business I want to be paid and Marrow has certainly cashed in. A recording artist gets paid every time his record is played - if a legitimate public figure was used in this way they would sue for slander.

There must be some way I can clear my little daughter and myself and assure our future. Surely we're not public property.

I am enclosing some pictures of my daughter at all ages the reason for so many is that she is supposed to have turned (?) and the little nude because she is supposed to have black spots on her body and the one of me she took herself. Do we look negroid?

Please, advise me what to do either as an attorney or on Civil Liberty Committee!

Very truly yours
Margaret C Lendway
3164 W 50 St
Cleveland 2, Ohio

Please return pictures unless you have need of them.

Wood, Peggy

THE FLETCHER SCHOOL OF LAW AND DIPLOMACY

TELEPHONE CALL

For Person-to-Person File Date _____

Time called _____ Called by _____ Message:

Reference to Person-to-Person Program of 12/31/54

Peggy Wood was a guest on this program. In her autobiography she describes in some detail how ERM was intrigued by a needlepoint vest worn by her husband which she had made herself. Apparently there was a good deal of listener response after the broadcast, with requests for the pattern, etc. The miniature framed vest she made and presented to ERM.

Information given by Ann Sperber

EGH

Signature of person answering telephone

CBS NEWS
A Division of Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
524 West 57 Street
New York, New York 10019
(212) 765-4321

Dear Peter:

Here are the lists of SEE IT NOW, PERSON TO PERSON, SMALL WORLD, and CBS REPORTS.

Although the lists don't show it, Collingwood took over for Ed on PERSON TO PERSON in 1959 when Murrow was on Sabatical leave. Ed continued to do SMALL WORLD because he could originate it in Europe and Asia. His last film was "Harvest of Shame" even though two others were later in release.

Let's talk more when you get down here.

Good luck,

Palmer Williams
Senior Producer
60 MINUTES

Mr. Peter Shaplen
22 Fairmount Street
Medford, Mass. 02155

November 15, 1973

Revised: 3/2/64

"PERSON TO PERSON" GUEST LIST

(alphabetized)

ADAMS, Cedric	6/8/56
ADAMS, Edith (w/Ernie Kovacks)	6/24/55
ADAMS, Joey	10/25/57
ADAMS, Sherman	3/30/56
ADLER, Felix	3/29/57
ADRIAN, Gilbert (w/Janet Gaynor)	10/8/54
ALBERGHETTI, Anna Maria	4/4/58
ALBERT, Eddie	9/2/60
ALEXANDER, Rod (w/Bambi Linn)	6/22/56
ALI, Prime Minister Mohammed	10/15/54
ALLEN, Mel	4/19/57
ALLEN, Steve	2/18/55
ALLYSON, June (w/Dick Powell)	9/2/55
ALPHAND, Ambassador Herve	1/11/57
ALSOP, Stewart	3/8/57
AMECHE, Don	12/21/56
AMORY, Cleveland	4/17/59
ANDERSON, Marian	10/29/54
ANDERSON, Comdr. Wm.	9/26/58
ANDREWS, Dana	5/6/60
ANDREWS, T. Coleman	3/11/55
ANTOINE	9/8/61
ARCARO, Eddie	6/6/58
ARMOUR, Tommy	5/8/59
ARQUETTE, Cliff	3/18/60 R.9/16/60
ASTAIRE, Fred	6/7/57
ASTOR, Mary	11/10/60
ATKINSON, Ted	4/12/57
AUMONT, Jean Pierre (w/Marisa Pavan)	12/25/59
AUTRY, Gene	7/8/60
AVALON, Frankie	5/6/60

BACALL, Lauren (w/Humphrey Bogart)	9/3/54
BACHARACH, Bert	10/14/55
BACKUS, Jim	9/1/61
BAILLIE, Hugh	6/26/59
BAIRD, Bil & Cora	11/13/53
BAKER, Carroll	3/28/58
BALDWIN, Faith	5/24/57
BALMAIN, Pierre	1/8/60
BANCROFT, Anne	3/11/60 R.6/10/60
BANKHEAD, Tallulah	11/20/53
BARBER, Red	1/17/58
BORGUIBA, Habib, Jr.	2/19/60
BARRYMORE, Ethel	5/6/55
BAY, Mrs. Charles Ulrick	1/24/58
BEECHAM, Sir Thomas	4/8/55
BELLAMY, Ralph	5/11/56
BEMELMANS, Ludwig	12/7/56
BENNETT, Constance	4/19/57
BENSON, Ezra Taft	9/24/54
BENTON, Thomas Hart	4/10/59
BERG, Gertrude	6/4/54
BERLE, Milton	4/3/59
BERLITZ, Charles	6/27/58
BERMAN, Shelley	11/17/60 R. 8/25/61
BERNSTEIN, Leonard (w/Felicia Montelagre)	9/23/55
BERRA, Yogi	4/22/55
BISHOP, Joey	12/1/60
BLACKSTONE, Harry	10/19/56
BLAIK, Earl (Red)	10/9/53
BLAINE, Vivian	6/27/58
BLAIR, Janet	6/25/54
BLANDING, Sara Gibson	3/13/59
BLOCK, Herbert	6/21/57
BLONDELL, Joan	4/10/59
BLOOM, Claire	2/12/59
BOGART, Humphrey (w/Lauren Bacall)	9/3/54

BORGE, Victor	12/24/54
BOSWELL, Connee	7/1/55
BOURKE-WHITE, Margaret	9/2/55
BRANDO, Marlon	4/1/55
BRENNAN, Terry	10/28/55
BROWN, John Mason	1/21/55
BUCHOLZ, Horst	6/30/61
BUCHWALD, Art	2/12/60 R.8/26/60
BUCK, Pearl	3/16/56
BUNCHE, Dr. Ralph	1/15/54
BURNETT, Carol	6/30/61
BURPEE, David	2/15/57
BURR, Raymond	10/20/60
BURROWS, Abe	12/9/55
BURTON, Justice Harold M.	11/7/58
BUSH, Vannevar	4/27/56
BUTTONS, Red	3/18/55
BYRD, Admiral Richard	3/23/56
BYRNES, Governor James	3/20/59
CAESAR, Sid	10/1/54
CAFRITZ, Mr. & Mrs. Morris	9/30/55
CALLAS, Maria	1/24/58
CALLOWAY, Cab	3/2/56
CAMPANELLA, Roy	10/2/53 1/2/59
CANIFF, Milton	2/17/56
CANNON, Jimmy	3/27/59
CANTOR, Eddie	10/5/56
CAPP, Al	11/27/59
CARMINES, Frank (Macy's)	12/25/53
CARON, Leslie	12/11/59
CARSON, Mindy	5/28/54
CARTER, Jack	5/23/58
CASSAVETES, John (w/Gena Rowlands)	1/17/58
CASTRO, Fidel	2/6/59
CERF, Bennett	4/4/58

CHAGLA, Ambassador M.A.C.	6/19/59
CHAMPION, Marge & Gower	11/6/59
CHANNING, Carol	1/13/56
CHAPMAN, Ceil	3/30/56
CHARISSE, Cyd (w/Tony Martin)	6/1/56
CHARLES, Ezzard (w/Rocky Marciano & Jersey Joe Walcott)	6/11/54
CHASE, Barrie	4/15/60
CHASE, Ilka	11/20/59
CHEVALIER, Maurice	5/2/58 1/1/60
CHRISTENBERRY, Robert	9/10/54
CHRISTIAN, Linda	12/1/60
CLARK, Dick	4/25/58
CLARK, Wilbur	5/17/57
CLIBURN, Van	5/30/58
CLOONEY, Rosemary (w/Jose Ferrer)	3/11/55
COCA, Imogene	3/26/54
COCHRAN, Jacqueline (w/Floyd Odlum)	5/21/54
COLBY, Anita	1/31/58
COLE, Nat King	11/1/57
COLLINGWOOD, Charles	5/6/55
COLLINS, Dorothy (w/Raymond Scott)	9/16/55
COLLINS, Joan	7/28/61
CONANT, Dr. James B.	4/25/58
CONNORS, Chuck	7/14/61
CONOVER, Harry	4/20/56
CONSIDINE, Bob	9/21/56
COREY, Jill	10/11/57
CORUM, Bill	4/30/54
COWARD, Noel	4/27/56
COWLES, Fleur	3/19/54
COX, Wally	5/14/54
CRONYN, Hume (w/Jessica Tandy)	1/10/58
CROSBY, Bing	12/3/54
CROSBY Brothers	6/23/61
CROUSE, Russell	11/14/58
CUGAT, Xavier	3/1/57

CULLEN, Bill 1/18/57

CUMMINGS, Bob 12/13/57

CURLEY, James Michael 5/3/57

CURTIS, Tony 11/12/54
(w/Janet Leigh)

CUSHING, Archbishop Richard J. 4/16/54

DACHE, Lily 4/16/54

DAGMAR 1/30/59
(Danny Dayton)

DAHL, Arlene 12/6/57
(w/Fernando Lamas)

DALI, Salvador 12/31/54

DALY, John 12/24/54

DANIEL, M. Sgt. Wm. E. 5/29/59

DARCEL, Denise 10/22/54

DAVISON, Gen. Harrison H. 2/22/57

DAVIS, Bette 9/21/56
(w/Gary Merrill)

DAVIS, Meyer 1/16/59

DAVIS, Sammy Jr. 11/4/55

DAWKINS, Cadet Peter 5/1/59

DAY, Laraine 12/6/57
(w/Leo Durocher)

DEAN, Gen. William F. 10/30/53

DE HAVILLAND, Olivia 5/30/58
1/8/60
R.8/26/60

DE MARCO, Paddy 4/2/54

DE MILLE, Agnes 11/14/58

DE SEVERSKY, Maj. Alexander P. 11/8/57

D'ESSENS 12/26/58
(Animals)

DE TOULOUSE-LAUTREC, Countess and Adm. Guy 2/5/60

DE WILDE, Brandon 1/29/54

DIOR, Christian 11/4/55

DOLLY, Rosie 10/24/58

DOOLITTLE, Gen. Jimmy 2/25/55

DORS, Diana 11/17/60

DOUGLAS, Jack 8/19/60

DOUGLAS, Kirk 10/13/60
2/1/57

DOUGLAS, Melvyn 7/29/60

DOUGLAS, Paul 1/25/57
(w/Jan Sterling)

DOUGLAS, Justice Wm. O.	11/5/54
DRAPER, Dorothy	5/17/57
DuMONT, Allen B.	6/17/55
DUNCAN, David	2/28/58
DuPONT, Pierre S.	12/9/55
DUROCHER, Leo (w/Laraine Day)	12/6/57
EBAN, Ambassador Abba	9/20/57
EATON, Cyrus	12/14/56
EDEN, Sir Anthony	1/15/60
EDWARDS, Ralph	11/2/56
EKBERG, Anita (w/Anthony Steel)	12/7/56
ELLINGTON, Duke	3/15/57
ELMAN, Mischa	12/27/57
ERNST, Morris	1/5/56
EVANS, Bob	6/20/58
EVANS, Maurice	1/26/54
FABIAN	5/6/60
FABRAY, Nanette	1/27/56
FADIMAN, Clifton	11/30/56
FAIRBANKS, Douglas Jr.	4/11/58
FARRELL, Eileen	11/27/59
FELLER, Bob	2/24/56
FERRER, Jose (w/Rosemary Clooney)	3/11/55
FISHER, Eddie	1/15/54
" w/Debbie Reynolds	2/10/56
FITZGERALD, Ella	6/3/60
FITZSIMMONS, Sonny Jim	5/18/56
FLEESON, Doris	5/23/58
FLEMING, Rhonda	9/20/57
FOGARTY, Anne	6/14/57
FONDA, Jane	11/10/60 R. 8/11/61
FORD, Frederick W.	7/22/60
FORD, Tennessee Ernie	3/1/57
FRANCIS, Arlene	3/25/55
FRANCIS, Connie	8/4/61
FULLER, A. C.	11/28/58
FURNESS, Betty	5/13/55
GABOR, Eva	12/4/53

GABOR, Zsa Zsa	6/5/59
GALBRAITH, John ~~Kenneth~~ W.	6/10/55
GALLUP, Dr. George	4/13/56
GAM, Rita	3/9/56
GARDNER, Erle Stanley	11/6/59
GARROWAY, Dave	10/12/56
GASSMAN, Vittorio	3/11/60 R.9/9/60
GAYNOR, Janet (w/Gilbert Adrian)	10/8/54
GENEVIEVE	1/23/59
GIBBS, Georgia	6/13/58
GIBSON, Althea	4/3/59
GIFFORD, Chloe	2/20/59
GILLESPIE, "Dizzy"	6/29/56
GIMBEL, Adam & Sophie	4/22/55
GINGOLD, Hermione	4/13/56
GISH, Lillian	11/19/54
GODFREY, Arthur	10/23/53
GOHEEN, Pres. Robert F.	10/10/58
GOLDBERG, Rube	3/6/59
GOLDEN, Harry	2/12/59
COLDWYN, Sam	2/19/54
GOODMAN, Benny	11/5/54
GORDON, Ruth (Garson Kanin)	6/19/59
GOREN, Charles	10/25/57
GORME, Eydie " w/Steve Lawrence	12/28/56 10/3/58
GOULD, Chester	3/22/57
GRAHAM, Billy	4/6/56
GRANGER, Stewart (w/Jean Simmons)	10/7/55
GRANVILLE, Bonita (Wrather)	2/27/59
GRAY, Dolores	9/27/57
GRAZIANO, Rocky	4/29/55
GRECO, Juliette	1/23/59
GREEN, Martyn	1/29/60
GRIFFITH, Andy	6/14/57

GRUENTHER, Gen. Alfred M.	11/29/57
GUNTHER, John	10/21/55
HAGERTY, James C.	1/29/54
HALSMAN, Philippe	6/24/60
HAMMARSKJOLD, Dag	10/22/54
HAMMERSTEIN, Oscar	5/13/55
HAMMOND, Caleb	11/15/57
HANDY, W. C.	6/3/55
HANEY, Carol	6/17/55
HARRIMAN, Averell	11/13/59
HARRIS, Julie	10/21/55
HARRISON, Rex (w/Lilli Palmer)	3/5/54
HART, Moss (Kitty Carlisle)	5/8/59
HARTFORD, Huntington	1/16/59
HAVOC, June	10/4/57
HAYES, Helen	1/14/55
HAYES, Peter Lind (w/ Mary Healy)	5/20/55
HEAD, Edith	10/16/59
HEALY, Mary (w/Peter Lind Hayes)	5/20/55
HEISS, Carol	11/29/57
HERRMAN, James	4/11/58
HESTON, Charlton	10/14/55
HICKMAN, Herman	10/26/56
HIGGINS, Marguerite	12/18/53
HILDEGARDE	5/7/54
HILTON, Conrad	3/18/55
HOLDEN, Bill	1/28/55
HOLLIDAY, Judy	2/28/58
HOOVER, Herbert	5/13/60
HOPE, Bob	6/10/55
HOPPER, Hedda	4/22/60
HUMPHREY, George	3/12/54
HUNTER, Kim	2/22/57
HURST, Fannie	6/18/54
IVES, Burl	4/20/56
JACKSON, Mahalia	3/28/58

JAMES, Joni	11/26/54
JEANMAIRE, Renee & Roland Petite	1/1/54 2/19/60 R.8/12/60
JESSEL, George	1/2/59
JOHNSTON, Eric	10/11/57
JONES, James	1/10/58
JONES, Shirley	2/24/56
JONES, Spike	7/7/61
JOSEPH, Richard	6/15/56
KALTENBORN, H.V.	1/13/56
KANIN, Garson (Ruth Gordon)	6/19/59
KARSH, Yousuf	1/9/59
KELLY, Emmett	3/26/54
KELLY, Gene	12/19/58
KELLY, Walt	1/1/54
KENNEDY, Sen. John F.	10/30/53 9/29/60
KENNEDY, Robert	9/13/57
KERR, Deborah	5/14/54
KHAN, Aly	12/5/58
KIMBROUGH, Emily	6/29/56
KINTNER, Earl	5/20/60
KIRK, Lisa	5/31/57
KITT, Eartha	9/10/54
KNIGHT, Frances (w/Wayne Parrish)	4/18/58
KOLLMAR, Dorothy & Dick	1/20/56
KOVACKS, Ernie (w/Edith Adams)	6/24/55
LAHR, Bert	9/17/54
LAINE, Frankie	1/4/57
LAMAS, Fernando (w/Arlene Dahl)	12/6/57
LANGNER, Lawrence	9/2/60
LARSON, Arthur	3/29/57
LASKER, Mrs. Mary	5/22/59
LAURANT, Louis (Red Cap)	7/2/54
LAWRENCE, Steve (w/Eydie Gorme)	10/3/58
LEE, Gypsy Rose	2/8/57
LEE, Mrs. John G.	2/8/57
LEE, Peggy	10/20/60

LEHMAN, Sen. Herbert H.	1/25/57
LEIBOWITZ, Judge Samuel	5/28/54
LEIGH, Janet (w/Tony Curtis)	11/12/54
LE MAY, Gen. Curtis E.	5/20/55
LEMMON, Jack	10/23/59
LEONARD, Jack E.	11/30/56
LEVENSON, Sam	2/21/58
LEVI, Carlo	4/15/60
LEWIS, Jerry (w/Dean Martin)	7/2/54
"(alone)	9/26/58
LEWIS, Joe E.	11/2/56
LEWIS, Robert Q.	11/19/54
LEWIS, Shari	11/13/59
LEWIS, Ted	3/8/57
LIBERACE	1/5/56
LILLIE, Bea	5/18/56
LINDSAY, Howard (w/Dorothy Stickney)	4/26/57
LINKLETTER, Art	11/15/57
LINN, Bambi (w/Rod Alexander)	6/22/56
LIST, Eugene	10/30/59
LITTLE, Lou	10/29/54
LOEB, Gerold M.	6/5/59
LOEWY, Raymond	3/23/56
LOGAN, Josh (w/Audrey Meadows)	3/27/59
LOLLOBRIGIDA, Gina	2/7/58
LOMBARDO, Guy	6/18/54
LONDON, Julie	9/13/57
LOREN, Sophia	3/21/58
LOUIS, Joe	11/27/53
LUCKMAN, Charles	4/22/60
LYONS, Leonard	12/16/55
MAC DONALD, Jeanette (w/Gene Raymond)	10/31/58
MAC KENZIE, Gisele	11/11/55
MAC LAINE, Shirley	3/6/59
MAC RAE, Gordon & Sheila	6/24/60

MADIGAN, Warden Paul J. (Alcatraz)	5/3/57
MAKINS, Sir Roger	11/27/53
MANGANO, Sylvana	3/4/60
MANSFIELD, Jayne	5/4/56 10/6/60 R.7/7/61
MARCH, Frederick	12/2/55
MARCH, Hal	4/6/56
MARCIANO, Rocky (w/Ezzard Charles and Jersey Joe Walcott)	6/11/54
"(alone)	6/1/56
MARKOVA, Alicia	3/4/55
MARLBOROUGH, Duke & Duchess	12/11/59 R. 6/10/60
MARSHALL, Mrs. Catherine	12/30/55
MARTIN, Dean (w/Jerry Lewis)	7/2/54
"(alone)	2/7/58
MARTIN, Mary	4/30/54
MARTIN, Tony (w/Cyd Charisse)	6/1/56
MARX, Groucho	4/9/54
MARX, Harpo	1/3/58
MASON, James	10/16/59
MASSEY, Raymond	3/9/56
MATA & HARI	10/17/58
MAXWELL, Elsa	11/6/53
MAY, Elaine	9/23/60
MC BRIDE, Mary Margaret	12/3/54
MC CLELLAN, Sen. John L.	5/24/57
MC CORMICK, Edward T.	10/18/57
MC CUTCHEON, Bill	10/23/53
MC DOWALL, Roddy	9/23/60 R.8/18/61
MC GARVEY, Michael (Mailman)	12/25/53
MC GUIRE Sisters	11/24/60
MC KENNA, Siobhan	11/16/56
MC NEILL, Don	11/21/58
MEANDOWS, Audrey & Jayne	4/23/54
MEANY, George	1/8/54
MEDARIS, Gen. John B.	2/14/58
MEDINA, Judge Harold R.	4/15/55 11/20/59

MENON, Krishna	12/4/53
MENUHIN, Yehudi	4/29/55
MERCER, Johnny	7/28/61
MEREDITH, Burgess	6/21/57
MERMAN, Ethel	9/9/55
MERRILL, Gary (w/Bette Davis)	9/21/56
MESTA, Perle	9/17/54
MEYER, Eugene	11/25/55
MEYNER, Gov. Robt. B.	12/13/57
MIKAN, George	2/19/54
MILLER, Mitch	12/2/55
MILSTEIN, Nathan	11/23/56
MINEO, Sal	12/14/56
MINSKY, Harold	11/18/55
MITCHELL, Guy	5/10/57
MITCHELL, James P.	4/9/54
MITCHELL, Jan	3/21/58
MITROPOULOS, Dimitri	3/22/57
MONROE, Marilyn	4/8/55
MONROE, Vaughn	12/10/54
MONTAND, Yves (w/Simone Signoret)	4/8/60
MONTELAGRE, Felicia (w/Leonard Bernstein)	9/23/55
MOORE, Archie	7/8/60
MOORE, Garry	2/4/55
MORELAND, Lighthouse Keeper Richard	6/22/56
MORGAN, Jane	1/9/59
MORGAN, Jaye P.	12/4/59
MUNSEL, Patrice	1/21/55
MURCHISON, Clint	3/25/55
MURRAY, Arthur	12/30/55
NEWCOMBE, Don	9/30/55
NEWMAN, Paul (w/Joanne Woodward)	12/26/58
NEWMAN, Ralph	2/10/56
NEWMAR, Julie	8/18/61
NICHOLS, Mike	9/23/60

NIELSON, A. C.	6/28/57
NILSON, Capt. Alfred	10/12/56
NIMITZ, Admiral Chester M.	1/4/57
NIXON, Vice President & Mrs. Richard	10/27/60
NORSTAD, Gen. Lauris	1/22/60
NORTON, Bob	12/18/53
NOVAK, Kim	12/16/55 10/6/60 R. 7/21/61
NUTTING, Anthony	9/16/55
O'BRIAN, Hugh	7/1/60
O'BRIEN, Margaret	6/6/58
O'BRIEN, Pat	8/19/60
O'CONNOR, Basil	12/20/57
ODLUM, Floyd (w/Jacqueline Cochran)	5/21/54
ORMANDY, Eugene	10/8/54
OWENS, Jesse	9/23/55
PAAR, Jack	11/22/57
PACKARD, Vance	12/4/59
PAGE, Patti	2/17/56
PALEWSKY, Gaston	3/4/60
PALMER, Lilli (w/Rex Harrison)	3/5/54
PARKER, Suzy	12/21/56 2/5/60
PARNIS, Mollie	9/9/55
PARRISH, Wayne (w/Frances Knight)	4/18/58
PARSONS, Louella	11/7/58
PATACHOU	9/1/60
PATCHETT, Jean	1/28/55
PATTERSON, Russell	10/31/58
PAUL, Les & Mary Ford	2/2/55
PEALE, Dr. Norman Vincent	12/17/54
PEARSON, Drew	1/27/56
PEERCE, Jan	11/16/56
PENNEY, J.C.	5/31/57
PERKINS, Tony	10/18/57
PETERS, Roberta	4/26/57

PETERSON, Val	11/13/53
PETRILLO, James C.	10/16/53
PHILLIPE of the Waldorf	6/8/56
PICKETT, Clarence	4/1/55
PINZA, Ezio	3/5/54
PONS, Lily	2/5/54
PORTER, Sylvia	10/27/56
POSTON, Tom	5/29/59
POWELL, Dick (w/June Allyson)	9/2/55
POWELL, Jane	8/4/61
POWER, Tyrone	12/20/57
PRICE, Vincent	10/17/58
PRIEST, Ivy Baker	12/19/58
PUSEY, Dr. Nathan M.	2/5/54
QUINN, Anthony	5/2/58
RAGEN, Warden Jos. E.	2/18/55
RAHILLY, James (Bus Driver)	2/3/56
RANDALL, Tony	1/23/59
RATHBONE, Basil	1/11/57
RAY, Johnny	5/25/56
RAYE, Martha	10/15/54
REES, Nan	2/12/54
REISEL, Victor	10/10/58
REMICK, Lee	6/26/59
RENAUD, Line	2/12/60
REYNOLDS, Debbie (w/Eddie Fisher)	2/10/56
RICHARDSON, Sir Ralph	1/15/60 R.8/12/60
RINEHART, Mary Roberts	11/9/56
RITCHARD, Cyril	1/31/58
RIZZUTO, Phil	5/7/54
ROBB, Inez	12/12/58
ROBBINS, Jerome	6/12/59
ROBINSON, Jackie	1/18/57
ROBINSON, Sugar Ray	11/8/57
ROCCA, Antonino	2/20/59
ROCKEFELLER, Winthrop	10/4/57

ROCKWELL, Norman	2/6/59
RODGERS, Richard	11/6/53
ROEBLING, Mary	11/21/58
ROGERS, Ginger	3/7/58
ROGERS, Roy & Dale Evans	3/4/55
ROGERS, Att'y. Gen. Wm.	6/20/58
ROMANOFF, Mike	10/23/59
ROMERO, Cesar	7/22/60
ROMULO, Carlos	7/29/60
ROONEY, Mickey	5/4/56
ROOSEVELT, Eleanor	1/22/54
ROOSEVELT, Mrs. Theodore Jr.	11/11/55
ROSE, Billy	1/14/55
ROSENBERG, Anna	6/12/59
ROWLANDS, Gena (w/John Cassavetes)	1/17/58
RUBINSTEIN, Artur	5/10/57
RUSK, Dr. Howard	2/27/59
RUSSELL, Harold	10/7/55
RUSSELL, Jane	3/2/56
RUTH, Mrs. Babe	4/17/59
RYAN, Robert	7/1/60
SAINT, Eva Marie	9/24/54
SARDI, Vincent, Jr.	5/15/59
SARNOFF, David	3/12/54
SCHARY, Dore	5/16/58
SCHIAPARELLI, Elsa	3/18/60 R.9/9/60
SCHULBERG, Budd	3/13/59
SCOTT, Raymond (w/Dorothy Collins)	9/16/55
SEBERG, Jean	11/3/60
SELTZER, Louis	2/26/54
SEYMOUR, Whitney North	4/24/59
SHEPHERD, Gen. Lemuel C. Jr.	6/25/54
SHERRILL, Bishop Henry Knox	1/3/58
SHERWOOD, Roberta	2/1/57
SHOR, Toots	2/11/55
SHORE, Dinah	1/7/55
SHOTWELL, James T.	12/11/53

SIGNORET, Simone (w/Ives Montand)	4/8/60
SILVER, Rabbi Abba Hillel	11/12/54
SILVERCRUYS, Baron	5/11/56
SILVERS, Phil	11/18/55 11/3/60
SIMMONS, Jean (w/Stewart Granger)	10/7/55
SIMON, Richard	10/16/53
SINATRA, Frank	9/14/56
SKINNER, Cornelia Otis	6/3/55
SLEZAK, Walter	11/22/57
SMEDBERG, Rear Admiral Wm. F.	9/27/57
SMITH, Alexis (w/Craig Stevens)	5/20/60
SMITH, Bob (Howdy Doody)	4/23/54
SMITH, H. Allen	6/28/57
SMITH, Red	1/30/59
SMITH, Robert Paul	6/13/58
SORRELL, Capt. Donald	1/22/54
SOTHERN, Ann	12/5/58
SPILLANE, Mickey	3/19/54
STACK, Robert	6/3/60
STEBER, Eleanor	3/20/59
STEEL, Anthony (w/Anita Ekberg)	12/7/56
STERLING, Jan (w/Paul Douglas)	1/25/57
STERN, Isaac	4/24/59
STEVENS, Craig (w/Alexis Smith)	5/20/60
STEVENS, George	11/24/60
STEVENS, Rise	12/17/54
STEVENSON, Adlai	2/12/54
STICKNEY, Dorothy (w/Howard Lindsay)	4/26/57
STOKOWSKI, Leopold	10/2/53
STONE, Edward	2/14/58
STORM, Gale	5/1/59
STRASBERG, Susan	12/28/56
STRAUSS, Admiral Lewis	10/5/56
STYNE, Jule	5/15/59

SULLIVAN, Ed	12/11/53
SUZUKI, Pat	11/28/58
SWANSON, Gloria	4/2/54
SWARTHOUT, Gladys	2/15/57
TAYLOR, Elizabeth (w/Mike Todd)	4/5/57
TAYLOR, Henry Francis	1/7/55
TAYLOR, Gen. Maxwell	10/28/55
TEMPLETON, Alec	9/3/54
TERRAIL, Claude	12/25/59 R. 9/16/60
TEX & JINX	6/15/56
THOMAS, Danny	12/23/55
THOMAS, Lowell	12/10/54
THOMPSON, Dorothy	5/25/56
THOMPSON, Kay	11/9/56
TILSTROM, Burr	12/23/55
TODD, Mike (w/Elizabeth Taylor)	4/5/57
TOUR D'ARGENT (Claude Terrail)	12/25/59 R. 9/16/60
TRAUBEL, Helen	2/26/54
TREVOR, Claire	7/14/61
TRUMAN, President Harry S.	5/27/55
TRUMAN, Margaret	5/27/55
TUCKER, Richard	12/12/58
TUCKER, Sophie	4/15/55
TURNER, Keith (Farmer)	1/20/56
U NU, Prime Minister	7/1/55
USTINOV, Peter	5/16/58
VADIM, Roger	4/8/60
VALENTINA	10/9/53
VAN BUREN, Abigail	10/3/58
VANDERBILT, Amy	6/24/55
VAN DERBUR, Marilyn	11/1/57
VAN DOREN, Charles	3/7/58
VAN DOREN, MAMIE	9/8/61
VAN DOREN, Mark	4/5/57
VATICAN	4/1/60 R.8/5/60
VEECK, Bill	5/22/59
VERDON, Gwen	1/29/60

WAGNER, Mayor Robert F.	6/4/54
WALCOTT, Jersey Joe (w/Rocky Marciano and Ezzard Charles)	6/11/54
WALLACE, Henry	4/12/57
WATERS, Ethel	1/8/54
WEAVER, Sylvester (Pat)	2/3/56
WEBB, Jack	10/30/59
WELCH, Joseph	9/14/56
WELK, Lawrence	11/23/56
WELLES, Orson	11/25/55
WHITCOMB, Jon	9/28/56
WHITE, Teddy	11/20/53
WHITE, Walter	10/1/54
WILLIAMS, Andy	7/21/61
WILLIAMS, Edward Bennett	3/14/58
WILLIAMS, Esther	2/11/55 10/13/60 R. 8/25/61
WILLIAMS, Roger	10/24/58
WILKIE, Mrs. Wendell	2/21/58
WILSON, Earl	5/21/54
WILSON, Julie	6/7/57
WINCHELL, Paul	3/16/56
WINDSOR, Duke & Duchess of	9/28/56
WINSOR, Kathleen	2/4/55
WINTERS, Jonathan	3/14/58
WINTERS, Shelley	10/19/56
WOOD, Peggy	12/31/54
WOODWARD, Joanne	12/27/57
" and Paul Newman	12/26/58
WRATHER, Jack (Bonita Granville)	2/27/59
WRIGHT, Russell	4/18/58
ZIMBALIST, Efrem Jr.	8/11/61
ZORACH, William	3/15/58

P to P

REVISED: 9/23/60

"PERSON TO PERSON" GUEST LIST

(alphabetized)

ADAMS, Cedric 6/8/56

ADAMS, Edith (w/Ernie Kovacks) 6/24/55

ADAMS, Joey 10/25/57

ADAMS, Sherman 3/30/56

ADLER, Felix 3/29/57

ADRIAN, Gilbert (w/Janet Gaynor) 10/8/54

ALBERGHETTI, Anna Maria 4/4/58

ALBERT, Eddie 9/2/60

ALEXANDER, Rod (w/Bambi Linn) 6/22/56

ALI, Prime Minister Mohammed 10/15/54

ALLEN, Mel 4/19/57

ALLEN, Steve 2/18/55
" " 12/22/60
(w Jayne Meadows)

ALLYSON, June (w/Dick Powell) 9/2/55

ALPHAND, Ambassador Herve 1/11/57

ALSOP, Stewart 3/8/57

AMECHE, Don 12/21/56

AMORY, Cleveland 4/17/59

ANDERSON, Marian 10/29/54

ANDERSON, Comdr. Wm. 9/26/58

ANDREWS, Dana 5/6/60

ANDREWS, T. Coleman 3/11/55

ARCARO, Eddie 6/6/58

ARMOUR, Tommy 5/8/59

ARQUETTE, Cliff	3/18/60 R.9/16/60	BANCROFT, Anne	3/11/60 (R. 6/10/60)
ASTAIRE, Fred	6/7/57
ASTOR, MARY	11/10/60	BANKHEAD, Tallulah	11/20/53
ATKINSON, Ted	4/12/57
		BARBER, Red	1/17/58
AUMONT, Jean Pierre (w/Marisa Pavan)	12/25/59
		BARGUIBA, Habib, Jr.	2/19/60
AUTRY, Gene	7/8/60	BARRYMORE, Ethel	5/6/55
AVALON, Frankie	5/6/60	BAY, Mrs. Charles Ulrick	1/24/58
BACALL, Lauren (w/Humphrey Bogart)	9/3/54
		BEECHAM, Sir Thomas	4/8/55
BACHARACH, Bert	10/14/55	BELLAMY, Ralph	5/11/56
BAILLIE, Hugh	6/26/59	BEMELMANS, Ludwig	12/7/56
BAIRD, Bill & Cora	11/13/53	BENNETT, Constance	4/19/57
BAKER, Carroll	3/28/58	BENSON, Ezra Taft	9/24/54
BALDWIN, Faith	5/24/57	BENTON, Thomas Hart	4/10/59
BALMAIN, Pierre	1/8/60	BERG, Gertrude	6/4/54
		BERGAN, Polly	11/8/60

BERLE, Milton	4/3/59	BORGE, Victor	12/24/54
BERLITZ, Charles	6/27/58	BOSWELL, Connee	7/1/55
BERMAN, Shelley	11/17/60
BERNSTEIN, Leonard (w/Felicia Montelagre)	9/23/55	BOURKE-WHITE, Margaret	9/2/55
BERRA, Yogi	4/22/55	BRANDO, Marlon	4/1/55
Bishop, Joey	12/1/60
BLACKSTONE, Harry	10/19/56	BRENNAN, Terry	10/28/55
BLAIK, Earl (Red)	10/9/53	BROWN, John Mason	1/21/55 ✓
BLAINE, Vivian	6/27/58	BUCHWALD, Art	2/12/60 8/26/60
BLAIR, Janet	6/25/54	BUCK, Pearl	3/16/56
BLANDING, Sara Gibson	3/13/59	BUNCHE, Dr. Ralph	1/15/54
BLOCK, Herbert	6/21/57	BURPEE, David	2/15/57
		Burr, Raymond	10/20/60
BLONDELL, Joan	4/10/59	BURROWS, Abe	12/9/55
BLOOM, Claire	2/12/59	BURTON, Justice Harold M.	11/7/58
BOGART, Humphrey (w/Lauren Bacall)	9/3/54	BUSH, Vannevar	4/27/56

BUTTONS, Red 3/18/55

BYRD, Admiral Richard 3/23/56

BYRNES, Gov. James 3/20/59

CAESAR, Sid 10/1/54

CAFRITZ, Mr. & Mrs. Morris 9/30/55

CALLAS, Maria 1/24/58

CALLOWAY, Cab 3/2/56

CAMPANELLA, Roy 10/2/53 & 1/2/59

CANIFF, Milton 2/17/56

CANNON, Jimmy 3/27/59

CANTOR, Eddie 10/5/56

CAPP, Al 11/27/59

CARMINES, Frank (Macy's) 12/25/53

CARON, Leslie 12/11/59

CARSON, Mindy 5/28/54

CARTER, Jack 5/23/58

CASSAVETES, John (w/Gena Rowlands) 1/17/58

CASTRO, Fidel 2/6/59

CERF, Bennett 4/4/58

CHAGLA, Amb. M.A.C. 6/19/59

CHAMPION, Marge & Gower 11/6/59

CHANNING, Carol 1/13/56

CHAPMAN, Ceil 3/30/56

CHARISSE, Cyd (w/Tony Martin) 6/1/56

CHARLES, Ezzard (w/Rocky Marciano & Jersey Joe Walcott)	6/11/54	COLE, Nat King	11/1/57
CHASE, Barrie	4/15/60	COLLINGWOOD, Charles	5/6/55
CHASE, Ilka	11/20/59	COLLINS, Dorothy (w/Raymond Scott)	9/16/55
CHEVALIER, Maurice	5/2/58 1/1/60	CONANT, Dr. James B.	4/25/58
CHRISTENBERRY, Robert	9/10/54	CONOVER, Harry	4/20/56
CHRISTIAN, LINDA	12/1/60
CLARK, Dick	4/25/58	CONSIDINE, Bob	9/21/56
CLARK, Wilbur	5/17/57	COREY, Jill	10/11/57
CLIBURN, Van	5/30/58	CORUM, Bill	4/30/54
CLOONEY, Rosemary (w/Jose Ferrer)	3/11/55	COWARD, Noel	4/27/56
COCA, Imogene	3/26/54	COWLES, Fleur	3/19/54
COCHRAN, Jacqueline (w/Floyd Odlum)	5/21/54	COX, Wally	5/14/54
COLBY, Anita	1/31/58	CRONYN, Hume (w/Jessica Tandy)	1/10/58

CROSBY, Bing 12/3/54

CROUSE, Russell 11/14/58

CUGAT, Xavier 3/1/57

CULLEN, Bill 1/18/57

CUMMINGS, Bob 12/13/57

CURLEY, James Michael 5/3/57

CURTIS, Tony 11/12/54
(w/Janet Leigh)

CUSHING, Archbishop Richard J. 4/16/54

DACHE, Lily 4/16/54

DAGMAR (Danny Dayton) 1/30/59

DAHL, Arlene 12/6/57
(w/Fernando Lamas)

DALI, Salvador 12/31/54

DALY, John 12/24/54

DANIEL, M.Sgt. Wm.E. 5/29/59

DARCEL, Denise 10/22/54

DAVIDSON, Gen. Harrison H. 2/22/57

DAVIS, Bette 9/21/56
(w/Gary Merrill)

DAVIS, Meyer 1/16/59

DAVIS, Sammy Jr. 11/4/55

DAWKINS, Cadet Peter 5/1/59

DAY, Laraine 12/6/57
(w/Leo Durocher)

DEAN, Gen. William F. 10/30/53

DE HAVILLAND, Olivia 5/30/58
1/8/60
8/26/60

LE MARCO, Paddy 4/2/54

DE MILLE, Agnes 11/14/58

DE SEVERSKY, Maj. Alexander P. 11/8/57

D'ESSENS (Animals) 12/26/58

DE TOULOUSE-LAUTREC, Countess and Adm. Guy 2/5/60

DE WILDE, Brandon 1/29/54

DIOR, Christian 11/4/55

DOLLY, Rosie 10/24/58

DOOLITTLE, Gen. Jimmy 2/25/55

DORS,

DOUGLAS, Jack 8/19/60

DOUGLAS, Kirk 2/1/57

" " 10/13/60

DOUGLAS, Melvyn 7/29/60

DOUGLAS, Paul (w/Jan Sterling) 1/25/57

DOUGLAS, Justice Wm. O. 11/5/54

DRAPER, Dorothy 5/17/57

DuMONT, Allen B. 6/17/55

DUNCAN, David 2/28/58

DuPONT, Pierre S. 12/9/55

DUROCHER, Leo (w/Laraine Day) 12/6/57

EBAN, Ambassador Abba	9/20/57	FABIAN	5/6/60
EATON, Cyrus	12/14/56	FABRAY, Nanette	1/27/56
EDEN, Sir Anthony	1/15/60	FADIMAN, Clifton	11/30/56
EDWARDS, Ralph	11/2/56	FAIRBANKS, Douglas Jr.	4/11/58
EKBERG, Anita (w/Anthony Steel)	12/7/56	FARRELL, Eileen	11/27/59
ELLINGTON, Duke	3/15/57	FELLER, Bob	2/24/56
ELMAN, Mischa	12/27/57	FERRER, Jose (w/Rosemary Clooney)	3/11/55
ERNST, Morris	1/5/56	FISHER, Eddie	1/15/54
		" w/ Debbie Reynolds	2/10/56
EVANS, Bob	6/20/58
		FITZGERALD, Ella	6/3/60
EVANS, Maurice	1/26/54
		FITZSIMMONS, Sonny Jim	5/18/56

FLEESON, Doris	5/23/58	GALBREATH, John	6/10/55
FLEMING, Rhonda	9/20/57	GALLUP, Dr. George	4/13/56
FOGARTY, Anne	6/14/57	GAM, Rita	3/9/56
FONDA, JANE	11/10/60
FORD, Frederick W.	7/22/60	GARDNER, Erle Stanley	11/6/59
FORD, Tennessee Ernie	3/1/57	GARROWAY, Dave	10/12/56
FRANCIS, Arlene	3/25/55	GASSMAN, Vittorio	3/11/60 R.9/9/60
FULLER, A.C.	11/28/58
		GAYNOR, Janet (w/Gilbert Adrian)	10/8/54
FURNESS, Betty	5/13/55
		GENEVIEVE	1/23/59
GABOR, Eva	12/4/53
" "	11/15/60	GIBBS, Georgia	6/13/58
GABOR, Zsa Zsa	6/5/59
		GIBSON, Althea	4/3/59

GIFFORD, Chloe	2/20/59	GORDON, Ruth (Garson Kanin)	6/19/59
GILLESPIE, "Dizzy"	6/29/56	GOREN, Charles	10/25/57
GIMBEL, Adam & Sophie	4/22/55	GORME, Eydie	12/28/56
		" w/Steve Lawrence	10/3/58
GINGOLD, Hermione	4/13/56
		GOULD, Chester	3/22/57
GISH, Lillian	11/19/54
		GRAHAM, Billy	4/6/56
GODFREY, Arthur	10/23/53
		GRANGER, Stewart (w/Jean Simmons)	10/7/55
GOHEEN, Pres. Robt. F.	10/10/58
		GRANVILLE, Bonita (Wrather)	2/27/59
GOLDBERG, Rube	3/6/59
GOLDEN, Harry	2/12/59	GRAY, Dolores	9/27/57
GOLDWYN, Sam	2/19/54	GRAZIANO, Rocky	4/29/55
GOODMAN, Benny	11/5/54	GRECO, Juliette	1/23/59

GREEN, Martyn 1/29/60

GRIFFITH, Andy 6/14/57

GRUENTHER, Gen. Alfred M. 11/29/57

GUNTHER, John 10/21/55

HAGERTY, James C. 1/29/54

HALSMAN, Philippe 6/24/60

HAMMARSKJOLD, Dag 10/22/54

HAMMERSTEIN, Oscar 5/13/55

HAMMOND, Caleb 11/15/57

HANDY, W. C. 6/3/55

HANEY, Carol 6/17/55

HARRIMAN, Averell 11/13/59

HARRIS, Julie 10/21/55

HARRISON, Rex (w/Lilli Palmer) 3/5/54

HART, Moss (Kitty Carlisle) 5/8/59

HARTFORD, Huntington 1/16/59

HAVOC, June 10/4/57

HAYES, Helen 1/14/55

HAYES, Peter Lind (w/Mary Healy) 5/20/55

HEAD, Edith 10/16/59

HEALY, Mary (w/Peter Lind Hayes)	5/20/55
HEISS, Carol	11/29/57
HERRMAN, James	4/11/58
HESTON, Charlton	10/14/55
HICKMAN, Herman	10/26/56
HIGGINS, Marguerite	12/18/53
HILDEGARDE	5/7/54
HILTON, Conrad	3/18/55
HOLDEN, Bill	1/28/55
HOLLIDAY, Judy	2/28/58
HOOVER, Herbert	5/13/60
HOPE, Bob	6/10/55
HOPPER, Hedda	4/22/60
HUMPHREY, George	3/12/54
HUNTER, Kim	2/22/57
HURST, Fannie	6/18/54
IVES, Burl	4/20/56
JACKSON, Mahalia	3/28/58
JAMES, Joni	11/26/54
JEANMAIRE, Renee & Roland Petite	1/1/54 2/19/60 R.8/12/60
JESSEL, George	1/2/59

JOHNSTON, Eric	10/11/57	KENNEDY, Robert	9/13/57
JONES, James	1/10/58	KERR, Deborah	5/14/54
JONES, Shirley	2/24/56	KHAN, Aly	12/5/58
Jones, Spike	12/8/60
JOSEPH, Richard	6/15/56	KIMBROUGH, Emily	6/29/56
KALTENBORN, H.V.	1/13/56	KINTNER, Earl	5/20/60
KANIN, Garson (Ruth Gordon)	6/19/59	KIRK, Lisa	5/31/57
KARSH, Yousuf	1/9/59	KITT, Eartha	9/10/54
KELLY, Emmett	3/26/54	KNIGHT, Frances (w/Wayne Parrish)	4/18/58
KELLY, Gene	12/19/58	KOLLMAR, Dorothy & Dick	1/20/56
KELLY, Walt	1/1/54
		KOVACKS, Ernie (w/Edith Adams)	6/24/55
KENNEDY, Sen. John F.	10/30/53
" " "	9/29/60

LAHR, Bert 9/17/54

LAINE, Frankie 1/4/57

LAMAS, Fernando (w/Arlene Dahl) 12/6/57

LANGNER, Lawrence 9/2/60

LARSON, Arthur 3/29/57

LASKER, Mrs. Mary 5/22/59

LAURANT, Louis (Red Cap) 7/2/54

LAURENCE, Steve (w/Eydie Gorme) 10/3/58

LEE, Gypsy Rose 2/8/57

LEE, Mrs. John G. 2/8/57

Lee, Peggy 10/20/60

LEHMAN, Sen. Herbert H. 1/25/57

LEIBOWITZ, Samuel 5/28/54

LEIGH, Janet (w/Tony Curtis) 11/12/54

LE MAY, Gen. Curtis E. 5/20/55

LEMMON, Jack 10/23/59

LEONARD, Jack E. 11/30/56

LEVENSON, Sam 2/21/58

LEVI, Carlo 4/15/60

LEWIS, Jerry (w/Dean Martin) 7/2/54

" (alone) 9/26/58

LEWIS, Joe E.	11/2/56	LITTLE, Lou	10/29/54
LEWIS, Robert Q.	11/19/54	LOEB, Gerold M.	6/5/59
LEWIS, Shari	11/13/59	LOEWY, Raymond	3/23/56
LEWIS, Ted	3/8/57	LOGAN, Josh (Audrey Meadows)	3/27/59
LIBERACE	1/5/56	LOLLOBRIGIDA, Gina	2/7/58
LILLIE, Bea	5/18/56	LOMBARDO, Guy	6/18/54
LINDSAY, Howard (w/Dorothy Stickney)	4/26/57	LONDON, Julie	9/13/57
LINKLETTER, Art	11/15/57	LOREN, Sophia	3/21/58
LINN, Bambi (w/Rod Alexander)	6/22/56	LOUIS, Joe	11/27/53
LIST, Eugene	10/30/59	LUCKMAN, Charles	4/22/60

LYONS, Leonard 12/16/55

MAC DONALD, Jeanette 10/31/58
(w/Gene Raymond)

MAC KENZIE, Gisele 11/11/55

MAC LAINE, Shirley 3/6/59

MAC RAE, Gordon & Sheila 6/24/60

MADIGAN, Warden Paul J. 5/3/57
(Alcatraz)

MAKINS, Sir Roger 11/27/53

MANGANO, Sylvana 3/4/60

MANSFIELD, Jayne 5/4/56
" " 10/6/60

MARCH, Frederick 12/2/55

MARCH, Hal 4/6/56

MARCIANO, Rocky 6/11/54
(w/Ezzard Charles and Jersey Joe Walcott)

" (alone) 6/1/56

MARKOVA, Alicia 3/4/55

MARLBOROUGH, Duke & Duchess
12/11/59
R.6/10/60

MARSHALL, Mrs. Catherine
12/30/55

MARTIN, Dean 7/2/54
(w/Jerry Lewis)

" (alone) 2/7/58

MARTIN, Mary 4/30/54

MARTIN, Tony 6/1/56
(w/Cyd Charisse)

MARX, Groucho 4/9/54

MARX, Harpo 1/3/58

MASON, James 10/16/59

MASSEY, Raymond 3/9/56

MATA & HARI 10/17/58

MAXWELL, Elsa 11/6/53

MAY, Elaine 9/23/60

MC BRIDE, Mary Margaret 12/3/54

MC CLELLAN, Sen. John L. 5/24/57

MC CORMICK, Edward T. 10/18/57

MC CUTCHEON, Bill 10/23/53

MC DOWALL, Roddy 9/23/60

MC GARVEY, Michael (Mailman) 12/25/53

McGuire Sisters 11/24/60

MC KENNA, Siobhan 11/16/56

MC NEILL, Don 11/21/58

MEADOWS, Audrey & Jayne 4/23/54

Meadows, Jayne 11/22/60 (w. Steve Allen)

MEANY, George 1/8/54

MEDARIS, Gen. John B. 2/14/58

MEDINA, Judge Harold R. 4/15/55 11/20/59

MENON, Krishna 12/4/53

MENUHIN, Yehudi	4/29/55	MINEO, Sal	12/14/56
MEREDITH, Burgess	6/21/57	MINSKY, Harold	11/18/55
MERMAN, Ethel	9/9/55	MITCHELL, Guy	5/10/57
MERRILL, Gary (w/Bette Davis)	9/21/56	MITCHELL, James P.	4/9/54
MESTA, Perle	9/17/54	MITCHELL, Jan	3/21/58
MEYER, Eugene	11/25/55	MITROPOULOS, Dimitri	3/22/57
MEYNER, Gov. Robt. B.	12/13/57	MONROE, Marilyn	4/8/55
MIKAN, George	2/19/54	MONROE, Vaughn	12/10/54
MILLER, Mitch	12/2/55	MONTAND, Yves (w/Simone Signoret)	4/8/60
MILSTEIN, Nathan	11/23/56	MONTELAGRE, Felicia (w/Leonard Bernstein)	9/23/55

MOORE, Archie 7/8/60

MOORE, Garry 2/4/55

MORELAND, Lighthouse Keeper
Richard 6/22/56

MORGAN, Jane 1/9/59

MORGAN, Jaye P. 12/4/59

MUNSEL, Patrice 1/21/55

MURCHISON, Clint 3/25/55

MURRAY, Arthur 12/30/55

NEWCOMBE, Don 9/30/55

NEWMAN, Paul 12/26/58
(w/Joanne Woodward)

NEWMAN, Ralph 2/10/56

NICHOLS, Mike 9/23/60

NIELSON, A.C. 6/28/57

NILSON, Capt. Alfred 10/12/56

NIMITZ, Admiral Chester W. 1/4/57

NIXON, V.P. RICHARD 10/27/60
TMES.

NORSTAD, Gen. Lauris 1/22/60

NORTON, Bob 12/18/53

NOVAK, Kim 12/16/55
" " 10/6/60

NUTTING, Anthony 9/16/55

O'BRIAN, Hugh 7/1/60

O'BRIEN, Margaret 6/6/58

O'BRIEN, Pat 8/19/60

O'CONNOR, Basil 12/20/57

ODLUM, Floyd 5/21/54
(w/Jacqueline Cochran)

ORMANDY, Eugene 10/8/54

OWENS, Jesse 9/23/55

PAAR, Jack 11/22/57

PACKARD, Vance 12/4/59

PAGE, Patti 2/17/56

PALEWSKY, Gaston 3/4/60

PALMER, Lilli 3/5/54
(w/Rex Harrison)

PARKER, Suzy 12/21/56
2/5/60

PARNIS, Mollie 9/9/55

PARRISH, Wayne 4/18/58
(w/Frances Knight)

PARSONS, Louella 11/7/58

PATCHETT, Jean 1/28/55

PATTERSON, Russell 10/31/58

PAUL, Les & Mary Ford 2/2/55

PEALE, Dr. Norman Vincent
12/17/54

PEARSON, Drew 1/27/56

PEERCE, Jan	11/16/56	POSTON, Tom	5/29/59
PENNEY, J.C.	5/31/57	POWELL, Dick (w/June Allyson)	9/2/55
PERKINS, Tony	10/18/57	POWER, Tyrone	12/20/57
PETERS, Roberta	4/26/57	PRICE, Vincent	10/17/58
PETERSON, Val	11/13/53	PRIEST, Ivy Baker	12/19/58
PETRILLO, James C.	10/16/53	PUSEY, Dr. Nathan M.	2/5/54
PHILLIPE of the Waldorf	6/8/56	QUINN, Anthony	5/2/58
PICKETT, Clarence	4/1/55	RAGEN, Warden Jos.E.	2/18/55
PINZA, Ezio	3/5/54	RAHILLY, James (Bus Driver)	2/3/56
PONS, Lily	2/5/54	RANDALL, Tony	1/23/59
PORTER, Sylvia	10/27/56

RATHBONE, Basil	1/11/57	RITCHARD, Cyril	1/31/58
RAY, Johnny	5/25/56	RIZZUTO, Phil	5/7/54
RAYE, Martha	10/15/54	ROBB, Inez	12/12/58
REES, Nan	2/12/54	ROBBINS, Jerome	6/12/59
REISEL, Victor	10/10/58	ROBINSON, Jackie	1/18/57
REMICK, Lee	6/26/59	ROBINSON, Sugar Ray	11/8/57
RENAUD, Line	2/12/60	ROCCA, Antonino	2/20/59
REYNOLDS, Debbie w/Eddie Fisher)	2/10/56	ROCKEFELLER, Winthrop	10/4/57
RICHARDSON, Sir Ralph	1/15/60 R.8/12/60	ROCKWELL, Norman	2/6/59
RINEHART, Mary Roberts	11/9/56	RODGERS, Richard	11/6/53
		ROEBLING, Mary	11/21/58

ROGERS, Ginger 3/7/58

ROGERS, Roy & Dale Evans 3/4/55

ROGERS, Att'y. Gen. Wm. 6/20/58

ROMANOFF, Mike 10/23/59

ROMERO, Cesar 7/22/60

ROMULO, Carlos 7/29/60

ROONEY, Mickey 5/4/56

ROOSEVELT, Eleanor 1/22/54

ROOSEVELT, Mrs. Theodore Jr. 11/11/55

ROSE, Billy 1/14/55

ROSENBERG, Anna 6/12/59

ROWLANDS, Gena (w/John Cassavetes) 1/17/58

RUBINSTEIN, Artur 5/10/57

RUSK, Dr. Howard 2/27/59

RUSSELL, Harold 10/7/55

RUSSELL, Jane 3/2/56

RUTH, Mrs. Babe 4/17/59

RYAN, Robert 7/1/60

SAINT, Eva Marie 9/24/54

SANDBURG, CARL 12/22/60

SARDI, Vincent, Jr. 5/15/59

SARNOFF, David 3/12/54

SCHARY, Dore 5/16/58

SCHIAPARELLI, Elsa 3/18/60
R.9/9/60

SCHULBERG, Budd 3/13/59

SCOTT, Raymond 9/16/55
(w/Dorothy Collins)

SEBERG, JEAN 11/3/60

SELTZER, Louis 2/26/54

SEYMOUR, Whitney North 4/24/59

SHEPHERD, Gen. Lemuel C. Jr.
6/25/54

SHERRILL, Bishop Henry Knox
1/3/58

SHERWOOD, Roberta 2/1/57

SHOR, Toots 2/11/55

SHORE, Dinah 1/7/55

SHOTWELL, James T. 12/11/53

SIGNORET, Simone 4/8/60
(w/Yves Montand)

SILVER, Rabbi Abba Hillel
11/12/54

SILVERCRUYS, Baron 5/11/56

SILVERS, Phil 11/18/55
" " 11/3/60

SIMMONS, Jean 10/7/55
(w/Stewart Granger)

SIMON, Richard 10/16/53

SINATRA, Frank 9/14/56

SKINNER, Cornelia Otis
6/3/55

SLEZAK, Walter 11/22/57

SMEDBERG, Rear Admiral Wm. F.
9/27/57

SMITH, Alexis (w/Craig Stevens)	5/20/60
SMITH, Bob (Howdy Doody)	4/23/54
SMITH, H. Allen	6/28/57
SMITH, Red	1/30/59
SMITH, Robert Paul	6/13/58
SORRELL, Capt. Donald	1/22/54
SOTHERN, Ann	12/5/58
SPILLANE, Mickey	3/19/54
STACK, Robert	6/3/60
STEBER, Eleanor	3/20/59
STEEL, Anthony (w/Anita Ekberg)	12/7/56
Stevens, George	11/24/60
STERLING, Jan (w/Paul Douglas)	1/25/57
STERN, Isaac	4/24/59
STEVENS, Craig (w/Alexis Smith)	5/20/60
STEVENS, Rise	12/17/54
STEVENSON, Adlai	2/12/54
STICKNEY, Dorothy (w/Howard Lindsay)	4/26/57
STOKOWSKI, Leopold	10/2/53
STONE, Edward	2/14/58
STORM, Gale	5/1/59
STRASBERG, Susan	12/28/56

STRAUSS, Admiral Lewis	10/5/56	TEX & JINX	6/15/56
STYNE, Jule	5/15/59	THOMAS, Danny	12/23/55
SULLIVAN, Ed	12/11/53	THOMAS, Lowell	12/10/54
SUZUKI, Pat	11/28/58	THOMPSON, Dorothy	5/25/56
SWANSON, Gloria	4/2/54	THOMPSON, Kay	11/9/56
SWARTHOUT, Gladys	2/15/57	TILSTROM, Burr	12/23/55
TAYLOR, Elizabeth (w/Mike Todd)	4/5/57	TODD, Mike (w/Elizabeth Taylor)	4/5/57
TAYLOR, Henry Francis	1/7/55	TOUR D'ARGENT (Claude Terrail)	12/25/59 R.9/16/60
TAYLOR, Maxwell	10/28/55	TRAUBEL, Helen	2/26/54
TEMPLETON, Alec	9/3/54
TERRAIL, Claude	12/25/59

TRUMAN, Harry	5/27/55
TRUMAN, Margaret	5/27/55
TUCKER, Richard	12/12/58
TUCKER, Sophie	4/15/55
TURNER, Keith (Farmer)	1/20/56
U NU, Prime Minister	7/1/55
USTINOV, Peter	5/16/58
VADIM, Roger	4/8/60
VALENTINA	10/9/53
VAN BUREN, Abigail	10/3/58
VANDERBILT, Amy	6/24/55
VAN DERBUR, Marilyn	11/1/57
VAN DOREN, Charles	3/7/58
VAN DOREN, Mark	4/5/57
VATICAN	4/1/60 R.8/5/60
VEECK, Bill	5/22/59
VERDON, Gwen	1/29/60
WAGNER, Mayor Robt. F.	6/4/54
WALCOTT, Jersey Joe (w/Rocky Marciano and Ezzard Charles)	6/11/54
WALLACE, Henry	4/12/57
WATERS, Ethel	1/8/54

WEAVER, Sylvester (Pat) 2/3/56

WEBB, Jack 10/30/59

WELCH, Joseph 9/14/56

WELK, Lawrence 11/23/56

WELLES, Orson 11/25/55

WHITCOMB, Jon 9/28/56

WHITE, Teddy 11/20/53

WHITE, Walter 10/1/54

WILLIAMS, ANDY 11/15/60

WILLIAMS, Edward Bennett 3/14/58

WILLIAMS, Esther 2/11/55

" " 10/13/60

WILLIAMS, Roger 10/24/58

WILLKIE, Mrs. Wendell 2/21/58

WILSON, Earl 5/21/54

WILSON, Julie 6/7/57

WINCHELL, Paul 3/16/56

WINDSOR, Duke & Duchess of 9/28/56

WINSOR, Kathleen 2/4/55

WINTERS, Jonathan 3/14/58

WINTERS, Shelley 10/19/56

WOOD, Peggy 12/31/54

WOODWARD, Joanne 12/27/57

" and Paul Newman 12/26/58

WRATHER, Jack (Bonita Granville)	2/27/59
WRIGHT, Russell	4/18/58
ZORACH, William	3/15/58

P to P Guests

PERSON TO PERSON GUESTS

Mr. & Mrs. Roy Campanella
c/o Salt Spray, East Island
Glen Cove, L.I., N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Sydney Lumet
(Gloria Vanderbilt)
10 Gracie Square, N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. George Schleigh
450 East 52 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. James Petrillo
860 N. Lake Shore Drive
Chicago, Ill.

Mr. & Mrs. Richard Simon
4701 Grosvenor Ave.
Fieldstone, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Bill McCutcheon
73 Perry St.
New York, N.Y.

Senator & Mrs. John Kennedy
122 Bowdain St.
Boston, Mass.

General & Mrs. William Dean
1035 Park Hills Road
Berkely, Calif.

Mr. & Mrs. Richard Rodgers
70 East 71st St.
N.Y.C.

Miss Elsa Maxwell
Waldorf Towers, Apt. 2628
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Bil Baird
334 West 70 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Val Peterson
3636 16th St., N.W.
Washington, D.C.

Miss Tallulah Bankhead
262 East 62nd St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Teddy White
239 Central Park West
N.Y.C.

Sir Roger & Lady Makins
Sherfield Court near Basingstok
Hunts, England

Miss Eva Gabor
1033 Fifth Avenue
N.Y.C.

Mr. V.K. Krishna Menon
United Nations
N.Y.C.

Dr. & Mrs. James T. Shotwell
257 West 86 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Ed Sullivan
Delmonico Hotel
502 Park Avenue
N.Y.C.

Miss Marguerite Higgins
39 West 67 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Frank Carmines
5 Colony
West Orange, N. J.

Mr. & Mrs. Michael McGarvey
60 Amsterdam Ave.
N.Y.C.

Miss Renee Jeanmaire
c/o Martin Jurow
William Morris Agency
1740 Broadway
N.Y.C.

Miss Faye Emerson
245 East 61st St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. George Meany
8819 Burdette Rd.
Bethesda, Maryland

Miss Ethel Waters
190 New York Ave.
Brooklyn, N.Y.

Dr. & Mrs. Ralph Bunche
115-24 Grosvenor,
Kew Gardens, Long Island
New York

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt
211 East 62 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Guy Lombardo
710 South Grove St.
Freeport, Long Island
New York

Miss Fanny Hurst
Hotel Des Artistes
1 West 67 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Nick Mayo
(Janet Blair)
414 East 52 St.
N.Y.C.

General & Mrs. Lemuel C. Shepherd, Jr.
2600 16th St. N.W.
Washington, D.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Dean Martin
654 Woodruff
West Los Angeles, Cal.

*Mr. & Mrs. Jerry Lewis
1048 North Amalfi Dr.
Pacific Palisades, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Louis Laurant
412 West 148 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Humphrey Bogart
232 South Mapleton Dr.
Los Angeles 24, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Alec Templeton
Glenville Rd.
Greenwich, Conn.

Miss Eartha Kitt
270 Riverside Dr.
N.Y.C.

Mr. Robert K. Christenberry
655 Park Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Bert Lahr
15 West 81 St.
N.Y.C.

Mrs. Perle Mesta
Sheraton-Park Hotel
Washington, D.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Jeffrey Hayden
26 West 9th St.
N.Y.C.

Secretary of Agriculture & Mrs. Ezra T. Benson
1907 Quincy St.
Washington, D.C.

Mrs. Walter White
242 East 68 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Sid Caeser
Shellrick Productions, Inc.
6 W. 57th St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Gilbert Adrian
10464 Bellagio Rd.
Bel Air, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Eugene Ormandy
Bellvue Stratford Hotel
Philadelphia, Pa.

Miss Martha Raye
c/o Harry Kalschein
William Morris Agency
1740 Broadway
N.Y.C.

Ambassador Mohammed Ali
Embassy of Pakistan
Washington, D.C.

Mr. Dag Hammarskjold
73 East 73 St.
N.Y.C.

Miss Denise Darcel
993 Park Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Lou Little
207 West 106 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Orpheus Fisher
R.F.D. #1, Marianna Farms
Danbury, Conn.

Mr. & Mrs. Benny Goodman
Rockrimmon Rd.
Stamford, Conn.

Justice & Mrs. William Douglas
3701 Conn. Ave., N.W.
Washington, D.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Tony Curtis
1152 San Ysidro Drive
Beverly Hills, Cal.

Rabbi & Mrs. Abba Hillel Silver
19810 Shaker Blvd.
Cleveland, Ohio

Mr. Robert Q. Lewis
200 East End Ave.
N.Y.C.

Miss Lillian Gish
430 East 57 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. Maurice Evans
50 West 10th St.
N.Y.C.

Miss Joni James
41 East 67 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. Bing Crosby
594 S. Mapleton
Holmby Hills, Cal.

Miss Mary Margaret McBride
230 Central Park South
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Lowell Thomas
Pawling
New York

Mr. & Mrs. Vaughn Monroe
35 Pickwick Rd.
West Newton, Mass.

Mr. & Mrs. Walter Sirovy
130 East 67 St.
N.Y.C.

Dr. & Mrs. Norman Vincent Peale
1030 Fifth Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Victor Borge
Vibo Farms
Southberry, Conn.

Mr. & Mrs. John Daly
28 Griswold Rd.
Rye, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. William Walling
(Peggy Wood)
277 Park Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. George Montgomery
708 North Canon Dr.
Beverly Hills, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Francis Henry Taylor
544 East 86 St.
N.Y.C.

Miss Helen Hayes
235 North Broadway
Nyack, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Billy Rose
1347 Sixth Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. John Mason Brown
17 East 89 St.
New York, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Robert Schuler
(Patrice Munsel)
300 Central Park West
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. William Holden
4701 San Cola Ave.
Taluca Lake
North Hollywood, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Louis Auer
(Jean Patchett)
160 East 48 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Gary Moore
56 Manursing Way
Rye, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Paul Porter
(Kathleen Winsor)
1516 - 33rd St., N.W.
Washington, D.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Ben Gage
2077 Mandeville Canyon Rd.
Los Angeles, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Toots Shor
480 Park Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Steve Allen
1009 Park Ave.
N.Y.C.

Warden & Mrs. Joseph Ragen
Statesville Prison
Joliet, Ill.

Mr. & Mrs. Les Paul
Deerhaven Rd.
Oakland, N.J.

General & Mrs. James Doolittle
Shell Oil Company
50 West 50th St.
N.Y.C.

Miss Alicia Markova
Hotel Windsor
58th & Sixth Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Roy Rogers
5330 Amestoy Ave.
Encino, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. T. Coleman Andrews
1516 Mt. Eagle Place
Park Fairfax
Alexandria, Va.

Mr. & Mrs. Jose Ferrer
1019 N. Rosbury Dr.
Beverly Hills, Cal.

Mr. Conrad Hilton
106-44 Belagio Rd.
Bel Air, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Red Buttons
60 Sutton Place South
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Clint Murchison
Route 5, Box 622
Dallas, Tex.

Mr. & Mrs. Martin Gabel
(Arlene Francis)
181 East 71 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. Marlon Brando
8142 Laurel View Dr.
Hollywood, Cal.

Dr. & Mrs. Clarence Pickett
510 Panmukr Rd.
Haverford, Pa.

Mr. & Mrs. Arthur Miller
(Marilyn Monroe)
2 Sutton Place South, Apt. 8E
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Milton Green
Fanton Hill Rd.
Weston, Conn.

Sir Thomas & Lady Beecham
c/o Andrew Schulhof
113 West 57 St.
N.Y.C.

Judge & Mrs. Harold Medina
14 East 75 St.
N.Y.C.

Miss Sophie Tucker
737 Park Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Yogi Berra
235 Rose Ave.
Woodcliff Lake, N.J.

Mr. & Mrs. Adam Gimbel
166 East 64 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Yehudi Menuhin
Los Catos
California

Mr. & Mrs. Rocky Graziano
69-10 108 St.
Forest Hills, N.Y.

Miss Ethel Barrymore
770 Napoli Dr.
Pacific Palisades, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Charles Collingwood
120 East 65 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein
10 East 63 St.
N.Y.C.

Miss Betty Furness
115 East 86 St.
N.Y.C.

General & Mrs. Curtis LeMay
Commander Strategic Air Command
Offutt Air Force Base
Omaha, Neb.

Mr. & Mrs. Peter Lind Hayes
103 Mt. Tom Road
New Rochelle, N.Y.

Honorable & Mrs. Harry S. Truman
Federal Reserve Bank Bldg.
Kansas City, Mo.

Mr. & Mrs. Clifton Daniel
830 Park Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. W.C. Handy
19 Chester Dr.
Tuckahoe, N.Y.

Miss Cornelia Otis Skinner
131 East 66 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Bob Hope
10346 Moorepark
Los Angeles, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. John Galbreath
435 East 52 St.
N.Y.C.

Dr. & Mrs. Allen DuMont
760 Bloomfield Ave.
Clifton, N.J.

Mr. & Mrs. Larry Blyden
(Carol Haney)
25 West Tenth St.
N.Y.C.

Mrs. Amy Vanderbilt
Daisy Fields
Valley Forge Road
Westport, Conn.

Mr. & Mrs. Ernie Kovacs
300 Central Park West
New York, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Harry Leedy
(Connie Boswell)
101 Central Park West
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Arthur Godfrey
CBS
49 East 52nd St.
N.Y.C.
Attention: Miss Van

Dr. & Mrs. Thomas Rees
528 East 87 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. DeWilde
38 Westminster Rd.
Baldwin, Long Island
New York

Mr. & Mrs. James C. Hagerty
5010 Reno Rd.
Washington, D.C.

Dr. & Mrs. Nathan Pusey
Harvard University
Cambridge, Mass.

Mr. & Mrs. Andre Kostelanetz
10 Gracie Square
N.Y.C.

Mr. Adlai Stevenson
Libertyville
Illinois

Mr. & Mrs. Sam Goldwyn
1200 Laurel Lane
Beverly Hills, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. George Mikan
5520 Knoll Dr.
Minneapolis, Minn.

Mr. & Mrs. William Bass
(Helen Traubel)
~~Chichi Club~~ ~~Palm Springs, Cal.~~
c/o Elizabeth Winston
119 W. 57th St.
NYC

Mr. & Mrs. Louis Seltzer
17825 Lake Avenue
Cleveland, O.

Mr. & Mrs. Ezio Pinza
Wellington Place
Stamford, Conn.

General & Mrs. David Sarnoff
44 East 71 St.
N.Y.C.

Secretary of the Treasury & Mrs. George Humphrey
1800 Fox Hall Rd.
Washington, D.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Mickey Spillane
RD 3, Rockcut Rd.
Newburgh, N.Y.

Miss Imogene Coca
300 Central Park West
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Emmett Kelly
1231 South Osprey
Sarasota, Fla.

Miss Gloria Swanson
920 Fifth Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mrs. Fleur Cowles Meyer
5A Albany
Picadilly W1, London, England

Mr. & Mrs. Paddy DeMarco
1043 85 St.
Brooklyn, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Groucho Marx
806 North Foothill Rd.
Beverly Hills, Cal.

Secretary of Labor & Mrs. James Mitchell
3160 Upland Terrace, N.W.
Washington, D.C.

Archbishop Richard J. Cushing
2101 Commonwealth Ave.
Brighton, Mass.

Miss Lilly Dache
78 East 56 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Randy Rouse
(Audrey Meadows)
300 E. 57th St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Bob Smith
195 Paine Ave.
New Rochelle, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Richard Halliday
Ponus Avenue
South Norwalk, Conn.

Mr. & Mrs. Phil Rizzuto
239 Windsor Way
Hillside, N.J.

Hildegarde
33 East 70 Street
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Anthony Bartley
(Deborah Kerr)
1540 Corona del Mar
Pacific Palisades, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Wally Cox
8 East 66th St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Floyd Odlum
435 East 52 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Eddie Joy
(Mindy Carson)
15 West 81 St.
N.Y.C.

Judge & Mrs. Samuel Leibowitz
102 Colleridge St.
Manhattan Beach, Brooklyn
New York

Mr. & Mrs. Lewis Berg
829 Park Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Dick Powell
3100 Mandeville Canyon
West Los Angeles, Cal.

Miss Margaret Bourke-White
Point O'Woods Rd.
Darien, Conn.

Mr. & Mrs. Robert Six
Six Acres
Cherry Hill Village
Denver, Colo.

Mr. & Mrs. Leon Livingstone
(Molly Parnis)
812 Park Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Raymond Scott Powerhouse Rd.
North Hills, Long Island
New York

Mr. & Mrs. Jesse Owens
5115 S. University Ave.
Chicago, Ill.

Mr. & Mrs. Leonard Bernstein
205 W. 57 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Don Newcombe
152 W. Inman Ave.
Colonia, N.J.

Mr. & Mrs. Morris Cafritz
2301 Fox Hall Rd., N.W.
Washington, D.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Stewart Granger
728 Linda Flora
West Los Angeles, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Harold Russell
213 E. Central Ave.
Natick, Mass.

Mr. & Mrs. Charleton Heston
5 Tudor City
Windsor Tower
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Bert Bacharach
440 E. 56 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Manning Gurian
(Julie Harris)
415 E. 50 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. John Gunther
216 E. 62 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Terry Brennan
2042 Beverly Place
South Bend, Ind.

General & Mrs. Maxwell Taylor
Quarter #1
Fort Myers, Va.

Mr. Sammy Davis, Jr.
Gorham Hotel
136 W. 55th St.
N.Y.C.

Miss Gisele MacKenzie
40 Central Park South
N.Y.C.

Mayor & Mrs. Robert Wagner
Gracie Mansion
N.Y.C.

Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr.
Oyster Bay
New York

Mr. & Mrs. Phil Silvers
Delmonico Hotel
502 Park Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Harold Minsky
28 Florence Pl.
West Orange, N.J.

Mr. & Mrs. Orson Welles
10464 Bellagio Rd.
Bel Air, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Eugene Meyer
1624 Crescent Pl., N.W.
Washington, D.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Danny Thomas
630 North Elm Drive
Beverly Hills, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Fredric March
8 E. 76 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Mitch Miller
Stony Point
New York.

Mr. & Mrs. Pierre DuPont 3rd
Rockland
Delaware

Mr. & Mrs. Abe Burrows
1 W. 81 St.
N.Y.C.

Miss Kim Novak
1312 Beverly Glen Drive
Beverly Hills, Cal.

Mr. Burr Tillstrom
1520 N. State Pkway
Chicago, Ill.

Mr. & Mrs. Leonard Lyons
1 W. 81 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Arthur Murray
820 Park Avenue
N.Y.C.

Mrs. Catherine Marshall
4111 38th St., N.W.
Washington, D.C.

Liberace
15405 Valley Vista Blvd.
Hollywood, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Morris Ernst
2 Fifth Ave.
N.Y.C.

Miss Carol Channing
Chateau Marmont
8221 Sunset Blvd.
Hollywood, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. H. V. Kaltenborn
167 E. 64 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Richard Kollmar
45 E. 68 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Keith Turner
RFD #4
Champaign, Ill.

Miss Nannette Fabray
41 W. 58 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Drew Pearson
1313 29 St., N.W.
Georgetown, Washington

Mr. Jackie Gleason
945 Fifth Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Sylvester (Pat) Weaver
944 Fifth Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. James Rahilly
282 Brook Ave.
Bronx, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Eddie Fisher
706 North Maple Drive
Beverly Hills, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Ralph Newman
18 East Chestnut St.
Chicago 11, Ill.

Mr. & Mrs. Milton Caniff
Top Ridge
South Mountain Rd.
New City, Rockland County
New York

Miss Patti Page
220 Central Park South
N.Y.C.

Mrs. Jack Cassidy
(Shirley Jones)
405 East 54 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Bob Feller
Gates Mills
Ohio

Mr. & Mrs. Bob Waterfield
(Jane Russell)
14888 Round Valley
Sherman Oaks, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Cab Calloway
147 Hazzard Rd.
Lido Beach, Long Island
New York

Mr. & Mrs. Raymond Massey
Honey Hill Road
Wilton, Conn.

Mr. & Mrs. Thomas Guinsburg
34 East 62 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Richard Walsh
(Pearl Buck)
Green Hills Farm
Perkasie, Penn.

Mr. & Mrs. Paul Winchell
9 Althea Lane
Larchmont, N.Y.

Admiral & Mrs. Richard E. Byrd
9 Brimmer St.
Boston, Mass.

Mr. & Mrs. Raymond Loewy
605 Park Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Sherman Adams
2400 Tilden St., N.W.
Washington, D.C.

Mrs. Tom Rogers
(Ceil Chapman)
230 East 73 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Hal March
1025 Fifth Ave.
N.Y.C.

Reverend & Mrs. Billy Graham
Black Mountain
North Carolina

Dr. & Mrs. George Gallup
Great Road
Princeton, N.J.

Miss Hermione Gingold
405 East 54 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Harry Conover
1175 Park Avenue
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Burl Ives
580 West End Avenue
N.Y.C.

Dr. & Mrs. Vannevar Bush
304 Marsh St.
Belmont, Mass.

Mr. Noel Coward
c/o Earl Blackwell
25 West 54 St.
N.Y.C.

Miss Jayne Mansfield
20th Century Fox
Hollywood, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Mickey Rooney
3280 Fryman
Studio City, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Ralph Bellamy
205 West 57 St.
N.Y.C.

Baron & Baroness Silvercruys
2300 Foxhall Rd.
Washington, D.C.

Miss Bea Lillie
25 East End Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. "Sunny Jim" Fitzsimmons
1174 Sheepshead Bay Rd.
Brooklyn, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Maxim Kopf
(Dorothy Thompson)
237 East 48 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. Johnny Ray
110 West 55 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Rocky Marciano
46 Harlan Dr.
Brockton, Mass.

Mr. & Mrs. Tony Martin
1155 Shadow Hill Way
Beverly Hills, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Claude Philippe
Watchill Farm
Peekskill, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Cedric Adams
6201 Knoll Dr.
Minneapolis, Minn.

Mr. & Mrs. Richard Joseph
Baberry Lane & Cross Highway
Westport, Conn.

Mr. & Mrs. Tex McCrary
1100 Northern Boulevard
Manhasset, Long Island
New York

Seaman & Mrs. Dick Moreland
U.S. Coast Guard
Tarrytown, N.Y.
(Lighthouse)

Mr. & Mrs. Rod Alexander
57 West 58 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Dizzy Gillespie
34-68 106 St.
Corona, Long Island
New York

Miss Emily Kimbrough
11 East 73 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Joseph Welch
129 Plimpton St.
Walpole, Mass.

Mr. Frank Sinatra
2464 Bowmont
Beverly Hills, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Gary Merrill
Yebbes Cove
Cape Elizabeth, Maine

Mr. & Mrs. Bob Considine
203 Allen Avenue
Allenhurst, N.J.

Duke & Duchess of Windsor
4 route du Champ 'd Entraiment
Bois de Boulogne
Paris 16, France

Mr. Jon Whitcomb
8 Circle Road
Darien, Conn.

Admiral & Mrs. Lewis Strauss
Brandy Rock Farm
Brandy Station, Va.

Mr. & Mrs. Eddie Cantor
9360 Monte Leon Lane
Beverly Hills, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Dave Garroway
710 Park Ave.
N.Y.C.

Captain & Mrs. Al Nilson
(Westchester Inlet)
New York 61, N.Y.

Miss Shelley Winters
271 Central Park West
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Harry Blackstone
Royalton Hotel
44 West 44th St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Herman Hickman
Pleasant Hill Road
Woodbridge, Conn.

Mr. & Mrs. Sumner Collins
(Sylvia Porter)
2 Fifth Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. Joe E. Lewis
El Rancho Vegas
Las Vegas, Nevada

Mr. & Mrs. Ralph Edwards
710 N. Hillcrest Rd.
Beverly Hills, Cal.

Mrs. Mary Roberts Rinehart
910 Fifth Ave.
N.Y.C.

Miss Kay Thompson
Plaza Hotel
Fifth Avenue & 59th St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Jan Peerce
370 Beechmont Dr.
New Rochelle, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Dennis O'Day
(Siobhan McKenna)
Hotel Gramercy Park
52 Gramercy Park North
New York 10, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Nathan Milstein
1010 Fifth Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Lawrence Welk
193 Tiger Tail Rd.
Brentwood, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Clifton Fadiman
Old Stamford Rd.
New Canaan, Conn.

Mr. & Mrs. Jack E. Leonard
Parc Vendome Apartments
2340 West 57 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Anthony Steele
2159 Linda Flora
Los Angeles, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Lee Strasberg
225 West 86 St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Vic Damone
959 Samera Rd.
Los Angeles 49, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Alfred Steele
(Joan Crawford)
Great Fosters
Eggham, Surrey
England

Mr. Christian Dior
930 Fifth Ave.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Ludwig Bemelmans
10 East 78th Street
New York, N.Y.

Mr. Cyrus Eaton
Acadia Farms
Northfield, O.

Mr. Sal Mineo
2485 Wenner Place
Bronx, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Don Ameche
Croyden Hotel
12 East 86th Street
New York, N. Y.

Miss Suzie Parker
444 East 57th Street
New York, N. Y.

Miss Eydie Gorme
1777 Grand Concourse
Bronx, N. Y.

Admiral & Mrs. Chester W. Nimitz
728 Santa Barbara Road
Berkley, Calif.

Mr. & Mrs. Frankie Laine
1111 Calle Vista Way
Beverly Hills, Calif.

Ambassador & Mrs. Herve Alphand
French Embassy
2221 Kalarama Road, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Mr. & Mrs. Basil Rathbone
135 Central Park West
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Bill Cullen
200 East End Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Jackie Robinson
Cascade Road
Stamford, Conn.

Mr. & Mrs. Paul Douglas
461 East 57th Street
New York, N. Y.

Senator & Mrs. Herbert H. Lehman
820 Park Avenue
New York 21, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Don Lanning
(Roberta Sherwood)
11619 N. E. 6th Avenue
Miami, Florida

Mr. & Mrs. Kirk Douglas
707 N. Canon Drive
Beverly Hills, Calif.

Miss Gypsy Rose Lee
153 East 63rd Street
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. John G. Lee
2623 O Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Mr. & Mrs. David Burpee
Fordhook Farms
Doylestown, Pa.

Mr. & Mrs. Frank Chapman
(Gladys Swarthout)
825 Fifth Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Robert Emmett
(Kim Hunter)
42 Commerce Street
New York, N. Y.

General & Mrs. Garrison H. Davidson
Commandant's Residence
West Point, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Xavier Cugat
111 East 56th Street
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Ernie Ford
10250 Moorepark Avenue
North Hollywood, Calif.

Mr. & Mrs. Stewart Alsop
3520 Springland Lane, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Mr. & Mrs. Ted Lewis
115 Central Park West
New York, N. Y.

Mr. Duke Ellington
334 Riverside Drive
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. William Zorach
276 Hicks Street
Brooklyn, New York

Mr. & Mrs. Chester Gould
R. R. #3
Woodstock, Ill.

Mr. Dimitri Mitropoulos
Great Northern Hotel
118 West 57th Street
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Arthur Larson
3025 Ordway, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Mr. & Mrs. Mike Todd
715 Park Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Mark Van Doren
393 Bleecker Street
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Henry Wallace
Farvue Farms
South Salem, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Ted Atkinson
R. F. D. 2
Huntington, L. I., N. Y.

Colonel & Mrs. John T. Coulter
(Constance Bennett)
1155 Park Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Mr. Mel Allen
Loop Road
Bedford Village, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Howard Lindsay
13 East 94th Street
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Bert Fields
(Roberta Peters)
64 Garden Road
Scarsdale, N. Y.

Mayor & Mrs. James M. Curley
9 Pond Circle
Jamaica Plain
Boston, Mass.

Warden & Mrs. Paul J. Madigan
Alcatraz
San Francisco, Cal.

Mr. & Mrs. Guy Mitchell
12 West 72nd Street
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Artur Rubinstein
630 Park Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Wilbur Clark
Wilbur Clark's Desert Inn
Las Vegas, Nev.

Miss Dorothy Draper
50 East 77th Street
New York, N. Y.

Senator & Mrs. John L. McClellan
Senate Office Building
Washington, D. C.

Miss Faith Baldwin
R. R. 2, Weed Avenue
Norwalk, Conn.

Mr. & Mrs. J. C. Penney
888 Park Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Bob Wells
(Lisa Kirk)
340 West 57th Street
New York, N. Y.

Mr. Fred Astaire
1129 Summit Drive
Beverly Hills, Cal.

Miss Julie Wilson
32 Gramercy Park South
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Tom Fogarty
322 East 57th Street
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Andy Griffith
415 East 52nd Street, Apt. 18C
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Burgess Meredith
Mt. Ivy
Pomona, N. Y.

Mr. Herbert Block
912 19th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Mr. & Mrs. H. Allen Smith
Old Roaring Brook Road
Mount Kisco, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. A. C. Nielsen
720 Ardsley Road
Winnetka, Ill.

Miss Julie London
3936 Ethel Avenue
North Hollywood, Calif.

Mr. & Mrs. Robert Kennedy
Hickory Hill Farm
McLean, Virginia

Dr. & Mrs. Lew Morrill
901 Strada Vecchio
Bel Aire, Calif.

Ambassador & Mrs. Abba Eban
1630 Juniper Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Miss Dolores Gray
418 East 58th Street
New York, N. Y.

Admiral & Mrs. William R. Smedberg
Superintendent's Quarters
Annapolis, Md.

Mr. & Mrs. Winthrop Rockefeller
Winrock Farm
Morrilton, Ark.

Miss June Havoc
115 East 95th Street
New York, N. Y.

Miss Jill Corey
9 East 75th Street
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Eric Johnston
76 Kalorama Circle, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Mr. & Mrs. Edward T. Mc Cormick
29 Reymont Avenue
Rye, N. Y.

Mr. Tony Perkins
127 West 56th Street
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Joey Adams
945 Fifth Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Mr. Charles Goren
Lombardy Hotel
111 East 56th Street
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Nat King Cole
401 S. Muirfield Road
Los Angeles, Calif.

Miss Marilyn Van Derbur
2100 East 8th Avenue
Denver, Colorado

Mr. & Mrs. Ray Robinson
289 West 238th Street
New York, N. Y.

Major & Mrs. Alexander deSeversky
40 Central Park South
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Art Linkletter
219 South Mapleton
Beverly Hills, Calif.

Mr. & Mrs. Caleb Hammond
61 Woodland Road
Maplewood, N. J.

Mr. & Mrs. Walter Slezak
24 Preyer Lane
Larchmont, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Jack Paar
32 Studio Lane
Bronxville, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Fernando Lamas
113 East 35th Street
New York, N. Y.

Mrs. Edward R. Murrow
580 Park Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Felix Adler
c/o Ringling Bros. Barnum
& Bailey Circus
10 Rockefeller Plaza
New York, N. Y.

Miss Carol Heiss
107-41 105th St.
Ozone Park, L.I., N.Y.

General & Mrs. Alfred M. Gruenther
2720 35th Pl. N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Mr. & Mrs. Leo Durocher
925 No. Alpine Street
Beverly Hills, Calif.

Governor & Mrs. Robert B. Meyner
Morven
Princeton, N. J.

Mr. & Mrs. Bob Cummings
1060 Laurel Way
Beverly Hills, Calif.

Mr. & Mrs. Basil O'Connor
49 East 96th St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Mischa Elman
101 Central Park West
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Paul Newman
(Joanne Woodward)
354 East 51st Street
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Harpo Marx
71111 La Paz Rd.
Palm Springs, Calif.

Bishop & Mrs. Henry Knox Sherrill
Dover House
Round Hill Road
Greenwich, Conn.

Mr. & Mrs. Hume Cronyn
120 East End Avenue
N. Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. James Jones
136 E. 67th Street
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Red Barber
Ridge Crest Road
Scarborough Village, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. John Cassavetes
7 East 75th Street
N.Y.C.

Mme. Maria Meneghini Callas
Via Buonarroti 40
Milano, Italy

Mrs. Charles Ulrick Bay
720 Park Avenue
N.Y.C.

Mr. Cyril Ritchard
135 Central Park West
N.Y.C.

Miss Anita Colby
111 East 80th St.
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Dean Martin
601 Mountain Drive
Beverly Hills, Calif.

Dr. & Mrs. Milko Skofic
223 Via Appia Antica
Rome, Italy

Mr. & Mrs. Edward Stone
130 East 64th Street
N.Y.C.

General & Mrs. John B. Medaris
1 Wadsworth Drive
Huntsville, Alabama

Mrs. Wendell Willkie
20 East 76th Street
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Sam Levenson
1380 Union Street
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Miss Judy Holliday
1 West 72nd Street
N.Y.C.

Mr. David Duncan
Via S. Valentino, 11
Rome, Italy

Mr. & Mrs. Charles Van Doren
91 Central Park West
N.Y.C.

Miss Ginger Rogers
1605 Gilcrest Drive
Beverly Hills, Calif.

Mr. & Mrs. Jonathan Winters
75 Kent Avenue
Hastings-On-Hudson, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Edward Bennett Williams
5715 Bent Branch Rd.
Tulip Hill
Glen Echo Heights, Md.

Miss Sophia Loren
Chateau Marmont
8821 Sunset Boulevard
Los Angeles, Calif.

Mr. Jan Mitchell
817 Fifth Avenue.
N.Y.C.

Miss Mahalia Jackson
8358 South Indiana Avenue
Chicago, Ill.

Mr. & Mrs. Jack Garfein
(Carroll Baker)
135 Central Park West
N.Y.C.

Miss Anna Maria Alberghetti
1424 Rising Glen Rd.
Hollywood, Calif.

Mr. & Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks,Jr.
The Blackstone Hotel
50 East 58th Street
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. James Hermann
1648 Redwood Path
Seaford, L.I. N.Y.

Mr. Russel Wright
221 East 48th Street
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Wayne Parrish
2940 Edgevaille Terrace
Washington, D. C.

Mr. & Mrs. Dick Clark
47 Revere Road
Drexel Hill, Pa.

Dr. & Mrs. James B. Conant
200 East 66th Street
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Anthony Quinn
333 Las Casas Avenue
Pacific Palisades, Calif.

Mr. Maurice Chevalier
Marnes Coquette
Seine Oise
France

Mr. & Mrs. Peter Ustinov
164 East 72nd Street
New York, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Dore Shary
180 West 58th Street
Apt. 9 d - NYC

Mr. & Mrs. Jack Carter
25 Central Park West
New York, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Pierre Gallant
(Olivia de Havilland)
3 Rue Benouville
Paris, France

Miss Margaret O'Brien
1502 South Beverly Drive
Beverly Hills, Calif.

Mr. Van Cliburn
205 West 57th Street
New York, New York

Mr. & Mrs. Eddie Arcaro
60 First Street
Garden City, Long Island, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Robert Paul Smith
17 School Lane
Scarsdale, New York

Miss Georgia Gibbs
965 Fifth Avenue
Apt 10C - NYC

Atty. Gen. & Mrs. William P. Rogers
7007 Glenbrook Road
Bethesda, Md.

Mr. Robert Evans
2 Sutton Place
N.Y.C.

Miss Vivian Blaine
60 Sutton Place South
New York City

Mr. & Mrs. Charles Berlitz
Lattington
Harbor Estates
Locust Valley, Long Island, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Jerry Lewis
332 St. Cloud
Bel Air, California

Commander William Anderson
Nautilus
State Pier
New London, Connecticut

Mr. & Mrs. Steve Lawrence
(Eydie Gorme)
300 East 57th Street
New York, New York

Mr. & Mrs. Mort Phillips
(Abigail Van Buren)
10 Summer Holme Place
Hillsborough, Calif.

Dr. & Mrs. Robert Goheen
Princeton University
Princeton, New Jersey

Mr. & Mrs. Victor Riesel
610 West End Avenue
New York, New York

Mr. & Mrs. Vincent Price
580 North Beverly Glen
West Los Angeles, Calif.

Mr. & Mrs. Eugene Hari
300 Central Park West
New York, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Roger Williams
61-33 215th Street
Bayside, Long Island, N.Y.

Mrs. Rosie (Dolly) Natcher
480 Park Avenue
Apt. 11B - N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Gene Raymond
(Jeanette MacDonald)
783 Bel Air Road
Los Angeles, California

Mr. & Mrs. Russell Patterson
44 West 77th Street
N.Y.C.

Miss Louella Parsons
619 North Maple Drive
Beverly Hills, California

Justice & Mrs. Harold Burton
Supreme Court Building
1 First Street N.E.
Washington, D. C.

Mr. & Mrs. Russell Crouse
151 East 61st Street
N.Y.C.

Mr. & Mrs. Walter Prude
(Agnes de Mille)
25 East Ninth Street
New York, N.Y.

Mrs. Mary G. Roebling
Hotel Hildebrecht
27 West State Street
Trenton, N. J.

Mr. & Mrs. Don McNeill
110 De Windt Road
Winnetka, Ill.

Miss Pat Suzuki
135 Central Park West
3rd Fl.
New York, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Alfred C. Fuller
32 Colony Road
West Hartford, Conn.

Miss Ann Sothern
214 St. Pierre Road
Los Angeles 24, Calif.

Prince Aly Khan
1 Beekman Place
New York, N.Y.

Mr. & Mrs. Richard Tucker
10 Melville Lane
Great Neck, Long Island, N.Y.

P to P' Guests

(In Order of Appearance)

PERSON TO PERSON

FIRST SEASON 1953-1954

Oct. 2/53	Roy Campanella Leopold Stokowski
10/9/53	Earl (Red) Blaik Valentina
10/16/53	James C. Petrillo Richard Simon
10/23/53 A	Arthur Godfrey Bill McCutcheon
10/30/53 A	Sen. John F. Kennedy Gen. William F. Dean
Nov. 6/53 C B	Richard Rogers Elsa Maxwell
11/13/53	Bil & Cora Baird Val Peterson
11/20/53	Tallulah Bankhead Teddy White
11/27/53	Sir Roger Makins Joe Louis
Dec. 4/53 B	Eva Gabor Krishna Menon
12/11/53 C	James T. Shotwell Ed Sullivan
12/18/53	Marguerite Higgins Bob Norton
12/25/53	Frank Carmines (Macy's) Michael McGarvey - Mailman
Jan. 1/54 B	Renee Jeanmaire Walt Kelly
1/8/54 B	George Meany Ethel Waters
1/15/54	Eddie Fisher Dr. Ralph Bunche
1/22/54	Capt. Donald Sorrell Eleanor Roosevelt
1/29/54	Brandon de Wilde James C. Hagerty
Feb. 5/54	Dr. Nathan M. Pusey Lily Pons
2/12/54 A	Nan Rees Adlai Stevenson
2/19/54	Sam Goldwyn George Mikan
2/26/54 B	Helen Traubel Louis Seltzer
Mar. 5/54	Rex Harrison, Lilli Palmer Ezio Pinza
3/12/54 A A	David Sarnoff George Humphrey
3/19/54	Mickey Spillane Fleur Cowles
3/26/54	Imogene Coca Emmett Kelly
Apr. 2/54	Gloria Swanson Paddy De Marco
4/9/54 C	Groucho Marx James P. Mitchell
4/16/54 C	Archbishop Richard J. Cushing Lilly Dache
4/23/54	Audrey & Jayne Meadows Bob (Howdy Doody) Smith
4/30/54 A	Mary Martin Bill Corum
May 7/54	Phil Rizzuto Hildegarde
5/14/54	Deborah Kerr Wally Cox
5/21/54 A	Earl Wilson Jacqueline Cochran & Floyd Odlum
5/28/54	Mindy Carson Samuel Leibowitz
June 4/54 C	Mayor Robert F. Wagner Gertrude Berg
6/11/54	Rocky Marciano, Ezzard Charles Jersey Joe Walcott
6/18/54 C C	Guy Lombardo Fannie Hurst
6/25/54	Janet Blair Gen. Lemuel C. Shepherd, Jr.
July 2/54	Dean Martin & Jerry Lewis Louis Laurant (Red Cap)

PERSON TO PERSON

SECOND SEASON - 1954-.1955

Sept. 3/54 Humphrey Bogard & Lauren Bacall
Alec Templeton

9/10/54 Eartha Kitt
Robert Christenberry

9/17/54 A Bert Lahr
Perle Mesta

9/24/54 Eva Marie Saint
Ezra Taft Benson

Oct. 1/54 C Walter White
Sid Caesar

10/8/54 A Janet Gaynor & Gilbert Adrian
Eugene Ormandy

10/15/54 Martha Raye
Prime Minister Mohammed Ali

10/22/54 Dag Hammarskjold
Denise Darcel

10/29/54 C Lou Little
Marian Anderson

Nov. 5/54 C Benny Goodman
Justice William O. Douglas

11/12/54 A Tony Curtis & Janet Leigh
Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver

11/19/54 Robert Q. Lewis
Lillian Gish

11/26/54 C Maurice Evans
Joni James

Dec. 3/54 A Bing Crosby
Mary Margaret McBride

12/10/54 A Lowell Thomas
Vaughn Monroe

12/17/54 C Rise Stevens
C Dr. Norman Vincent Peale

12/24/54 A Victor Borge
C John Daly

12/31/54 Salvadore Dali
C Peggy Wood

Jan. 7/55 C Dinah Shore
Francis Henry Taylor

1/14/55 A Helen Hayes
Billy Rose

1/21/55 C John Mason Brown
Patrice Munsel

1/28/55 C Bill Holden
Jean Patchett

Feb. 4/55 C Garry Moore
C Kathleen Winsor

2/11/55 Esther Williams
Toots Shor C

2/18/55 Steve Allen C
Warden Joseph E. Ragen

2/2 5/55 Les Paul & Mary Ford
Gen. Jimmy Doolittle C

Mar. 4/55 Alicia Markova
Roy Rogers & Dale Evans C

3/11/55 T. Coleman Andrews
Rosemary Clooney & Jose Ferrer C

3/18/55 Conrad Hilton A
Red Buttons

3/25/55 Clint Murchison A
Arlene Francis C

April 1/55 Marlon Brando C
Clarence Pickett

4/8/55 Marilyn Monroe
Sir Thomas Beecham

4/15/55 Judge Harold R. Medina A
Sophie Tucker C

4/22/55 Yogi Berra
Adam Gimbel & Sophie A

4/29/55 Yehudi Menuhin
Rocky Graziano

May 6/55 Ethel Barrymore
Charles Collingwood

5/13/55 Oscar Hammerstein C
Betty Furness

5/20/55 Gen. Curtis E. LeMay
Mary Healy & Peter Lind Hayes C

5/27/55 Harry Truman & Margaret Truman C

June 3/55 W.C. Handy
Cornelia Otis Skinner C

6/10/55 Bob Hope C
John Galbreath A

6/17/55 Allen B. DuMont A
Carol Haney

6/24/55 Amy Vanderbilt
Ernie Kovacks & Edith Adams C

July 1/55 Prime Minister U Nu
Connee Boswell

PERSON TO PERSON

THIRD SEASON - 1955-1956

Sept. 2/55 C June Allyson, Dick Powell
Margaret Bourke-White

9/9/55 A Ethel Merman
C Mollie Parnis

9/16/55 Dorothy Collins, Raymond Scott
Anthony Nutting

9/23/55 C Leonard Bernstein, and Felicia Montelagre
Jesse Owens

9/30/55 A Don Newcombe
Mr. & Mrs. Morris Cafritz

Oct. 7/55 C Jean Simmons, Stewart Granger
Harold Russell

10/14/55 Charlton Heston
Bert Bacharach

10/21/55 Julie Harris
John Gunther

10/28/55 Terry Brennan
Maxwell Taylor

Nov. 4/55 C Sammy Davis, Jr.
Christian Dior

11/11/55 C Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr.
Gisele MacKenzie

11/18/55 C Phil Silvers
Harold Minsky

11/25/55 A Orson Welles
Eugene Meyer

Dec. 2/55 C Frederick March
Mitch Miller

12/9/55 A Abe Burrows
Pierre S. DuPont

12/16/55 Kim Novak (100th telecast)
Leonard Lyons

12/23/55 C Danny Thomas
Burr Tilstrom

* 12/30/55 C Arthur Murrays
Mrs. Catherine Marshall

Jan. 5/56 C Liberace
Morris Ernst

1/13/56 Carol Channing
H.V. Kaltenborn

1/20/56 C Dorothy & Dick Kollmar
Keith Turner (Farmer)

1/27/56 C Nanette Fabray
Drew Pearson

Feb. 3/56 C (Jackie Gleason)
Sylvester (Pat) Weaver
James Rahilly (bus driver)

2/10/56 Debbie & Eddie Fisher
Ralph Newman

2/17/56 Milton Caniff
Patti Page

2/24/56 Shirley Jones
Bob Feller

Mar. 2/56 Jane Russell
Cab Calloway

3/9/56 Raymond Massey
Rita Gam

3/16/56 C Pearl Buck
Paul Winchell

3/23/56 A Admiral Byrd
Raymond Loewy

3/30/56 Sherman Adams
Ceil Chapman

April 6/56 Hal March
Billy Graham

4/13/56 C Dr. George Gallup
Hermione Gingold

4/20/56 C Harry Conover
Burl Ives

4/27/56 C Vannevar Bush
Noel Coward

May 4/56 Jayne Mansfield
Mickey Rooney

5/11/56 C Ralph Bellamy
A Baron Silvercruys

5/18/56 Bea Lillie
Sonny Jim Fitzsimmons

5/25/56 Dorothy Thompson
Johnny Ray

June 1/56 C Rocky Marciano
Tony Martin, Cyd Charisse

6/8/56 C Philippe of the Waldorf
Cedric Adams

6/15/56 Richard Joseph (250th guest)
Tex and Jinx

6/22/56 Lighthouse Keeper Richard Moreland
Bambi Linn, Rod Alexander

6/29/56 "Dizzy" Gillespie
Emily Kimbrough

* Note to Ed

PERSON TO PERSON

FOURTH SEASON - 1956-1957

Sept. 14/56	Frank Sinatra Joseph Welch
9/21/56	Bette Davis & Gary Merrill Bob Considine
9/28/56	Duke & Duchess of Windsor Jon Whitcomb
Oct. 5/56	Admiral Lewis Strauss Eddie Cantor
10/12/56	Dave Garroway Captain Alfred Nilson
10/19/56	Harry Blackstone Shelley Winters
10/26/56	Herman Hickman Sylvia Porter
Nov. 2/56	Joe E. Lewis Ralph Edwards
11/9/56	(Jerry Lewis) Kay Thompson Mary Roberts Rinehart
11/16/56	Jan Peerce Siobhan McKenna
11/23/56	Lawrence Welk Nathan Milstein
11/30/56	Jack E. Leonard Clifton Fadiman
Dec. 7/56	Anita Ekberg & Anthony Steel Ludwig Bemelmans
12/14/56	Cyrus Eaton Sal Mineo
12/21/56	(Mrs. Murrow) Don Ameche Suzy Parker
12/28/56	Susan Strasberg Eydie Gorme
Jan. 4/57	Admiral Chester W. Nimitz Frankie Laine
1/11/57	Ambassador Herve Alphand Basil Rathbone
1/18/57	Bill Cullen Jackie Robinson
1/25/57	Paul Douglas & Jan Sterling Sen. Herbert H. Lehman
Feb. 1/57	Roberta Sherwood Kirk Douglas
2/8/57	Gypsy Rose Lee Mrs. John G. Lee
2/15/57	David Burpee Gladys Swarthout
2/22/57	Kim Hunter Gen. Garrison H. Davidson
Mar. 1/57	Xavier Cugat Tennessee Ernie Ford
3/8/57	Stewart Alsop Ted Lewis
3/15/57	Duke Ellington William Zorach
3/22/57	Chester Gould Dimitri Mitropoulos
3/29/57	Felix Adler Arthur Larson
Apr. 5/57	Mike Todd & Elizabeth Taylor Mark Van Doren
4/12/57	Henry Wallace Ted Atkinson
4/19/57	Constance Bennett Mel Allen
4/26/57	Howard Lindsay & Dorothy Stickney Roberta Peters
May 3/57	James Michael Curley Warden Paul J. Madigan (Alcatraz)
5/10/57	Guy Mitchell Artur Rubinstein
5/17/57	Wilbur Clark Dorothy Draper
5/24/57	Sen. John L. McClellan Faith Baldwin
5/31/57	J. C. Penney Lisa Kirk
June 7/57	Fred Astaire Julie Wilson
6/14/57	Anne Fogarty Andy Griffith
6/21/57	(Mrs. Murrow) Burgess Meredith Herbert Block
6/28/57	H. Allen Smith A. C. Nielsen

PERSON TO PERSON

FIFTH SEASON - 1957-1958

Sept.

13/57 Julie London
Robert Kennedy

20/57 Rhonda Fleming
Ambassador Abba Eban

27/57 Rear Admiral Wm. R. Smedberg
Dolores Gray

Oct.

4/57 Winthrop Rockefeller
June Havoc

11/57 Eric Johnston
Jill Corey

18/57 Edward T. McCormick
Tony Perkins

25/57 Charles Goren
Joey Adams

Nov.

1/57 Nat King Cole
Marilyn Van Derbur

8/57 Maj. Alexander P. DeSeversky
Sugar Ray Robinson

15/57 Art Linkletter
Caleb Hammond

22/57 Walter Slezak
Jack Paar

29/57 Carol Heiss
Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther

Dec.

6/57 Fernando Lamas & Arlene Dahl
Leo Durocher & Laraine Day

13/57 Gov. Robert B. Meyner
Bob Cummings

20/57 Basil O'Connor
Tyrone Power

27/57 Mischa Elman
Joanne Woodward

Jan.

3/58 Harpo Marx
Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill

10/58 Hume Cronyn & Jessica Tandy
James Jones

17/58 Red Barber
John Cassavetes &
Gena Rowlands

24/58 Maria Callas
Mrs. Charles Ulrick Bay

31/58 Cyril Ritchard
Anita Colby

Feb.

7/58 Dean Martin
Gina Lollobrigida

14/58 (Garry Moore)
Gen. John B. Medaris
Edward Stone

21/58 Mrs. Wendell Willkie
Sam Levenson

28/58 Judy Holliday
David Duncan

March

7/58 Charles Van Doren
Ginger Rogers

14/58 Jonathan Winters
Edward Bennett Williams

21/58 Sophia Loren
Jan Mitchell

28/58 Mahalia Jackson
Carroll Baker

April

4/58 Anna Maria Alberghetti
Bennett Cerf

11/58 Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.
James Herrmann

18/58 Wayne Parrish &
Frances Knight
Russel Wright

25/58 Dr. James B. Conant
Dick Clark

May

2/58 Anthony Quinn
Maurice Chevalier

9/58 Pre-empted

16/58 Peter Ustinov
Dore Schary

23/58 Jack Carter
Doris Fleeson

30/58 Van Cliburn
Olivia De Havilland

June

6/58 Margaret O'Brien
Eddie Arcaro

13/58 Georgia Gibbs
Robert Paul Smith

20/58 Att'y. Gen. Wm. Rogers
Bob Evans

27/58 Vivian Blaine
Charles Berlitz

Sept. 26 - Jerry Lewis
Commander William Anderson

Oct. 3 A Gorme-Steve Lawrence
Abby Van Buren

Oct. 10 Robert Goheen
Victor Riesel

Oct. 17 Vincent Price
Mata & Hari

Oct. 24 C Roger Williams
A Rosie Dolly

Oct. 31 Jeanette MacDonald
Russell Patterson

Nov. 7 C Louella Parsons
Justice Harold H. Burton

Nov. 14 C Russell Crouse
Agnes DeMille

Nov. 21 A Mary Roebling
Don McNeill

Nov. 28 C Pat Suzuki
A. C. Fuller

Dec. 5 A Aly Khan
Ann Sothern

Dec. 12 Richard Tucker
Inez Robb

A HUNTINGTON HARTFORD
(NOT on show yet)

"PERSON TO PERSON"
GUEST LIST

10/2/53	ROY CAMPANELLA LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI
10/9/53	EARL ("RED") BLAIK ? VALENTINA
10/16/53	JAMES C. PETRILLO RICHARD SIMON
10/23/53	ARTHUR GODFREY BILL McCUTCHEON
10/30/53	SEN. JOHN F. KENNEDY GEN. WILLIAM F. DEAN
11/6/53	RICHARD RODGERS ELSA MAXWELL
11/13/53	BIL & CORA BAIRD VAL PETERSON
11/20/53	TALLULAH BANKHEAD TEDDY WHITE
11/27/53	SIR ROGER MAKINS JOE LOUIS ?
12/4/53	EVA GABOR KRISHNA MENON
12/11/53	JAMES T. SHOTWELL ED SULLIVAN
12/18/53	MARGUERITE HIGGINS BOB NORTON ?
12/25/53	FRANK CARMINES (COMPLAINT ADJUSTER AT MACY'S) MICHAEL McGARVEY (LETTER CARRIER)
1/1/54	RENEE JEANMAIRE WALT KELLY
1/8/54	GEORGE MEANY ETHEL WATERS
1/15/54	EDDIE FISHER DR. RALPH BUNCHE
1/22/54	CAPT. DONALD SORRELL ? ELEANOR ROOSEVELT
1/29/54	BRANDON DE WILDE JAMES C. HAGERTY
2/5/54	DR. NATHAN M. PUSEY LILY PONS
2/12/54	NAN REES (husband). 528E.87 ADLAI STEVENSON
2/19/54	SAM GOLDWYN GEORGE MIKAN
2/26/54	HELEN TRAUBEL LOUIS SELTZER
3/5/54	REX HARRISON &? LILLI PALMER EZIO PINZA
3/12/54	DAVID SARNOFF GEORGE HUMPHREY
3/19/54	MICKEY SPILLANE FLEUR & GARDNER COWLES
3/26/54	IMOGENE COCA EMMETT KELLY
4/2/54	GLORIA SWANSON PADDY DE MARCO
4/9/54	GROUCHO MARX JAMES P. MITCHELL
4/16/54	ARCHBISHOP RICHARD J. CUSHING LILLY DACHE'

(More)

4/23/54	AUDREY & JAYNE MEADOWS BOB SMITH ("HOWDY DOODY")
4/30/54	MARY MARTIN BILL CORUM ?
5/7/54	PHIL RIZZUTO HILDEGARDE
5/14/54	DEBORAH KERR WALLY COX
5/21/54	EARL WILSON JACQUELINE COCHRAN & FLOYD ODLUM
5/28/54	MINDY CARSON SAMUEL LEIBOWITZ
6/4/54	MAYOR ROBERT F. WAGNER ? GERTRUDE BERG
6/11/54	ROCKY MARCIANO & EZZARD CHARLES ? "JERSEY JOE" WALCOTT
6/18/54	GUY LOMBARDO FANNIE HURST
6/25/54	JANET BLAIR GEN. LEMUEL C. SHEPHERD, JR.
7/24/54	DEAN MARTIN & JERRY LEWIS LOUIS LAURANT (RED CAP)
9/3/54	HUMPHREY BOGART & LAUREN BACALL ALEC TEMPLETON
9/10/54	EARTHA KITT ROBERT CHRISTENBERRY
9/17/54	BERT LAHR PERLE MESTA ?
9/24/54	EVA MARIE SAINT EZRA TAFT BENSON
10/1/54	WALTER WHITE SID CAESAR
10/8/54	JANET GAYNOR & GILBERT ADRIAN EUGENE ORMANDY
10/15/54	MARTHA RAYE PRIME MINISTER MOHAMMED ? ALI
10/22/54	DAG HAMMARSKJOLD DENISE DARCEL
10/29/54	LOU LITTLE MARIAN ANDERSON
11/5/54	BENNY GOODMAN JUSTICE WILLIAM O. DOUGLAS
11/12/54	TONY CURTIS & JANET LEIGH RABBI ABBA HILLEL SILVER
11/19/54	ROBERT Q. LEWIS LILLIAN GISH
11/26/54	MAURICE EVANS JONI JAMES
12/3/54	BING CROSBY MARY MARGARET McBRIDE
12/10/54	LOWELL THOMAS VAUGHN MONROE
12/17/54	RISE STEVENS DR. NORMAN VINCENT PEALE
12/24/54	VICTOR BORGE JOHN DALY
12/31/54	SALVADORE DALI PEGGY WOOD
1/7/55	DINAH SHORE FRANCIS HENRY TAYLOR
1/14/55	HELEN HAYES BILLY ROSE
1/21/55	JOHN MASON BROWN PATRICE MUNSEL

(More)

1/28/55	BILL HOLDEN JEAN PATCHETT
2/4/55	GARRY MOORE KATHLEEN WINSOR
2/11/55	ESTHER WILLIAMS TOOTS SHOR
2/18/55	STEVE ALLEN WARDEN JOSEPH E. RAGEN
2/25/55	LES PAUL & MARY FORD GEN. JIMMY DOOLITTLE
3/4/55	ALICIA MARKOVA ROY ROGERS & DALE EVANS
3/11/55	T. COLEMAN ANDREWS JOSE FERRER & CLOONEY, ROSEMARY
3/18/55	CONRAD HILTON RED BUTTONS
3/25/55	CLINT MURCHISON & ARLENE FRANCIS
4/1/55	MARLON BRANDO CLARENCE PICKETT
4/8/55	MARILYN MONROE SIR THOMAS BEECHAM
4/15/55	JUDGE HAROLD R. MEDINA SOPHIE TUCKER
4/22/55	YOGI BERRA ADAM GIMBEL & SOPHIE
4/29/55	YEHUDI MENUHIN ROCKY GRAZIANO
5/6/55	ETHEL BARRYMORE CHARLES COLLINGWOOD
5/13/55	OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN BETTY FURNESS
5/20/55	GEN. CURTIS E. LeMAY MARY HEALY & PETER LIND HAYES
5/27/55	HARRY TRUMAN MARGARET TRUMAN
6/3/55	W. C. HANDY CORNELIA OTIS SKINNER
6/10/55	BOB HOPE JOHN GALBREATH
6/17/55	ALLEN B. DUMONT CAROL HANEY
6/24/55	AMY VANDERBILT ERNIE KOVACKS & EDITH ADAMS
7/1/55	PRIME MINISTER U NU CONNEE BOSWELL

* * *

NEWS FROM CBS RADIO
Press Information Department,
485 Madison Ave., New York 22, N.Y.
Phone: PLaza 1-2345

MR. ED MURROW
485/17

P to P.

June 25, 1959

ARTHUR GODFREY'S PLANS ANNOUNCED

Entertainer to Return to CBS Radio September 28

- - -

Plans for Arthur Godfrey's return to the air in the fall were announced jointly today by the Columbia Broadcasting System and Mr. Godfrey.

Although the famed television and radio star is well on the road to recovery following an operation for lung cancer last April, Mr. Godfrey has decided not to attempt to resume his heavy schedule of radio and television programs which last season totaled eight hours weekly.

Accordingly, it was announced that Mr. Godfrey, now in his 31st year in the broadcasting business, will confine himself next season to "Arthur Godfrey Time" over the CBS Radio Network, Monday through Friday at 9:05-10:00 AM, EDT, and to a maximum of four special one-hour television shows. Mr. Godfrey will not become host of "Person to Person" as previously announced. Information regarding this program will be announced shortly. The "Sam Levenson Show" which was established originally to substitute for the "Arthur Godfrey Time" television show will continue in its current time period, Monday through Friday at 10:30-11:00 AM, EDT.

(More)

Robert Q. Lewis has been substituting for Mr. Godfrey on the radio program since late April. In stating his plan to return to his radio show on Monday, September 28, Mr. Godfrey also expressed his "heartfelt thanks" to Mr. Lewis for his able handling of the series during his absence.

In addition to the radio series, Mr. Godfrey plans to do a maximum of four special one-hour television programs during the 1959-60 season. The first of these is tentatively scheduled for September 16. No details are available as yet, but Mr. Godfrey promised the "very best that I can dream up."

Discussing his recent operation, Mr. Godfrey said that "brilliant and heroic" surgery had freed him of the cancer of which he had been a victim two months ago. He said he had been mentally "lying on the beach" as per his doctor's instructions, and that he has been swimming, hunting, flying his plane and, beginning last week, riding his horse "Goldie" again.

* * *

MR. ED MURROW
485/17

Press Information
485 Madison Ave., New York 22, N.Y.

March 12, 1959

AUDREY MEADOWS "SITS IN" FOR EDWARD R. MURROW
ON "PERSON TO PERSON" MARCH 27

Audrey Meadows will "sit in" for Edward R. Murrow on "Person to Person," on the CBS Television Network, Friday, March 27 (10:30-11:00 PM, EST) while Mr. Murrow is out of the country -- on a news assignment in England. With her sister, Jayne, Miss Meadows was herself a guest on "Person to Person" in April, 1954.

Audrey Meadows is probably best known as "Alice Kramden" -- Jackie Gleason's television wife in the Honeymooners series. Possibly not so well known is the fact that she started out in show business as a soprano in light opera, with a debut in Carnegie Hall at the age of sixteen.

Miss Meadows was born in China where her father was a missionary. She came to this country with her family (which includes two brothers who are now lawyers) when she was five. Her parents live in Sharon, Conn., where her father is the rector of Christ Church.

Audrey, who can sing, dance and do comedy with equal dexterity, is an avid sports fan; she rides, swims, plays tennis and takes a great interest in football.

The guests to be visited by Audrey Meadows will be announced shortly.

"Person to Person" is produced by John A. Aaron and Jesse Zousmer in cooperation with Edward R. Murrow.

* * *

Pub

CBS TELEVISION FEATURE

CBS Television Network
485 Madison Ave., New York 22, N.Y.

3

October 3, 1958

PERSON TO PERSONALS

(About past "Person to Person," guests of Edward R. Murrow on the CBS Television Network, Fridays, 10:30 to 11:00 PM, EDT)

Did you know that?

....Comedian Sam Levenson tests stories on his wife. When she doesn't laugh, he knows it's a good story.

....New York born photographer David Duncan has visited all of the major areas of the world except Mongolia, the North Pole and the Statue of Liberty.

....Actress Sophia Loren hates to get up in the morning, but when she does she exercises for 10 minutes.

....Miss Frances Knight, Director of the U.S. Passport Office (Mrs. Wayne Parrish in private life), went around the world in five weeks, with one suitcase.

....Emcee Dick Clark, favorite of the teen-agers, makes sure the watch on his arm is always about 4 minutes fast -- so he can hope to be on time for his radio and TV programs.

....Olympic Champion ice-skater Carol Heiss' younger sister, Nancy, says she plans to win Carol's championship "by marrying her off."

....Producer Dore Schary is photographed each year with son Jed in the same pose -- that way, he explains, he "can tell whether Jed's growing or he's shrinking."

....Entertainer Maurice Chevalier thought very seriously about becoming a prizefighter -- decided "it's very good to give punches, not very good to receive them."

* * *

P 2 P

CBS TELEVISION FEATURE

CBS Television Network
485 Madison Ave., New York 22, N.Y.

September 26, 1958

THEY COME BACK FOR MORE ON "PERSON TO PERSON"

When "Person to Person" visits with Singer Eydie Gorme and her husband, Steve Lawrence, Friday, Oct. 3 (CBS Television Network, 10:30-11:00 PM, EDT), it will make the sixth time since the program went on the air in 1953 that a guest has made a second appearance on the show.

Miss Gorme was on "Person to Person" New Year's weekend, 1956 -- when she was single and was living with her family in the Bronx, New York. Now that she's married, she keeps house in a Manhattan apartment.

It was four years ago that "Person to Person" dropped in on another singer -- Eddie Fisher, then a bachelor living at the Essex House Hotel in New York. After Fisher married Debbie Reynolds, "Person to Person" called on the couple at their California home.

Marriage was also responsible for two "Person to Person" appearances by Jayne Meadows -- once when she was living with her sister Audrey, later when she married Steve Allen.

Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis are also on the "second time around" list. In July of 1954, they shared a visit. Subsequently, "Person to Person" visited each of them separately.

In the case of former heavyweight champion Rocky Marciano, "Person to Person" called on him once at his training camp, and then paid a repeat visit after he had settled down in his newly purchased home in Brockton, Mass.

* * *

Press Information
485 Madison Ave., New York 22, N.Y.

7

September 22, 1958

EYDIE GORME, PVT. STEVE LAWRENCE AND "DEAR ABBY"
OPEN THEIR HOMES TO "PERSON TO PERSON," OCT. 3

Singers Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme and columnist Abigail Van Buren ("Dear Abby") will greet Edward R. Murrow "Person to Person," Friday, Oct. 3 (10:30-11:00 PM, EDT) over the CBS Television Network.

Private Steve Lawrence (he entered the Army last week) will be "at home" for the first time since starting basic training at Fort Dix. He and Eydie Gorme (a bride of 10 months) live in an apartment on Manhattan's east side.

Bronx-born Eydie and Brooklyn-born Steve were "discovered" on television, gained their experience on television and came into their own last summer when they starred in their own nighttime television program.

Abigail Van Buren is the pen name of Mrs. Pauline Phillips, wife of Morton Phillips, a kitchen utensil manufacturer. The couple, with their two children, 12-year-old Eddie and 15-year-old Jeannie, live in a rambling house in the Hillsboro section of Burlingame, Calif.

As "Dear Abby," Mrs. Phillips doles out advice on everyday problems to something like 50 million newspaper readers across the country.

* * *

Pub

CBS TELEVISION FEATURE

CBS Television Network
485 Madison Ave., New York 22, N.Y.

September 16, 1958

"PERSON TO PERSON" GETS AWAY FROM IT ALL

The historic trip under the North Pole by the world's first atomic submarine, the Nautilus, has been referred to as a "club car" cruise.

Because the crew, under Comdr. William R. Anderson (who will be visited aboard the sub by Edward R. Murrow, "Person to Person," Friday, Sept. 26, CBS Television Network, 10:30-11:00 PM, EDT) solved the problem of "how to get away from yourself" in a submarine. The men relaxed with movies, music, parties and games.

Mr. Murrow finds that many of his guests on earlier programs also have found ways of "getting away from it all." For instance:

Actress Rhonda Fleming likes to garden on weekends.... Gen. Alfred M Greunther plays tennis or bridge....Actress Sophia Loren likes to swim....Singer Mahalia Jackson cleans house....Dr. James Conant goes trout fishing....Academy Award winner Joanne Woodward sews....Sen. Robert "Bob" Kennedy likes to read, particularly American history....Singer Julie London unwinds by knitting....Actor Peter Ustinov is a sports car enthusiast....Actor Anthony Quinn hikes the Pacific Palisades, and entertainer Maurice Chevalier likes long walks.

* * *

Pub

CBS TELEVISION FEATURE

CBS Television Network
485 Madison Ave., New York 22, N.Y.

September 15, 1958

COMMANDER TAKES PLACE ALONGSIDE GENERALS, ADMIRALS ON "PERSON TO PERSON"

When Edward R. Murrow visits Comdr. William R. Anderson, skipper of the Nautilus, in port at New London, Conn., on the season premiere of "Person to Person" Friday, Sept. 26 (CBS Television Network, 10:30-11:00 PM, EDT), he will be adding another famed name to the list of military men who have been interviewed on the program during the past five years.

Since the program made its debut in 1953, eight generals have received Murrow's crews on the Friday night visits: Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, Army Chief of Staff, who was at home at "Quarters One" at Fort Myer, Va.; Gen. Curtis Le May, who at that time headed the Strategic Air Command at Omaha, Neb.; Gen. John B. Medaris, Chief of the Army project that sent the first satellite into orbit (visited at Redstone Arsenal, Alabama); Gen. James H. Doolittle, who was at home in New York; Gen. Garrison H. Davidson, superintendent of West Point, and Generals Alfred M. Greunther, Lemuel Shepherd and William Dean, all in the Washington area.

Four admirals have been on Murrow's calling list: Adm. Chester Nimitz, in San Francisco; Adm. William R. Smedberg, at Annapolis; Adm. Lewis Strauss, in Washington, and the late Adm. Richard E. Byrd, in Boston.

* * *

Prog. Bu P.P.

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: Mr. Rosen cc: Messrs. Seward, Aaron and Zousmer

from: Mr. Murrow

January 9, 1958

I answer your memo of December 26th.

I doubt the wisdom of attempting 16 mm. distribution of the PERSON TO PERSON programs. Special clearance would have to be obtained from participants, the quality of the kinescopes is in many cases unsatisfactory, and unless there are compelling reasons, I would suggest that this venture not be undertaken.

fc E.R.M.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Messrs. Murrow, Aaron, Zousmer — cc: Mr. J. Seward from: Paul A. Rosen — December 26, 1957

As Mr. Murrow knows, we have had most pleasant relations in the field of 16 mm. non-theatrical, non-broadcast, distribution of our programs. Primarily, this distribution is in the educational area, although it also includes exhibition before civic and community groups, organisations, eleemosynary and the like.

It is believed that many of the interviews conducted on PERSON TO PERSON have lasting topicalities and a permanent value for 16 mm. exhibition. In this connection, it will be appreciated if you will provide us with a list of suggested programs, or segments of programs, which might have such an application.

Your early advice will be appreciated.

P. A. R.

PAR:jr

TO ed

FROM jz

12/22/53

To be "co-operative" we have crossed out in black pencil the guests who for very obvious reasons have no "lasting topicalities and a permanent value" for 16 mm exhibition.

We havenot crossed out such as: Joe Louis, Earl Wilson, Nan Rees, Mayor Curley, etc.

Of course, if this goes through, someone should screen every kine for quality, content and timeliness. We can't recall em all..or can you.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication to: Brown, Harvey, Aaron, Trumar

cc: Mr. J. Howard from: Paul A. Brown

December 20, 1957

As Mr. Harvey knows, we have had most pleasant relations in the field of 16 mm. non-theatrical, non-broadcast, distribution of our programs. Primarily, this distribution is in the educational area, although it also includes exhibition before civic and community groups, organizations, elementary and the like.

It is believed that many of the interviews conducted on PERSON TO PERSON have lasting topicalities and a permanent value for 16 mm. exhibition. In this connection, it will be appreciated if you will provide us with a list of suggested programs, or segments of programs, which might have such an application.

Your early advice will be appreciated.

P. A. B.

PAB:jr attaches a stand

— Ja

365

= not a "lasting topicality and a permanent value".

PERSON TO PERSON

FIRST SEASON 1953-1954

— Ja

Oct. 2/53	~~Roy Campanella~~ ~~Leopold Stokowski~~	2/19/54	Sam Goldwyn [redacted]
10/9/53	[redacted] Valentina	2/26/54	Helen Traubel Louis Seltzer
10/16/53	James C. Petrillo Richard Simon	Mar. 5/54	[redacted]
10/23/53	~~Arthur Godfrey~~ Bill McCutcheon	3/12/54	David Sarnoff ~~George Humphrey~~
10/30/53	[redacted] ~~Gen. William F. Dean~~	3/19/54	Mickey Spillane Fleur Cowles
Nov. 6/53	Richard Rogers Elsa Maxwell	3/26/54	~~Imogene Coca~~ Emmett Kelly
11/13/53	Bil & Cora Baird [redacted]	Apr. 2/54	Gloria Swanson [redacted]
11/20/53	Tallulah Bankhead [redacted]	4/9/54	Groucho Marx James P. Mitchell
11/27/53	[redacted] Joe Louis	4/16/54	Archbishop Richard J. Cushing Lilly Dache
Dec. 4/53	Eva Gabor [redacted]	4/23/54	[redacted]
12/11/53	James T. Shotwell Ed Sullivan	4/30/54	Mary Martin Bill Corum
12/18/53	Marguerite Higgins Bob Norton	May 7/54	[redacted] Hildegarde
12/25/53	[redacted] (Macy's) [redacted] Mailman	5/14/54	[redacted] Wally Cox
Jan. 1/54	~~Renee Jeanmaire~~ Walt Kelly	5/21/54	Earl Wilson Jacqueline Cochran & Floyd Odlum
1/8/54	George Meany Ethel Waters	5/28/54	Mindy Carson Samuel Leibowitz
1/15/54	~~Eddie Fisher~~ Dr. Ralph Bunche	June 4/54	Mayor Robert F. Wagner Gertrude Berg
1/22/54	~~Capt. Donald Sanwell~~ Eleanor Roosevelt	6/11/54	[redacted]
1/29/54	~~Brandon de Wilde~~ James C. Hagerty	6/18/54	Guy Lombardo Fannie Hurst
Feb. 5/54	Dr. Nathan M. Pusey Lily Pons	6/25/54	[redacted] ~~Gen. Samuel Gompers~~, Jr.
2/12/54	Nan Rees [redacted]	July 2/54	[redacted]

PERSON TO PERSON

SECOND SEASON - 1954-.1955

Sept. 3/54 [redacted]
Alec Templeton

9/10/54 Eartha Kitt
[redacted]

9/17/54 Bert Lahr
[redacted]

9/24/54 [redacted]
Ezra Taft Benson

Oct. 1/54 [redacted]
Sid Caesar

10/8/54 Janet Gaynor & Gilbert Adrian
Eugene Ormandy

10/15/54 [redacted]
[redacted] Ali

10/22/54 Dag Hammarskjold
Denise Darcel

10/29/54 [redacted]

Nov. 5/54 Benny Goodman
Justice William O. Douglas

11/12/54 [redacted] Leigh
Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver

11/19/54 [redacted]
Lillian Gish

11/26/54 Maurice Evans
Joni James

Dec. 3/54 [redacted]
Mary Margaret McBride

12/10/54 Lowell Thomas
Vaughn Monroe

12/17/54 Rise Stevens
Dr. Norman Vincent Peale

12/24/54 Victor Borge
John Daly

12/31/54 Salvadore Dali
Peggy Wood

Jan. 7/55 Dinah Shore
[redacted]

1/14/55 [redacted]

1/21/55 John Mason Brown
Patrice Munsel

1/28/55 Bill Holden
[redacted]

Feb. 4/55 Garry Moore
[redacted]

2/11/55 [redacted]
Toots Shor

2/18/55 [redacted]
Warden Joseph E. Ragen

2/2 5/55 Les Paul & Mary Ford
Gen. Jimmy Doolittle

Mar. 4/55 Alicia Markova
[redacted]

3/11/55 [redacted]

3/18/55 Conrad Hilton
[redacted]

3/25/55 Clint Murchison
Arlene Francis

April 1/55 [redacted]
Clarence Pickett

4/8/55 [redacted]
Sir Thomas Beecham

4/15/55 Judge Harold R. Medina
Sophie Tucker

4/22/55 Yogi Berra
Adam Gimbel & Sophie

4/29/55 Yehudi Menuhin
Rocky Graziano

May 6/55 Ethel Barrymore
[redacted]

5/13/55 Oscar Hammerstein
Betty Furness

5/20/55 [redacted]
Mary Healy & Peter Lind Hayes

5/27/55 Harry Truman & Margaret Truman

June 3/55 W.C. Handy
Cornelia Otis Skinner

6/10/55 Bob Hope
[redacted]

6/17/55 Allen B. DuMont
Carol Haney

6/24/55 Amy Vanderbilt
Ernie Kovacks & Edith Adams

July 1/55 Prime Minister U Nu
Connee Boswell

PERSON TO PERSON

THIRD SEASON - 1955-1956

Sept. 2/55	[redacted] Margaret Bourke-White
9/9/55	Ethel Merman Mollie Parnis
9/16/55	[redacted]
9/23/55	Leonard Bernstein, and Felicia Montelagre Jesse Owens
9/30/55	[redacted] Mr. & Mrs. Morris Cafritz
Oct. 7/55	[redacted] Harold Russell
10/14/55	Charlton Heston [redacted]
10/21/55	Julie Harris John Gunther
10/28/55	[redacted] Maxwell Taylor
Nov. 4/55	Sammy Davis, Jr. [redacted]
11/11/55	Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr. Gisele MacKenzie
11/18/55	[redacted]
11/25/55	[redacted] Eugene Meyer
Dec. 2/55	Frederick March Mitch Miller
12/9/55	Abe Burrows Pierre S. DuPont
12/16/55	Kim Novak (100th telecast) Leonard Lyons
12/23/55	Danny Thomas [redacted]
12/30/55	Arthur Murrays Mrs. Catherine Marshall
Jan. 5/56	Liberace Morris Ernst
1/13/56	[redacted] H.V. Kaltenborn
1/20/56	Dorothy & Dick Kollmar [redacted]
1/27/56	[redacted] Drew Pearson
Feb. 3/56	[redacted]
2/10/56	[redacted] Ralph Newman
2/17/56	Milton Caniff [redacted]
2/24/56	[redacted] Bob Feller
Mar. 2/56	Jane Russell Cab Calloway
3/9/56	Raymond Massey [redacted]
3/16/56	Pearl Buck Paul Winchell
3/23/56	[redacted] Raymond Loewy
3/30/56	[redacted] Ceil Chapman
April 6/56	Hal March Billy Graham
4/13/56	Dr. George Gallup Hermione Gingold
4/20/56	[redacted] Burl Ives
4/27/56	Vannevar Bush Noel Coward
May 4/56	[redacted]
5/11/56	Ralph Bellamy [redacted]
5/18/56	Bea Lillie Sonny Jim Fitzsimmons
5/25/56	Dorothy Thompson Johnny Ray
June 1/56	Rocky Marciano Tony Martin, Cyd Charisse
6/8/56	Philippe of the Waldorf [redacted]
6/15/56	[redacted] Tex and Jinx
6/22/56	Lighthouse Keeper Richard Moreland Bambi Linn, Rod Alexander
6/29/56	"Dizzy" Gillespie Emily Kimbrough

PERSON TO PERSON

FOURTH SEASON - 1956-1957

Sept. 14/56	[redacted]
9/21/56	[redacted] Bob Considine
9/28/56	Duke & Duchess of Windsor [redacted]
Oct. 5/56	Admiral Lewis Strauss Eddie Cantor
10/12/56	[redacted]
10/19/56	Harry Blackstone [redacted]
10/26/56	Herman Hickman Sylvia Porter
Nov. 2/56	Joe E. Lewis Ralph Edwards
11/9/56	([redacted] [redacted] [redacted]
11/16/56	Jan Peerce Siobhan McKenna
11/23/56	Lawrence Welk Nathan Milstein
11/30/56	[redacted] Clifton Fadiman
Dec. 7/56	Anita Ekberg & Anthony Steel Ludwig Bemelmans
12/14/56	[redacted] Sal Mineo
12/21/56	[redacted] [redacted] [redacted]
12/28/56	[redacted]
Jan. 4/57	Admiral Chester W. Nimitz Frankie Laine
1/11/57	[redacted] Basil Rathbone
1/18/57	Bill Cullen [redacted]
1/25/57	Paul Douglas & Jan Sterling Sen. Herbert H. Lehman
Feb. 1/57	Roberta Sherwood [redacted]
2/8/57	Gypsy Rose Lee Mrs. John G. Lee
2/15/57	David Burpee Gladys Swarthout
2/22/57	Kim Hunter Gen. Garrison H. Davidson
Mar. 1/57	[redacted] Tennessee Ernie Ford
3/8/57	Stewart Alsop Ted Lewis
3/15/57	[redacted] William Zorach
3/22/57	[redacted]
3/29/57	Felix Adler [redacted]
Apr. 5/57	Mike Todd & Elizabeth Taylor Mark Van Doren
4/12/57	Henry Wallace Ted Atkinson
4/19/57	Constance Bennett Mel Allen
4/26/57	Howard Lindsay & Dorothy Stickney Roberta Peters
May 3/57	James Michael Curley Warden Paul J. Madigan (Alcatraz)
5/10/57	[redacted] Artur Rubinstein
5/17/57	Wilbur Clark Dorothy Draper
5/24/57	Sen. John L. McClellan Faith Baldwin
5/31/57	J. C. Penney Lisa Kirk
June 7/57	Fred Astaire Julie Wilson
6/14/57	Anne Fogarty [redacted]
6/21/57	[redacted]
6/28/57	H. Allen Smith A. C. Nielsen

P&P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Messrs. Robinson, Harrison, Rosen, Sarnoff

from: Mr. Murrow

March 19, 1957

SUBJECT: Plans for PERSON TO PERSON
'57-'58 Season

If you are agreeable, I propose that we handle this program in the following fashion:

1. The selection of guests will continue to be made in this office, as in the past.

2. All current staff personnel will be retained. (I assume that the continuing success of the program will cause the Company to follow its normal program of merit raises.)

3. As you are aware, the costs for individual programs vary widely. We have remained well under the budget this year, and can certainly do so next year if Accounting can provide us with the Statement each thirteen weeks, thus permitting us to "shorten the reins" during following weeks where necessary.

4. As you also know, we frequently schedule guests from three to six months in advance, and the cost of origination is always a factor. It would therefore be helpful if we could have an agreed budget as promptly as possible.

5. I suppose what I am proposing is that we continue to run the program as in the past, trying to stay out of trouble and being sure to stay within the budget.

E.R.M.

sh

P&P

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Messrs. Aaron and Zousmer

from: Mr. Murrow

June 19, 1956

A few random ideas for next year:

Margaret Meade
John Hersey
John Steinbeck
Bob Hutchins
David Cohn
David Lawrence
Dennis Johnson
Sam Rayburn
Joe Martin
General Twining
Arleigh Burke

General Bradley
Admiral Strauss
Ben Shahn
Burris Jenkins
Bob Considine
Ivy Priest
Abba Eban
Hussein, Egyptian Ambassador
Shirley Booth
Louis Armstrong
Mike Todd

Tom Dewey
Jimmy Durante
Margaret and
E. C. Daniel
Compton of MIT

E.R.M.

Person to Person

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Seward

from: Mr. Murrow

September 1, 1955

Our station list as of today indicates that the following stations are carrying PERSON TO PERSON on a co-op basis on alternate weeks, that is the week that is sponsored by Amoco and Hamm:

Cincinnati	Motorists Mutual
Columbus	Motorists Mutual
Cleveland	Cleveland Illuminating Co.
Des Moines	sponsor unknown yet, but co-op
Galveston-Houston	Finger Office Furniture Co.
Indianapolis	Atkinson Realty Co.
Kalamazoo	sponsor unknown
Louisville	sponsor unknown
Nashville	Sealtest Co.
Oklahoma City	Montgomery Ward
Phoenix	sponsor unknown
Salt Lake City	Standard Optical Co.
Tacoma-Seattle	sponsor unknown
Henderson	Midwestern Federal Savings and Loan Company

Since this arrangement, of which I was unaware, must produce some revenue for CBS, it seems to me that PERSON TO PERSON should receive a share.

E.R.M.

rh

Sept 1 55

Ed:

Our station list as of today shows the following co-ops for P to P:

Cincinnati..Motorists Mutual
Columbus " "
Cleveland... Cleveland Illuminating Co.
Des Moines.. sponsor unknown yet but a co-op
Galveston-Houston..Finger Office Furniture Co.
Indianapolis..Atkinson Realty Co
Kalamazoo..sponsor unknown
Louisville..unknown
Nashville.. eSealtest Co
Oklahoma City..Montgomery Ward
Phoenix.. unknown
Salt Lake City.. Standard Optical Co.
Tacoma-Seattle..unknown
Henderson.. Midwestern Federal Savings and Loan Co.

14

All of these co-ops come on the alternate weeks..the Amoco-Hamm weeks.

jz

P to P

NOXZEMA CHEMICAL COMPANY
NOXZEMA SKIN CREAM
PERSON TO PERSON

TV COMMERCIAL #12
CBS-TV
OPENING MAY 28 1954

OPEN ON BEAUTIFULLY APPOINTED DRESSING TABLE - HAND PLACES JAR OF NOXZEMA, UNCOVERED, NEXT TO VASE OF FLOWERS	VOICE: (V.O.-QUIETLY) Here is Noxzema, the most famous Skin Cream in America - different because it is especially medicated to help your skin...
DOLLY IN TO JAR	Medicated for your skin comfort - and for skin beauty.
CUT TO NANCY REYNOLDS IN ATTRACTIVE AFTERNOON DRESS, HOLDING A JAR OF NOXZEMA, WITH TOP ON	NANCY REYNOLDS: Noxzema, the only leading cream that promises to help you look lovelier in ten days ... or your money back!
DISS THRU NOXZEMA JAR AGAIN AS IN OPENING. "NOXZEMA SKIN CREAM" CAN BE SEEN ON JAR.	VOICE: (V.O.) Noxzema Skin Cream presents "Person to Person"

NOXZEMA CHEMICAL COMPANY
NOXZEMA SKIN CREAM
PERSON TO PERSON

TV COMMERCIAL #13
CBS-TV
90 SECONDS

OPEN ON JAR WITH ANIMATED TWINKLING STARS THEN ON WORDS "JUST SMOOTH" FADE OUT JAR, FADE IN NANCY AS SHE FEELS HER CHEEK

(SONG IN B.G.)
Smooth on Noxzema!
And your skin will feel how it tingles, it tingles!

MCU NANCY SITS AT DRESSING TABLE AND TALKS TO VIEWER. SHOWS JAR.

I'm Nancy Reynolds, and that tingle tells you how wonderful - how different - Noxzema is.

TAKE DAB OF NOXZEMA AND APPLIES TO CHEEK, LOOKING IN MIRROR

The minute you smooth greaseless Noxzema on your skin you feel that cool, refreshing, exhilarating tingle.

LOOKS UP TO CAMERA

And that's your way of knowing this famous medicated beauty cream is starting to work its wonders for you.

Think of it! In this one jar is your chance to look lovelier in 10 days or you'll get your money back.

DOLLY TO CU

That's quite a promise. But skin doctors have proved it in scores of cases. And literally thousands of women have seen how Noxzema helps their skin look prettier.

That's because Noxzema gives you a combination of softening, cleansing and healing ingredients that you just can't get in any other leading beauty cream.

If your skin doesn't look lovelier in just 10 days -- return this jar to Noxzema, Baltimore and you'll get your money back! That's how sure we are you'll use Noxzema to help protect your skin...and keep it lovely!

CUT TO JAR WITH ANIMATED TWINKLING STARS - AT MIDDLE OF SONG SUPER "LOOK LOVELIER IN 10 DAYS"

(SONG)
You can look lovelier in just 10 days with Noxzema, Noxzema!

NOXZEMA CHEMICAL COMPANY
NOXZEMA SKIN CREAM
PERSON TO PERSON

TV COMMERCIAL #15
CBS-TV
30 SECONDS

OPEN ON LONG SHOT OF GIRL IN ABBREVIATED 2-PIECE BATHING SUIT LYING ON A BEACH. SHE IS ON A BEACH MAT - THERE IS A BEACH BALL AND AN OPEN BOOK. DOLLY IN ALMOST IMMEDIATELY TO CU OF GIRL FROM THE WAIST UP. SUPER "SUNBURN" 3 TIMES IN SYNC.	ANNCR: (V.O.) Sunburn ... Sunburn ...Sunburn...
MATCH DISS TO GIRL IN THE SAME POSITION LYING ON HER BED. SHE HAS OBVIOUSLY BEEN BADLY SUNBURNED AS IN ILLUSTRATION OF AD. PULL BACK TO ALMOST COMPLETE VIEW OF GIRL LYING ON THE BED	(V.O.) ...Murders sleep!
DOLLY IN TO CU OF GIRL'S HEAD AND SHOULDERS. SHE IS OBVIOUSLY IN PAIN FROM SUNBURN. SHE RAISES UP. FOLLOW HER HAND AS IT REACHES FOR JAR OF NOXZEMA ON THE NIGHT TABLE. SUPER "COOL" IN SYNC	(V.O.) For painful sunburn there's nothing like greaseless Noxzema. Noxzema lets you sleep in cool comfort.
GIRL'S BACK TOWARDS CAMERA. AS SHE APPLIES NOXZEMA TO HER SHOULDER HER FACE IS TURNED SO THAT THE CAMERA CAN SEE IT. AS SHE APPLIES IT SHE GRADUALLY BEGINS TO SMILE UNTIL SHE HAS A DELIGHTED GRIN ON HER FACE. SUPER "SOOTHING" IN SYNC.	Medicated Noxzema brings soothing relief in as little as three seconds - even to the most severe cases. And (NOXZEMA) never stains your clothes.
CUT TO MEDIUM SHOT OF LIFEGUARD OFFERING JAR OF NOXZEMA TO THE VIEWER. WE SEE "LIFEGUARD" ON HIS SHIRT. DOLLY TO CU OF JAR.	LIFEGUARD: First aid hospitals at most American beaches have relied for years on greaseless Noxzema for sunburn ... try it!

P. to P. 7

CALIFORNIA

BERGEN

CANTOR

DURANTE

WYNN, ED

WAYNE, JOHN

WELK, LAWRENCE

ROGERS, GINGER

COLE, NAT KING

CHAMPIONS, GOWER & MARGE

COLBERT, C.

LAUGHTON, CHARLES

MASON, JAMES

OBERON, MERLE

VALLEE, RUDY

OZZIE & HARRIET

CALIFORNIA ?

GRANT, CARY

TAYLOR, ROBERT

LLOYD, HAROLD

BURNS & ALLEN

PECK, GREGORY

HITCHCOCK, ALFRED

HEPBURN, AUDRY

DEMILLE, CECIL

EDWARDS, RALPH

GRABLE, BETTY

ERNIE, TENNESSEE

BENNY, JACK

GARLAND, JUDY

DAY, DORIS

O.K.

WILKINSON, BUD

RITCHARD, CYRL

ALBRIGHT, TENLY

MAYS, WILLIE

DAVIS, BETTE

BENNETT, CONNIE

BLAIR HOUSE

BERGEN, POLLY

GIBBS, GEORGIA

BERLITZ

LEVENSON

HOLM

WHITCOMB

EMERSON

ALLISON, FRAN

FADIMAN

LOGAN

MOORE VICTOR

PEARCE, JAN

ROSE LEE, GYPSY

TANDY & CROYNE

RHEINHART

LILO

CRAWFORD

SCHRINER

HAYWORTH

RUSSELL, ROZ

TRUMAN, MARGARET

GARROWAY

GINA

BARBER, RED

STANTON

LUCE*

ZAHARIS

STENGEL

MRS. WILLKIE

ROCKWELL, NORMAN

BERLE, MILTON

WARREN, JUSTICE

CERF

FUNSTON

HOPPER, HEDDA

KELLY GENE

LEWIS, JOHN L.

REUTHER, WALTER

SAALK

STRAUSS

HART, MOSS

SWARTHOUT

~~TODD~~

CULLEN

PARKER, FRANK

KIPLINGER

MANDEL

PETERS, ROBERTA

KIFTNER

CONSODINE

GRANGE

HALSMAN

KAISER

KAUFFMAN

KINSEY

MONTGOMERY, ROBT.

MINEO

NORTH

NORRIS

SPAETZ

WHITEMAN

ROMULO

TEMPLE
SUB ARGARO
BARUCH
BERLIN
BOOTH, SHIRLEY
COOPER, GARY
COMO, PERRY
CARNEY
CORNELL
CAGNEY DUNNE DISNEY
DIETRICH
FIRESTONE GABLE GOBEL
HOOVER
HOWARD
HEMMINGWAY
HEPBURN, K
JONES, BOBBY KETTERING
MAYOS
NIXON

PICKFORD
PORTER
RICKENBACKER
RADFORD
SMITH, KATE STANWYCK STEINBECK
HELLMAN, S
TUNNEY
WINCHELL
WHITNEY
BREWER
COLEMAN
FORD
CHAYEFSKY
ELLINGTON FLAGG
GARBO
MAC ARTHUR
ROCKEFELLER
HALSEY
KELLER
SPOCK
SPELLMAN
WINSTON
WHITE, DR.

P2P

Press Information
485 Madison Ave., New York 22, N.Y.

November 4, 1957

ART LINKLETTER, MAP-MAKER CALEB HAMMOND AND FAMILIES
TO BE VISITED "PERSON TO PERSON," FRIDAY, NOV. 15

Art Linkletter, a personality known to millions in the radio and television audience, and map-maker Caleb Hammond, whose works are familiar to most students across the country, will be visited by Edward R. Murrow "Person to Person," Friday, Nov. 15 (CBS Television, 10:30-11:00 PM, EST).

Art Linkletter, after roaming the U.S. in such jobs as bus boy, forest fire-fighter, threatre usher, meat packer, arc-welder, sailor and Wall Street clerk, finally settled for a job as a radio announcer and began his climb to fame.

Today, Linkletter, his wife Lois and their five "links" -- Jack, 19; Dawn, 17; Robert, 13; Sharon, 11; and Diane, 9 -- live in Holmby Hills, Calif. Robert, a seventh grader is the mechanic of the family; Sharon, in the fifth grade, collects stamps and plays the piano; Diane, a third grader, hopes to become an ice skater; while the eldest two, Dawn and Jack, prefer show business. All are ardent handball, basketball and swimming enthusiasts.

Caleb Hammond is the fourth member of his family to head the 56-year-old Hammond Map Co. -- one of the country's largest map-making firms. Mr. Hammond came by his interest in maps naturally. As a small boy he heard his grandfather, uncle and father talk nothing but map-making. He studied engineering and surveying, then learned the practical uses of maps and charts by working as a deckhand on board an oil tanker.

(More)

Mr. Hammond, his wife, Patricia, their twin daughters, Beth Lynn and Wendie Harrison, age 14, and their son Caleb Dean Hammond, 3rd, age 16, live in Maplewood, N. J.

* * *

Press Information
485 Madison Ave., New York 22, N.Y.

August 26, 1954

MURROW VISITS HUMPHREY BOGART AND LAUREN BACALL, AND THE ALEC TEMPLETONS ON "PERSON TO PERSON" AS SERIES STARTS SECOND YEAR ON CBS TELEVISION

Humphrey Bogart and Lauren Bacall and Mr. and Mrs. Alec Templeton will be at home, via "live" remote telecast, to Edward R. Murrow and his CBS Television audience on the premiere "Person to Person" program of the 1954-55 season, Friday, Sept. 3 (CBS Television, 10:30-11:00 PM, EDT).

The Bogarts, along with their children, Stephen and Leslie, will be visited in their home in Los Angeles. Bogart currently is seen in the part of Captain Queeg in the motion picture version of Herman Wouk's "The Caine Mutiny." Miss Bacall starred most recently in the movie "How to Marry a Millionaire."

Templeton, the Welsh-born pianist-composer, and his wife will welcome televiewers to Stornello (Italian for song), their Greenwich, Conn., home.

"Person to Person" is produced by John A. Aaron and Jesse Zousmer in cooperation with Murrow. Directors are Franklin Schaffner, Charles N. Hill and Robert Sammon. Associate editors are John Horn and David Moore.

(More)

In its first season (80 televisits), the program won wide public and critical notice for its personal and intimate at-home meetings with well-known and little-known notables from all fields of American life.

During the eight-week summer hiatus, "It's News to Me" substituted for "Person to Person."

The series is sponsored by the American Oil Co., represented by The Joseph Katz Co.; Hamm Brewing Co., through Campbell-Mithun, Inc.; and the Noxzema Chemical Co., through Sullivan, Stauffer, Colwell & Bayles, Inc.

* * *

N.Y.P.
9/9/59

On The Air

By BOB WILLIAMS

CBS president Frank Stanton asked for the truth on TV.

And Ed Murrow gave it to him.

Was it "Murrow's Revenge"?

That was the big question around CBS today after Murrow's "Small World" program Sunday.

In the midst of the Washington quiz show disclosures, Stanton announced a new era of TV in which "canned laughter" would be banned and supposedly "spontaneous" shows which had been "rehearsed" would be so identified.

He singled out, among others, "Person to Person," on which Ed Murrow had served as the heavy-smoking question-man for five years. Murrow, in London, responded quickly and angrily by saying that the production methods of "Person to Person" had been well-publicized.

EDWARD R. MURROW

He emphasized that it was impractical to move "tons" of equipment into a celebrity's home for a telecast and conduct an interview without considerable preparation as to the physical movements of the subjects and the content of the questions and answers.

Murrow also took occasion to suggest that Dr. Stanton apparently was "ignorant" of TV production methods, particularly those pertaining to "news."

That was where the argument ended, supposedly, until yesterday.

"Small World" was a compilation, as usual, of film and sound track of a phone conversation involving Murrow in London, Irish playwright Brendan Behan in Dublin, Jackie Gleason in Poughkeepsie and John Mason Brown in New York.

For 15 minutes, it was an astonishingly realistic babble over which the bibulous Behan predominated. Filmed snatches of Murrow showed him frowning, but without pain, John Mason Brown holding his head with obvious woe and the worldly Gleason, a man who knows his way around a bottle, wisely amused.

Behan, an unrestrained fellow who has been known to invade the stage during his own iconoclastic London productions, disappeared from sight after the mid-way point in the half-hour show—edited out, as it were.

It was understood—just understood, you understand—that the talk got somewhat beyond the "realistic" notions of Dr. Stanton. Thus, "Small World" got along during the last half of the program without the vocal services of Behan. Murrow made no attempt to mask the seemingly troublous situation.

* * *

During the introduction to "Small World," it was pointed out rather emphatically that the program was "filmed" Oct. 11.

Dr. Stanton did not make his pronouncement about the new "honesty" in CBS program presentations until Oct. 16. He did not even refer to "Person to Person" until a few days later.

Yet Murrow was able to refer on the show to "canned laughter"—asking Gleason's opinion of it.

"Small World" was apparently not "edited," however, or put into final shape, until after the week-end of Oct. 16.

Last spring, when Murrow announced he was taking advantage of a contract clause which provided for a one-year "sabbatical," there were sharp rumors of a rift between him and Stanton.

It was no secret that Murrow was seething over the fact that the network had killed his prize-adorned "See It Now" projects, which included his devastating reports on the late Sen. McCarthy.

Murrow, although vacationing, decided to turn out a full season's schedule of "Small World," as well as occasional news reports. And his co-producing "See It Now" partner, Fred Friendly, came back on TV with "CBS Reports"—a revived version of "See It Now."

There was no subterfuge about "Small World" yesterday.

They told the viewers when it was "filmed" and how. Murrow let Behan talk—and sing. And, in the middle of one of Behan's "songs," Murrow "broke" the show for the commercial.

When the commercial was over, Behan was missing.

As Gleason said: Behan had come through "100 proof."

If Dr. Stanton wanted realism, Murrow certainly gave it to him.

* * *

When the Ch. 2 "To Tell the Truth" panel gathered last Thursday, they suffered a disappointment. They were never told the answers to the guessing-game. But they were traditionally told the subjects which would be involved—the better to fashion smarter questions. Last Thursday, they were told nothing—and thus were totally unprepared. It was one more consequence of the quiz show revelations . . . Dale Wasserman's script for tonight's Ch. 2 production of "I, Don Quixote," was a honey when we read it a few weeks back. If it comes to life dramatically, it should really be a "special" . . . The Dec. 4 CBS offering of "Oliver Twist" has been extravagantly cast, except for the title role, which remains unfilled. Eric Portman will play Fagin, Robert Morley will portray Beadle. Inga Swenson and John Colicos will play two of the supporting roles.

* * *

In the age of TV, the best college football game in the country Saturday, between Penn State and Syracuse, was on radio. And during the WRCA broadcast, immediately after a commercial break, announcer Chris Schenkel said: "Here we are again and Penn State has moved into action. They have already failed to move the ball in two tries . . ." Didn't he mean Penn State had moved into "inaction"?

levision VARIETY

LIGHT and AIRY

by JACK HELLMAN

THE SHORT LINE . . . THE BIG 'UNS, BETTER KNOWN IN TV as "spectaculars," have caught the sponsors' fancy and more of them will be coming along. Dan Seymour, Young & Rubicam veepee, who made the pitch that sold General Foods on the Rodgers & Hammerstein tribute, says that the client was real happy with the results and is satisfied that the investment of a million (or less) was well worth the gamble. As a result of this and other impressive productions, he believes that a new pattern is shaping with advertisers. "They like the idea of merchandising their shows with elaborate presentations like in national magazines," offered Seymour. "Instead of using modest space week in and out, they're getting around to double trucks eight or 10 times a year for a grand splash. The impact is more penetrating and lasting. They're still talking about the R&H spectacle." This has been the tack NBC's "Pat" Weaver took some time ago and his spade has unearthed many an entertainment bonanza . . . The actor who wasn't there when Albert McCleery cued a camera to him on Hallmark Hall of Fame will be surprised to get another call from him. "I'll definitely use him again," said McCleery. "Everyone is entitled to one mistake." Who says tv producers aren't human? . . . Harry Ackerman and his staff of assistants at Television City foregather every Friday ayem in a private dining room at the Beverly Hills Hotel to discuss the week's problems . . . CBS couldn't sell its televised rasslin' on Saturday afternoon so off it comes May 1. Only one who didn't lose on the deal was George Johnson, who bought the rights for $5,500 and sold them to CBS for $14,000. Asking price for sponsorship was $21,000 with no takers, nary a nibble.

* * *

TELETYPE . . . EDWARD R. MURROW WAS IN A JOVIAL mood on his person-to-person call to Groucho Marx last Friday and he seemed to enjoy the breather from his skirmish with Joe McCarthy. He laughed, chuckled and broke up at some of the highly nervous Groucho's quips on the grand tour through his house and garden. The betcha lifer denied that his tv show was written out for him, conceding only that there was some preparation but for the most part ad libbed. Groucho intro'd his cook, upstairs maid, his daughter, Melinda, and the house cat, not the least bit disturbed at pool balls being shot around it. Groucho dueted with Melinda on a counter-pointing of "You're In Love" with his own guitar accomp. Asked why Harpo never talks, Groucho flipped, "He never had anything to say worth listening to." Rejoined Murrow, "Careful there, he might demand equal time to answer." Groucho closed on a sober note when Murrow asked him what he'd most like to see, having seen about everything else. Intoned Groucho, "Peace on earth." But it was strange that Groucho, a tv vet, acted so tense in this interview.

* * *

IN HIS CBS OFFICE, MURROW MAKES PLANS FOR WORLD TOUR HE WILL TAKE DURING HIS LEAVE FROM TV

WITH LOUIS ARMSTRONG Murrow produced TV documentary of trumpeter's first visit to African Gold Coast.

WITH PANDIT NEHRU on monitor, Murrow and aide Fred Friendly await start of an interview show on India.

NOW YOU DON'T 'SEE IT NOW'

Murrow, TV's star and sharp critic, takes year off

About the only thing television's detractors and defenders could agree on is that Edward R. Murrow gives the medium a measure of stature. His thoughtful Columbia Broadcasting System programs stand so far above the usual channel clutter that the comparison is embarrassing to many in the business. Murrow in turn has been embarrassed and appalled by most of what TV puts on. He has publicly told broadcasters that their avalanches of escapist entertainment were blocking TV from more abrasive realities. But last week, when Murrow decided to take a year's absence from deadline-type TV, even CBS's most hard-sell time salesmen were sure he would be missed.

Murrow, once a vice president of CBS, was always a man apart at television's high levels because he held that information mattered more than entertainment. That it also cost more and often earned less was a difficulty he tried to cope with by both entertaining and informing. He visited celebrities' homes on his frilly Person to Person show. But he also examined the background of the news with See It Now and brought world figures together in conversation on Small World. On See It Now, before CBS cancelled the show, he had memorable encounters with memorable men (right). When he announced his sabbatical, Murrow said he would still contribute Small World conversation shows and be back at his desk after a lot of traveling and unhurried thinking.

WITH HARRY TRUMAN, commentator produced his hour-long television version of the ex-President's memoirs.

TV PREVUE

Detroit Free Press

Why Murrow's Men Got Slightly Shook

Harry Golden, author of the best-seller "Only in America," is a free-wheeling, unconventional type given to charming foibles. Edward R. Murrow is as precise and orderly as an Ivy League college president. Bring these two systems of life together and you get . . .

Well, when it happened, the author's son, Free Press Writer Harry Golden, Jr., went to Charlotte, N.C., to record the fun. He does it here, and in the process reveals "Person to Person" program technique never before exposed to public view.

Harry, Jr.

BY HARRY GOLDEN, JR,

Free Press Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE, N.C.—The protuberant little editor replaced the phone at his desk and thought of the thick white carpets in the fine homes visited by Edward R. Murrow's "Person to Person."

He looked at his own bare, scuffed floor, in the rambling Victorian building that serves as his office and home.

Then he bellowed a command to his newspaper staff:

"Mr. Murrow's men are coming here! Send the bedspread to the laundry!"

Thus did Harry L. Golden (pictured above)—editor of The Carolina Israelite and author of the national best seller "Only in America" — make his complete preparations for the electronic visitation that is scheduled for 10:30 p.m. Friday on CKLW-TV (9).

The show can't be much better than the one that went on when Murrow's men came here to make arrangements.

• • •

IN WALKED the tweedy and handsome Robert Sammon, the show's remote-broadcast director. At his side was Vera Cheeseman, a CBS technical expert.

This represented the first contingent of the more than 100 behind-the-scenes men who, weeks in advance, commerce their labors to make each "Person to Person" show appear to be a televised chat between two friends relaxed at the hearth.

Sammon and Cheeseman, sophisticates that they are, placidly seated themselves in the maelstrom that is

Turn to Page 14, Column 1

Pro P Guest folder

'WASH THE BEDSPREAD!'

Murrow's Men Will Remember A Day They Got Slightly Shook

• Continued from Page One •

Golden's combined office and living room.

They took in the setting: Rows and rows of books, each jacketed in plain brown wrapping paper; a bulletin board with a few newspaper clippings and two photographs of Golden's friend and fellow-North Carolinian, Carl Sandburg; the view from the window of Elizabeth Avenue —once a street of proud, high-porched homes now yielding to the assaults of near-downtown traffic and small businesses.

• • •

GOLDEN, his wide blue suspenders clashing marvelously with a plaid lumberjack shirt, gnawed a cigar behind his desk.

In nearby rooms—even in the kitchen — Golden's employes busied themselves over typewriters and telephones in the advertising and clerical phases of the bi-monthly newspaper's operation (he writes the whole paper, himself).

Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 2 in C Minor was playing on a phonograph perched precariously on a shallow mantle over a sealed-off fireplace.

Sammon was tactful.

• • •

"THIS IS, ER, headquarters?" he asked.

"This is it," Golden smiled. "I live here and work here."

Over the clatter, then, of the busy house, and with the interruptions of phone calls and a ceaseless flow of visitors, Sammon explained the mission of this first survey team.

• • •

A Chat

THEY WOULD talk in a preliminary way with Golden to get background (but an interviewer from Murrow's staff would come a week later for a more intensive job).

They would decide position and number of cameras to be used, make necessary technical arrangements with the local power and telephone companies.

They would ream the house and take a large number of still photographs to be used in preparatory conferences back in New York.

It was immediately determined that Golden, whose interview will be teamed with one of British actress Claire Bloom, will be on alone during his portion of the show.

• • •

HIS THREE sons are established in distant cities, so he's alone when his staff goes home at 5.

He has no pet poodle to show the TV audience.

"Well, Mr. Golden," said Sammon, "if we may see the house now . . . "

"Certainly," said Golden. He summoned an assistant. "Take these gentlemen on a tour."

As Golden opened a letter from Adlai Stevenson, the assistant led Murrow's men across the threshold of the adjoining room. He pointed to the chenille-covered double bed eight paces south of Golden's desk.

• • •

"THIS IS where he sleeps," he reported.

"No kidding?" said Sammon, making a note.

"Mr. Golden," a secretary called from the doorway, "a Mr. Meredith Willson is calling long-distance."

Meredith Willson!" Golden beamed. "The Music Man!

"Hello, Mr. Willson, it's a pleasure to talk with you."

Willson was calling to say he enjoyed the anecdote in Golden's book about "Jew Music."

This was the story of how Golden is fond of Rossini's "Stabat Mater," the great requiem for the Catholic Church, how he played a recording of it in his office frequently, and a neighbor met his secretary and asked, "Why does your boss play that Jew music all the time?"

• • •

AT THIS point, Golden and Willson burst into song. The long-distance duet sang the "Inflammatus" part of "Stabat Mater."

Then they sang "Raisins and Almonds" — an old-fashioned Yiddish folk song.

"How does an Iowa boy speak such good Yiddish?" Golden asked.

"Tin Pan Alley," Willson explained.

Murrow's men, meanwhile, were going from room to room. Both Sammon and Cheeseman drew diagrams of rooms on long, yellow note pads, the kind that lawyers use.

• • •

UPSTAIRS in what apparently once served as a hallway, four of Golden's employes were working away on lists of subscribers to his paper, an off-beat personal journal of 33,000 circulation.

Its current issue, for instance, explores subjects ranging from the visit of Anastas Mikoyan to how school boys of New York's Lower East Side used to stand in line for hours to buy "standing room" at the Metropolitan Opera.

The circulation workers were throwing letters into peach baskets and cardboard cartons. The cartons, it turned out, served as trash receptacles. The peach baskets were repositories of important correspondence.

"Did you ever see anything like it?" one of the employes asked. And, then, for the first and only time, one of Murrow's unruffled men looked slightly shaken.

• • •

"NEVER," SAID Cheeseman, shaking his head.

"Let's forget about the upstairs," suggested Sammon.

"Right," said Cheeseman.

By the time they descended to Golden's office, several other visitors had dropped in.

Sammon and Cheeseman were ready to take their still pictures. They aimed their flash cameras in every corner of the downstairs rooms.

For speeches, a necktie

• • •

CHEESEMAN was diplomatic.

"Pardon me," he said to one of Golden's guests, "could you move your drink out of the picture?"

The guest took his Early Times-on-the-rocks from Golden's desk and put it on a book shelf.

In a few moments, Cheeseman had worked around to the point where he was photographing the area of the book shelf. The glass was moved back to the desk.

A taxi drove up on what once served the house as a front lawn, but is now a graveled parking area for Golden's paper.

• • •

A Visitor

OUT STEPPED Dr. Frank P. Graham, the former president of the University of North Carolina and United States senator, now of the United Nations.

"I just dropped in to say hello, Harry," Dr. Graham announced.

"Wonderful!" said Golden. "I just wrote a story about you for my paper. It's about the fact that, when Communists take over a territory, they always come to terms with the ultra-conservatives, but they can never make peace with the liberals—the men of ideas.

"I wrote that if, God forbid, the Communists came to America, the first ones they'd kill would be Norman Thomas, Frank Graham and David Dubinsky."

Golden and Graham then chatted for a while. They spoke of their public speaking tours. And they agreed that the hardest part of that activity is that the audiences really expect three speeches instead of one.

There's always a "little gathering" of the "leaders" in advance of the meeting. And there's a get-together after the banquet.

Both turn out to be big and elaborate affairs.

• • •

"I MUST BE going," said Dr. Graham. "I'm only in town today and there are three or four other people I want to see. If you'll call me a cab . . ."

"Not at all," said Golden. "Rudy!" Golden hollered. In walked Rudy, a husky young man who is working his way through Carver College (one of the two Negro colleges here), as a member of the staff of The Carolina Israelite.

"Take my car," Golden instructed him, "and take Dr. Graham wherever he wants to go."

Off went Rudy and Dr. Graham, then, in Golden's battered and rusting 1953 Plymouth.

"Why don't you buy a new car?" one of Golden's guests asked, presuming that the author of a book with 185,000 copies in print can afford it.

• • •

"WELL, IT'S a lot of trouble," said Golden. "I'd buy one if you could pick it up, say, at the whisky store . . . maybe I'll send Rudy downtown to buy one some day."

A caravan of cars was parking out front.

Up the graying porch steps came a party of the top executives of WBTV, Charlotte, biggest TV station and basic CBS outlet in the South.

Murrow's men had called a conference with them.

For this show, various Murrow staffers will come from New York. But the camera crews will be supplied by WBTV.

Sammon sat on the edge of Golden's bed and outlined his requirements to the WBTV party headed by youthful, suave Kenneth Tredwell, vice president and managing director.

While the conference went on, two representatives of TV Guide came in and took notes.

Then Nelson Benton, WBTV news director, came and took movies of Sammon and Cheeseman in conference with Golden. They were shown on news telecasts.

A reporter from one of the local newspapers showed up and interviewed everyone in sight.

• • •

IT WAS time for lunch. Golden said he'd skip it; he had to wind up a lot of work before flying to New York for a speaking engagement that night.

Everyone else went to Leo's Jewish Delicatessen. It turned out that Leo, as Golden had said, did indeed make good corned beef sandwiches. But he sold beer only "to go," not on the premises.

"Let's wrap up the sandwiches and beer and go back to Golden's house," someone suggested.

"He has no room there," said another.

"He'll make room," said the first man.

Tredwell grabbed the check and the party of 10 men headed back for the Carolina Israelite.

• • •

'Rudy!'

QUICKLY TAKING in the situation, Golden hollered, "Rudy!"

Rudy appeared from somewhere and Golden instructed him to take the desk near his bed—the one piled high with papers and correspondence—and clear it away so it could serve as a table.

Five of the men sat on the edge of the bed. Rudy rustled up chairs for the others. Toying with a walking stick, and swinging it about in the manner of a warmup with a baseball bat, Golden supervised.

Tredwell bit into the corned beef on rye and asked Golden, "When's the next book coming out?"

"July," said Golden. "It's called 'For Two Cents Plain' —it will be just about like the other one."

"You may run out some day," Tredwell observed. "How many stories have you got left to write?"

• • •

"ABOUT A million," Golden said with a swing of the stick. "In my next issue I'm going to write about how I once was a $300 'angel' for a play that had the shortest run in the history of Broadway."

"Friend of mine talked me into being one of the backers of a melodrama, complete with the accompaniment of the old-time piano. The only thing different was that the cast of the melodrama consisted wholly of midgets.

"Well, Mae, the piano player, was drinking a little bit in those days, and, about midway through the first act opening night she forgot herself.

"The audience saw only her hand raising the glass to the top of the piano. Then the hand would reach back, and while she was drinking, they heard one-handed piano music.

"After a while, the audience was in hysterics watching the hand and the glass. Then the midgets got to fighting among themselves on the stage and everyone walked out and went home about halfway through the third act.

• • •

A Record

"THAT WAS the shortest run on Broadway."

"That's a good one," Tredwell agreed. "But there's one thing I haven't been able to figure out. How come the public likes your serious articles, too, like the ones on politics and segregation?"

Golden thought a minute. "I guess it's a trick that just about any newspaperman could use," he said.

"It's a matter of writing in terms of people. No matter how far we go in sending sputniks to the moon, the real story will still be a man and a woman and getting the kids ready for school.

"The big story is not of our technological wonders. The big story is rather of the mysteries of the human heart."

• • •

GOLDEN SMILED his satisfaction with his answer. Then he said abruptly, "I think I'll write something about that." And, swinging his stick, he wandered off toward his typewriter.

Sammon had a few more matters to discuss with Tredwell's men.

"One thing I want to make clear," he said. "While we are in Mr. Golden's house we will all conduct ourselves as guests, invited into his home.

"We will all furnish our own ashtrays. We use drop cloths where we set up our equipment. We will have drop cloths at the front entrance.

"We've been very fortunate in the years of this show. We've handled objects worth thousands of dollars and others with great sentimental value. We've never broken anything."

Then he glanced about and reflected out loud:

"'Course, I don't know much we could do to this house."

Golden Won't See Ed Murrow

Four cameras will be used in the home of Harry L. Golden for Murrow's interview.

Microphones will be concealed at various points in Golden's office and bedroom.

In the New York studio, Murrow will see Golden on a television set as the interview goes on. There will even be a warmup interview before the show.

But Golden will not see Murrow.

There will be a monitor television set in his home, but not for his eyes.

He will address his answers to Murrow's questions in the direction of various loudspeakers carrying Murrow's voice into the home.

Golden will look a little to the right of each loudspeaker.

• • •

THIS WILL let the cameras compensate for the fact that Murrow, in his studio, will be looking up at the televised Golden from the left. The resulting impression will be that of two men talking face-to-face.

The Courier-Journal SOCIETY and WOMEN'S NEWS SECTION 3
APRIL 20, 1958

SOCIETY, pp. 2, 3, 8, 9 • WONDERFUL TOWN, p. 4 • JUNIOR GREAT BOOKS, p. 6 • BRIDGE, p. 11 • CLUBS, p. 10 • TRAVEL, pp. 13, 14, 15

The late Frances Jewell McVey, whose portrait hangs in Jewell Hall at U. K., which her husband headed, guided Chloe Gifford, Sarah Blanding; taught Chloe "social diplomacy."

A Force of 11,000,000 Will Meet Our Chloe

U. of K.'s Miss Gifford will be world clubs' chief

By Mildred Lensing, The Courier-Journal Woman's Editor

LEXINGTON.

KENTUCKY is about to give 11,000,000 women a treat. It's going to give that many clubwomen over the world the chance to know Chloe Gifford.

Come June in Detroit, Miss Gifford will be elected president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. "If I have no opposition," Miss Gifford, a forthright woman, invariably adds.

On this Sunday morning she is over the Atlantic on her way to Duesseldorf, where for four weeks she will visit in Germany meeting more clubwomen "and Adenauer, I hope," as a guest of the Federal Republic.

In 1952 Miss Gifford was elected third vice-president of the huge organization, and as things go with its succession, she knew six years ago that this day would probably arrive. But she takes nothing for granted, wears no laurels prematurely. She's quick to snort about undocumented awards, citations, and such.

Her approaching election naturally brings on a story. If Kentucky and the United States of America have a successor to the late Alben Barkley when it comes to telling a story, it is Chloe Gifford. She is full of stories, collects them with gusto.

Many of her tales are on herself. "I'd be grim as some clubwomen become if I didn't have a sense of humor," she says.

As she put on her hat and headed out the front door on her way to the Minneapolis election that spring day in 1952 her mother finally remarked on her prospects.

"Chloe," Mrs. John Gifford said, "you've always had everything handed to you. Has it ever occurred to you that you might lose?"

"I said, 'Yes, I am going to lose'."

"Well, if you do, I hope you lose like a lady," her mother counseled.

Chloe Gifford, instead, won like a lady over the opposition she met for the first time in years of club work.

She tells the story quickly and with a philosophical smile. "You're always 6 years old to Mother, aren't you?"

Mrs. Gifford, 80, is already mothering around about her daughter's imminent move to federation headquarters in Washington, D.C., from their Woodland Avenue home here. The two will live in an apartment in the building.

"Now, Chloe, you find out if they have a can opener there," Miss Gifford quotes her mother.

She's A Colonel, Too

Kentucky clubwomen have cherished "the general" for a long time, of course. (Miss Gifford is also a Kentucky colonel.) Her club work began around 1938, two years before she went to the University of Kentucky. Miss Gifford, director of the bureau of club and community service at the university, is also an assistant in university extension. Both these careers have grown side by side, extending her friendships with all ages and sorts in the Commonwealth. Students of speech and drama, for one, have emoted and recited for her and her judges spring after spring.

And in other circles, the A.A.U.W., at Sayre College here for 12 years where she taught and became dean, her work for War Bonds, heart, cancer, education drives has made her name familiar to newspaper readers all over the state.

(With all her public speaking, which she never studied, Miss Gifford has given course after course in the art. "It's not hard to master," she has said. "Just remember to speak in a low, well-modulated voice, and say something.")

Miss Gifford has said something on practically everything.

Last summer in Asheville, N. C., she told the federation that the world needs eggheads.

In April, 1954, she told the Buechel Woman's Club that too many women think it's an honor to hold an office.

"It's not. Rather it is a great opportunity for real service . . . woman's-club work is excellent training for leadership that is so lacking in the world today."

In January, 1948, as president of the Kentucky federation, she told her members about to vote on supporting the Marshall Plan they must realize that "adequate support must be given to get Western Europe back to full production for our own safety."

Back from attending a session in 1946 of the United Nations General Assembly, she urged the state convention in Louisville to start doing its thinking in international terms as well as state and local ones.

She told the Beechmont Younger Woman's Club in 1951 that "if you don't vote you have no right to gripe about anything."

At Somerset in 1943 at a state clubs' discussion of international relations Miss Gifford rose to say, "If we're really interested, let's do something tangible, give a scholarship." The scholarships were born on the spot.

The tag of "general" for Miss Gifford comes from a past general-federation president, Mrs. Theodore Chapman, who was told by Freedom Foundation president Kenneth Wells that she commanded an army larger than any the world had ever known, bigger than the 8,000,000 U. S. forces in World War II.

The new general-to-be sees her gigantic two-year job as "another job, a chore," not as any accolade to sit down and enjoy frivolously.

Chloe Gifford will enjoy it, sure enough. But she sees right on through her specs to the day when she gathers up all the stories she loves to tell and the experiences she's had here and abroad.

"I'm going to write a book about my cavortings, and then buy the black silk dress and go off to the Old Ladies Home."

A favorite off-and-on speculation among the clubwomen in the state since her election to the third vice-presidency which foretold this top post has been, "How on earth will Chloe ever afford to be president?"

They really should know better. If they offer her help in the unpaid job, she's "going to turn it down, of course," she said last week.

Some Entertain Lavishly

There have been general-federation presidents who whooshed onto the Washington social scene and had the personal funds with which to entertain lavishly and often. Some wouldn't be caught dead in less than couturier clothes, mink, diamonds, pearls. The competition in the capital can be rough.

Chloe Gifford is calmly certain that that problem won't bother her any more than does the fact now that finding cocktail dresses for her large figure is a problem.

"I have saleswomen who know what I wear and they always find what I need."

